TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFVLL AND TRVLY NOBLE, Sr. HENRY YELVERTON KNIGHT, ATTVRNEY GENERAL TO His Maieſtie: And to the vertuous and Religious Ladie, the Ladie Margaret Yelverton his Wife.

RIGHT WORSHIPFVLL,

IT hath beene a laudible and ancient cuſtome among thoſe which publiſh bookes, to dedicate them to ſome Perſonages either eminent in place or qualitie: partly to honour them with the Patronage of thoſe Arts and vertues which they finde them to be louers or profeſſors of; partly to procure reſpect to their labours; and ſome time alſo in teſtimony of thankefulneſſe for receiued fauours. Now the Author of this preſent volume (whoſe worth ſufficiently commends it ſelfe) being a painefull Labourer in the vineyard of Chriſt, deceaſed before all the ſeuerall Treatiſes were thus knit together into one entire body, and ſo left not only ſome members of it vnpatroniz'd, but the whole frame without a generall Suſtainer. I therefore pittying that it ſhould be both Fatherleſſe and Patronleſſe (and being ſomewhat intereſſed therein by vndergoing ſome part of charge in publiſhing it) thought my ſelfe engaged to prouide ſome worthy Patron to vndertake the protection thereof: And knowing none whom I ought rather to honour herewith, both in regard of your loues to Labours of this kinde, and the particular ſeruices, which for diuers reſpects I owe vnto you both, with your Noble Family, I haue beene bold here to prefixe your names as Patrones to this profitable and Religious Worke; which if you pleaſe well to accept of, as you ſhall honour theſe pious Labours of the deceaſed Author, and make them more welcome to others; ſo they ſhall memorize you for fauourers of Gods Truth; and I will for your reſpect to me, euer acknowledge my ſelfe at your ſeruice, and remaine.

Your Worſhips in all reſpectiue ſeruices to be commanded,

I. B.

SIR, the Wiseman saith, that All riuers goe into the Sea, shewing themselues (as it were) Homagers and Tributaries to that place, from whence (so far as we may credite Philosophy) they haue receiued their first beginning. It hath beene often in my thoughts, and more then often in my desires, that in testimonie of my remembring that (which it were euen a sinne in me to forget) there might passe backe from mee to your Worship, some little streame, of those larger brookes of your both countenance and beneuolence, with which my studies in the Vniuersitie being much refreshed, and my first endeauors in the Ministerie (as it were) by a kinde watering, helped forward in their growth; I confesse my selfe to become that Little, *which by the grace of God I now am in his Church. Wherefore hauing a disposition for the satisfaction of some friends, to coppie a draught of these Sermons: I thought I might with one labour doe a publique good, and giue them their priuate contentment. And withall, it came into my minde, to tender them to you, not as the full payment of so great a debt, but as an insinuation of my desire to be thankfull, and of my meaning hereafter to present you with some matter of more worth, according as God shall enable me, and any conuenient vacation from the duties of my publique function shall affoord me opportunitie. Thus presuming out of your former loue, that this poore offer shall at the least bee kindly looked vpon, with my many and vnfained prayers for the enlargement of Gods graces vpon your selfe, and your Ladie, and all those yong plants, which by the great blessing of God haue branched from you both, I humbly take my leaue. THE CHRISTIANS IOVRNALL.

The first Sermon.

Math. 7. verſ. 13, 14.

Enter in at the ſtraite gate, for it is the wide gate, and broad way that leadeth to deſtruction; and many there be which goe in thereat.
Because the gate is ſtraite, and the way narrow that leadeth vnto life; and few there be that finde it.

THE ſcope and generall drift of theſe words, is to arme and to prepare all thoſe that deſire to be ſaued, vnto a kinde of hardſhip and reſtraint, and to withdraw them from framing themſelues vnto the courſe and faſhion of the multitude. The point is deliuered in forme of a very briefe inſtruction, or aduertiſement, as (Enter in at the ſtrait gate). It is backed with two reaſons in naturall oppoſition each to other; the firſt is this, becauſe the wide and broad way, which hath greateſt ſtore of company, leadeth to deſtruction: the ſecond is this, becauſe the ſtraite gate, and the narrow way, which hath in compariſon but few paſſengers, is that which bringeth vnto life. This is briefely the ſcope and order of the place, I will treate of it in the ſame methode, that I haue obſerued in opening it. And firſt of the aduertiſement it ſelfe.

The diuiſion of the Text.

Enter in at the ſtraite gate: And therein firſt the meaning muſt be laboured for: the chiefe thing is, what is vnderſtood by the ſtraite gate. By the gate and way, which we are vrged to enter into, is meant that holy courſe, which the Lord hath laied downe vnto vs in his holy word: it is the ſame which Dauid tearmeth the Lords way [a], the way of his teſtimonies [b], the way of truth [c], the way of Gods commandements [d], the path of the Lord [e], and Ieremy, the good way [f]. It is called a ſtrait gate, and afterwards a narrow way; firſt becauſe of the reſtraint, and (as may ſeeme) hard conditions which it layeth vpon fleſh and blood, (as wee ſhall ſee heereafter in the farther handling of it;) ſecondly, becauſe of the circumſpection and care to bee vſed in walking in it, as in a way, from which, becauſe of the narrowneſſe thereof, a man may eaſily decline. This is the way, that Chriſt calleth all that will bee ſaued to enter into, becauſe onely this way leadeth vnto life. I will ſpeake leſſe by way of Expoſition, and Interpretation, becauſe what doubts ſoeuer may ariſe touching the ſenſe, ſhall in the further enlarging of euery particular, bee fully diſcouered. The thing that I will chiefely labour in, is (according to the drift of the place) to ſhew what things ought of neceſsity to bee in euery one that would be ſaued. It will be excellent matter of direction, to

Doctrine 1. The first thing which by authoritie of this Text of Scripture ought to bee in euery one that desireth saluation, is, a right vnderstanding, and a true acknowledgement of his owne wandering. For euen in reason, before a man can frame himselfe to enter into a right course, hee must be resolued and perswaded of his owne former mistaking; for why else should he change his fashion? if hee haue not erred before, to what end should he relinquish his present course, and betake himselfe to a guise, to which he hath not hitherto beene accustomed? Reason it selfe must needs yeeld to this in other things, and it must needs bee true in this. How shall I perswade a man to enter into the straite gate, if he doe not feele and perceiue himselfe to be in a way in which it is not safe for him to continue? If we looke into the Scripture we shall see good proofe for this point, namely, that the acknowledgement of our by-past errour, is the very first degree vnto sound conuersion. To what end (thinke we) is it, that by Gods spirituall appointment, the terrours of the Law should first be preached, and should goe like the mightie strong winde (which in Gods appearing to Elias[g], rent the mountaines) before the calme and gentle, and still voyce of the Gospell; I say, to what end is that, and what did the Lord ayme at herein, but onely this, that men might see where they bee, and in what case they stand: and that, holding on in the way, which Nature hath set them in, there can nothing follow but destruction? As the Lord himselfe at the first beganne with our grandfather Adam after hee had sinned, forcing him by varietie of demands to see his errours, Where art thou? and who tolde thee that thou wast naked? hast thou eaten of the tree[h]? so all the Prophets and Apostles after, held the same course: the first thing they laboured in, was to make men see, that there was no hope of happinesse, without a present forsaking of their accustomed behauiour. Ieremie, when hee would shew that among the people of his times, there was (for the generalitie) no true conuersion, reporteth the matter in these words, I hearkned but none spake aright, no man repented him of his wickednesse, saying, What haue I done[i]? as if he had said, there was not a man, that had any so much as a conceit of his owne erring, they were all strongly perswaded, that their courses were right & vnblameable, and therefore euery man turned to his race, as the horse to the battell. The same Prophet describing the repentance of the estate of Israel vnder the name of the Tribe of Ephraim (with bare the sway in that kingdom) relates it thus, I heard Ephraim lamenting thus, Thou hast corrected me, and I was chastised as an vntamed Calfe; conuert thou me and I shall be conuerted, for thou art the Lord my God[k]. Now among other signes and euidences of repentance, hee saith, Ephraim smot vpon his thigh, as who should say, Ephraim hauing all this while runne a stubborne course in the very depth of securitie, now beganne to recall himselfe, and to thinke, that questionlesse hee was out of his way; the course was dangerous, and it was now high time to reforme it. It is noted in the Prodigall sonne (the perfect patterne of a true conuert) that when he had runne a lewd course, wastefully consuming the portion of goods which fell vnto him, supposing (as many yonkers doe) his stocke to haue beene as a liuing spring, which could neuer be drawne drie; at last he came to himselfe (l): the bethinking himselfe of his by-past folly, was the first step vnto his recouerie. Mee thinkes, when I reade that Parable, I doe see the young Prodigall; like to a man riding fast in a wrong way, and at last, vpon a suddaine, by the call of some that seeth his mistaking reining vp his horse, and euen inwardly chafing and fretting with himselfe for his carelesnes; (he came to himselfe he thought all well before, but now he perceiued how things went, & what would be the issue, if hee so continued. When the Lord was pleased to call Paul, who before (as himselfe confesseth) was a persecutor, and a blasphemer, and an oppressor[m], suddainely there came a voyce from heauen saying, Saul, Saul, why persecutest

persecutest thou me[n]? As if the Lord had said: O thou man, knowest thou what thou doest? vnderstandest thou who it is against whom thou settest thy selfe? conceiuest thou the danger that will follow it? So that the first thing God sought to bring him to, was the sight of his owne present error, and that being once perceiued, he became tractable; Lord (saith he) what wilt thou that I doe[o]? I might easily multiply examples of this kinde, but these may serue to shew, that the sense and apprehension of our owne wandering, is the first step to our entrance into life. And therefore it is that the Scripture is so full, in discouering our naturall erring. The spirit of God speaking of the whole race and generation of mankinde, (for so Paul applyeth it) saith, That all are gone out of the way[p]. In Isaiah, All we (saith the Prophet) like sheepe haue gone astray[q]: It is a place worth the noting; we haue gone astray like sheepe: there is no creature more apt to wander then a sheepe, there is none more vnapt, of it selfe, to returne into the right way againe. The Oxe (as the Scripture saith) knoweth his owner, and the Asse his masters cribbe[r]: the very swine accustomed to the trough, if he goe abroad, yet at night will finde the way home againe; but the sheepe once straied, of himselfe returneth not. All we therefore (saith the Prophet) like sheep are gone astray, to shew our simplicity, and how vnpossible a thing it is for vs of our owne power to returne. And the Prophet in the next words giueth a reason, Wee haue turned euery one to his owne way[s]: Gods waies and our owne waies are directly contrary. Wee runne naturally after the wayes of our owne hearts, and wee cannot chuse then but wander vtterly from the way of life. Againe, the lesson of our Sauiour here belongeth to all, Enter in at the strait gate. Entrance in at the gate presupposeth a beeing without the gate; no man is bid to enter, that is already within: if all be exhorted to enter, is argueth that we are all without; and if wee be considered in our selues, then as the Apostle saith, Destruction and calamity are in our wayes, and the way of peace we doe not know[t]. This care of the holy Ghost, in the whole course of the Scripture to acquaint vs with our wanderings, argueth the necessitie of the right vnderstanding of it, if wee desire to be saued. Let vs make vse of this point.

It is a point of great vse, helping vs in the most needefull point, the right iudging of our owne estate; let vs not be wilfully careless herein I beseech you; why should wee be desirous to iudge in other things, as of times and seasons, of the face of the skie (as Christ saith[u]) of wares and commodities, of cases and questions in the Lawe, and yet neuer care to vnderstand how it fareth with our soules? The soule is the principall, and ought principally to be looked vnto. Let vs learne to be able to iudge of our selues, whether it be with vs as it ought to be: Proone your selues (saith the Apostle[x].) Let vs search and try our wayes, saith Ieremy[y]: Examine your heart vpon your bed, (saith Dauid[z]:) Wee all haue a hope that it is well with vs; let vs looke to it, that our hope (as the Apostle speaketh) may be such as may not make vs ashamed[a]. There is no hurt gotten by the tryall of our selues, there is alwayes danger in security. There bee thousands plunged into hell, that thought nothing lesse till they came there, and now they are past recouery: wee are all trauellers in one of these two wayes, and we shall arriue at one of these two places here mentioned, life, or destruction, there is no third: who would not bee glad to know touching himselfe, in which of these two waies he is, that if he be in the euill way, he may speedily come out of it; if he be in the right, he may goe on therein with cheerfulnesse? This point is the thing that I haue aymed at in chusing this Text, and by it you shall as easily vnderstand it, as you do in your going home, iudge by such stiles and gates, and hedges, whether you are in the true way, yea, or no. Now this I may deliuer to you for a matter of certainty, that all (excepting infants, the manner of whose conuersion is knowne onely vnto God) all I say which are partakers of life eternall, this is their first steppe to it, the sight and vnderstanding of their former errours; God first openeth their hearts, and maketh them to perceiue that they are in a course, the issue whereof is eternall death; with this their hearts are smitten and appalled, and they are euen woe with themselues to consider it. Marke then this: Art thou one that neuer yet saw the errour and misery of thine owne naturall estate, that neuer hadst yet any compunction of heart to consider thine owne wandering, that was neuer grieued to thinke vpon thy life past, to see how thou hast all this while hitherto beene mistaken? Art thou one that hast alwaies pleased thy selfe in thine owne courses, scarcely so much as calling it into question, whether thou walkest as thou oughtest to doe yea or no? Surely thy case is fearefull and damnable; and I may surely say vnto thee, that if thou holdest on so, thou shalt neuer be saued. Let vs in the feare of God looke vnto it, it is a matter that concernes the greatest part; we blesse our selues in our owne hearts, wee haue liued hitherto after our owne lusts, worshipping God, when, and in what manner our selues pleased, taking to our selues the liberty of grosse sinnes, hatred, enuy, couetousnes, oppression, drunkennes, and the like; and wee be not yet perswaded, nor can be, that the way we go, and the course we hold, is otherwise then it ought to be. There is not the vilest wretch, be his fashion of life neuer so vile, but he will say, he hopes he is right, nay he will be very confident in it, that he is so, and yet neuer in his life had any true remorse, nor neuer knew or perceiued, what it was to wander from the waies and paths of happinesse. Deceiue we not our selues, either we must begin here at the sight of our old errors, or else wee can neuer tread the path that leadeth vnto life.

Doctrine 2. The next thing which by the rule of my text must be in euery one that would be saued, is, care to seeke out the true way, and that path, which leadeth and bringeth the goers in it vnto life. This is plaine also (as to me seemeth) by this Scripture; for as the light of a mans ancient wandering, must goe before his entrance into a new course; so of necessity when he perceiueth his errours, the right way must be sought out, and certainely vnderstood, before hee can enter thereinto: so that he which bids me enter into the gate of life, bids me withall to seek where that gate is, for otherwise my desire of entrance is in vaine. If a master doe will his seruant to goe to such a house, it is presupposed that either hee doth know the way to it, or else must make enquiry for it. And this care to enquire out the true way in this particular, is the plaine doctrine of the Scripture; Stand in the wayes, and beholde and aske for the olde way which is the good way, and walke therein, and yee shall finde rest for your soules[b]: there is a plaine charge, and an expresse commandement, in the multitude and variety of supposed wayes vnto saluation, to make diligent enquiry which is the good way, stand in the way and aske, Try all things[c], saith the Apostle, it is a rule giuen principally touching doctrine and precepts directing to eternall life: Paul willeth them to examine and ponder them all, and neuer leaue trying till they haue boulted out the truth, as the men of Berea did, that heard Paul, they searched the Scripture dayly, whether those things were so[d]. To halt betwixt two opinions, and to bee in suspence, not knowing which way specially to incline, and to bee in Religion as idle Beggars are in their way, readie to go which way soeuer the staffe falleth, how hatefull a thing it is in the sight of God, wee may conceiue by the sharpe reproofe vsed by Elias vnto the wauering people, How long will yee halt betweene two opinions[e]? When there were differences of opinions in the world touching Christ, some taking him for Iohn Baptist, some for Elias, some for Ieremias, some for one of the Prophets; our Sauiour called his Disciples together, and would needes know their iudgement, But whom say yee that I am[f]? Christ would teach thereby, that when there are varieties of opinions in matter of Religion; some say this is the way, and some say that, men should not (as the manner is) take occasion thereby to stand doubtfull, and adhere to nothing certainely, but should enquire with the greater care, that they may be certainely and soundly resolued in the truth. There is no man professeth professeth any thing, but (if it be but for his credite sake) hee will labour to vnderstand, if it be possible, the very mysterie of it, and to know the certaintie of such things as are appertaining to it: How much more in Religion should the certaine truth be laboured for? Errour in other things doth preiudice the bodie onely, and the things which concerne it, but the mistaking in this, I meane in the maine points of it, is the vtter and irrecouerable hazard of a mans soule. This may serue briefly for the opening of this second point; let vs now come to apply it.

Vse. This point also will conuince vs, to be not as yet entred into the way to life, in as much as we are so exceeding careless in this dutie of seeking and searching out the truth. Some are drowned in the depth of ignorance, and neuer entertaine so much as a thought, whether their way be right yea or no: some are profanely desperate and put all to an aduenture, not caring what bee the issue; if they be right, so it is; if not, what remedy, they must beare it as well as they may: some be superstitious, and deuoted to their forefathers steppes, and hold their course for a sufficient rule, without further question: some are time-seruers, and looke only to the Law, as that leades so will they follow, to day on this fashion, to morrow on another, if need be: some are peeuish and peruerse, and pleade the diuersities of waies, and the multitude of religions, and so thinke to be excused: so that by that time we haue put all to these seuerall heads which belong vnto them, we shall find scarce a tenth [g] as the Prophet saith, whose care it is to labour and take paines to seeke and enquire which is indeed the gate of grace, and which is the true path that leadeth vnto heauen. Indeed the world is full of businesse, and each man as his humour leades him is imployed, the couetous man for his wealth, the malitious man for his reuenge, the voluptuous liuer for his pleasure, the wanton for his lust, the proude for his backe; for these things men seeke farre and neere, all the deuices, all the meanes that may bee possible; but an assurance that the way we haue chosen to bring vs to heauen, is the right way, of all things else it is least thought vpon. It is a strange thing, there is no man so secure for his way to mill, or to market, as hee is for his way to life eternall. In those waies he will be perfit, if he doubt he will aske, he will enquire; Is this the way? what marks? what turning to such or such a place? As for the other way, we goe all vpon meere conceipt, we thinke it is so, wee haue heard others say so, but we seeke not for the certainty, whether it be so. What a misery is this, and how hath Satan beguiled the greatest part for the filling of his owne barnes? In this blindnes, he carries men hoodwinked (as a man would carry a hawk vpon his fist) whither he list, and they will be in the pit before they are aware of it. I beseech you take notice of this point, it is no slight thing I entreat of; he that may command vs, he that can condemne vs, he which ere it be long shall iudge vs, euen he chargeth vs heere to enter in at the strait gate. How shall wee enter if wee know it not? how shall we know it if we seeke it not? Neither is it a slight kinde of seeking that we are called vnto: there be many by-waies, but the right way is but one; as in shooting a man may misse diuersly, hee may shoote vnder, hee may shoote ouer, he may shoote wide, on this side, and on that, but there is but one way to hit the marke; so a man may many waies be mistaken, but there is but one gate that leadeth vnto happinesse, and all the cunning is to finde it. Well, the Scripture will teach vs, the word of God will be as the Angell of God to Peter [h] to direct vs; and if we will vouchsafe to attend the full opening of this Text, I doubt not but (by the helpe of God) we shall vnderstand it. In the meane time let this preuaile against our securitie, and let it bring vs so farre on our way to life, as to make vs say with Paul when he was strucken to the ground, Lord what wilt thou that I doe [i]? and with the poore Iayler, What must I doe to be saued [k]? this good desire being once begotten in vs, the rest cannot chuse but be supplyed.

Doctrine 3. The third thing which this text necessarily commendeth vnto vs, if we would be

be saued, is, a resolution when we haue felt our errour, and found the right way and the true gate, all delayes laid aside to make a present entry. If you aske how I proue this by my text, I thus make it manifest. It is a rule in ciuill matters, that in bonds of debt betweene man and man, when there is no certaine day named, then the debt is due presently; so here, the commandement and charge being giuen indefinitely, without any expresse limitation of any set time, it followeth that it is presently to be performed. Our Sauiour saith not, enter hereafter when thou art more at leasure; or to the young man, enter when thou art old; or to the old man, enter when thou art a dying; or to the couetous man, enter when thou hast glutted thy desire with wealth; or to the drunkard, enter when thou art vtterly disabled that thou canst be drunk no longer: but he saith to all, at the instant Enter; doe it presently, doe it straitway, deferre not to doe it. And this is also the plaine doctrine of the Scripture; I made haste, saith Dauid, and I delayed not to keep thy commandements[l]. It is commended in Peter and Andrew, that when Christ called them, they left their nettes straitway[m]. When Christ called Zacheus, the Text saith, that hee came downe hastily[n]. The reason why there must be a resolution of present entrance, is, because as there is a time of grace, in the which the gate of Mercy stands open, so there is a time of iudgement, in which this gate will be shut vp, and all hope of entry vtterly remooued. Dauid speaketh of a time, in which God may be found[o], which implyeth that there is a time, in which God will not be found. The time when hee may be found, what it is, Paul teacheth, where speaking of the preaching of the Word, and of the offers of grace, that are therein made daily; hee saith, Behold, now is the accepted time, now is the day of saluation[p]. The time present is the onely time, the time to come is no time, no more then the time past, it is a matter of meere vncertainty; To day if ye will heare, it is read vnto vs continually[q]. There is a time comming, and we know not how neere it is, (though the generall end may bee farther off, yet our particular account cannot be farre; we see daily how some drop away of all ages, and estates;) I say there is a time comming, in which (as Christ saith) many shall seeke to enter in, and shall not be able[r]. Oh what wofull yelling, and pittifull crying, and earnest knocking there will be then at the gate, with Lord, Lord, open vnto vs[s]; when that heauy doome, Depart from me, I know you not, shall be their portion. This is the reason why it is no safe delaying. I would wee would learne wisedome from our outward businesse: what makes husbandmen breake their sleepe, and while it is yet night, to be trauelling to the Sea side for their sand *; meete them, aske them the cause why they are so exceeding soone? The answer is ready, (you know it better then my selfe) the tyde requires it, a peece of an houre lost may breed much hinderance, the time of the yeere hasteneth, and when it is gone, it cannot be recalled. Oh! can we not command to stay vs, but must wee ride and post; and make such haste to preuent it; and thinke we to haue the gate of mercy to stand open at our pleasure? Be not deceiued, Esau came tardy, and sought the blessing with teares, but could not obtaine it[t].

The Vse.

The vse is, to cure that euill sickenesse of delaying, which is the very bane of so many soules. I remember the report of the Prophet Haggie maketh of the people that neglected the re-edifying of the temple, This people (saith he) say, that the time is not yet come, that the Lords house should be builded[u]: so, many thinke it is not yet time for them to looke to heauen-ward, youth must haue his course, the couetous bagge must be filled, the pleasure of the flesh must be fully tasted, ambition must come to his height, and then it will bee time to retire. Yet a little more sleepe saith the slaggard[x]: let God beare with vs a little, and in time we will enter. This is as the Scripture termeth it, the very deepnesse of Satan[y], thus to beguile men; and (no doubt) there are many in hell, which had a meaning in their life time to enter in, but God hath cut them short, and depriued them of that, which when they might, they refused to accept of. Well, if wee haue seene our naturall wandering, dering, if God hath opened our hearts, that we perceiue there is no remedie but a new course must bee entred into, if wee haue learned out of the Word of God, which is the way; let vs resolue vpon a present entry. Christ saith, The kingdome of heauen suffereth violence[z]: Mee thinkes Christ there speakes of heauen as of a matter offered, which if it be not presently taken, is presently lost; and therefore all men of discretion that know the worth of it, presse, and throng toward it, and catch after it, and euen sweare about it, that they may haue it while there is possibility of obtaining it. I opened my mouth and panted, saith Dauid[a], there was hast; I follow hard toward the marke saith Paul[b]; there was speed. This is the third thing required to saluation; there is no time named, therefore it must bee done presently.

b Phil 3.14.

The fourth thing which now followeth to be treated of, is the entrance it selfe: our former wandering must bee felt, the right and true way must bee sought for, when it is found, a resolution of present entrance must be put on; and then next we must put forward. Enter in at the strait gate. To this act of entrance there are two things required, the first is (that I may vse tearmes agreeable to my Text) stooping; the second, a stripping of our selues of whatsoeuer may hinder our entrance. First, there must bee a kinde of stooping, because the comming in is lowe. It is said of heauen in the Scripture, that it is a house not made with hands[c]. Now, as in the matter thereof it is differing from our earthly buildings, so is it in the framing and contriuing of it. In great mens houses, it is a great eye-sore, to see a little, low, and pinching entry to a large and spacious dwelling; but to the end all things may be answerable, as the house is of great receit, so the gates must be high and lofty, and the comming in according. But now in this house which is eternall in the heauens, it is otherwise. Indeed it is large within, For in my Fathers house (saith Christ) are many mansions[d]; but yet the gate vnto it is exceeding low, the entry narrow, the passing in very strait: It is the gate of humility. A man that beareth vp himselfe aloft, in the pride and securitie, and sensleſnesse of his owne heart, that leaneth to his owne wisedome, that pleaseth himselfe in a flattering opinion of the goodnesse of his owne estate, that was neuer beaten downe by the terrour of the Law, and the due beholding of Gods iustice, such an one can neuer enter heere, this gate is too low for his haughty, carnall, and selfe-pleasing stomack to enter in at. See an example or two of the stooping of Gods children, in their entrance into grace. Looke first vpon Dauid, Mine iniquities are gone ouer my head, and are as a weightie burden to heauy for me[e]; Me seemeth I see Dauid in this passion, like a man oppressed with some carriage more then he is able to stand vnder, which makes him double and crouch, and groane, and long to be eased; so Dauid was with the weight of his sinnes, he was strucken downe with the sight and consideration of them. What thinke we, did not Ezra stoope, when he prayed, O my God! I am confounded and ashamed to lift vp mine eyes vnto thee my God, for our iniquities are gone ouer our heads, and our trespasse is growne vp to heauen[f]? Did not Iob stoope when he said, O Lord I abhorre my selfe in dust and ashes[g]? Was not Ezechiah cast downe when he cryed in the bitternesse of his soule, O Lord it hath oppressed me, comfort me[h]? Looke into the New Testament, what thinke we of the woman that lay at Christs feet, that washed them with teares, and wiped them with the haires of her head[i], was not here humilitie? How iudge we of the Publican, did hee not manifest the humilitie of his soule euen by the standing of his body? hee would not so much as lift vp his eyes to heauen, but smote his breast, and said, God be mercifull to mee a sinner[k]. Consider well the example of Saint Paul, I was once aliue (saith he) without the Law; hee once bare his head as high as the best, and I warrant you would not haue feared for profession of Religion, to set his foot to him that was holiest; touching the righteousnesse which is in the Law (saith he) I was vnblameable[m]. But when his eies were opened to see his former errour, when he had found out the true way to life, life, and began to frame to enter in it, then hee ſtooped, I know that in me dwelleth no good thing: I count all things but loſſe, for the excellent knowledge ſake of Chriſt Ieſus my Lord; I iudge them to be dung, that I may winne Chriſt [n]. n Phil.3 8.

The Vſe. It is of very great vſe. It will prooue a great many of vs to be meere ſtrangers to the way of life. For why? It may be truely ſaid of vs, as the Lord ſpake once of the Iewes, We are not humbled to this day [o]: the naturall pride of our hearts is not yet beaten downe; there be but few that ſtoope and are caſt downe with the ſight of their owne ſpirituall baſeneſſe, few that ſtand in awe of Gods maieſty, and that tremble at his Word. The proud Phariſie that ſtood vaunting, God I thanke him, I am thus and thus [p], hath many followers; but the poore Publican that hung downe his head, the conſcience of his ſinnes filling his face with ſhame, hath but few like him. What one of many hath learned with Dauid, to bee low in his owne ſight [q]? Pauls rule, If any man among you ſeeme to be wiſe in this world, let him bee a foole that he may be wiſe [r]: few know it, but fewer vnderſtand it, but they be feweſt of all that haue practiſed it. O when ſhal we be found to be humbled in that meaſure as the Corinths were, to whom Paul was forced to write a letter of comfort to reuiue them? One is puffed vp with a conceit of his owne ſufficiency & knowledge, and ſcornes the ſimplicity of the Goſpell, and to ſit in the Learners forme in Chriſts ſchoole. Another is frozen in ignorance and blindneſſe, and knowes nothing by himſelfe, his very vices ſeemes vertues vnto him, euery thing is with him as it ought to be. A third is lifted vp with a preſumptuous opinion of Gods mercy, and thinkes it a matter of eaſineſſe to obtaine it, ſo that he neuer ſo much as thinkes vpon yeelding, and vpon the humbling of his ſoule before the Lord: ſo that we may well be ſaid to be ſtrangers from the way of life, ſuch we will not ſtoope ſo low, as this ſtrait gate of humility. Begge we of God therefore, that he would bend our iron necke, that hee would take the ſtiffe ſtony hearts out of our bodies, and giue vs hearts of fleſh, yeelding and flexible, and eaſie to be bent, that being once become euen as nothing in our owne opinion, wee may be fit paſſengers for this little and low doore that leadeth vnto life.

Doctrine 5: Well, it followeth: together with this ſtooping, there muſt go (as I ſaid) a certaine ſtripping of our ſelues alſo; he that would goe through a ſtrait way, a narrow entry, it is no wiſedome for him to clogge himſelfe with many things about him, hee had need rather to lighten himſelfe, that hee may goe through with the greater eaſe. So muſt it be in this caſe, the gate you ſee to life, is ſtrait and pinching, and therefore as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh to the Hebrewes (very fitly for this purpoſe) The ſinne that hangeth ſo faſt on, muſt be ſhaken off [s]: the olde man muſt bee caſt off [t]: the fleſh with the affections and luſt muſt bee mortified [u]: our members that are on earth muſt be crucified [x]: the weapons of vnrighteouſneſſe muſt bee laid aſide [y]: we muſt leaue our old ſins behind vs, if we wil enter in here; to bring them in with vs at this little gate it is impoſsible. The couetous man with his bags, the ſwearer with his great oaths, that malicious man that ſwels with his malice, the ambitious with his high thoughts, the vicious with his minions, the drunkard with his full cuppes; theſe, and the like to theſe can neuer enter here with their dependances. What ſinne ſoeuer thou haſt formerly delighted in, if it were to thee as thy right hand, or thy right eye, thou muſt cut it off and caſt it from thee, thou muſt ſtriue to ſtrip thy ſelfe of it, or elſe this gate is much too little for thee to go in at. This is like the hole the Snake creepeth through, where hee leaues his olde skinne behinde him. If thou meane to come here, thou muſt then ſay with S. Peter, It is enough for me that I haue ſpent the time paſt of my life, after the luſts of the Gentiles, walking in wantonneſſe, luſts, drunkennes, gluttony, drinkings, and in abominable idolatries [z]; other other things, better things are now expected of mee; euen that henceforth, I should liue, not after the lusts of men, but after the will of God. It is an excellent place. I could bring in a cloud of witnesses to make good this point, that olde sinnes must be stript off, when we once put our foote to the threshold of this straitgate. This I may be bold to say, for I know it is true; that there is no mans or womans conuersion recorded in the Scripture, but there is a manifest change noted in them: Infirmities they had still, but sinne reigned not in them, as it did before. And there is great reason for it: For if a man entring into the profession of Christianity, might still haue libertie to follow the waies of his owne heart, and to please himselfe, in fulfilling of his owne lusts; what great thing were it to be religious? If he that had beene ignorant, might be ignorant still, he that had beene filthy, might be filthy still, he that had beene an oppressor, might oppresse still, and so in other specialities: all the world then would be religious; what great thing then should Christ be thought to worke in vs, and for vs, if our olde corruptions should reigne, and we should not be freed from the dominion of sinne? Verse 3.

Vse. This point will discouer vnto many of vs, the folly and vanitie of our hearts; we will needs be thought to be in the right way, and to haue chosen the true course vnto eternall happinesse, but yet in the meane time we will not forsake our old fashions, somewhat or other is behinde, which either for the profite, or pleasure, or estimations sake, we will not be beaten from: some sweete sinne or other, that if it were possible we would euen carry with vs into heauen, and so by that meanes we doe vtterly barre vp against our selues, our entrance into life. I pray you let vs not be deceiued. Let mee propound vnto you the same question which Paul propounded vnto King Agrippa [a]; Tell me, Doe you beleeue the Scripture? thinke you that it is true which Christ saith, that the gate to heauen is a strait gate? If you doe, thinke with your selues, what other reason can be deuised, why it should so be termed, then this; because it requireth the stripping off of olde corruptions? If you agree this to be the meaning, how shall we then hope to be saued, and yet willingly, purposely and aduisedly retaine and hold fast our old sinnes, as though we would at once serue both God and Mammon; walke both in the Lords way, and in our owne way? These things cannot holde, vnlesse we thinke to make God a lyer. Striuing to enter in at the straite gate, and a not striuing against our owne selfe-pleasing humours, these things cannot agree. This is the vse. a Act. 26. 27.

The second Sermon.

I Proceed still in the matter, which in the beginning I tolde you was most agreeing to the maine scope of this place of Scripture, which is, to shew what things of necessitie ought to be in all that would be saued; Foure particulars haue bin treated of, the rest now follow to be handled. The fifth thing then which by the authoritie and strength of this text, ought to be in euery one that desireth saluation, is a continuall proceeding and going on in good things. I doubt not but you shall see this plainely proued to bee comprehended in the Text. Our Sauiour heere compareth Heauen to a place, from which by nature we are all estranged; true Religion is the way leading vnto it, humilitie (the deniall of our selues, and the renouncing the bypast pleasures of sinne) is the gate entring vs into this way. Now the vse you know of a way, is for trauellers, not for idle loyterers, or vaine gazers, or time-deluding trifflers; such is this spirituall way, it is a way leading to life, and therefore requireth a continuall proceeding, from steppe to steppe, from grace to grace, without desisting, without tyring, vntill the iournies end be reached vnto: and this is the expresse doctrine of the Scripture. The Author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes hath two excellent places for this purpose, the first is in the sixt Chapter, where, writing vnto those that had beene well and carefully instructed in the first principles of Religion (which he termeth the Doctrine of the beginning of Christ) hee exhorteth them, that, not satisfying themselues therewith, as though it were enough that they were thus entred, and as it were seasoned with sound knowledge, they should now be led forward vnto perfection (b); as if he had said, Indeede it is true, you haue begun well, yet you must not thinke that sufficient; there is a kinde of perfection to be aymed at, and you must still preasse and indeuour onwards to obtaine it: the second place is, in the twelfth chapter, Cast away (saith he) euery thing that presseth downe, (discharge your selues as much as it is impossible of all incombrances) the sinne that hangeth so fast on, seeke to be eased of it; and, let vs runne with patience, the race which is set before vs (c); here, iust according to this text, he likeneth the course of Christianitie to a race, in which there must be a speedy hastening, without giuing ouer, vntill the end of the race be come vnto. We haue examples hereof in Scripture, two chiefly: the one in Dauid, I will runne the way of thy commandements [d]; there was a proceeding, a going on, a growth in goodlines: The other in Paul, speaking of the excellent knowledge of Christ, of feeling the vertue of his resurrection, and of being conformable to his death; Brethren (saith hee) I count not my selfe that I attained to it (e), (and yet Paul was more then ordinarily expert in the mysterie of Christ) but one thing I doe, I forget that which is behind, that which I haue done hitherto, I am euen asha med of it, I account it not woorth the naming, I endeuour my selfe vnto that which is before, and follow hard toward the marke, for the price of the high calling of God in Christ Iesus: it is a place, and an example worthy (as the Scripture speaketh) to be written with the point of a Diamond [f] in the tables of euery Christian mans heart. Dauid describing the true worshippers of GOD that doe serue him him in truth of heart without hypocrisie, saith, they are such as goe from strength to strength[g]: men that doe walke in the Law of the Lord[h]: these manner speakings doe necessarily imply proceeding. It is truely saide, that in Religion not to goe forward, is to go backward, and that that mans knowledge and feeling is but a meere conceit, a matter of fancie onely, which is not accompanied with a desire of encrease. All preaching, all exercises of Religion ayme at one of these two, either to conuert those that are vncalled, or to builde vp those which are conuerted. Desire the sincere milke of the Word, saith the Apostle, that yee may grow thereby[i]; and God giues his Spirit vnto his chosen, not only to renew them, and to beget in them some little sparkles of grace, but to make them perfect in good workes[k]. We ought to thanke God alwayes for you, saith Paul to the Thessalonians, because your faith groweth exceedingly[l]. The chosen of God are likened to trees planted by the riuers of waters, which will bring forth fruit in due season, whose leafe doth neuer fade[m]: this is not all, for they doe not onely hold their owne, but they are so full of sap, that they shall bring forth fruit in their age, and euen then bee fatte and flourishing[n]. Euill men saith the Apostle, waxe worse and worse[o]; and fall away more and more, from one extremity to another; adding drunkennes to thirst[q], as Moses speaketh. It cannot then but be a dishonour to God, if his Spirit shall not be able to work to the making of those that are his better & better, to the leading them by degrees nearer and nearer vpon perfection. Thus you see the certainty of this point, namely, that the enterers into this gate of life, must not stand (as it were) about the doore, and sit them downe as soone as they haue begunne to taste of good things, but there is a way before them to be trauelled in; and, as through the necessitie of Nature, they come euery day nearer to the end of their dayes, so by the power of grace, they must striue to come euery day nearer to the end of their faith, the saluation of their soules. Let vs apply it.

Vse 1. To reproue that which hath beene reproued often, but is not yet reformed, and that is our slackenesse, and our sluggishnes in spirituall things. There is not one man of many, but he thinkes, and is verily perswaded, that he hath religion enough, and that he is come far enough in the wayes of godlinesse, hee knoweth enough, and hee is zealous enough: I desire but the testimonies of your owne hearts to witnesse with mee, whether that which I say be not truth; for if it were not so that men were strongly perswaded, that for matters of Religion they were forward enough, how could it be that they should make so little account of the meanes to bring them vnto more perfection? how is it possible that they should not be ashamed of themselues to be found at this houre, as ignorant in the grounds of pietie, and as slacke in the duties of Gods worship, and in the practise of holinesse, as they were many yeeres agoe? There be a great many of vs touching whom, if it were enquired what knowledge in Religion they had some good number of yeeres since, what zeale they shewed in the promoting of Gods kingdome, what care in the hearing of Gods word, and in the worship and seruice of his name: and againe, how it fareth with them for these things at this present: it will bee found, that looke how it was of old, so it is yet, ignorant then, ignorant yet; careless then, careless yet; no alteration, no change, vnlesse it be this, namely, that now they are more dull, more vnteachable, more hardned, more cold-hearted, more profane, more obstinate then before. How can this holde for good at the day of tryall? you see the course of Christianity which leadeth to eternall happinesse, hath both a gate to enter at, and a way to goe forward in. How shall we thinke to arriue at the rest of the Lord, if we make no conscience to proceede in goodnesse? If wee stand at a point, propounding to our selues a forme and course, which we will still go round in, like a horse in a mill, and further then so we will not passe, we will be at a stint in our religion, and beyond that we will not goe: it is as vnpossible for vs to be saued, as it is for him to come to an house or towne many miles off, who seeing the way to it, stands still in it, and neuer puts one foot forward from the place where he tooke vp his first standing. Thinke not the Word of God hath spoken these things in vaine, shadowing our spirituall matters vnto vs by earthly things; Gods purpose is to make vs conceiue the truth the better, and by such a place as this is, to conuince vs euen by the light of our owne reason, that there is no hope of saluation, without a care to adde dayly to our spirituall estate, to encrease in knowledge, to proceed in zeale, to be more forward in the worship of God, to haue more feeling of the loue and fauour of God euery day then other. If we be glutted with these things, the forenoones hearing filleth our stomacke, and we haue no further appetite that day, this dayes hearing doth not sharpen vs against the next day, but wee are ready to please our selues with that we doe, and so to amplifie it in our owne priuate conceit, as though no more were needfull; It is a dangerous thing, I should but deceiue you, and plucke your blood vpon my head, If I should tell you that this were the way to eternall life.

Vse 2. Well, for a second Vse; if it be so dangerous a thing not to goe forward, what is it, thinke we, to goe backward, to decay, and grow cold in our loue to good things; Their last state (saith our Sauiour) will be worse then their first[r]: And, it is better not to haue knowne the way of righteousnesse, then after they haue knowne, to turne from the holy commandement giuen vnto them[s]: The euill spirit that is once cast out, bringeth with him seuen diuels worse then himselfe. It is a matter to bee thought vpon by diuerse of vs: There was a time when the word of God was more precious vnto vs, and when men and women did euen throng together to this place, many seemed euen glad to heare, and to be made acquainted with good things was a ioy vnto them: But now we are full, we are (like the nice and vnthankfull Israelites) weary of this Manna, the commonnesse of Gods blessings hath drawne them into contempt. Beware of looking backe, take heed of going from strength to weakenesse, from zeale to coldnesse and deadnesse of heart, from carefulnesse to security, from louing the house of God and the exercises thereof, to loathing them, or at least, to a lesse and more cold esteeming them. Woe shall bee vnto vs, if we shall now be glutted with that, which sometimes wee longed for: it is a signe, that all our shewes were but shewes, & all our protestations but hypocrisie. For, if yee haue tasted how bountifull the Lord is, then ye desire the sincere milke of the Word to grow thereby[t]: If yee haue found any sweetnesse in the exercises of Religion, it is certaine your appetite will bee increased rather then diminished. If our spirits be dulled and tyred out with the continuall vse of these holy exercises, it is a fearefull signe, and yet it is common, that we haue all need to be admonished of it. And let all that professe Religion, remembring that it is a way; life eternall is not by and by possessed. If there be no proceeding, it is dangerous, but if there be backe-sliding, if our righteousnesse bee but as the morning deaw[u], which the heat of th Sunne soone parcheth, it is worst of all: the dog to the vomit, and the sow to the myre[x], is the heauiest censure that can be giuen of any man. They which haue been once enlightened, and haue tasted the gifts of Gods Spirit, if they once fall backe, it is impossible they should be renewed by repentance[y]: it is a wofull saying, it should make vs euen tremble to consider it.

y Heb. 6.5,6.

Now to this going on & proceeding in the way to life, there are sundry things belonging, which it is very meet that wee should be made acquainted with, they are impertinent neither to the matter nor to the text. The first is, continuall guidance and direction. A man that is to iourney in a way vnknowne, will not bee satisfied with this alone, that he is set into the right way, but considering the possibility of erring, he will furnish himselfe with as many directions as he can, glad he will be of any mans company that vnderstandeth the way; sometime hee will be at the charge rather then faile, to hire a man that may conduct him. The way of peace which leadeth vnto happinesse, is a way which flesh and blood is not acquainted with, and the nature of man is of it selfe very subiect to mistaking; therfore fore his duty that would grow in godlines, is to get vnto him the direction of some sure guide, which will not deceiue him, that so hee may not faile of the end and marke which hee desireth. This was Dauids care, as appeareth by many speeches of his: Make me to vnderstand the way of thy precepts. [z] Teach me the way of thy Statutes [a]. Direct me in the path of thy commandements [b]. Direct my steps in thy Word [c]. The grand guide (whose directions are alonely to bee looked vnto, and cannot deceiue) is the Lord Iesus. I am the way (saith he) and no man commeth to the Father but by me [d]. And the Apostle to the Hebrewes, exhorting to run the race which is set before vs, bids vs withall to looke vpon the author and finisher of our faith [e]: his blood, as the same Apostle speaketh, hath prepared a new and a liuing way [f]. The direction which Christ giueth, is comprehended in his Word, which is therefore often in the Scripture termed the Lords way, because no course can bring a man vnto eternall life, but that which is there prescribed. Dauid saith, this Word was a light vnto his path [g]: and Peter [h] commendeth those to whom hee wrote, because they gaue heed to it, as to the best and surest Instructer. The word of God contained in Scripture is fitly compared to the pillar of the cloud which led the people of Israel in the wildernesse; when that went forward, the people marched; when that stayed, the people stood still; all their iourney was framed according to the mooving of the cloud. Of the same vse is the word of God in the way of life; when that calleth, we may and must mooue; when that restraineth, we ought not to put forward; our care must bee to fute our course and carriage thereunto. Now as Christ the head-guide hath left the fulnesse of direction in his written Word, so he hath entrusted the Ministers of the Church therewith, hee hath committed it vnto them [i], as the Apostle speaketh, not that they should engrosse it to themselues, & lead the people of God which way themselues please, but that they might studie to search out the hid matter thereof, and apply it to the direction of Gods Church, according to euery mans occasion. For this cause the Pastors of the Church in respect of their function, are called Leaders or Guides [k]: and whereas Christ cals ignorant & erroneus teachers blinde guides [l], it argueth that sound Instructers are well termed by the name of Guides. The interpreting of the Scripture, is called a guiding of the hearers. When Philip demanded of the Eunuch, reading (as he rode) vpon Esay, Whether he vnderstood that which he read: he answered him, How can I, except I had a guide [m]? meaning except he had one to expound vnto him. So then, hitherto the matter is now brought; hee that would goe on, and proceed as hee ought in the way of life, must get himselfe a guide. The head-guide is the Lord Iesus, hee hath recommended his directions vnto vs in his Word, and for the common benefit and instruction of his Church, he hath giuen gifts vnto men, and enabled them to lay open the mystery of the Scripture, and by this his ordinance he guides & directs those that are in his eternall counsell ordained vnto life. So that as it is said of the iourney of the Israelites, that God did leade them like sheepe by the hand of Moses and Aaron [n]: so it is true in this spirituall voyage, that the Lord leades his chosen by the hand of his Ministers. By them he gathereth together his Saints [o]. These I am sure are all of them grounds that cannot bee denied; That the way of life is to vs vnknowne, and therefore we need a guide: Secondly, that Christ Iesus is the onely true guide: Thirdly, that he hath registred all his directions in his Word (that is, the whole counsell of God) and that for the dispensing of his Word (notwithstanding the priuate vse which euery Christian may and ought to haue of it) he hath ordained publike teaching, by which to guide our feet into the way of peace. He that is disposed to be captious, let him think wel which of all these he can except against: In the meane time we will take them for truth, and so make the best vse of them.

This sheweth, that albeit the most of vs at this day, that professe Religion, haue chosen guides vnto our selues, yet wee faile in choosing the true direction: some are guided by their owne priuate conceit, some by the guise of the times, Vse. 1 2 3

some goe with the droue and are carried with the multitude, some are led only by the courses of their forefathers, they hold it a sure way, to do as they haue done: the direction of Christ Iesus speaking in the Scriptures, and reuealing his aduice vnto vs in the ministery of his Church, is least looked after. Each man in these cases thinkes himselfe wise enough to bee his owne aduiser. In physicke we feare our owne iudgement, and beleeue the Doctor; in the Law, our Councellour; in other things we seeke to men that professe knowledge, and are of vnderstanding in those things wherein we desire direction: but in Diuinity, and in the cases of the soule, most men imagine they are able to afford themselues counceil good enough: hence is it, that the knowledge of Gods word is not cared for, the opening of it by exposition, the vrging it by exhortation and reproofe, these things are little esteemed: and indeed, if men bee so wise, that they can by their owne wisedome guide themselues, wherefore should they value them? But cursed bee the man (saith the Scripture) that maketh flesh his arme, and withdraweth his heart from the Lord [p]; God curseth the fancies of mens owne hearts, and giueth a blessing onely to the obedient yeelding to his owne ordinance: what course soeuer is framed without the word, be it in mans reason neuer so plausible; nay whatsoeuer is sought for in the word with a relying vpon a mans owne priuate collections in contempt or neglect of the publique meanes, the Lord doth neuer blesse it, it turneth into error, and leadeth those that trust vnto it into destruction. This therefore we are taught hence, if we desire (as becomes vs) to proceed in good things, and according to the aduice of the Spirit of God, to be led forward vnto perfection, we must seeke the direction of the only true guide Christ Iesus in the Scriptures: If we be strangers in the booke of God, we cannot chuse but be mistaken, if wee would make true benefit by the Word, the ordinance of God must be regarded: and what euer he be that would be guided in the way of life, hee must range himselfe among the common order of learners in Christs Schoole. This is the right way, there is no blessing promised of God to any other course. Now you will say to mee (perhaps) this is a very vncertaine and hazardous course, to binde our selues to be guided by men, especially now adaies, when as the world is so full of Seducers, and those Seducers also so full of subtilty, and euery one making pretences of the truth to be on his side? I answer, I perswade not to this, to build vpon men, as though we should receiue directions for matter of saluation vpon trust, beleeuing euery thing that is commended to vs, by those that beare the name of Teachers in Gods Church: that were an intollerable bondage, and a slauery not to be endured; for the spirits must be tryed [q]; and the Scriptures must be examined whether their doctrine be according. If you say there is yet no certainety, for as they may mistake in teaching, so may you in iudging also; I answer, we must be so much the more earnest with the Lord in prayer, that his spirit may conduct vs; and this rule in most things wee may proceed by. That doctrine which aymeth at this, to bring men only to Christ, by driuing them out of themselues, to rest alone vpon his worthinesse, and giueth no colour of liberty to any sin, but still striues to keepe the corrupt nature of man within compasse; that doctrine I say is the true way, the Preacher that draweth to this is a true guide, and his direction cannot deceiue vs. This is a plaine rule easie to be conceiued, it is a short rule, easie to bee remembred, it is a rule, easie to bee confirmed, in as much as it agreeth with the whole scope of the Scriptures, which is Christ Iesus freely iustifying vs by imputed righteousnesse before God, and powerfully renuing vs, and sanctifying vs by his Spirit, to the declaring of the fruits of obedience before men. This is the first thing that must accompany our care to goe on in the way to life; a dependance vpon the true guide Iesus Christ, reuealing his holy directions to vs in his Word. In some matters of interpretation of particular texts, or some points of Religion of lesser moment, it is possible for men of the greatest vnderstanding finally to mistake; but he that will in humilitie, and in a denial and renouncing of himselfe, take the right course to bee setled, in matter that doe necessarily concerne the saluation of his soule, can not (though his learning be neuer so small) vtterly be deceiued.

The second thing that must accompany our purpose of going on in the way to happinesse, is a true inspection and an earnest heeding of our course: so much is very manifest by the Text. You see heere, that as the gate of entrance is termed strait, so the way of progresse is called narrow: now a narrow way requireth heedefulnesse, a little slipping or going to this side, or that, may breede a great deale of inconuenience. And if we examine the Scripture, we shall see the like heede-taking required in this spirituall iourney. It is a charge of the holy Ghost, that we should Walke circumspectly, [r] walke exactly, or curiously, or to speake truely according to the words meaning, walke precisely: Make strait steps to your feete, lest that which is halting be turned out of the way [s]. Paul calleth the life of a Christian walking by a rule, [t] as if a man went by a line, which he will not, which he dareth not turne from. Take heede that yee doe as the Lord your God hath commanded you, turne not aside to the right hand, nor to the left [u]. An example we haue in Dauid; first his resolution, I thought I will take heede to my waies; [x] then next his prayer, O that my waies were made direct, or straight, carried, as it were, by a kinde of leuell, with a respect (as himselfe after speaketh in the same place) vnto all Gods commandements, [y] as when a man hath a marke in his eye, and striues to keepe an euen and direct course vnto it; or as when a workeman applieth his rule to his worke, and with his best indeuour ordereth the same accordingly. This is briefly, but yet plainely and vndeniably the truth of this point: he that desireth to proceede in the way to happinesse, must remember the way is narrow, he may easily swarue from it, and it doth therefore call vpon him for very great heedefulnesse and circumspection. 2.

y Psal. 119. 5, 6.

The vse hereof is, to discouer two euils in the times, the one is carelesnesse, the other is prophanenesse: touching the former, notwithstanding the straitnesse which the word of God enioynes, yet how great is our generall dissolutenes? who thinkes himselfe bound to those strait tearmes, as that he should make conscience of euery sinne? what man doth euen as it were combine, and couenant with himselfe, to be iealous ouer all his waies, to set a watch before his mouth, to take heede to his words, to make a couenant with his eyes, to be wary of his lookes, to ponder the path of his feete into what companie he comes, to put his knife to his throat, [z] as Salomon speakes; to beware of excesse, to keepe his heart with diligence, looking to it, what thoughts he entertaines, to be alwaies fearing, and euer suspecting himselfe, lest he should be miscarried, to be still lifting vp his heart to heauen, that the Lord may establish him; who I say entreth into couenant with himselfe for this spirituall heedfulnesse? nay rather who doth not aduenture to take libertie to himselfe in some one thing or other, according as his humor leades him; mincing & extenuating sin, and supposing presumptuously, that a man may wander a little astray, and yet returne. And by this meanes Satan getteth great aduantage against many, for while he allureth and tolleth them on, vnder a colour of libertie from an euen and direct course, he draweth them on further and further, vntill like a man that hath quite lost his way, they know not which way to returne. Remember we therefore, that the way to life is a narrow way: it is not so (as some profanely haue said) that a man, if he will, may (as in a iourney hence to London) take his pleasure by the way, and ride here and there vpon occasion, and yet at last, though it be something the longer first, come to the place intended; and so in trauelling to heauen, enioy the pleasures of sinne, and yet for all that, although it be somewhat the further way about, arriue at the place of happinesse; no, it is a narrow way, errour on both sides, a man can not be too circumspect. The second euill which this point discouereth is prophanenesse, because whereas the word of God requireth in a mans conuersation very great heedfulnesse, yet in the world it is made a iest, and a matter of ignominy, and enough is supposed to be spoken to a mans reproach, if hee be charged with precisenesse. True it is, that many putting on a shew of straitnesse, are notwithstanding loose enough in many things: but what then? though some doe professe godlinesse in hypocrisie, yet that can iustly bee no preiudice to those that doe it in sincerity: certaine it is, that in the matters of God, no man can be too precise, in the watching ouer his owne heart, and in the pondering his waies, no man can be ouer circumspect; And therefore let men of corrupt mindes, who (as Salomon saith) make a mocke of sinne [a], let such I say scorne as themselues list; yet let so many as feare God, and desire to approue themselues vnto him, euer remember the narrownesse of the way that leadeth vnto life, and assure themselues that a little wandering after the vanities of their owne hearts, a little satisfying themselues in the pleasures of sinne, may soone misleade them, and make the right way very hard to be recouered.

3 The third thing which must accompany our purpose of going on in the way to happinesse, is a resolution and preparation for such encombrances as may meet vs on the way. It is wisedome we know in trauelling to be prepared for the weather, to be armed against such as lie in wait to spoile, & do many times make a prey of the goods, nay euen of the liues of the passers by: so in this case, in as much as a man intending to proceed in the wayes of God, shall be assaulted with many grieuances, it is good policie, both to put on a resolution to wrestle with them, and so be armed so that hee may preuaile against them. First, in the world a man shall receiue many vnkindnesses and indignities, much reproach. Dauid saith, the very abiects assemble themselues against him; they tare him and ceased not [b]; and the drunkards made songs of him [c]: and the whole Church complaineth, that their soule was too full of the mocking of the wealthy, and of the despitefulnesse of the proud [d]. Secondly, the Lord also is wont to exercise his deerest seruants with many crosses, which to flesh and blood are very grieuous and heauy to bee borne; Thine arrowes O Lord (saith Dauid) haue light vpon me [e]: I am like a leafe driuen to and fro, saith Iob [f]. Thirdly, Sathan is a professed enemy to euery good course, and will lay many baits, and vse many meanes to withdraw: here pleasure assaults, there profit, there honour and estimation amongst men, each of them of great force to perswade: another while hee rayseth vp trouble against man, euen out of his owne thoughts, setting vpon him with the horror of sinne, the terror of the law, the fearfulnesse of Gods maiesty, the strictnesse of his iustice; out of all these hee will raise matter of despaire, and preuaile many times very farre, to the appalling and amasing of a Christian. These things, a man intending to trauell in the narrow way of life, must thinke vpon, and not onely so, but make prouision also, that ouercomming all encombrances, he may hold out the profession of his hope without wauering, vnto the end. Touching the reproach and obloquie of the disdainefull world, hee must consider, that in all reproach which is cast vpon him for his care of a good conscience, Christ is his partner [g]. The taunts which Moses endured at the hands of the Egyptians, are called the rebuke of Christ [h]: Peter telleth them which are euill entreated for the truths sake, that therein they were partakers of Christs sufferings [i]; What greater comfort? Secondly, that the hatred of the world, is a testimony and an assurance to a mans soule, that hee is one of Gods chosen: If ye were of the world, the world would loue his owne, but because ye are not of the world, but I haue chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you [k]. Againe, touching afflictions and crosses, hee must know that they are trials of faith, exercisers of patience, reformers of corrupt affections, meanes to reclaime and withdraw from the world; this will make a man take vp his crosse cheerefully, and euen reioyce in tribulation. Thirdly, concerning Sathans assaults, hee must bee well perswaded of the bewitchings of worldly pleasures, of the poyson that lurketh vnder the name of profit, of the vanity of honour and credite credit amongſt men, hee muſt gather together all the gracious promiſes of mercy in Chriſt, all experimentall teſtimonies of Gods loue vnto himſelfe, that ſo hee may haue comfort in the middeſt of the ſharpeſt of Sathans encounters. This hee muſt doe that would goe on in the narrow way that leadeth to life.

To reprooue the ſecure negligence of many profeſſors of religon now adaies, that neuer make any prouiſion for the hardſhip they are like to meete with, if they will be Chriſt Diſciples: and ſo by that meanes meeting vnexpectedly with the diſgraces and iniuries of the world, with the ſharpeneſſe of afflictions, with the buffetings of Satan, of all which they had little thought before; repent themſelues of the courſe they are entred into, and fall away vnto their woonted coldneſſe. They are like an vnaduiſed traueller, that beginning his iourney in a faire morning, and ſuppoſing that the weather will not alter, leaueth his furniture behind, by which he ſhould be ſheltred againſt a ſtorme, and then afterward the windes blowing, and the tempeſt riſing, is driuen to returne backe, and ſo to looſe his labour, or elſe to take ſome couert, ſuch as vpon the ſuddaine he can meete with, where though he finde ſome little comfort for a time, yet the ſtorme encreaſing, he is driuen thence alſo: ſo is it with many profeſſors, when the times ſeeme to laugh vpon religion, and the entertaining it doth not as yet hazard any thing which fleſh and blood affects, they are very forward, but when a ſtorme comes which they looked not for, the world oppoſes it ſelfe, pleaſure muſt bee ſequeſtred, profit muſt be neglected, credit muſt be hazarded; then they are found to fall backe, not being prouided to bare it out, and ſo make their laſt daies worſe then their firſt. Let this then among the reſt be borne away; namely, that he that would proceede in the way of godlineſſe, muſt thinke vpon the diſcouragements hee ſhall meete with, and muſt therefore harden himſelfe againſt them, that what ſoeuer happen, he may finiſh his courſe with ioy, and may ſo run, that in the end he may be ſure to obtaine. Vſe.

The laſt thing which muſt accompany our purpoſe of going on, is an often calling the courſe paſt to an account, to ſee whether it be right and ſtreight yea or no: he who iourneieth in a way which he is not acquainted with, it is wiſedome for him euer and anone, to bee mindfull of the directions which were giuen him, and to remember the marks which were told him, the turnings and the by-paths which hee was warned of, to the end that by thinking hereupon, if he finde he is right, he may proceede with comfort; if he be deceiued, he may returne quickely before hee haue wandered too farre, and erred ouermuch. So it muſt bee in this way: I haue conſidered my wayes (ſaith Dauid) and turned my feete vnto thy teſtimonies (k). You ſee Dauids faſhion what it was, often to view his owne courſes, to ſearch and to try his waies, to ſee how he kept his feete in the path of Gods commandements, and where he perceiued himſelfe to haue beene miſtaken, ſtrait hee returned and endeuoured to come backe quickely: I turned my feete vnto thy teſtimonies; in the next verſe he addes, I made haſt and prolonged not (l). When the ſame Dauid willeth & exhorteth men to examine their heart vpon their bed (m); what doth he meane, but that euery man, when he is alone by himſelfe, ſhould retire his thoughts, ſhould looke backe into the day paſt, to ſee what hee hath done, and how he hath demeaned himſelfe? that ſo he may recouer himſelfe for his often ſlips by repentance, and renue his vow of keeping an euen courſe in the way of life. Paul bids we ſhould not let the Sunne goe downe vpon our wrath (n): thence a generall rule may be drawne, that no ſinne ſhould be ſuffered to lodge all night with vs; an account ſhould be taken of our falls, and wee ſhould preſently labour to recouer. The Scripture ſpeaking of the care of Iob in offering ſacrifice for his children, thinking that in many things they might ouerſhoote themſelues in their banquetting, addeth this clauſe, Thus did Iob euery day (o): Hee that was thus daily carefull about his childrens courſes, what was he (thinke we) for his owne.

This point will diſcouer as much careleſnes as any of the former, for who is amongſt Vſe mongſt vs that doth thus call his life and carriage to an account, that in an euening, when hee is about to take his reſt, and knoweth not whether hee ſhall euer wake againe, or no, askes himſelfe this queſtion, What haue I done? How haue I walked this day? how haue I wandred from the path of Gods commandements? what duties haue I failed in? how farre haue the vanities and profites of the world preuailed againſt me to miſlead me? Who (I ſay) is wont to keepe this priuy audite within himſelfe? nay, who thinketh this to be a dutie that hee is tyed vnto? And therefore no maruell if ſinne grow ſtrong vpon vs, no wonder if wee ſtray farre from the right courſe; and if wee looke not to it, wee will ſoone be drawne into ſuch a maze, that wee ſhall not know which way to returne. Let vs take with vs then this inſtruction among others, often to try our wayes, once a day at the leaſt to conſider our courſes: we doe all erre, In many things (ſaith Saint Iames) we miſſe all[p]; but by this meanes, errour ſhall not preuaile againſt vs, and by vſe wee ſhall grow ſo perfect in our wayes, that wee ſhall very ſeldome be miſtaken.

The third Sermon.

For it is the wide gate and broad way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which goe in thereat.

WE haue done with the aduertisement it selfe, and are now come to the reasons by which it is enforced. The first reason runneth thus; because albeit the gate and way which the most affect, be wide and broad, full of pleasing, and full of company, yet in the end it leadeth to destruction. By the gate and way mentioned in this first reason, is meant the same which else-where is called the way of sinners [q]; a way that is not good [r]: the way of falshood [s]: an euill way [t]: it is the gate and way which by nature wee all trauell in, therefore it is termed our owne way [u]: the way of our owne heart [x]: because it is a way which of our selues without a guide we goe into, and which of our selues wee are neuer either able or willing to forsake. It is said to be a wide and broad way, because it is a way of liberty to the flesh, and giues a man leaue to run any course, which his owne priuate corrupt humour affecteth: it is a way which imposeth no conditions of restraint, but whatsoeuer a man (led by the lusts of his own heart) bends vnto, it allures him to it, and seemes to say as the flattering chaplaines did to Ahab, touching the expedition against Ramoth, Goe and prosper [y]. Now this way notwithstanding the pleasingnesse of it, our Sauiour saith, It leads to destruction, the issues of it are the waies of death [z]; it brings no small inconuenience, or slight annoyance, such as losse of goods, or blemish in good name, or sicknes of body, but the surpassing exceeding eternall curse of God, the vtter ruine both of soule and body, an endlesse, easelesse, hopelesse misery. This then is Christs reasoning, that in as much as there be but two wayes, a strait, and a wide; and the wide leadeth a man to such an irrecouerable downefall, therefore we would beware of it, and enter in at the strait gate. This is the meaning briefly: Let vs now see what necessary matter of instruction we may obserue.

First, here we learne, that albeit the way of sinne be, for the present time in the sense & seeming of flesh and blood very delightfull, yet the reward thereof is misery, & the end destruction. This is the expresse doctrine of the text, and it is easily iustified by the Scripture. First in generall it said of all sin, that the wages thereof is death [a]; and, that the end of the wicked shall be cut off [b]. Secondly, in particular of seuerall sins, the word of God speaks very expresly to this purpose. Of adultery Salomon saith (describing the fashion of a harlot) that indeed her chamber is richly deckt, her bed perfumed, & her words very inticing; but (saith he) her house is the way to the graue, which goeth downe to the chambers of death [c], and her guests are in the depth of hell [d]. Of deceit, The bread of deceit is sweet to a man, but afterward his mouth shall be filled with grauell [d]. Of drunkennes, The wine shewes the colour in the cup, & goes down pleasantly, but in the end thereof, it will bite like a serpent, and hurt like a Cockatrice [f]. Of the vanity of youth, Reioyce O young man in thy youth, walke in the waies of thy heart, & in the sight of thine eyes; but know that for all these things God will bring g Eccl.11.9. bring thee to iudgement g. In all these, here is a broad pleasant way, giuing liberty and scope enough to flesh and blood, but the end of all is destruction. The sweet meats of wickednes will haue the sowre sauce of wretchednes & misery: we may see the same also verified by examples. Eue was made beleeue by the Diuell, that if she would aduenture to eat of the forbidden tree, she should receiue by it great

m Luk.16.22, 23. The rich man also died, and was buried, and was in hell torments m. I could thus easily giue you many instances, all of them seruing to shew vs, how sinne dealeth with vs, as Ioab with Amasa, hee met him and saluted him louingly (Art thou in health my brother? hee tooke him by the beard with the right hand to kisse him, but withall, hee smote him in the fifth ribbe, and shead out his bowels to the n 2 Sam.20. 9,10. ground n: Euen so sinne creepeth into our bosome, it maketh shew of delight, it pretendeth the pleasing of our mindes, and the satisfying our humour, but yet it killeth (as it were) with kindnes, and for a little Momentany pleasure, it brings eternall shame and perpetuall confusion.

Vse 1. The vse of this point thus prooued standeth thus: The first thing that ought to bee in him who desireth truely to repent, is, a hearty loathing, and an vnfained detestation of sinne. The fountaine of repentance is the heart, and a man can neuer frame himselfe to reforme that in his life, which in his heart hee disliketh not: he therefore that would practise the duties of repentance as he ought, must endeauour to feele in himselfe a deepe and an implacable hatred against sinne. Now (in my opinion) there is nothing more of force to bring a man cleane out of conceit with sinne, then the serious meditation vpon that point which I haue now deliuered. Who is there amongst vs that would not in his heart loath and detest such a one as the Prophet Ieremie speaketh of, Who speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but in his heart layeth waite for him o?
o Chap.9.8. that putteth on a shew of friendship, and yet vnder a pretence thereof, if hee could, would cut a mans throat; will not euery man say, Lord keepe me from such a friend? And yet euen so sinne dealeth with vs, it promiseth much contentment, much profit, many benefites, but in the end, in stead of contentment, there is nothing but vexation; in stead of profit, the vtter losse and ruine of a mans soule. It is good wisedome to haue this point euer in a readi-

neſſe, to lay it vp (as Mary did Christs sayings) in the midst of the heart, [p] it will bee as a bulwarke, or brasen shield to blunt the point of Sathans perswasions. It is his policie to lay a kinde of siege to a mans thoughts, with a seeming good, and as much as in him lieth, to let vs see nothing of sinne, but the outside painted ouer like whorish Iezabel, with many glorious shewes, and bewitching appearances, pleasure, profit, honour, ease, all very like to draw a man farre, vnlesse hee be otherwise ouerruled by the power of Gods Spirit. Euery one therefore that would (as Saint Iames speakes) keepe himselfe vnspotted, [q] must bee like the wise man, of whom Salomon speakes, whose eyes are in his head; [r] that is, who looketh not onely to the present face of things, but casteth his thoughts further towards the issue, fearing lest where the entrance is soenticing, the end may fall out not to bee according: the consideration of the misery which may follow, cannot but be a preseruatiue to keepe a man from being enchanted with the faire shewes of the beginning. How many might be kept from grosse sinnes, if they had care to obserue this rule? In couetousnesse, ignorance, pleasure, wantonnesse, libertie, malice, drunkennesse, excesse, extortion, falshood, men looke onely vpon the profit, ease, iollitie, and worldly estimation that doth accompany them; but the poyson that lurketh vnder these, the spirituall venome that masketh vnder these deceitfull shadowes, is either not beleeued, or not thought vpon, or else in mens priuate conceits so much lessened, that they post on still the rode way; beeing tolled along by the delight thereof, and so fall into the bottomlesse gulfe before they are ware of it. Well, it is the precept of the holy Ghost, that we should be exhorted, lest wee should bee hardened through the deceitfulnesse of sinne. [s] I exhort you therefore, and in the Lord entreate you, not to be so vnwise, as for a little superficiall pleasingnesse and fleshly contentment in the wide and broad way of vanitie, to purchase to your selues such a misery, the horror, the largenesse, the euerlasting and and vnintermitting extent whereof, no man liuing is able to esteeme. The life of man here, is not vnfitly compared to a Theater, in which euery man hath his part, some longer, some shorter, some nobler, some baser, according to the discretion of the appointer: now would any one take him for better then a madde man, that in an idle humour to weare gay apparell, and to haue the standers by make obeysance to him, would be content all the residue of his daies to bee a base drudge in a kitchin, or a slaue in a galley, vpon condition that for an houre or two, he might be attired like a King, and sit in a chaire of estate, and take vpon him like a great commander? surely no. And what are we then, who hauing a shew or two to make vpon the stage of this world, are content to buy an endlesse bondage vnder Sathan, for a transitorie satisfaction to our owne sinfull humour, in some fleshly and sensuall course, and vpon condition we may haue our fill of it, will not sticke to hazard our better part, and to cast away our owne soules? This is the first and chiefe vse of this doctrine.

Secondly, this point teacheth vs this good lesson, which is a point of especiall wisedome in Christianity, namely, alwaies to haue those courses in greatest iealousie, & to be suspitious of them, that they are not such as it is safe for vs to enter into, which at our first beginning them, and at the working vpon our thoughts to entertaine them, doe make shew of nothing but contentment to our nature, that are euer charming vs with the names of profit, of pleasure, of aduancement; it is meete for vs to feare, that vnder these baites, there lyeth some secret hooke, which if wee doe too greedily catch at the first offer, may suddenly entangle vs, and so as it were hooke vs in, that when wee would we shall not know how to get from it. The wounds of a louer Salomon saith, are faithfull, but the kisses of an enemie are to be taken heede of (t). Sathan is our grand-enemy, and sin is the thing he seekes to poyson with, he laps it vp in the sweetnes of some such thing which is tastefull to our naturall palate, and when hee makes the largest offer, as hee did to Christ, u Math. 4. 9. All this will I giue thee [u]; then some great mischiefe is to be feared, for which he labou eth to procure entrance by his plausible and pleasing perswasions. Happy is hee that hath learned this lesson, he hath well profited in the schoole of Christianity, that doth not credit the first offers, but doubts a fearefull issue, where the entrance pro mseth nothing but contentment. It is euer a rule that cannot faile: the broad, pleasant, euen way, that to flesh and blood bringeth little or no encumbrance, but giues the raines vnto it to goe where it will, is the way that certainely leadeth to destruction. And thus much for the first property of this way, it is a wide and a broad way.

Doctrine 2. The secon l qualitie it hath is, it is full of passengers, (And many there bee which goe in thereat) from which words we are taught this doctrine: That multitude in matters of religion, is no good rule to proceede by, whether it be in points to be beleeued, or in matters to be practised. The reason is plaine from hence. It is reported here of the broad way which leadeth to hell, that they are many which goe in thereat; now if number were an argument sufficient to proone the goodnesse of a course, why should it not bee also a reason of value to proone this way which Christ here speaketh of, to be the way that leadeth vnto life: If it be of no force in this particular, neither is it in any other. A matter may be beleeued and professed by many, a course may be followed and approoued by a multitude, and yet there may bee neither soundnesse in the one, nor holinesse in the other. In the daies of Noah, it is said that God looked vpon the earth, and all flesh had corrupted his way [x]. When the Angels were entertained in Lots house: the men of Sodome purposing villany and filthinesse, compassed the house round about, from the young men euen to the old, all the people from all quarters [y]. Foure hundred Prophets at one time consented together in one thing, and when the King asked their aduice touching his iourney to Ramoth, all said; Goe and prosper [z], all seeking to flatter the Kings humor. There was a generall conspiracy against Ieremie for the faithfull discharge of his duty: Come let vs imagine some deuice against Ieremie [a]. When Pilate made a motion to the people, what shall bee done with Christ, They all said, let him be crucified [b]. When Stephen had made his Apologie for himselfe, against the false imputations which were put vpon him; the Text saith, the standers by gaue a shout with a loude voyce and stopped their eares, and came vpon him all at once [c]. Of Simon the sorcerer of Samaria, it is said, that to him they gaue heede, from the least of them, euen to the greatest [d]. When Paul opposed himselfe to the Idolatrie of the Ephesians which worshipped the Images of Diana, there arose, saith the story, a shout for the space almost of two houres, of al men, crying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians [e]. The Apostle complaineth of the state of his times, and euen of those which made profession of religion, and hee deliuereth his complaint in these words, All seeke their owne, and not that which is Iesus Christs [f]. The Spirit of God prophecying by S. Iohn of the comming of Antichrist, saith, that all that dwell vpon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the booke of life [g]. In all these examples wee see great multitudes, euen swarmes of people running one course with one heart, like men possessed and ruled by one spirit, and yet all deceiued: he that should haue grounded his religion vpon these, must needs haue runne himselfe headlong into error.

Vse 1. The vse hereof is first against the Papists, who, as appeareth in the writings euen of the best learned of them, doe make multitude a note and marke of Gods Church; which howsoeuer it can little auaile them, (because if we reckon onely such as know and vnderstand what they doe beleeue and professe, wee may well thinke there are in Christendome more of vs then of them) yet notwithstanding admit it were so, that the greatest part of Europe were aduised and constant professors of their religion, what haue they gotten by it, must it needs be true which is beleeued and maintained by a multitude? Cannot the generality bee deceiued? Is it not possible for whole troupes, yea euen of learned men to be mistaken?

Yes

Yes certainly. If it be a good reason to say thus; behold this religion is professed and receiued by the most, therefore it is true; then let vs disclaime Christs aduice of entring in at the straite gate, and let vs all chuse the wide and pleasant way, for many there be that goe in thereat. It is thought probably, that at this day Mahometisme (the Turkes religion) hath more vnder it, then Christianity, though we put Papists and Protestants, and all in the weights against it; and that meere Paganisme is larger then both. Where many ioyne in the truth, there is the Church, but not for the manies sake, but for the truths sake. It is a good saying of Augustine, Si iustus es, noli numerare, sed appende, in Psal. 39. that is, if thou wouldest deale vprightly in this case, take not religion by tale or number, as though that were best which most receiue, but try it by weight, if it haue the weight of truth goe with it, be they many or few that beleeue it, it skilleth not, it is right though but one, nay though none did entertaine it. This is the first vse. If Christ be true in his sayings, that many goe in at the gate that leadeth to destruction, sure then multitude is no marke of the Church, they may be the greater part, and yet goe the way that bringeth the goers by it into hell.

Vse 2. The second vse is, to reforme the common folly and error of the world, who thinke custome and fashion, and the guise of the greatest part to bee a sufficient plea, for any course which themselues affect or vndertake, especially it holds in matters of religion, if men can say as of old, our fathers, our rulers, our ancients, the best, the most, the wisest, the wealthiest amongst vs thus they thinke, thus they doe: then they imagine they haue alleadged an argument which cannot be answered, a reason which cannot be denied. Thus men make themselues like the froth which S. Iames speakes of, which is carried vp and downe [h], with the wind, and the water, sometimes to this side, somtimes to that: or rather like the beasts of the field, who thinke nothing but follow the heard, and so many times while they suppose they are going to the pasture to be fed, they are driuen to the Shambles to be slaine. Whom this people and all the men of Israel chuse, his will I be, and with him will I dwell [i], saith Chusa to Absalom: and so it is euen the religion of many, we will not be singular, looke which way the most goe, that way will we goe. It is right as the Spirit of God speaketh to the vngodly man, when thou seest a theefe, thou runnest with him, when thou seest an adulterer, thou art partaker also with him [k]. It is the property of a foole to follow vniuersally, that which he seeth others doe, hee must needs also doe the same: yet it is an error we are all apt vnto, and the reason is; It is a hard matter to iudge, but it is an easie thing to giue credit. Well, let the wisedome of God be followed, and let his counsell be preferred before our owne conceits. Certaine it is, whatsoeuer wee imagine, that the way to hell hath the greatest store of Passengers; company is good; but it is better to goe the right way all alone, then to wander with a multitude. Therefore God gaue a charge, thou shalt not follow a multitude to doe euill [l]. What though most men in their common speech take the name of God in vaine? what though the greatest part haue the preaching of the word in no esteeme, make the Sabboth a day of carnall delight, neglect the publike worship of God, reproach and speake euill of the truth? what though all seeke their owne, as Paul saith, or as the Prophet speaketh, from the greatest euen to the least, be giuen to couetousnesse [m]? what though they goe by troupes (as Ieremies words are) into harlots houses [n]? what though the abiects doe assemble themselues together [o], as they did against Dauid, to draw good things into disgrace? let not this sway with you so farre, as to draw you into the fellowship of the same euils; remember the broad way to eternall ruine hath many that trauell it, so that though there bee much good fellowship, and iollity by the way, yet their way (saith Salomon) is darknes, they know not wherein they shall fall [p]. And who will bee so in loue with the fellowship of others, as to damne himselfe for company? The counsell of the vngodly is pleasing, the way of sinners is delightfull, the chayre of scorners is very easie: but yet blessed (saith the Psalmist)

r Psal. 37. 38. r: what are they then the better for their companie? Thus much for the first reason, why the straite gate and narrow way are to be chosen, because though there be another course, more pleasing to our humours, and better stored with companie, yet it leadeth vnto destruction.

The second reason followeth which is in direct opposition to the former, to wit, that albeit the gate and way which Christ would haue vs enter into, be strait and narrow, and such as few doe trauaile by, yet it is the way to life, and the end thereof is comfort, euen the euerlasting comfort of a mans soule. This is the generall meaning of the reason; Let vs grow to a particular examination of the points of instruction rising out of it.

Doctrine 3. As this reason is in an apparent opposition to the former, so it affordeth doctrine in nature directly contrarie to it; that told vs of sinne, that beginning in pleasure, it doth end in miserie; this telleth vs of the duties of holinesse and righteousnesse; that howsoeuer they seeme to lay a kinde of restraint vpon mans nature, and to curbe and limite him in some courses, and fashions which he is prone vnto, yet the issue of them is life, and the reward is comfort. Christ confesseth the gate to be straite, & the way narrow, but he addeth this withal, that it leadeth vnto life. For the opening of this doctrine I must shew vnto you two things; first that the duties of pietie and godlinesse, are at first something vnpleasing to mans nature, (the crookednesse and corruption thereof considered): secondly, that whatsoeuer the beginning is, yet the end is full of sweetenesse. Touching the former how true it is, may in part be gathered out of that which hath beene said heretofore, touching the things concurring with the very act of entrance: humilitie, and the relinquishing of the pleasures of sinne which we haue formerly delighted in, both which are directly thwarting and crosing to mans nature, there beeing nothing that he is of himselfe more vnwilling to doe, then to confesse ought against himselfe, to renounce his owne will, and to crucifie and kill the strong affections of his owne heart. But this shall better appeare if we enter into consideration of particulars; what duty of godlinesse soeuer we thinke vpon, we shall finde the beginning of it to be vnsauory. If a man will labour after some knowledge in religion, at the first it will seeme to be somewhat strait and cumbersome; because it will require more care in redeeming the time, it will vrge more diligence in hearing, in praying, in meditation, more respect to the Sabbath then a man was wont before to make conscience of. Here will be something to doe, and no small wrastling with a mans thoughts, before he shall get the mastery ouer his owne heart, to retire himselfe, and to diuert the time formerly accustomed to be spent in vanitie, to the building of himselfe vp in knowledge. It will seeme to a man that there is no life in these courses, nothing but deadnes, and melancholines, and no kinde of contentment. Againe, suppose that a man (heretofore neglegent that way) should now begin to haue some touch, and should entertaine a resolution with himselfe of keeping holy the Lords day, not according to common opinion, but according to the true purpose and meaning of the Law-maker, thinke wee that he should not at his very first entrie into this way, meete with many discouragements? what a burden will here bee for a man to seeke to draw all his thoughts from earthly businesses (as much as is possible) and to giue himselfe wholly to some either priuate or publike course, by which the comfort and edifying of his soule may be helped forward? what a miserie will it seeme, so as it were to hedge in himselfe, that he may not vse a little excursion, and in some little degree giue the raines to his owne affections? this is enough to make any man flie backe, and t Ioh. 6, 60. to cry as the Disciples did in another case, *This is a hard saying, Who may endure it*t? Time would faile me, if I should thus proceed to exemplifie this doctrine. I may be bold bold to say it, because all duties of holinesse haue one generall nature, that there is not one among them all, whether it respect our immediate seruice to God, or our behauiour to men, or that sobriety and euen framing of our affections in things which concerne our selues; I say there is not any one such duty, but if it be looked vpon with an eye of flesh, it lookes euen as our Sauiour did vpon earth, of whom it is said, that in respect of state and pompe, there was nothing in him for which a man should desire him[t]. And the reason is this. Religion is the same to a mans soule, that Physicke is to his body, it is ordained to purge and to reforme it: As therefore the Physick potion at the first taking is cleane against the stomacke, so that men in wisedome will vse meanes to keepe it in, that it may worke vpon the disease; so is religion at the first taste without relish, ready to cause loathing, rather then to perswade further entrance; and there must bee a minde of striuing with a mans selfe, before he can drinke deepely of it, and hold it fast, that it may worke vpon his close and hidden corruption. It was not for nothing that the Lord conditioneth with vs at our first entrance into religion, to giue him our heart[u]; for vnlesse we haue euen resigned vp our affections vnto him, and haue euen combined with our selues, to goe through with it, it is in vaine to make any shew or offer to obedience. Well, you see plainely the first point, that the beginning of good duties is harsh; let men not stay here, but proceede to shew that the end is comfortable. Our Sauiour saith here; it leadeth vnto life: and what life doth he meane, or can he meane, but life eternall? Godlinesse (saith the Apostle) is profitable vnto all things, which hath the promise both of this life, and of that which is to come[x]. I may safely say of those which enter into good courses, as the Psalme doth, they doe sow in teares, but they shall reape in ioy, they went weeping and carried precious seed with them, but they returne with ioy, and bring their sheaues[y]. Nay the Scripture doth not herein delay vs so long, as though there were no sweetnesse in religion till hereafter. I remember Christs words in one particular to Peter, when Peter told him, that he and his fellowes for Christs sake had left all; I say vnto you, there is no man hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdome of Gods sake, which shall not receiue much more in this world[z]. So that euen in the present life, there is a reward followes, the children of God finde an inward and an vnknowne sweetenesse, euen in that which at the first seemed very distastfull. Christ saide of himselfe, that it was meate vnto him to doe the will of him that sent him[a]: and so the duties of godlines doe affoard a kind of secret satisfaction to those which are exercised in them: and though euill men when they looke vpon the seruants of God liuing in obedience, in contempt of the world, and in a kinde sequestring themselues from the vaine delights thereof, doe imagine they liue a life very tedious and irkesome, and such as hath no contentment in it; yet by vse, the Lord making his yoke easie, and his burden light, they finde that facilitie in it, that sweetnesse and spirituall delight, that if they might, they would not turne backe to their wonted liberty in the flesh, but to carry euen a kinde of loathing thereunto. I finde (saith Dauid) more ioy of heart in the light of thy countenance, in the secret apprehension of thy gracious fauour, then the worldlings haue, when their wheate & wine abound[b]. Thus by the handling of these two points apart, I haue (I hope) made good my first proposition, that the way of true religion, though it be strait and narrow, & at the first entertaines a man with shewes of hardship and restraint, yet the progresse is more sweete, and the end it selfe, doth euen exceede in comfort. Let vs make vse of it.

Vse. The vse hereof is is to be an encouragement to all that doe begin inwardly, and vnfainedly to affect good things, they must learne to cast their eies and thoughts from the present straitnesse which religion at the first entrance into it, seemeth to threaten, and to looke further vpon the sweetnes which doth certainly accompany it. For howsoeuer our obedience ought not to be an hired obedience, but such as in all things doth more respect the commander, then the reward which he bestoweth; yet it pleaseth God to tender our weakenesse so much, as to prouoke vs and to draw vs on by the promise of recompence, lest we should be weary and faint in our minds. Our Sauiour arming his disciples against reproach,

When they sate in councell against Christ, there was none spake for Christ, but Nicodemus [x]. When Paul stood forth for his answer before Nero, not one man assisted him, but all forsooke him [y]. On the contrary, we shall see how the worst things haue had the greatest consent, and the fullest, and most generall approouement. All consented to the making of a golden Calfe [z]. They came to offer violence to Lots house, from the young euen to the olde, euen all the people from all quarters [a]. Pilate asked what should bee done with Christ, they all cried, crucifie him [b]. When Paul began to preach Christ at Ephesus, and to cry out against idolatry, there arose a shout almost for the space of two houres, Of all men crying Great is Diana of the Ephesians [c]. The Beast the Antichrist, maketh all both small and great, rich and poore, free and bond, to receiue his marke in their right hands, and in their foreheads [d]. But what should wee search the Scripture for examples, when our owne times and experience affoords so many? There be many ignorant people, but few that loue true knowledge: many swearers, few that make conscience of an oath: many Sabbath breakers, few that care to keepe it holily: many negligent and vnprofitable hearers, few that take heed how they heare: many vsurers, few that lend (as Christ saith) without looking for ought againe: many that wring and draw back in euery good action, few that are open-hearted and handed to relieue: many that despise and contemne, and neglect the Word, few that honour it, and take delight in it. In a word, looke to any profane, disordered, couetous, vnruly, carnall, voluptuous course, and tell me with what infinite troupes it is followed: consider againe of any religious, zealous, charitable, and holy fashion, and marke how few there be that doe regard it. So that it may be said of euery society of men, of euery assembly, of euery congregation generally, as it was of that of Sardie; to speake of the multitude, they haue a name that they are aliue, but are dead [e], called Christians, but haue little religion; If there be any better disposed, they are but as it is said there, the fewest number, a few names. And therfore the course which Christ will take when he comes to iudge the earth, will bee very like to the course which Iosua held to finde out among the people, what man it was that had stolne the Babyloniſh garmẽt [f]; there were many brought together, and all to finde out one. So at the last day, all particular persons that euer were, are, or shall be, shall be ascited to appeare; out of them shall be deducted a small number which haue heard of Christ, out of them a smaller portion, which haue professed the true religion of Christ; and out of them, yet another companie, which haue truely professed the true religion, which haue professed it in sincerity: which number howsoeuer in it selfe considered, it be exceeding great, yet compared with the rest, it is but as a handfull; or as it is said of the Israelites camp in respect of the Aramites infinite troupes, like two little flocks of kiddes [g]. So will that be verified that is said; the Lord will make a short count in the earth, and though the number of the children of Israel (of the people professing religion) be as the sand of the Sea, yet shall but a remnant be saued [h].

h Rom.9.27.

The vse hereof is two-folde: The first Christ teacheth, Striue to enter in at the strait gate, for many I say vnto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able [i]: the fewer there be that are partakers of the true happinesse, the more should wee labour to be in that number: wee sit still in our security and carelesnesse, as though heauen should be cast vpon vs, and as if all the world should be saued. The blessing of life eternall is great, but it is not common, not all, no not the greatest part, no not the noblest, and wealthiest part shall enioy it: we should therefore throng and thrust to enter in, because suddenly the gate will be shut vp, & many (saith Christ) shall striue to enter in, but shall not be able. Vse.

feare God: as for example. Art thou a man who hauing heretofore runne the same course with the greatest part, beginnest now being inwardly touched by the force and power of the Word, to refraine from many things, in which in time past thou tookest pleasure in, and to looke more narrowly to thy waies then thou wast wont, & to make conscience of some things, which formerly thou regardest not? it may be, that comparing thy course, now, with the fore-going, thou findest thy selfe very solitary, like a man in a desolate, rugged and vntroden path, hauing very little company, many to dissuade thee, few to encourage thee, many that will labour to pull thee back, but few or none to prouoke thee forward; be not discouraged, be sure once that it is the course which Christ calleth thee to by his Word; and then remember, that in comparison of the multitude, the Lords part is but a handfull, the way to hell hath many passengers, and the place it selfe is faine to be made larger to receiue them; but as for the path to life eternall; it is hardly entred into, and few there be that finde it. And therefore though it may bee thy portion, in thy loue to the Word, in thy labouring after knowledge, in the duties of charity, in religious obseruing the Lords Sabbath, in peaceableneſſe, and in diligent following of thy calling, to bee in a manner poast alone, like a Pelican in the wilderneſſe, or as an Owle in the desart; yet say with Peter, Lord, though all men forsake thee, yet will I neuer leaue thee[k].

THE MINORITIE OF THE SAINTS.

Mark. 10. 15.

Verily I say vnto you, Whosoeuer shall not receiue the Kingdome of God, as a little childe, hee shall not enter therein.

CErtaine children being presented vnto Christ, and reiected by the Disciple [a], our Sauiour first misliking their peremptorines, giues both charge for the bringing of yong ones vnto him, and a reason why they ought to be admitted [b]: and then secondly, deliuereth a generall doctrine, touching the equality of those persons, which must both receiue the Kingdome of God, and be receiued into it. The occasion of the words. a Verse 13. b Verse 14.

Verily, I say, &c. The meaning of the speech is this: that there is no hope of saluation vnto that man, who doth not endeauour and labour to frame himselfe to be like a child, in the entertainement, application, and vse of those meanes, which are sanctified and set apart by God, to bring vs into the kingdome. The meaning

The kingdome of God hath two degrees; the one in this life, which is called, The kingdome of Grace [c], which consisteth in the Ministery of the Gospell, that being as it were the conduit of grace [d], and the instrument by which the children of the kingdome [e] (as they are called) are gathered together [f]: The other is, The kingdome of Glory [g], which is in heauen, and stands in hauing an immediate society and fellowship with the Lord [h]. Now as no man (ordinarily) can come into the kingdome of glory, but by the kingdome of grace: so there is no entry for him into the kingdome of grace, vnlesse he become as a child, in respect of his disposition towards the particulars appertaining thereunto. And seeing it is here determinately said, that there is no saluation to any but to him which becommeth like a little childe, there can be nothing more worthy our paines, then to learne to know out of the Scripture, wherein we must be like vnto children: and that so much the rather, because in some things to be like children, is euil & blameworthy: as to be children in vnderstanding [i], to be like children, wauering, & carried about with euery winde of doctrine [k]. Seeing then we must be as children, if we hope to be saued, and yet in some things to be as children, is so much found fault withall, it is not enough for vs to heare and know the generall speech, That no man shall enter into the kingdome of God, but he which is a childe: but wee must proceede further, to enquire how farre forth we must frame our selues to the estate of childehood. We must then (if we desire to be saued) be like vnto children in these particulars:

c This kingdome the Apostle meaneth, Rom. 14 17. d Act. 20 22. e Mat. 13.38. f Ephes.4.12. g Mat.25.34. h Ioh. 17. 21. i 1 Cor,14 20. k Ephes.4.14.

The first is, Humility. Whosoeuer shall humble himselfe as this little childe, saith our Sauiour [l], the same is the greatest in the kingdome of heauen. And Dauid, to cleere himselfe of all ambitious and rising thoughts, and to exhort others by his example to true humility, likeneth himselfe vnto a young childe, newly reuiued: Surely (saith he) I haue behaued my selfe like one weined frō his mother [m]. So that by Christs words, and Dauids practise, it is plaine, that one thing wherein euery one desiring saluation, must be like a childe, is Humility. Children, howsoeuer being conceiued The 1. doct. l Matth.18.4. m Psal.131.2.

n Pſal.51.5. in ſinne [n], they haue in them the ſeede of all naughtineſſe, which ſo ſoone as they beginne to bee of any action, and capacity, ſheweth it ſelfe: yet in their infancie, yea and for the moſt part in their firſt yeeres, they are farre from high thoughts, far from thoſe conceits which may breed in them either good opinion of themſelues, or contempt of others. We ſee that Gentlemens, and Noblemens children, when they be yet but young, can ſort themſelues in play, and the like occaſions, with the children of poore men, and are as good fellowes with them for the while, as may be, without either ſcorning them, or expecting any reuerence or precedence from them: and if any be of ſome more ſterne and ſurly humour, he is forthwith accounted proud, and hated by the reſt, which are in age his equals. This is a ſigne of the freedome of that age from haughtineſſe. The like lowlineſſe of diſpoſition is required in all Gods children. Humility is the very firſt ſtep vnto Chriſtianity. A man that is not humbled, and taught euen to carry a very meane and baſe opinion touching himſelfe, is not fit for any one good dutie. God offereth aboundant mercy vnto vs in his Sonne Chriſt Ieſus, euen the treaſures of heauenly grace, and the riches of his bounty: now the man whoſe heart is not beaten downe, is not fit to receiue it. Tell him of the goodneſſe of God, what cares he for it, ſo long as he feeles not the need of it? Preach to him of the plentifull redemption, which is procured by Chriſts death, and what doth he eſteeme it? for he hath no ſuch feeling, that it is a wofull thing to be without it. Therefore God reſiſteth the proud, ſaith the Apoſtle, he paſſeth them by, that thinke thus well of themſelues, and are buried in their owne ſecurity, but he giues grace to the humble [o]. He filleth the hungry with good things [p]. Hee hath pronounced them happy, which doe thirſt for righteouſnes [q]. The ſacrifices of God, are a contrite ſpirit, a broken heart, O God thou wilt not deſpiſe [r]. And, To him will I looke, euen to him that is poore, and of a contrite ſpirit, and that trembleth at my words [s]. Againe, as an vnhumbled heart is vnfit to receiue the offers of Gods mercy in Chriſt, ſo for the outward meanes of grace (the miniſtery and preaching of Gods word) hee is vnfit to bee partaker of it. Indeede God hath ſanctified the publike miniſtery, to bee the meanes to ſaue thoſe which beleeue [t], yet he which either is ſenſleſly blockiſh, without any apprehenſion of his owne ignorance, or of the excellency of heauenly knowledge: or elſe is wiſe in his owne conceit, thinking himſelfe too good to be inſtructed, well he may come and go, and thereby be hardened in his pride, (God in iuſtice giuing him ouer vnto it) but that he ſhould profit by it, either for the increaſe of his knowledge, or for the comfort of his cõſcience, it is a matter vtterly vnpoſsible: becauſe the Lord (who knowes the thoughts of the mind to be but vaine [u]) hath threatned to turne all that ſeeming wiſedome into folly *, and hath made his promiſes of guiding in iudgement, of teaching his way, of reuealing his ſecret, only to thoſe which are meeke, which feare him, which be humble [x], which haue learned to become fooles, that they may be wiſe [y]. The word is compared to ſeede [z]: now as the ſeede can take no good root in the ground, vntill it be turned vp with the plough: ſo neither can the word take any place, but in a [a] rent and broken [b] heart. Proceede yet further with a man not humbled, from the hearing of the Word to the exerciſe of prayer. How is it poſsible that he ſhould be any thing but a formall prayer, and a lip-labourer, that knowes not by perſonall feeling how vnworthy a creature hee is, in reſpect of the glorioufneſſe of Gods Maieſty; that perceiues not the multitude of his owne wants? that ſeeth not, and bewaileth not the nakednes of his owne ſoule: ſo that his heart within him is become as the thirſty land [c], which euen gapeth to be refreſhed with the former and the latter raine [d]. How can he be truely thankefull, which hath not beene taught by the ſight of his owne emptineſſe, to acknowledge all good things to fetch their beginning from the Lord? ſo alſo, how can an vnhumble perſon come reuerently to the Lords Table, when as, not feeling the miſerie and anguiſh of a wounded conſcience, he hath no deſire to haue an aſſurance of Gods fauour ſealed vnto his ſoule? Thus wee ſee, a man wanting humility, is vnfit for the duties towards God: he is no leſſe vnfit for the duties of charity. The ground of all the duties of charity, is this, that the ſame minde be in vs, that was euen in Chriſt Ieſus[e], and what minde was that? euen this, (that being in the forme of God, &c. he humbled himſelfe, &c.) So that humility is the foundation of charity: and if we examine the true cauſe of the neglect of the maine duties of loue, wee ſhall finde it to be either the want of feeling of mens owne ſpirituall miſeries, which maketh them not to pitty others, or elſe a high conceit of themſelues aboue others, which cauſeth them to diſdaine to ſtoop ſo low, as to take notice of, or to haue to doe with others. So that if wee haue marked the order and proceeding of this diſcourſe, I know it will prooue true which firſt I ſaid, that a man wanting humility, is vnfit for any Chriſtian duty: and therefore it may well be tearmed the firſt ſtep to Chriſtianity. Thus we ſee what is the firſt thing wherein all that would be ſaued, muſt reſemble children, and that is Humility.

You ſee the words of the Text are plaine, He ſhall neuer enter into the kingdom of God, who receiueth it not as a little child. Now humility, both by our own experiẽce, and by Chriſts words, is prooued to be a property of childhood, and how neceſſary it is in a Chriſtian, you may perceiue by that which hath beene ſpoken to that end. Out of all theſe ſpecialties it muſt needs follow, that if we deſire to be ſaued, we muſt labour for humility: we ſhall deceiue our ſelues, if wee thinke to come to heauen without it. And I doe the rather wiſh that wee may hearken to this exhortation, becauſe the want of true humiliation, is ſo common an euill now adaies. For ſee firſt how few there are which haue any true liuely feeling of their owne wretchedneſſe by ſinne, whoſe hearts are broken with the apprehenſion of the vileneſſe of their nature. The greateſt part are euen cruſted and hardened in their owne dead ſecurity, and frozen vpon the dregs of their owne dulneſſe: they did neuer yet know what it is to be a ſinner, and to be in danger of Gods wrath, they neuer ſtood in awe of Gods maieſty, or trembled at his iuſtice: they neuer hungred for righteouſneſſe, they could neuer yet ſay with that holy Patriarke[f], O Lord I haue waited: or with Dauid, I haue longed for thy ſaluation[g]. Now althogh to the eye this make no ſhew of pride, and is in many, which in the opinion of the world, becauſe of their outward habit and faſhion, are farre enough from pride, yet it is the greateſt, the haughtieſt, and the moſt abominable pride: for it makes a man to contemne Gods mercy, to deſpiſe his bounty, to abuſe his patience, to turne his grace into wantonneſſe[h], to tread vnder foot the blood of Chriſt[i], to account Gods threatnings but as winde[k], to paſſe by his Word as an idle and ſuperfluous doctrine: what greater pride can be imagined? and yet this is the common pride of the world, not one man of many, but he is herein guilty: wee are generally ſtout-hearted, and will not yeeld to the terrour of the Lord[l], or ſeeke to auoide the wrath to come. Secondly, there is another kinde of pride among the ſcorners of this generation, who leane ſo much to their owne wiſedome[m], that they deſpiſe all inſtruction, and make a mocke of publike teaching. This pride breedes contempt of Gods ordinance, and is a ſtop to the courſe of Gods grace, and maketh men vncapable of the renewing power of Gods Spirit. To ſhut vp this point therefore, this is the ſumme: He that would be ſaued, muſt ſet himſelfe to ſchoole to children and infants, of them to learne humility. Wherefore let euery man, which tendereth the euerlaſting good of his owne ſoule, beg of God in his daily prayers, that he would giue him an humble ſpirit, that he may ſee his owne wretchedneſſe, and perceiue himſelfe to be nothing in reſpect of any goodnes, to the end that by this meanes the mercies of God in Chriſt may be ſweet vnto him, and his Word precious, his ſoule ſaying with Dauids, How ſweet are thy promiſes vnto my mouth? yea ſweeter then hony vnto my mouth[n]. This is the firſt thing wherein he that vnfainedly affects eternall life, muſt be like a childe.

o 1 Cor. 14. 20. ning maliciouſnes, be children ſaith the Apoſtle o. Children generally are without ſpleene, neither indeede becauſe of age, doe they know what it is to hate, or to be malicious. We ſee little ones many times vpon their childiſh occaſions, to contend and fall out each with other; but it is a very eaſie matter to reconcile them, they cannot tell what belongs to maintaining of a quarrell, or to the deuiſing and plotting of reuenge. Therefore well ſaid Paul, in maliciouſneſſe be children: I would haue you haue as little diſpoſition to malice and diſcord, as little children haue.

p Iſa. 2. 4. To this the Scripture accords in many places. There was an ancient prophecie p touching the ſtate of the Church vnder Chriſt: in it is foretold, that the members of the Church ſhould breake their ſwordes into mattocks, and their ſpeares into ſithes. Swords & ſpeares are the inſtruments (we know) of war: and mattocks and ſithes of husbandry. So that the meaning of the holy Ghoſt is, that whereas men naturally are inclinable to contention, debate, quarrelling, reuenging, &c. when they are once ſeaſoned with religion, and brought to the knowledge of God by the preaching of the Goſpell, they ſhall be cleane altered, and ſhall become more ſociable and peaceable, carefull to betake themſelues to ſuch courſes, in which they may be profitable vnto themſelues, without the hurt of others. To the ſame

q Iſa. 11. 6. effect is that in the ſame Prophet, where he ſaith, q that in the kingdom of Chriſt, the Wolfe ſhall dwell with the Lambe, the Leopard with the Kid, &c. his meaning is, that that cruell and vnruly, and ſauage diſpoſition, which is in man, by nature, ſhall bee altogether reformed and ſubdued by the power and efficacy of the Goſpell.

y Epheſ. 4. 31. men x. Let all bitternes, and anger, & wrath, &c. be put away from you y. By all which places (to which many might eaſily be added) it appeareth to be the doctrine of the Scripture, that euery Chriſtian ſhould in peaceableneſſe, and freedome from maliciouſneſſe, be as a childe.

The Vſe. If he which would be ſaued, muſt labour to be like a childe in ſtriuing againſt malice, what ſhall then become of thoſe, whoſe hearts are fraughted and ſtuffed with rancor and poiſon againſt their brethren, continually manifeſting the ſame, in the bitterneſſe of their ſpeeches, the curſedneſſe of their language, and the violence of their courſes, all tending to the hurt and diſgrace, and vexation of thoſe againſt whom they haue conceiued a diſlike? Let all ſuch learne to feare this fear-z Reuel. 3. 7. full ſentence of our Sauiour, who hath the keyes of heauen in his power z, and hath here bound it with a ſolemne proteſtation, Verily I ſay, &c. the ſame Spirit of his ſpeaketh in Paul, and biddeth vs, as concerning maliciouſneſſe to be children. How can men euer looke or hope to bee ſaued, whoſe conſciences doe tell them, that their ſtomacks are filled with malice, and that they haue vowed reuenge, and that they hold theſe their vile purpoſes ſo faſt, that they had rather neglect their dutie to God, and abſtaine from the Lords Table, then breake off their vncharitable courſes againſt others? Chriſt hath ſpoken it, and it is in his power to make it good, that he which laboureth not, to be as free from malice, as a little child, ſhall neuer haue place in the kingdome of God.

The 3. Doct. The third thing wherein we muſt frame our ſelues to be like children, or infants, in receiuing thoſe things which appertaine to the kingdome of God, is, deſire after the ſpirituall food of our ſoule: See how this is prooued. As new borne babes a 1 Pet. 2. 2. deſire the ſincere milke of the Word a. The Spirit of God ſpeaking by Peter, would haue vs to bee ſo affected to the Word of God, as new-borne infants are to their mothers milke. How is that? A little infant, euen by the diſtinct of nature, almoſt as ſoone as it is born, ſeeketh that nouriſhment, it is not long wel without it, when nothing nothing will appeaſe it, that will ſtill it. So (ſaith Peter) euen like newly borne babes, long after the word, as your ſpirituall nouriſhment, reioyce in it, place your happines in the vſe of it, let that be your chiefeſt comfort. And indeed this is the right diſpoſition of all Gods children. Oh (ſaith Danid) how I loue thy law [b], I reioyced at it, as one that findeth a great ſpoile [c]. Thy word (ſaith Ieremie) was vnto me the ioy and reioycing of my heart [d]. When Philip came to Samaria, and preached Chriſt vnto them, the text ſaith, There was great ioy in that Citie [e]. In the ſame Chapter [f], it is ſaid of the Eunuch, that when Philip had taught him in the myſterie of Chriſt, he went one his way reioycing. Danid ſaith in one Pſalme [g], that Gods word was his comfort in his trouble: and anone after [h], that it was his Song in the houſe of his pilgrimage: meaning, that he made himſelfe merry, and cheered vp his heart therewith in the time of his baniſhment. And againe after. [i] Except thy law had beene my delight, I ſhould haue periſhed in my affliction. Here was Danid right like a little childe, the milke of Gods word ſtilled and quieted him, when no other thing was able to releeue him.

Now (alas) what doe we now thinke ſhall become of vs, who generally haue no ſuch appetite, no ſuch deſire vnto the word, our ſpirituall food? God knoweth, it is euen a very burden to vs, we care not how little we be acquainted with it: at home we looke not into it, at Church we are weary of it, now & then for a fit we hearken. The word is to vs like a potion, it goeth downe againſt our ſtomackes, rather then a pleaſing meat, which ſhould be affected by vs, as being fitted for our nouriſhment: by and by we be glutted, euen we who in other matters of pleaſure, or profit, can ſcarce euer ſay, It is enough. And when we be ſad or ſicke, or otherwiſe diſquieted, wee had rather heare of any comfort, then the comfort of the Scripture: it hath no reliſh with vs, we are fleſhly minded, and we ſauour not the things of Gods Spirit. There can bee no plainer doctrine then this, there is no man here ſo ſimple, but may vnderſtand it: there is no man of ſo ſhort a memory, but may remember it. Thou canſt not be ſaued, ſaith Chriſt, vnleſſe thou be like a childe. I am ſure thou art not ſo wretched, as not to beleeue it. Well; if thou wilt be as a child, thou muſt deſire the word, and loue it, being the ſpirituall foode, euen as the little babe doth the mothers milke, which is the bodily foode. If thou finde thy ſelfe truly to loue it, carefully to deſire to vnderſtand it, and to take comfort in the exerciſes of it; thanke God for it, it is a good ſigne, and pray God to encreaſe it. If the word be a burthen to thee, thou careſt not for it, thou art a ſtranger to it, thou eſteemeſt not the exerciſes of it: take heede, bewaile it, it is a fearefull token, deſire the Lord (if thou loue thine owne ſoule) to remooue it.

The Vſe.

The fourth thing wherein we muſt be like Children, is growing. Infancie and child-hood, is an age of growing: it were euen a wonder in nature, to ſee a child to ſtand at a ſtay, without thriuing in ſtrength and in height, and in bigneſſe of body. And to this Saint Peter in the fore-remembred place, hath reference, Deſire the ſincere milke of the word, that ye may grow thereby: that is, labour to profit by the vſe of the word, as infants doe by their mothers milke; they grow by it, ſtriue you to get ſpirituall ſtrength by the word alſo. This dutie of growing is often vrged in holy Scripture. We beſeech you brethren, and exhort you in the Lord Ieſus, that ye encreaſe more and more [k], Grow in grace [l]. Let vs be led forward vnto perfection [m]. Salomon compareth the righteous to the Sun [n] that ſhineth more and more vnto the perfect day. In Ezechiel [o] the graces of God are figured out, by the waters flowing from the Sanctuary, which were at the firſt to the ankles, then to the knees: next to the loynes: and laſt, as a riuer which could not be paſſed ouer. So are the graces which God beſtoweth vpon his choſen, though they be but as a ſmall ſtreame at the firſt, yet they doe ſtill (like a liuing ſpring) ſwell higher and higher, till they come to that meaſure which the Lord hath allotted to euery Chriſtian. It is a manifeſt doctrine, neither is there any point plainer in the Scripture then this, that the children of God muſt bee as a man running in a race, who is euer in motion, and neuer thinkes vpon reſting, vntill he come to the goale, and haue got the reward.

The Vſe. This condemneth the common ſecuritie of theſe times: the moſt are ſtrongly perſwaded, that they haue religion, and knowledge, and zeale ynough, and content themſelues with their little imagined portion of good things, as though there were no more to be required. We come from weeke to weeke, from ſabbath to ſabbath, to the hearing of the word, and to other holy exerciſes of religion, but we ſtand ſtill at one ſtay, as ignorant, as little knowledge, as little feeling, as little loue to good things, as little conſcience as in times paſt. Alas what a wofull thing is this; conſider of it by a ſimilitude: ſuppoſe a mother, carefully nurſing the fruit of her wombe, and giuing the beſt attendance that ſhee can deuiſe, yet the childe groweth nothing, neither in ſtrength, nor length, nor fatneſſe; but ſtill continueth after a yeare or twoes nurſing, in that poore eſtate, that it is not able to be put out of the clouts, or to take any ſuſtenance ſauing milke: what will bee the mothers conceit in ſuch a caſe? Surely as it will be a griefe to her, and make the teares many times to come from her, for very ſorrow of heart: ſo ſhe will thinke and ſay, that doubtleſſe the childe is in a Conſumption, neither can it continue long: and all the neighbours will wonder to behold it, as a thing vnnaturall, and ſeldome ſeene. So in this caſe, when the Lord ſhall feede vs with the wholeſome milke of his word, and giue it to vs in due ſeaſon; if we ſtill ſtand at one, not thriuing in knowledge, nor increaſing in loue and good affection towards religion, but ſtill ſhewing our ſelues dull and heauy, and lumpiſh to any good ſeruice, what (thinke we) ſhall the Lords opinion be of vs? muſt hee not needes thinke there is no hope of any ſpirituall life in vs? And will he not alſo at laſt, in his iuſtice, giue vs ouer to our owne ſenſeleſneſſe? yes vndoubtedly. Therefore, I pray let vs remember to make it our care, herein to bee like Children, to bee euer growing. As it would grieue vs to ſee our children at home not to proſper, ſo let it grieue vs, when wee doe not feele our ſelues within vs to encreaſe in godlineſſe.

The 5. doct. The fift thing in which we muſt be like Children, is, the imitation of our heauenly Father. This I prooue out of the Apoſtles words, Be ye followers of God as deare children [p]: that is, as children for the moſt part, beeing of the ſame conſtitution of bodie, and diſpoſition of minde that their fathers are: and hauing beene brought vp in beholding their manners of life, doe more or leſſe tread in their ſteps, and as they reſemble them in feature of body, ſo are in many things like them in behauiour. Euen ſo (ſaith the Apoſtle) doe you, who profeſſe your ſelues to be the children of God, fixe your eyes wholly vpon the Lord, as vpon the onely perfect patterne, making his actions preſidents and examples for imitation, ſo farre forth as they may be followed by vs. And this child-like imitation cannot but be in all which are the Lords. Paul ſaith, that all the elect are predeſtinate to be made like to the image of Chriſt [q]: Now Chriſt is the ingraued forme of his Fathers perſon [r]. And therefore it is a ſure thing, that where there is no likeneſſe to Chriſt, no imitation, there is no adoption: a man cannot aſſure himſelfe to belong to God, if he want this care to be an imitator and follower of Chriſt Ieſus. Now to name all particulars of imitation, were too long for this exerciſe. The ſumme of all is comprehended in one word, As he which hath called you is holy, ſo be ye holy in all manner of conuerſation [s]: this is the chiefe point of imitation, vnder it all others are comprehended, and the ſubſtance of his holineſſe ſtands in theſe two things: the loathing and deteſtation of ſinne, and the loue and embracing and ſtriuing for the practiſe of ſuch holy duties as the Lord requireth in his word.

the diuell, and the lusts of your father you will doe. So it shall and must be said to the men of this generation: You hope you are Gods children, you call him Father in your daily prayers, but it is in vaine. If you were truly the children of God, ye would labour to be followers of God, yee would endeauour to be men of a holy religious and godly conuersation, yee would shew your hatred of sinne, by your striuing against sinne: that which you learne out of the Scripture to bee displeasing to God, yee would labour with your affections, that the same might bee displeasing also vnto yee: yee would not lie and continue in knowne and grosse sinnes, in ignorance, swearing, neglect of Gods worship, contempt of his Word and Sacraments, viciousnesse, riot, malice, cruelty, falshood, vsurie: If yee made conscience like good children, to imitate your heauenly Father, yee would neuer (as yee doe) take pleasure in these foule enormities. Well, remember my text, Verily I say vnto you, &c. he that will be like a childe, must labour as much as may be, to be like God in holinesse and purity of conuersation.

The last resemblance of Children, is a quiet depending vpon Gods prouidence: marke how this is prooued. A little child who dwelleth at home vnder his fathers wing, taketh no thought for any thing, for meate, or drinke, or apparell: he relies vpon his fathers carefull prouiding, when hee wants any necessaries, to him he presently resorts, and neuer lookes further. The same dutie is required of euery one, who desireth to receiue the kingdome of God as a little childe. Our Sauiour speaking against carking and couetousnesse, and that same heart-diuiding care, which men of the world haue, as who should say, they were still in doubt they should not haue ynough here, vseth this reason against it among others; Take no thought, &c. For your heauenly Father knoweth you haue neede. *: as if he had said, Why? what needs you to be so full of care, as if you were like poore fatherlesse children, left to the wide world to shift for your selues? Haue you forgotten that you liue vnder a louing and tender Father, and which is more, vnder a Heauenly Father, one that is able to supply all necessaries? you may be bold to trust to him, and to relie vpon his prouidence: what should you be so distrustfull, when you haue such a Father to prouide for you? This is another dutie. The 6. doct. * Math. 31. 31.

This cryeth shame vpon the rakers and scrapers of this world, who, as though there were no God in heauen to make prouision for them, lay about them, leauing no vile vngodly oppressing courses vnassayed, by which to lade themselues with thicke clay x, and to encrease their estate, they doe thereby plainely testifie against themselues, that they deeme themselues to bee none of that number, of whom the Lord takes care, and for whom he prouides: For sure if they thought they had so kinde a Father to make prouision for them, they would wrastle with their owne distrustfulnesse, and labour to depend vpon his prouidence. I know an honest care must be had, otherwise Gods prouidence is abused, as if an vnthrifty boy, should waste away all he could get, and say, What doe I care? my father must prouide: but yet this vexing care which possesseth mens thoughts, and makes them cast so many perils, and doubts, as if there were no helpe but in their endeauours, this is a most abominable, and it is a humor which cannot dwell in any of Gods children. The Vse. x Hab. 2. 6.

The first Sermon.

Prou. 23. 23.

Buy the Truth, but sell it not:

THIS short speech of Salomons, containeth in it two things: 1. An Iniunction, Buy the Truth: 2. An Inhibition, Sell not the Truth. First of the Iniunction. To make way vnto the profitable handling whereof, we are to examine two things: 1. What is the Truth: 2. What it is to Buy the same.

What is ment by Truth. Quicquid est in deo, Deus est.

Truth is but one, and it is in God, and of God; nay it is God himselfe. For the nature of God is not subiect to any attending properties; whatsoeuer is in God, is God. As hee is Mercy it selfe, Iustice it selfe, Goodnesse it selfe, so is he also Truth it selfe. God is Truth, saith Moses [a], and I am the Truth [b], saith Christ of himselfe. Yet neuertheless, this Truth which is but one, and is primarily in God, is from him conueyed into diuers other things, which in that respect are so rightly tearmed True. For, as the Sun is the fountaine and naturall seate of light, yet that light is thence deriued into many other bodies naturally fitted to receiue it, which are therefore truely tearmed lightsome; so, though God in that sort is the Head and spring of all Truth, that he is called euen Truth it selfe, yet his Truth is communicated vnto other things also: and euery thing is so farre foorth called true, as it is squared and made answerable vnto that eternall Truth. And as diuers resemblances in many glasses, being set together, doe come all from one and the same Face, which is set against them, so all that Truth, which is in other things, fetcheth it first beginning from the Lord.

b Ioh.14.6.

Now howsoeuer the end of all our endeauours, is the vnion of this truth to our vnderstanding, and the knitting of our soules vnto God, (wherein the very heathen, by the light of nature, placed mans happinesse,) yet this is not so properly that Truth which is here commended to vs, but rather some inferior truth, which is substituted by God, as a meanes to bring vs vnto himselfe. And yet neither is it that truth which God hath seated in Nature, and naturall things; because, so it is, that the creature partaking of mans corruption, is subiect to Vanity [c]: and by that meanes the natiue truth thereof, is so tempered with lying deceitfulnes, that the heart of man (being in it selfe a meere lie) is not able to seuer each from other, but is rather thereby made more vaine, and to turne the truth of God, shining therein into a lie [d]. So weake an instrument is the booke of nature to beget truth in our hearts.

There is then another truth, which hath beene framed by God himselfe, which neither can deceiue, nor be deceiued; and that is, The holy and precious Word of the Almighty, which by the Spirit of God is called truth. Sanctifie them with thy truth, thy Word is truth [e]. The Word of truth which is the Gospell [f]. And, the milke of the Word without deceit [g], And this indeede cannot but bee the truth. First, because of the Author of it, which is the God of truth [h]. Secondly, because of the Penmen of it, Holy men [i], which wrote of no priuate motion. Thirdly, because of the confirmer of it, Christ the truth [k]. Fourthly, because of the Interpreter of it, The Spirit of truth [l]. And if it were fitting to the Text, it were easie to shew the truth of of the Scriptures aboue all other Truths, that it is both the most ancient Truth, and the most true Antiquity. Now, there is yet another deriued Truth, which is drawne out of the Word, and is as it were the briefe and summary thereof. It is that which Paul in one place calleth the Forme of doctrine [m]: in another place, the proportion of faith [n]: in another, the Truth which is according to godlines [o]. And this may fitly be compared vnto the mount Nebo [p], vpon which the Lord placed Moses, that from thence he might see all the borders and limits of the promised Canaan: so from this, and by the helpe hereof, a man might be able to comprehend with all the Saints, what is the bredth, and depth, and length, and height of Religion. So then, here is the issue of my speech, that by truth in this place, is meant the truth of Religion, grounded vpon the Rule of truth, which is the Scripture.

What it is to buy the truth.

Now for Buying, we must vnderstand, that it is not any making marchandize of the truth, like to that beggerly sale of the Romish trumpery; as though a man could by money, purchase the graces of Gods Spirit: which if it were so, Christ should be prooued a lyer, who saith, that with difficulty, they that haue riches, shall enter into the kingdome of God [q]: whereas, if saluation were a mony matter, the rich were like to speed best. But because Buying is vsually of things of greatest cost, & greatest necessity, therfore to signifie the paines to be taken in this case, the spirit of God vseth this word of Buying. Againe, because the end of Buying is possession, and the end of possession, is vse; (as riches are possessed to make rich, apparell to make gay, and so in other things;) therefore also the Spirit of God, to shew the care we ought to haue, both to haue the truth in possession, and to diuert it to our vse, hath mentioned Buying. So then, this buying of the truth, which is commended here vnto vs, vrgeth two duties. 1. To labour to haue the truth of Religion setled in our iudgements, that so wee may be fulfilled with the knowledge of Gods will, in all wisedome, and spirituall vnderstanding. 2. To conuey it thence into our affections, that so there may be begotten there, that which Dauid cals truth in the inward parts [r]. This then is the meaning: Buy the truth, saith Salomon: that is, vse all diligence, spare no cost, refuse no labour, spend your best endeauours to come to the knowledge of the truth, and thereby your selues to bee transformed into the truth; that you may so become true Israelites, truely religious. So that now this first member of my Text hath brought foorth two Instructions: the one is, that we must endeauour for the setled knowledge of the truth; the other, that wee must make conscience of a holy practice, and of obedience of the truth: of these two in order. And first of Buying the knowledge of the truth.

The tenor of the first part.

The diuision of it.

Seeing it hath pleased the Wisedome of God, in this place, to borrow a word from the ordinary courses among men, and to call the seeking after the truth, a Buying of the truth; therefore it shall not be amisse to follow the Metaphore, and by examining the vsuall circumstances of Buying, to giue light to the duty recommended here vnto vs. As therefore in all other bargaines, so in this purchase of the truth, these things necessarily must concurre. 1. A desire of the commodity. 2. A repairing to the place, where it is set to sale. 3. A skill to discerne, and know the goodnes of it. 4. A giuing a price proportionable to the worth and value thereof. 5. A storing of it vp for necessary vses; of all these briefly.

The particular branches of this whole Sermon.

The 1 branch, which is the 1. doct.

First, there must be a desire of the cómodity: that is plaine in reason. For whensoeuer a man layeth out his money vpon any thing, it proceedeth from a desire to be the owner of it, and haue it in possession: and so the first thing in this Buying, must be that which the Apostle Peter cals Desiring the sincere milke [s], &c. when Isaiah tearmeth Thirsting [t]; which Dauid in one place cals the claiming of the Lord his testimonies as an heritage [u]: in another, the longing after Gods saluation [x]. Now the desire of a cómodity, springs ordinarily from these two things: 1. a mans own necessity: 2. the excellency of the thing it self. His own necessity makes him willing to Buy: the excellency of the thing makes him willing to Buy, this, rather then any other. So that to the end we may come to this first degree of desire to Buy the Truth, wee muſt labour to feele theſe two things: 1. What need we haue of it: 2. What an excellent thing it is to enioy it. To ſhew our need, many things might bee alleadged: I will bee as briefe in it as I can, becauſe mee thinketh, I doe feele my matter like to a ſpring, the further it goeth, into the more ſtreames to diuide it ſelfe. Man by nature in reſpect of ſpirituall graces, is the pooreſt creature vnder heauen, hee commeth not into the world with a body ſo naked, but hee commeth alſo with a ſoule as vtterly ſtript of all goodneſſe. To touch onely his penurie in regard of knowledge, Hee hath in his vnderſtanding no true knowledge of God, but onely ſo much left, as may make him inexcuſable before God. And therefore the Scripture doth well, ſo often to befoole him, as Salomon doth by name in the booke of the Prouerbes. When man hath to doe with theſe earthly things, hee ſeemeth to haue ſome ſharpnes and dexterity: but when he commeth to ſpirituall things, he is cleane blunted, They are fooliſhnes with him, neither can he know them[y]. It is with the eyes of his ſoule, as it is with the eyes of his body. Our eyes looking vpon the earth and thoſe baſer ſubſtances, ſeeme quicke and piercing, but let them bee turned vp to behold the glorious body of the Sunne, they are cleane dazled, and ſeeme to ſee an hundred ſeuerall colours, where there is no colour: ſuch a maze is the wit of man by nature brought into, when he becommeth to behold and conſider of ſpirituall matters, he will run you in millions of abſurdities. Take you Nicodemus, a great wiſe Phariſie, and tell him of the New birth, you ſhall ſtrike him into ſuch an amazement, that hee will cry, How can this be[z]? Goe among the learned Philoſophers, and diſcourſe in their hearing of one Ieſus, who was dead, and now liueth, and of the Reſurrection; what will they ſay? Some will mocke, and call thee babler[a], that teacheſt ſuch ſtuffe: and they which are the moſt ſtaied among them, will put it to a demurre, they will heare thee againe of this thing. This is mans naturall pouertie in this caſe. Yea, but will ſome man (perhaps) ſay vnto me, Put caſe this be true, that I am thus without knowledge of the Truth of my ſelfe, is it by any danger to continue ſo? There be ſome things which a man hath not, yet cannot hee be ſaid to want them, becauſe he hath no vſe of them: It is one thing to be without a cõmodity, another thing to ſtand in need of it. To cleare this point therefore in one word: There is as much need of knowledge, as of ſaluation. If thou haſt neede to be ſaued, thou haſt need to haue knowledge alſo. This is life euerlaſting to know, &c.[b]. And Paul deſcribing the eſtate of a naturall man, putteth theſe two together; his cogitations are darkened: and, he is a ſtranger from the life of God[c]. Ignorance and deſtruction; knowledge and ſaluation, goe together. If this be not ſufficient to ſhew the neceſsity of knowledge, I know not what may perſwade vs. Now for the excellency of knowledge, if a man had the tongue of men and Angels, he could not ſpeake ſufficient in cõmendation of it. The Heathen knew that reaſon is that which maketh man better then a beaſt: and the enlightening of reaſon by knowledge, is that which preferreth one man to another. Now if knowledge be in it ſelfe a thing ſo excellent, much more the ſauing knowledge, I meane the knowledge of Gods Truth. This maketh the people of God the wiſeſt people, This is your wiſedome, ſaith God, and your vnderſtanding[d]. It bringeth a man to haue a kinde of familiarity and acquaintance with God himſelfe: yea it enableth a man to cõceiue the things which paſſe knowledge, namely, the peace of God[e], and the loue of Chriſt[f]. No maruell then, though Dauid reioyced at it as one that findeth great ſpoiles[g]: and that Paul did account all things but dogs-meate, for the excellent knowledge ſake of Chriſt Ieſus[h]. For both Dauid was thereby made wiſer then his teachers[i], and Paul by comprehending it, was comprehended alſo of his Sauiour[k]. Thus in part may we ſee our neede of knowledge, and the worth of knowledge, to prepare vs to the purchaſe of knowledge.

many such fooles as Salomon speaketh of, which haue a price in their hand, but they haue no heart to get wisedome[l]. They haue the meanes to bring them to the knowledge of the Truth, familiar, common and easie, but haue no affection thereunto. Tell them of knowledge, it is as the singing of songs to an heauy heart, a matter which fitteth not, it hath no relish or sauour in the world. Tell the couetous man, the extorting Gentleman, the engrossing Merchant, the enhansing Husbandman, of a commodity, of a secret bargaine, of a meanes of gaining, it is like enough he will soone giue thee the hearing, and take thine information as a fruit of great kindnesse: but talke of the knowledge of Religion, and of the meanes for attainment to it, thou hast (as the saying is) told a tale to a deafe man, he would as liefe thou hadst kept thy counsell to thy selfe. And hence (oh woefull case) it is come to passe, that grosse and intollerable ignorance, like a disease, hath ouerspread the greatest part. The multitude know not (as we say) the right hand from the left: the best of vs be but smatterers, & our knowledge little better then vain iangling[m]. There is, I know, store of that knowledge which Micha speaketh of, The statutes of Omri are sought for[n]: men are cunning in penall precepts, and in the knowledge of Law-points. There is also plenty of the knowledge which Christ mentioneth, men can discerne the face of the skie, and the signes of the times[o]. Neither is there any want of that skill which Amos toucheth, of making a small Ephath and a large shekel[p]. These times abound in these knowledges: but as for the onely necessarie knowledge, the knowledge of Religion, almost no man esteemes it; it seemeth to vs as a withered branch, which hath neither forme nor beauty, we see nothing in it, why we should desire it. Now because this deadnes and dulnes ariseth especially from the want of feeling of our owne necessity, (for the person that is full, despiseth a hony combe[q]) and from our not knowing the worth of knowledge (for the cocke vpon the dunghill, would rather haue a barley corne, then a diamond;) therefore I beseech you let vs remember the before-deliuered matter, touching our owne necessity, that we haue not naturally so much as a dramme of true knowledge within vs; and the excellency of knowledge, that without it, we are but as dead men, strangers from the life of God, without hope, without God in this world. And so leauing it to your best consideration, I thus end this point.

The second branch, and the 2. doct.

The next point is, the comming to the place of sale. For, as in our ordinary buying, it sufficeth not a man, to feele his want of a cõmodity, to know the worth of it & to wish the hauing of it, vnlesse he also resort to the place where it may be had: so in this case, it is not enough that we find our selues ignorant, acknowledge our neede of knowledge, vnlesse we vouchsafe to repaire thither where it is ordinarily set to sale, and as it were by Proclamation offered to our vses. Now the vsuall place of sale for this commodity of sauing knowledge, is the Church, the assembly of Gods Saints, where the Ministry of Gods word (the ordinarie meanes of knowledge) is dispensed. In the Church, by the Ministry of Gods word, wee heare Christ making a solemne Oyez, and saying, If any man thirst, let him come to me and drinke[r]. Come buy without siluer or money: wherefore doe you lay out siluer and not for bread[s]? I counsell you to buy of me gold tried by the fire, that you may bee made rich, and raiment that you may be cloathed, and eye-salue, that you may see[t]. This is the voice of Christ proclaiming in the open market of his Church, and vttering his voice by the top of the high places, Who so is simple let him come hither[u]. In me are hid the treasures of wisdome & knowledge[x]. Of my fulnes, you may receiue grace for grace[y]. So that in the congregation, when the Word is truly and sincerely preached, as in publike Mart, there is that which is fitting to euery man in euery respect. There are the principles of Truth, for Christians of a lower forme: there are deeper points for exercised wits[z]; there is for Magistartes, for Ministers, for priuate men, for euery calling: for the young man that he may redresse his way; for the olde man, to encrease in wisedome; there is truth for the vnderstanding, truth for the conscience, truth for the will, truth for affections, that so a Christian may be per-

fit to euery good worke [a]: whatsoeuer thou dost lacke, there thou shalt be sure to haue it aboundantly supplyed: there thou shalt see discouered the great mistery of godlinesse, which is, God manifested in the flesh, iustified in the spirit, seene of Angels, preached vnto the Gentiles, beleeued on in the world, and receiued vp into glory [b]. Thus the Church is the place, and the preaching of the word is the Treasure subiected to the view, and offered to the vse of all, which desire to receiue it. And indeede, heerein especially standeth the difference betwixt the word Read, and the word Preached. The word read, is as a rich wardrobe of a Prince, where many garments of cost are folded vp together in a narrow roome, which cannot so satisfie the beholder, as if the same might be seuerally laid forth before him, time being also granted him, to take notice of euery particular: because, being lapped vp, he cannot see the whole beauty, and being together, he is not able to obserue euery specialtie. Euen so it fareth with the Scripture. If a man heare the word read, it cannot but draw him to admire the maiestie and riches of the Text, and it will cast some glimmering light vpon the vnderstanding; but when he heareth the riches of it laid open by preaching, it will much more astonish him; yea, it will euen rauish him (as it were) striking a greater terrour into his conscience, casting a clearer light vpon his iudgement, working more mightily vpon his affections. This is not spoken to discountenance the reading of the word, or to banish the vse of it out of Gods Church, or to depriue it of that respective estimation which it doth deserue: nay, it is rather spoken to the winning of reuerence thereunto. For indeede there is no man heareth the word read, more humbly, obserueth it more heedfully, or listeneth vnto it more affectionately, then he, who by preaching hath beene brought to know the excellencie of the word. So then, heere I shut vp this doctrine. He that desireth to make this purchase of the Truth, must repaire to the place where it is set to sale, euen to the house of God, where the word is truly preached, and soundly deliuered.

The Vse.

This point is also very necessary to be throughly vrged, in regard of the common sinne of the world at this day, which is this, the negligent depending vpon the ministery of Gods word. For, howsoeuer sound, and sincere, and often preaching be not so vniuersall and common as were to be wished, if God were so pleased to thrust out more paintull Labourers into his harueſt (c), yet it is farre more generally bestowed, then obediently and dutifully entertained. For truly, if a man should aske of mee, what that thing in my opinion is, which is at this day almost in euery place most hatefull, most abhorred, most irkesome, most contemptible, least welcome, and least regarded; I know not (I speake vnfainedly) how to answer more truely, then to say, it is the ministery and preaching of Gods word. And to the end that I may not speake at random, but may lay this fault vpon those in whom it is, I will distinguish those of our times (to let professed enemies of our Religion, Papists, alone) which either come not to the place of sale of Truth; or else come as gazers, to looke on, and to fill vp number, into three sorts: first, the common Protestant: secondly, the Politician: thirdly, the proud and selfe-conceipted man. By the common Protestant, I vnderstand such an one, as the Papist calleth (in scorne so speaking of vs all) a Parliament Protestant, that is, a Time-seruer, who looketh no further, then to the Law of the Prince, who is ready for any religion, and is therefore indeed of no religion. Of which humor, there are (the Lord knows) infinite multitudes at this day, all whose Bible is the Statute booke, and the Articles of whose faith, are grounded vpon positiue Iniunctions. Now the common Religion of this common Protestant, I finde to be this. He hath a certaine notice of louing God aboue all, and his neighbour as himselfe, and that he thinketh is as much as he needeth to care for, and after this manner he thinketh with himselfe; I keepe my Church, as well as the most: I receiue the Communion at Easter, as becommeth a good subiect: I liue quietly among my neighbours, and wherein am I now to be found fault withall? Indeed I am not ouer precise: for I hold that to be more then needs: I am no medler with the Scriptures, that I account to be beyond my reach: once, I am no Papiſt, I content my ſelfe to do as others doe, and haue no deſire to be ſingular. Heere haue we the right humour of our common men, at this day, this is their Catechiſme, theſe be the very principles of their Religion. Now, hath this man (thinke you) any neede of preaching? careth he to depend vpon the miniſterie of the word? Surely no. For, he thinketh himſelfe of ſo good a Religion, to haue ſo good a faith to God-ward, and to be ſo well minded, that hee hath no neede of inſtruction. And therefore he is cleare in it, that it were a great deale better, if there were leſſe preaching; it filleth mens heads full of matters, breedeth diuiſion among neighbours, brocheth nouelties, and troubles the whole countrey. Adde hereto (ſaith he) that they themſelues which preach, cannot agree; and that diſtracteth the people, ſo that their preaching might be better ſpared, or at the leaſt, be the leſſe vſed; and what ſhould men doe which haue families to prouide for; and many buſineſſes to diſpoſe of, and much to looke vnto? they cannot intend it, to follow theſe matters ſo hard and hotly as it is required. This is the firſt ſort, that is guiltie of this ſinne, of not caring to frequent Gods cheap-houſe which is his Church, where knowledge of the Truth is by preaching offered vnto vs; and the men belonging vnto it, are ſo humored as I haue deſcribed. The ſecond in this number is the Politician, who thinketh all Religion to be but a fable, a matter inuented by wiſer men, to hold the vulgar in ſubiection, and to buſie them withall, leſt they ſhould fall into worſe matters, and runne into further inconueniences. And therefore tell him of preaching, he laugheth in his ſleeue, accounting them a ſort of ſilly fooles, who eſteeme it, making himſelfe beleeue hee is a great wiſe man, becauſe hee ſeeth that which the common ſort hath not eſpied. Thus, as the former in a drowſineſſe and hardened ſecurity, contemneth the word, ſo this in a very Atheiſticall and godleſſe profaneneſſe, ſcorneth it, and maketh a very ieaſt of it. The third in this ranke is the proud conceited man, who as one walking in the Sunne is tanned though he meant it not, ſo this, by reading now and then, doth a little ſmell of ſome rudiments of knowledge; but yet that little, in his opinion, ſeemes ſo great, that he imagineth, that by his priuate reading at home, hee can doe as much, and more, then by any hearing: and therefore he hath no better opinion of a Preacher then the Athenians had of Paul, (what will this triſler ſay) [d]? So that whereas the Lord tendering our weakeneſſe, and knowing in his wiſedome, what is fitteſt for vs, hath left in his Church the miniſtery of his word for euery mans inſtruction, he careth not for his part, if God had neuer appointed any ſuch meanes, hee thinketh hee can altogether doe as well without it. This is the proud mans opinion. And thus, by that time you haue referred to euery one of theſe ſorts, thoſe that doe by right appertaine to each, and haue ſhuffled in among them, all Familiſts and ſcorners, and a rabble of other irreligious perſons, you ſhall finde the number of carefull commers, to the houſe of God, to buy the Truth at the hands of his Miniſters, to be (as Micah ſpeaketh) like the ſummer gatherings, and as the grapes of the Vintage [e], to bee but a ſmall number, ſcarce a hand full in regard of the multitude. I beſeech you therefore, let vs learne this leſſon fró this place, to loue the gates of the Lords houſe, to let our feete weare out the threſhold of it, to giue attendance at the poſts of his doores: and to ſay alſo one to another; Come, let vs vp go to the mountaine of the Lord, &c [f]. And let theſe carnall reaſonings goe, as to ſay, (looking but to the face and gifts of the Preacher) what is hee that he ſhould teach mee? and why may I not profite as well by ſome other courſe? But remember, that the Power of God is made perfect through weakeneſſe [g]: and that as it was a greater honour to God, to ouerthrow the walles of Iericho, by the noyſe of rammes hornes, then if hee had done it by cannon ſhot; ſo is it more for Gods glory, by the fooliſhneſſe of Preaching to ſaue thoſe that beleeue [h], then if an Angel ſhould deſcend from heauen

to inſtruct; nay, then if the Lord himſelfe ſhould ſpeake with ſome audible voice to conuert vs. And ſurely, as in buying and ſelling, that bargaine is by law moſt warrantable, which is made in open market; ſo I account that knowledge moſt acceptable vnto God, and moſt like to receiue a bleſsing from him, which is gotten publiquely, by the ordinarie courſe appointed for that purpoſe. Howſoeuer, I doubt not, but as a man hauing publikely bought a commodity, may priuately husband it, to his owne beſt behoofe; ſo that which is deliuered openly may, (nay ought) by priuate reading, prayer, meditation, and conference, be encreaſed. And thus much for this ſecond branch.

The third thing in this Purchaſe of Truth, is skill to diſcerne. For as in buying, in regard of ſo many counterfeit wares, of the mingling good with bad, and the great deceit of the world, it is good for a man to haue skill to preſerue himſelfe from cooſinage, and from cauſleſſe expence vpon vnprofitable goods; ſo in labouring after knowledge, in reſpect of ſo much bending mans inuentions with wholeſome doctrine, it is requiſite, that we be able to put a difference betweene holy and corrupt, true and falſe, profitable and vnprofitable teaching. And this is a thing which the Scripture alſo in many places requireth of vs. Trie the ſpirits, ſaith Iohn, whether they be of God, or no [i]. Trie all things, ſaith Paul [k]: and, he is a foole, ſaith Salomon, that will beleeue euery thing [l]: and for this cauſe the noblemen of Berœa are commended, becauſe hearing the Apoſtles preach, they ſearched the Scriptures daily, whether thoſe things were ſo [m]. And our Sauiour hath pronounced it generally of all his ſheepe, that they know his voyce, and will not follow a ſtranger, but flee from him [n], &c. For howſoeuer we doe vrge all reuerent reſpect vnto the preaching of the word, as to the ordinance of God, for the gathering together of his Saints, & for the edification of the body of Chriſt [o]; yet we abhorre that Popiſh tyrannizing ouer the faith of our hearers, as though we would binde them to giue credit to euery thing we ſpeake, becauſe we ſpeake it: We know, that if hee were an Angel from heauen, that ſhould come amongſt vs, yet his doctrine muſt be brought to the Law and to the Teſtimony [p], as the Prophet ſpeaketh; and if he be found to ſwarue from that holy doctrine, which we haue receiued, he muſt goe for accurſed [q], and, bid him not ſo much as God ſpeede [r], ſaith Saint Iohn. And this skilfulneſſe and abilitie to diſcerne, as it is euer neceſſary, ſo now eſpecially. Firſt of all, becauſe there are (that I may ſtill follow the language of my Text) ſo many petty chapmen, I meane, ſo many priuy workmen, who are all guided with the ſpirit of the beaſt, ſent out and ſet on worke by that Antichriſt, that man of Rome, who are crept almoſt into euery corner, and vnder pretence of their deuotions and Voluntarie Religion, and Humbleneſſe of minde [s], inſinuate and winde themſelues into many mens affections, drawing ſome to traiterous diſloyalty, ſome to ſetled Popery, others to indifferent and depending vncertenty, that ſo they may fit and prepare them for that day, which they haue long expected; and I pray GOD they may ſtill with wearied eyes, and languiſhing ſpirits await for. Now to the end that theſe falſe brethren, which are come in priuily to bring vs into bondage [t], may not carry vs away with droſſe for ſiluer, glittering ſhewes for a golden ſubſtance, counterfeit profeſsion, for ſound Religion, we had neede to labour and pray for diſcerning ſpirits. Secondly, this abilitie to diſcerne is neceſſary, in regard of ſo many dangerous and infectious Bookes, which (I know not by whoſe default) are ſparſed abroad into al parts, tending to the defaming of the preſent ſtate, and of our holy religion, and to the working of mens affections to a more tollerable opinion (if not a totall embracing) of Poperie. Thirdly, this skill is no leſſe neceſſary, in reſpect of ſo much corrupt preaching, both in manner and matter. Firſt, for the manner of teaching, it is an ordinarie thing with many men of gifts, to ſcorne to ſeeme to Know nothing but Chriſt, and him crucified [u], and to thinke baſely of the plaine euidence of the ſpirit: And therefore they haue more care to abound with excellent words, and with the enticing, Againe, for the matter of preaching, it is now almost in religion and diuinity, as in the matter of apparell; euery yeare bringeth a new fashion, and then (because of the loue which men haue to nouelty (that is thought to be the most handsome, most thriftie, and most profitable fashion, onely indeede because it is the newest: and so euery yeere almost, we heare of some new opinion or other, raked out of the dunghill of Popery, and a new glosse set vpon it, and by and by it is entertained; men that haue itching

y 2 Tim. 4. 3. eares[y] are ready to listen to it, and are soone wrought to embrace it. This is the great policie of the diuell, neither is there any thing, by which he doth more harme, by which he kils more soules then by this meanes. When the Lord was purposed to bring a plague vpon Ahab, the Scripture describeth him as it were sitting in counsell, what might be the next way to ouerthrow him. At last, when one had said on this manner, and another on that, there came foorth a Spirit and stood before the Lord, and said I will entice him; and the Lord said vnto him: Wherewith? And he said, I will goe out and be a false spirit in the mouth of all his Prophets:
z 1 King. 22. 22. Then he said; Thou shalt entice him, and thou shalt preuaile[z]. Thus it appeareth, that the most speedy way which Satan, being put to his choice, hath, to doe mischiefe, is to send spirits of error, priuily to bring in damnable and dangerous opinions. And surely it is iust with God, to giue vs ouer to be seduced, because we haue not a 2 Thes. 2. 10 receiued the loue of his truth, that we might be saued[a]. So then, that neither insinuating Iesuites may deceiue vs, nor dangerous bookes empoyson vs, nor fantasticall teachers beguile vs, nor corrupt Doctors carry vs away with euery winde of b Eph. 4. 14. doctrine[b], it standeth vs vpon to labour to abound with spirituall wisedome and vnderstanding, that we may discerne betweene light and darkenesse, truth and falshood, lest, leauing to follow Christ, as a sheepheard to the fold, we goe after Antichrist, as a butcher to the shambles.

The Vse. The vse of this point is, to reproue two faults especially. First, the wilfulnesse of some. Secondly, the vnskilfulnesse of other-some. For the first, many there are in this naughty & crooked generation, who because of the corruption which is in the teaching of some, (which implieth a possibilitie to be deceiued) and because of the shew of difference in some things, which seemeth to be among other-some; I say in these respects, some there are who are growne to that peeuishnes, that they resolue with themselues, that it is the best course to heare none. We cannot tell, say they, whom to beleeue, they are at variance among themselues; and therefore till they doe better accord, it will be the safest, and wisest way, either not to heare, or not to credite any. This is the wayward humour of many in this age. Their folly (as to mee seemeth) may well be manifested, by vrging the present similitude of Buying. If a man wanting meate, drinke, and raiment, and other necessaries, and being perswaded to supply himselfe out of the market, from those which sell, should make this answer: The world is so full of deceit, that a man knoweth not whom to trust: they which sell, many of them will beguile their owne fathers, if they could chaffer with them; and the trickes and deuices which tradesmen haue, are so many, that it is twentie to one but a man shall be coosened, I had rather therefore goe neare the winde, and want necessarie prouision, then put it to the hazard of buying. If I say, a man amongst vs should pleade thus, what would we thinke of him, but that either he were very foolish, or very froward? And so wee well might; because we know the fraud of others must be preuented, rather by care and circumspection, and not vsed as an occasion for a man to abridge himselfe of his necessaries. Is not he then as much a foole, who wanting the sauing knowledge of the Truth, and being called vpon to repaire to the house of God, where the meanes is offered freely vnto him, shall pleade strait the deceiueablenesse of false doctrine, the corruption of many teachers, the shew and appearance of contrarieties, trarieties, as though he were therefore to depriue himselfe of the necessary food of his soule, because it may be, that through want of care, in stead of being fedde, he may be poysoned. We know rather, that he ought to be the more diligent in prayer, the more studious in the Scripture, that so when hee commeth to buy the Truth, he may not be deceiued. Thus this point meeteth with this humor of wilfulnesse. Now for the vnskilfulnesse of men, this doth also make against it exceedingly. It is too true of the greatest part of our hearers at this day, that they are children in vnderstanding [c]: they want the iudgement which Paul speaketh of, to discerne things that differ one from another [d]: they are like a waue of the Sea [e], euery winde of doctrine is ready to ouerblow them; their hearts are not stablished [f], they haue no exercised wits [g]: They will bee ready to crie Hosanna to Christ to day, and to bid Crucifie him to morrow; they are like to those of Lystra [h], who at the first admired Paul, and made a God of him, but with the turning of an hand, by the counsell of the Iewes, they drew him out of the City and stoned him; so vnstable and vnsettled are the most of vs at this day, that a man may perswade any thing sauing that which ought to be beleeued. Who almost is so skilfull and experienced, as to know euen in the principall matters, and most necessary points of religion, what is to be held as Truth, and to be detested as an errour? to be able to say peremptorily; this I am sure is true in religion, and I will (by the grace of God) liue and die in it; this is an error, and I hope neuer to yeeld vnto it? You will say (perhaps) this is enough for Preachers. Oh beloued, I say as Moses did, I would all the Lords people were Prophets [i], I would we were all thus cunning; nay would men were, or could be perswaded, that this is a duety, to striue to come to a setled certainety herein. Then there were much hope of the perpetuating of religion; then we need neuer feare the re-establishment of popery, and atheisme, I am sure, would giue vp the Ghost. Well, you see the Truth must be bought, for shame we cannot deny it. In buying we may be ouerreached; in reason we cannot say against it; therefore we should also be ashamed, to be so without reason, as not to thinke it reason, to labour with the Lord by prayer to leade vs into all Truth, that so we may grow in the Truth, and continue firme in the Truth vnto the end. And this is an end of the third branch.

The fourth circumstance in making this purchase of the Truth, is to giue the price proportionable to the value of the commoditie, which is indeed the very act of buying; the other three which I haue named hitherto, are but preparatiues to Buying. For though a man feeleth his owne want, commeth to the place of sale, trieth and examineth the commodity which is for his necessitie, yet he is not said to haue bought, till he haue payde the price at which the thing is rated. All the while before, he is said to be but a chapman; and many do all the former oftentimes, who haue no great disposition to buy. So fareth it in our customary Buying, and so it is in this case. It is necessarie for a man to feele the want of knowledge, to come to the place of knowledge, to examine that which is proffered to him, but yet hee hath not followed Salomons counsell as hee ought, vntill he haue payed the price also. Now the price (as I tolde you) is not money (for thy money perish with thee [k] which art of that opinion:) but the price is this, to preferre it in account and estimation before al things, and so to make it our chiefest labor to attaine it. You shall see this prooued, If thou seekest knowledge as siluer and searchest for her as for treasure, then thou shalt vnderstand the feare of the Lord [l]. The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a Merchant man, that seeketh good pearles, who hauing found a pearle of great price, went and solde all that hee had, and bought it [m]. The kingdome of heauen suffers violence, & the violent take it by force [n]. Wil you haue examples? I count all things losse (saith Paul) for the excellent knowledge sake of Christ Iesus [o]: and a little after in the same chapter he compares himselfe to a man in a race, who partly to signifie his desire of the prize, partly to helpe himselfe in running, leaneth forward in his running: so (saith he) I forget that which is behind, bending

Thus theſe places, and theſe examples I hope, do ſufficiently proone this point, namely, that the price to bee giuen for the knowledge of the Truth, is to ſet no price vpon it, but to eſteeme it aboue all price, and to account that nothing is too deare, no trauell too much, no paine too great for the attainement thereunto.

The Vſe. The vſe of this poynt is neceſſary alſo, becauſe the Church of God is at this day ſo full of Huckſters, which are euer cheapning, but buy nothing: that is, as Saint Paul ſpeaks, are euer learning, & yet neuer come to the knowledge of the Truth. They come to Church, and heare, and goe home, and come againe, and heare againe, and ſo go round like a horſe in a mill, and are yet neuer the nearer. They are like the fiſh in the Sea, which liue in the ſalt water and are yet neuer the ſalter ſo they heare the word, which is the ſalt of the earth r, and yet are ſtill vnſeaſoned. Now the ſpeciall reaſon of it is, becauſe they be no franke chapmen; they would haue too good a pennyworth, they will buy the Truth vnder foote, or they will none of it. If to heare now and then, and in hearing, now and then to hearken, and ſo an end, and ſome ſuch ſuperficiall performances will doe it, they will bee content to be at the coſt, otherwiſe they wiſh you a better chapman, the ware is too deare, If you tell them of often hearing, and of keeping their hearts & eares together from the beginning of a Sermon to the end, of priuate meditation, of conference, of praier before to prepare them, of praier after to ſtrengthen them, of redeeming the time, and ſetting ſome part apart for ſuch holy purpoſes; they make you anſwer, that you ſet your knowledge at too high a rate, & vnleſſe they ſhall finde you more reaſonable, and that they may haue it with leſſe paines, leſſe hinderance, leſſe diſgrace, they are content to let it goe, or elſe, as men doe, when things are too deare, they will take the leſſe, and a ſmaller portion ſhall ſuffice them. To ſhake off this dulneſſe and backwardneſſe, and that men may learne to be aſhamed of this niggardiſe, to ſtand offering and offering, and like to neare fellowes, to be loath (as it were) to come off with the other penny, I pray you let vs remember the price which the Lord hath ſet, and whereof their is not on haire to be abated, it muſt ſuffer violence, it muſt be moſt of all eſteemed, and ſought for firſt of all, it muſt be ſtriuen for, and ſtudied about, and cared for exceedingly. If we be not willing to giue this price, wee doe but peſter Gods houſe, it is in vaine for vs to make a ſhew, and to come hither, as Gods people vſeth to come: God cannot endure to be dallied withall, either goe through with him, or neuer beginne with him. And to comfort thee, take this with thee: the commodity is better then it maketh ſhew for; and when thou haſt once gotten it, and viewed it better, thou wilt ſay with Dauid, The lines are fallen vnto me in a pleaſant place, yea I haue a faire heritage t: and thou ſhalt haue more ioy of heart, then the rich worldlings haue when their oyle and wine aboundeth u. Thus much of this point, which is the very act of Buying.

The fifth Branch, and 5. doctrine. The laſt circumſtance in this bargaine of Truth, is, to ſtore it vp. For as bought commodities are ſafely diſpoſed and laid vp, till time & occaſion ſhall offer vſe: ſo gotten knowledge muſt bee reſerued in the ſtorehouſe of the Memory, that when any occaſion of vſe ſhall be offered, it may be at hand, either for the triall of a Truth, or for a direction in life. Let not the words of my mouth (ſaith the wiſedome of God) depart from thee, but keepe them in the middeſt of thy heart x, I haue hid thy promiſes in my heart y, ſaith Dauid: and Marie is commended, becauſe ſhee kept Chriſts ſayings, and pondered them in her heart z. And indeed there is great reaſon, why this of ſtoring vp, ſhould be added to all the former. For though a man ſhould deſire the Truth earneſtly, care to heare it diligently, diſcerne it wiſely, obtaine taine it painefully, yet it will little auaile, if it doe ſtrait runne from him, if it bee as ſoone forgotten, as gotten, if it be not entertained, and ſetled, that ſo it may dwell plentiouſly [a] in the heart. a Col.3.16.

Vſe. The vſe hereof in a word is this, to quicken & ſtir vs vp to beware of common euill, which is, to leaue the Word there, where we heard it, and ſeldome or neuer to call our ſelues to an account, how and in what meaſure we haue profited, how our iudgements haue beene ſetled, our affections reformed, our conſciences comforted, by that which we haue heard. Learne a ſimilitude from Buying. A man who hath beene at the market, or at the Merchants ſhop, and hath there laid out his money, when hee returneth home, hee will beginne to call himſelfe to an account, to ſee what he hath laid out, where the things are, which he hath bought, and whether he hath not loſt any thing thereof: and if he haue he will returne againe to the place where he bought it, to try if he left it not there, and in the way hee will enquire of euery one hee meeteth, if they haue not found ſuch or ſuch a thing, and will neuer be ſatisfied vntill hee haue found the ſame. It ſhould be ſo, with vs, in this caſe. When wee come from Gods houſe, whither we went to buy the Truth, after our returne, wee ſhould finde a time to keepe (as it were) an audite with our ſelues, to ſee what we haue gained by that dayes hearing, and ſhould endeuour to try our ſelues from point to point: If we finde ſome things forgotten, returne wee muſt againe to the miniſtery of the Word, to ſee if it may pleaſe God, that the ſame things may bee againe deliuered, and enquire of our friends and familiars which were there, whether they can helpe vs in recounting thoſe things, which through infirmity haue eſcaped vs. Thus knowledge would grow vp, religion would thriue amongſt vs, and wee ſhould abound in ſpirituall vnderſtanding, and ſo both thoſe which teach vs ſhould bee encouraged, and wee our ſelues ſhould exceedingly be comforted. One ſpeciall reaſon which may mooue vs to this care of ſtoring vp knowledge in religion, is the poſsibility of a famine of the word of God amongſt vs. We reade [b], that when there was a famine approaching in Egypt, Ioſeph aduiſed Pharaoh to make prouiſion before hand in the ſeuen plentifull yeeres, and to lay vp corne againſt the time of penury. This was good policie in humane reaſon. It ſhall be no leſſe good policie in religion, now in theſe times, in which the word of God is plentifull, and we haue it common amongſt vs, to treaſure vp knowledge againſt the dayes of want, we hauing giuen the Lord ſo great cauſe to take away his Word from vs, and to giue it to a nation that ſhall bring forth better fruits then wee haue done. So that indeed (conſidering our intollerable contempt of Gods Truth, and our generall loathing this heauenly Manna) it is rather to be wondred, that the Lord hath hitherto forborn vs, then to be preſumed, that we ſhall ſtill ſcape away vnpuniſhed. I beſeech you therefore, let vs now play the good husbands, and beſtirre vs, and euen engroſſe as much knowledge in religion as is poſsible, that ſo if euer ſuch a heauy time ſhould come, (as Lord, if it be thy will, euer keepe it from vs) wee may be able ſpeake a word in ſeaſon to our owne ſoules, and to be a comfort alſo and an inſtruction vnto others: leſt then many of vs, which now will ſcarce ſtep out of our doores to heare, ſhall bee glad to run from North to Eaſt, but ſhall not finde it. This may be, and I hope will be a motiue to vs, to buy the Truth, whileſt the market laſteth, and to lay it vp in ſtore againſt the times of wofull neceſsity. Thus (as I could) I haue endeuoured to diſcouer vnto you, the whole myſtery of this bargaine of Truth, ſo farre forth as it concerneth our care, in labouring to bee grounded in the knowledge of religion. b Gen.41.

Now before I doe diſmiſſe this point, it might not be amiſſe (perhaps) to ſay ſomething, to thoſe which are the Lords Officers, (as it were) in the ſelling of his Truth vnto the people, I meane the Miniſters of the Goſpell. For ſure, by iuſt proportion, euery one of theſe circumſtances ſeemeth to vrge a dutie vpon them. Firſt of all, if the people muſt haue a deſire to get knowledge, it is meet that they ſhould haue a deſire to impart knowledge. And, it is a notable thing in a Miniſter, when hee is like vnto the veſſell vnto which Elihu compared him, which haſ uing no vent, is ready to burſt [c]; ſo that the ſpirit within him compels him, and the word in his heart, is as a burning fire ſhut vp in his bones, ſo that hee cannot ſtay [d]: and ſo contrariwiſe it is a miſerable thing when his bowels are ſhut vp, & he hath no compaſsion in regard of the neceſsities of Gods people. So then, let this, that the people muſt haue a deſire to learne, teach vs to bee of Pauls minde, euen to long to beſtow ſome ſpirituall gift among them [e]. Secondly, they muſt come to the Church, the place of ſale: there muſt be ſome body there to diſcouer the treaſures of Gods houſe, to open the myſteries of godlineſſe vnto them: and therefore it would make a man wiſh his head were full of water, and his eyes a fountaine of of teares, to ſee the ſtate of many Churches. Becauſe my text ſpeaketh of Buying I know not whereto better to compare them, then to ſome olde Townes, which haue had yeerely faires in them, and are now decayed, and growne out of vſe: you ſhall ſee vpon the day in which their faires were wont to bee kept, they will hang out a gloue or ſome ſuch teſtimony of ſuch a meeting, but not one whit of ware is there to be ſold: ſo in many Churches, you ſhall ſee a Pulpit, a place for a Speaker, and another for Hearers, but it is but for a ſigne; hee which commeth thither to buy the Truth, is like to haue but a reaſonable bargaine. Thirdly, as the people muſt labour for diſcerning the ſpirits, ſo the Preachers muſt ſtudie to ſpeake iudicially, that they may ſay as Chriſt ſaid to Nicodemus, We ſpeake that we know [f]; leſt they be an occaſion of falling vnto any. Fourthly, as the people muſt equall the price to the worth of the thing, that is, muſt ineſtimably value that which is taught; ſo the Preachers ought to beware of doing Gods buſineſſe negligently [g], of ſlight and ſuperficiall performance of ſo weighty a matter. It is generally a fault with vs, that the world hath ſo beguiled and entangled vs, that it maketh vs ſo ſlenderly to prepare our ſelues to the duties of our publike miniſterie; as though to preach were a buſineſſe but by the way: and that cauſeth our preaching to carry the leſſe maieſty and authority with it, becauſe the wiſer ſort of our hearers, doe perceiue, that wee are often put to our ſhifts, and doe make preaching to be but an exerciſe by the glaſſe, which time if we can by any meanes fill vp, we hold it to be ſufficient; well, if our hearers muſt buy our Sermons at ſo deare a rate, let vs endeuour that they may be worth the buying. Laſtly, as the people muſt ſtore vp knowledge, and that now eſpecially, becauſe we know not how neare the dearth is; ſo wee muſt alſo now chiefly bring out of our Treaſures both new and old [h], and not bee wanting by our forwardneſſe to prouoke them to diligence in this caſe, remembring what Chriſt ſpeaking touching himſelfe, hath laid vpon vs all, namely, to worke the workes of him that ſent vs, while it is day, the night commeth when no man can worke [i]. Thus much I thought good by the way to adde, touching thoſe whom the Lord hath deputed to the ſeruice of his Church, that we may all take heed to our Miniſtery which we haue receiued, to fulfill it [k].

The second Sermon.

Buy the Truth, but sell it not. Pro. 23.23.

THough I purpose not to enter into any precise repetition of the points taught out of this place of Scripture, at the time of my last being here; yet for order & methods sake, that it may appeare, how I make my two Sermons to agree & to follow the one directly vpon the other, I must necessarily entreat you to remember with me thus much; that as this Text was diuided into two parts; first, an Iniunction; secondly, an Inhibition: so the former part was cut into two members, the one, concerning the setled knowledge of the Truth; the other, touching a holy practise and obedience to the Truth. The first of these two, was the matter and subiect of the last Sermon; the latter must haue the first roome in this Exercise.

The second part of the Iniunction, which is the first thing to be handled in this Sermon.

The perfection and good of euery Action, is the End of it; because whatsoeuer we do attempt and vndertake, something there is which we do aime at therin, which is by many degrees to be preferred before the meanes leading thereunto. As it is in all other things, so is it in the Buying of the Knowledge of the doctrine which is according to godlines. For it is not therfore only to be purchased, that by it the mist of ignorance in the vnderstanding part might be dispelled, but also that thereby, the Will might be strengthened, the Affections straightened, the Conscience purged, the outward man reformed, and so the very body of Falsehood, which the father of lies [a] hath begotten in vs, might bee vtterly destroyed. Well then, that wee may profite by the handling of this point, I will take this course: I will shew you first, what this second and inferior Truth is, which must be had also to the making vp of this full Purchase. Secondly, I will declare the necessity of it. Thirdly, I will apply the same to our vse.

a Ioh. 8.44.

The order of handling the first doctrine of this Sermon.

And first of all, that we may vnderstand what this kind of Truth is, which from the vnderstanding is deriued into the whole man, & diuerted to the ordering and gouernment therof, I take it the best way wil be, a little to take view of that which is contrary thereto, which being aright conceiued of, will giue a better light vnto this. Dauid in one of his Psalmes mentioneth a certaine guile, which he calleth a spirituall Guile. Blessed (saith he) is the man in whose spirit there is no guile. And our Sauiour commended Nathanael in these termes, Behold an Israelite in whom there is no guile. When we shall vnderstand what this spirituall guile is, we shall the better iudge what this other Truth is, which my intent is to vrge in this place.

Psal. 32.2. Ioh. 1.47.

Spirituall Guile may be in generall thus described: it is a kinde of double dealing betweene God and a mans owne selfe, in the things which doe concerne his soule. It hath many branches, which being opened will giue a fuller and clearer light vnto the whole; you may (if you please) suppose this spirituall guile generally named, to be (as it were) the coat of figge leaues, which Adam made for himselfe when hee had first sinned, wherewith to hide himselfe from God; and the opening of the particulars (into which I am now to enter) to be (as it were) the ripping of that coate, and the sundring of each leafe, wherewith the same is patched together.

Spiritual guile opened at large for the better shewing the nature of that Truth which is the matter of this first doctrine, 11. Branches of spirituall guile.

Tht first branch then of this Guile, is a conceit of a mans owne good estate for spirituall things: an opinion that all in him is well, and nothing to be found fault withall. Such a conceit it seemes to me, that Paul had of himselfe before his conuersion: I once was aliue (saith he) without the Law [b]: that is, before I tooke a fuller view of my selfe, in the glasse of Gods Law, I deemed my selfe per fit, I was so zealous of the traditions of my Fathers [c], that I supposed, that I was a man out of the reach of all exception. Such an one also was the proud Pharisie, who stood prating and telling God a tale of his owne good deeds[d]. Such an one also are they whom Christ calleth Righteous in that saying, I came not to call the righteous[e]; that is, men that are so in their owne seeming. And euen such the greatest part of vs are at this day, lying to our owne hearts, blessing[f] our selues, as Dauid speaketh. So that it is euen the hardest matter in the world, to perswade vs, or to beat it into vs, that our naturall estate, in regard of the aboundance of in-borne corruption, is so lamentable, so wofull, and so deepely to be pitied, as indeed it is. And that maketh many carnall men, euen to wonder what Preachers doe meane, when they speake so vehemently touching the misery of mans nature, and the extreme danger in which hee standeth thereby. Hence also it is, that the offers of Gods mercy in Christ are so disdainfully entertained, and so commonly reiected: men not knowing their owne necessity doe despise the riches of Gods bounty, and euen tread vnder foot the Sonne of God[g].

f Psal.10.3.
g Heb.10.29.

2 The second branch of this Spirituall Guile, is to extenuate and lessen those sinnes which we cannot but acknowledge. As namely, when the Word working vpon the conscience, hath made a man, euen in despite of his owne heart, to confesse himselfe in some things guilty, then to finde this shift, that yet they are small and petty offences, they are no hainous nor bloody sinnes, and therefore there is no such danger in them, as that they should aske so speedy, and so deepe repentance. This false tricke we reade Saul played[h]. When hee had preuented the appointment of Samuel for solemne sacrificing at Gilgal, (which how great a sinne it was, the reproofe and punishment of it doe declare) yet Saul being challenged for it, and not able to deny the fact, extenuated the matter in these termes, I was bold[i], &c. he was content to acknowledge it a little slip, but loath to yeeld it to be a matter of that hainousnesse, that Samuel would make it to be. And this is the very conceit which men haue of many sinnes at this day, as of iesting, foolish talking, vncleane speaking, swearing, dalliance, wantonnesse, gaming, reuelling, Sabboth breaking; which, though they be in their owne nature very great sinnes, yet the outrage of these worst times, hath made them so common, that the commonnesse hath much abated the vglinesse of them in mens opinon. And therefore when men are dealt with for any of these, or the like, and cannot but confesse their owne guiltinesse, yet they will say, I hope this is no such great offence, I pray God I neuer doe worse, you need not make so great a matter of so small a trespasse, and I trust God will not be so extreme for euery trifle. This is a second branch of this Guile,

i Vers.12.

3 The third branch is a lying shift which Sathan hath furnished many withall, which is this; to thrust themselues in among the multitude, and to thinke by that means to escape away vnespied, or at the least, the lesse blamed. So at this day, the superstitious and ceremonious people which place all religion in outward obseruances, do shroud themselues vnder their forefathers, couer the matter with the name of Custome, and with the practise and example of the multitude; they are content to do as others do, and therewith they hope to be excused. In like sort, many taken in the common sinne of this age, I meane adultery, when they cannot but confesse it, then this is their plea, that they be not the first; as though it were wisedome for them to goe to hell, because the way thither is a much trauelled way, in which a man shall neuer misse much company. Vnder this kinde of Guile, may be comprehended all such courses, the lawfulnesse whereof, men doe ground only vpon examples, being of the same mind for matters of godlines, and religion, tha Chusai would seeme to be in State matters vnto Absalom. Whom this people, and all the men of Israel chose, his will I be, and with him will I dwell[k]. So say they, Looke which way the most goe, that way will we goe.

k 2 Sam.16.18.

4 The fourth branch of Guile, is, the setting of a tollerable name vpon a grosse sinne, that so either it may not be seene, or may not appeare in it owne likenesse.

Thus

Thus in the world drunkenneſſe is called good fellowſhip; riotouſneſſe, merry-meeting; gaming, a paſsing of the time; couetouſnes, is termed warineſſe; couſinage, the liuing by a mans wit; diſſembling, policie. The vſurer will haue his practiſe called intereſt, or vſage, or putting out, any thing ſaue plaine vſury. Implacableneſſe is called ſtoutneſſe; fornication a ſtepping a little awry; ſwearing, a fooliſh cuſtome; pride by a milder name, is called vanity; ignorance is coloured with a pretence of ſimplicity and vnlearnedneſſe; oppreſsion is ſaid to be the making the moſt of a mans owne. And thus in many other things, as in theſe, the diuell beguileth vs, and teacheth vs to lie to our owne ſoules.

The fift branch is, to deriue and tranſlate a ſinne commited by vs to another, thereby to eaſe our ſelues wholly, or at the leaſt by hauing a partner, that it may be the more light vpon our owne ſhoulder. So Adam being challenged by God for eating the forbidden fruit, ſought to deriue the fault, partly to God himſelfe, partly to his wife: The woman that thou gaueſt to be with me, ſhe gaue me of the tree, and I did eate[l]. So Heuah likewiſe, it was her excuſe, The Serpent beguiled me, and I did eate: thus you ſhall haue a ſwearer ſay ſometime for himſelfe, that he could not otherwiſe be beleeued: the riotous ſaith, company drew him in: the vſurer ſaith, he was importuned to lend, & offred largely for the loane. So the Symoniacall both Patron and Prelate, are at this day at varience, vpon which of the two, the ſinne of corruption ſhould lie. The one pleadeth the greedineſſe of the Miniſtery, that will offer ſo deeply: the other alledgeth the hardneſſe and ſtraitneſſe of the Patrons, whom nothing but a gift in the boſome can perſwade. This is alſo a ſpice of this ſpirituall Guile. 5

The ſixt branch thereof, is a wrong reaſoning from the examples of the fals of Gods children, related in the Scripture. There is many a man who thus thinketh with himſelfe, Was not Dauid an adulterer? Did not Salomon keepe many concubines? Had not many of the Patriarchs (who notwithſtanding were well reported of) multiplicity of wiues? Was not Noah drunken? Did not Lot commit inceſt with his own daughters? Did not Peter curſe, and ſweare, and deny his Maſter? And therefore why ſhould I be afraid to ſatisfie mine owne luſts, and to fulfill my owne deſires, and follow my owne beſt pleaſing courſes? No doubt it may be well with me, as it was with them? By repentance they at laſt recouered, and ſo may I. Thus many a one ſecretly heartneth and encourageth himſelfe to continuance in euill, by a falſe and vniuſt applying of the fals and blemiſhes of Gods children. The onely vſe whereof is, before wee fall, to make vs watchfull, beholding in them mans infirmity; and after we haue fallen, and are touched in conſcience, to put vs in hope of Gods mercy: and not to be (as it were) a ſtale, vnder the ſhadow whereof, we may the more boldly giue our ſelues ouer to vngodlineſſe. 6

The ſeuenth branch of this Guile is, a miſ-interpreting of thoſe gracious teſtimonies, which the Scripture hath of Gods forbearance, and milde dealing with his children, which belong to his Election. It is ſaid in holy Scripture, that God will ſpare his Elect, as a man ſpareth his owne ſon that ſerueth him[m]: that in them he will accept the will for the deed, the endeuour for the full performance; that he will paſſe by their infirmities; that their ſinnes ſhall not ſeparate them from his loue; that hee looketh rather to the truth of their affection, then to the quantitie of their obedience. Theſe and the like aſſurances, the Scripture giueth of the Lords coniuence (as I may ſo ſpeake) and of his remitting the ſtraitneſſe of his iuſtice towards thoſe that are his; which things are indeede exceeding full of comfort to all thoſe which know rightly to apply them. But now many wretched ones hearing this, do euen coſen themſelues with a conceit, that their heart is good, their meaning for the beſt, and their deſire to be as holy as the pureſt: and ſo, becauſe God will (in his kindnes) accept good beginnings in his elect, though the ſame bee but weake, and like ſmoking Flaxe; therefore they imagine that, albeit their courſes of life are abhominable, and ſuch as in no reſpect, in regard of 7

grosse sinnes can be iustifyed, yet with a pretence and protestation of a good will and desire, and endeauour to bleare the eyes of God, and to scape vnpunished at the day of reckoning. This is a dangerous subtilty, because it is an abuse of the riches of Gods mercy, and a turning of the sweetest propriety of his nature, into wantonnesse.

8 The eight branch of this guile, is, a mistaking the nature of sinne: as for example: Some man hauing some one grosse sinne reigning in him, which (perhaps) is also in the world taken notice of, as whoredome, oppression, swearing, &c. thinketh with himselfe, that though this be indeed a foule fault, yet it is his onely fault, and many times he thus communeth with his owne heart: True it is (I confesse it) there is such a grosse sinne which I am guilty of, and it may be the world seeth it, and it is some blemish and disgrace vnto me: but what then? I hope when they haue named that, they haue named all: they can (I am sure) lay no other matter to my charge, onely this excepted: and I know no man liueth without a fault, therefore I trust I may be the better borne withall. This conceit ariseth (as I haue said) vpon a mistaking of the nature of sinne, men thinking, that sin may go alone by it selfe without company: as though a man could be giuen to adultery onely, and to no other iniquity; to oppression onely, and to no other vice: to drunkennesse only, and to no other enormity. It is vnpossible. These grosse sinnes haue many attendants, and it cannot be, that they should goe single. Sinne is the sicknesse of the soule. As therefore in the diseases of the body, we see that euery maine griefe, as the stone, gout, pestilence, &c. hath certaine inferiour griefes annexed to it; so euery grand sinne hath other petty euils to attend it, and to feed it (as it were) without which it can neuer come to any great perfection. So that it is a plaine errour, when a man perswadeth himselfe, This, or this, is my onely sinne, not considering what a troupe and traine followeth euery foule and open euill.

9 The ninth branch is, the drawing of a false conclusion out of the Lords long suffering. It is that which Dauid mentioneth, when hee bringeth in God thus speaking to the wicked man: These things hast thou done, and I held my tongue, therefore thou thoughtest, I was like thee [n]. And Salomon, Because sentence against an euill worke is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the children of men, is fully set in them to doe euill [o]. It is in ordinary reasoning among many thus; Surely, if God were so seuere, or so deeply displeased with my euill courses, as it may seeme by some Texts of Scripture, and as some Preachers would perswade, I doe not think he would so long haue forborne me, and (which is more maruellous) that he would haue thus heaped outward things vpon me; therefore I see not to the contrary, (vnlesse I be afraid of shadowes, and terrified with words) but that I may continue in my owne course, and seeke mine owne satisfaction, as heretofore I haue beene accustomed.

o Eccl. 8.11.

10 The tenth branch of this guile is, a hoping to satisfie, and make amends for many euill courses by some speciall seruices and deuotions, or by some shewes of charity. This is first, the guilefull conceit of all Papists; for so are our Rhemists owne wordes, in their notes, that Almes extinguisheth sinne, redeeme sinne, make cleane, and satisfie for former offences, and are to be done as a propitiation to God for former euils. The same is their opinion of fastings, of penance, of pilgrimage, and the like. Secondly, this is the blinde imagination of our Scottish ignorant people at this day, who (for want of better instruction) are frozen in the dregges of Popery, and suppose the due obseruation of some solemne festiuals in the yeere, as they come in their course, to be a kinde of recompence for a multitude of other defaults; and that if they bee precise in the keeping of these & the like rituous traditions, then they are very religious. Thirdly, this is also a deuice, by which many worldly men deceiue themselues, who hauing by rapine and extortion, by gaping ouer the heads of the poore, by treading vpon them and grinding their faces, and by other the like violent and indirect courses,

raked much together, imagine to remedie all this both with God and the world by some largesse, and beneuolence to the poore, or to the Church at their decease; and being possessed herewith, they runne on, presuming by this meanes to make a thorough satisfaction, both to recouer their credit with men, & to gaine fauour with the Lord. The eleuenth and last branch of this Guile is to looke no further then to a shew of Godlinesse [p], and to thinke ones selfe religious ynough, if he haue learned the Art of seeming and can make an outward semblance of that, which indeede is farre from the heart. These which are thus minded, if the world hold a good opinion of them, they thinke themselues to be very holy, if men can not challenge them, they account themselues vnblameable. This is right hypocrisie. Hypocrite, is a Greeke word, and signifieth a stageplayer, who many times for the time weareth the habite, and carrieth the style and title of a King, himselfe being but a rascall, or beareth the part of some valourous knight, beeing a man of no resolution, or representeth a chast and modest louer, when his owne life is a practise of vncleanenesse: This is properly an Hypocrite, and beeing applied to matters of religion, it signifieth such an one, whose profession & mouth, and face, and habite, make by fits and vpon occasions, great shewes of Pietie, when in his heart, he is nothing lesse then he makes shew of. Yet, this is the common religion of the world, and from hence come so many courses for getting of a man a name, and opinion of religion. One man sheweth himselfe a sharpe reproouer and corrector of the errors of others, that so he may be thought to bee such an one, who cannot brooke or suffer euill, and yet the same notwithstanding is slacke enough in reforming his owne corruptions; like to him of whom our Sauiour speaketh in the Gospell, who forgetting the Beame in his owne eye, was very desirous, as might seeme, to cast out the Mote, which was in his brothers Eye [q]. Another, in some outward obseruations will seeme very precise, which are but as it were the Circumstances of religion, in the meane time neglecting the maine duties; after the fashion of the Scribes and pharises, to whom Christ denounced a woe because they did tithe minte, and annyse, and cummin, and did leaue the waightier matters of the Law [r]: A third sort to be thought religious, will not sticke to giue some testimonie of reformation, and like Saul in his expedition against Amaleck, who killed the worser stuffe, and saued the best of the spoile aliue, so they will kill (as might seeme) some petty sinnes of lesse profite, aduantage, or delight; and yet let the great sinnes (the crucifying whereof should cheifly testifie their obedience,) bleate and cry still in the eares of the most High. Thus Herod [s], reformed some things at Iohns preaching, but the grand-sinne hee would by no meanes be perswaded to reforme, but though the Preacher might better spare his head, then he could liue without that sinne; many such Herods there are now adaies, who, when a godly reformation is vrged, cry with the same words, though I feare me not with the same minde, that that good Syrian vsed, Onely herein, the Lord be mercifull vnto vs [t], let vs be borne with in this, and besides if we will mend any thing. As men courses are many, for the attaining of an opinion of religion, so their ends are diuers: one man doth it for his profit; as the Shechemites yeelded to be circumcised vpon this hope, Shall not their flookes, and cattel, and all their substance be ours [u]? Another doth it for his credit and estimation. So Saul though hee did not much loue or esteeme Samuel, as a Prophet, yet when Samuel in some discontentment was departing from him, hee importuned him to stay with him, and this was his reason, Honour me, I pray thee before the Elders of my people [x]. Hee thought Samuels presence would grace him, otherwise it is likely he did not much regard him. And I doe verily thinke, this to haue beene one cause, which mooued Herod at the first, to countenance Iohn Baptist; because the people accounting Iohn as a Prophet, it could not but make much for Herods credit to be a protection vnto him. Another yet maketh religion, but as a cloake to greater villanies: so Iezabel purposing by false witnesses to take away Naboths life, yet would grace the matter with proclaiming a Fast [f]. And Absolom made the performance of a Vow in Hebron, to be the shadow of his vnnaturall conspiracie against his father [g]. This is the last Branch of this Spirituall Guile; the summe of it, is this, when for matters of religion men content themselues with the Iudgement of the world, thinking themselues very holy, if the world so account them. Thus haue I ripped vp Adams fig-leaues, and shewed you, as I thinke, all the particulars of this Spirituall Guile; whereby men thinking to deceiue God, do at the last vtterly beguile their owne soules. I haue beene longer in it then I thought; but the excellencie and necessitie of the point, hath ouercarried me. Now, truth is in euery respect contrary hereunto, as full of plain-nesse, as this is full of subtilty, making a man as like to the God of truth, as the other maketh him to resemble the father of lies. It is briefly this, An humble and feeling acknowledgement of a mans naturall sinfulnesse; an aggrauating to the conscience of euery euill, when a man hath to doe directly with the Lord; a shunning and auoyding of all shifts, either of pretensed examples, or of multitude, or of shrouding great sinnes vnder tolerable names, or of translating faults vnto others, or of presuming vpon Gods goodnesse, or of hoping by petty meanes to redeeme offences, or by couering a false heart with a face and vizard of religion. This is Truth in the inward parts, as Dauid tearmeth it [h]. This was in Hezekiah, O Lord, I haue walked before thee in Truth [i]. And from hence springeth Truth in the conscience, giuing a true information of peace wrought with God by Iesus Christ, and assuring a man by the Truth of his obedience, of the Truth of his faith: Truth in the mouth, to put away lying [k], and all manner speeches, which may giue the lie to a good profession: Truth in the eyes, not to behold Vanity [l]: Truth in the eare not to heare the Instruction that causeth to erre, from the words of knowledge [m]: Truth in the hand in respect of the vprightnesse, and fidelitie, and plainnesse, and openesse of a mans dealing among men. Thus I haue shewed you, the nature of this Truth, which is comprehended in one clause thus, True obedience to that which a man knoweth to be the Truth.

The next point, is to shew the necessity of this kind of Truth, or namely, Truth of obedience, or obedience to the Truth. The necessity, may be gathered by that which the Scripture hath deliuered of it, all whose precepts impose a necessitie. When wisedome entreth into thy heart & knowledge delighteth thy soule, then shal counsell preserue thee, and vnderstanding keepe thee [n]. So that there is no benefite by knowledge, till it come into the heart, and hath wrought vpon the affections. Saint Iames speaking of a generall apprehension of the truth of the religion, without vse, saith, The diuels haue it and do tremble [o]. Many shal come in that day, & shall say vnto me Lord, Lord, we haue prophecied in thy name (let vs which are Preachers consider it,) yet Christ shal say vnto them, Depart from me, ye that work iniquity [p]. Here is knowledge, and yet no saluation. If you know these things, (saith Christ elsewhere) Blessed are you, if you doe them [q]. It is the obedience, which maketh vp the happinesse. To euery one that is thirsty, Come buy [r], and what then? Eate too: the hauing is nothing, without the vsing. Places of scripture of this nature are infinit all which do confirme thus much; that the purchasers of the Truth, ought not to be like the Rich, (but yet miserable) purchasers of the World, who when they haue gotte̅ much into their hands, yet go as neere the winde, fare as hardly, toile as painefully, looke as rufully, as they did when they had nothing, and so (as Salomon saith) make themselues poore hauing wealth [s]: Such must not the buyers of the Truth be, knowing much, doing little, hauing (as it were) golden vnderstanding, & leaden affections; And indeed to haue recourse vnto the true definitiō of a lie, there is no more proper lie, then when a man knoweth one thing, and doth the cleane contrary; To lie, is to go against a mans mind. So that when a mans carriage giueth his knowledge the lie, that man, is though he know the Truth, a notorious lyer before God. So much briefly for the necessiry of this Truth.

Now

Now to apply this (which is the third point I vndertooke) this is the vſe of that which hath beene ſaid; euen to ſtir vs vp (as before to ſoundneſſe of knowledge in the Truth, ſo now) to hearty and vnfained obedience thereunto: that as by following the former exhortation we ſhall be able to ſay; Thus we haue laboured, thus we abound in knowledge, thus are we grounded in religion; ſo by this, I meane by this obeying from the heart, the forme of doctrine [t] which wee haue learned, we may with feeling vſe the words of Ieremie, The Lord is my portion, ſaith my Soule [u]: and of Dauid, I haue ſworne and will performe it, that I will keepe thy righteous iudgements [x]. So that when we ſhall heare the Lord ſay in his word, Oh that there were ſuch an heart in them to feare me, and to keepe all my commandements alwayes; our hearts within vs may make anſwer, Oh that our wayes were directed to keep thy ſtatutes [z]. This is the life of all religon, this is the Power of Godlineſſe [a], namely, when as the Truth ſeated in the vnderſtanding, like the oyntment [b], which being powred on Aarons head ranne downe to his beard, and went euen to the skirts of his garments; ſo this, deriueth it ſelfe into the whole man, and ſweeteneth all his actions, making him to giue vp his Body, a liuing ſacrifice, holy and acceptable vnto God [c]. And ſurely, if I had the beſt gift in perſwading which God hath giuen to any man, and could make my words like nailes faſtened by the maſters of the Aſſemblies [d], I could not beſtow my skill better, then in vrging and preſsing this duty: and that in theſe three reſpects. Firſt, becauſe of the difficulty of the dutie. It is by many degrees eaſier, to become a man of deepe iudgement, then of a religious obedience: a harder matter to rectifie the affections, then to informe the vnderſtanding. And there is good reaſon for it, euen in nature: In a matter of knowledge, to be apprehended by the vnderſtanding part of man, there may ſuch forcible reaſons and neceſſary conſequences bee drawne, whereunto it cannot poſsibly but giue conſent: In the affections it is not ſo. For, that which mooueth them, is ſome ſenſible, either profit or delight, which becauſe it is not ſo eaſily felt, and ſo ſoone perceiued in this caſe of obedience, and reformation, therefore it is an eaſie matter, for the vnderſtanding to be well enlightened in the knowledge of religion, and yet the affections to remaine cold and lumpiſh without any loue to religion. So that a man may ſooner runne through the whole Circle of knowledge, then ſet one ſteppe forward to obedience. Now in reaſon, that which is ſo hard in performing, requireth vehemency of perſwading. The ſecond reſpect, why I hold it ſo worthy the paines of mee, or of any other to vrge this duty, is the excellencie of it; and that appeareth heereby, becauſe the leaſt graine of obedience, doth as it were ſeaſon the whole lumpe of knowledge: the ſmalleſt quantitie of hearty affection, is the meaſure of religion: God reſpecteth not how much, but how heartily: yea, if a man be cut ſhort of the fulneſſe of obedience, yet if hee haue an vnfained deſire, hee is accepted according to that hee hath [e]: ſo precious a thing is the hearty embracing of this Truth. The third reſpect, is the generall want hereof among the men of this generation. For as wee haue cauſed the enemies of God to blaſpheme, (I meane Papiſts,) and to ſpeake euill of our holy profeſsion, becauſe of our fruit-leſneſſe; ſo it would make the Eyes of Dauid to guſh out with riuers of waters [f], and vexe the righteous ſoule of Lot [g], if they liued among vs; to ſee firſt, how the more learned and wiſer ſort (who yet would be thought religious) make religion onely a matter of contemplation and thinke it enough to bee able to diſcourſe in matters of diuinitie, as in other things vpon occaſion; and then next, how the common ſort (that are yet called Chriſtians,) bee as far from the power and truth of religion, as they which neuer heard of religion. So then, this beeing a duty of that difficultie, of that excellencie, of that neceſsitie, (that I may at laſt end this firſt part) ſuffer me to renue the former exhortation in one word: As you muſt ſpare no coſt to poſſeſſe the Truth, ſo you muſt euen giue all, euen for one little Modicum of hearty obedience to the Truth. For the purchaſing whereof, I know no other place to remitthee vnto, then that which I named for the purchaſing of knowledge, euen the market of the Lord, the houſe of God, where his word is moſt faithfully diſpenſed: where the faithfull Steward of Gods houſe, who knoweth how to diſtribute to euery man his portion in due ſeaſon [h], will, as he doth prooue the doctrine, to ſtabliſh thy Iudgement, ſo apply it alſo, and make vſe of it to direct thy obedience. And thus much for the firſt part of the Text, the Iniunction, Buy the Truth. Now followeth the Inhibition, ſell not the Truth.

The ſecond part of the Text.

I ſhall not neede to ſpend much time, in ſearching out the meaning of this clauſe. For firſt, the word Truth is ſo to be vnderſtood here as in the former part, And then, what it is to ſell the Truth, will eaſily be gathered from the conſideration of Buying, which hath hitherto beene expounded. as then Salomon when hee enioyned the Buying of the Truth, meant thereby a carefull and an induſtrious endeauouring to obtaine the Truth; ſo here inhibiting the ſale of Truth, he intendeth a careleſſe and negligent diſpoſition to forgoe the Truth.

The onely diuiſion which I will vſe, ſhall bee to apply this ſelling, to the double Interpretatiō of the word Truth: So that I haue here two points to handle: 1. Sell not the knowledge of the truth: 2. For goe not, part not with thy obediēce to the truth, Of theſe two in order. And firſt of this, ſell not the knowledge of the truth; that is, Be not wrought by any meanes, to alter thy Iudgement when thou are once grounded, and ſetled in the truth. Now as in handling of the former part, I did apply the ſimilitude of Buying, ſo in this alſo, I muſt haue leaue, to follow the phraſe of ſelling, ſo farre forth (as agreeably to the rule and proportion of faith,) it may giue light vnto this place.

The 2 doctrine of this Sermon.

Of a good & thrifty husband, which is reſolued not to part with that, which by his great induſtry & charg he hath gotten, two things are required. 1. To cōtinue & preſerue his eſtat. 2. By all honeſt meanes to increaſe it. He which hath a reſolution not to ſell that which he hath, you know hee will haue nought to do with cōmon Brokers, ſuch as are lifting (as it were) at euery thing, & lie in the wind to catch whatſoeuer, any vnthrift ſhall be willing to depart with; or els, if he happen to haue to doe with ſuch, he will be wiſe to know how to rid his hands of them, & to keepe that which he hath frō their fingering. This is worldly policy; not much vnlike to this, ought to be the wiſedome of euery good Chriſtian in this behalfe. As our times are, Sathan, (who is the captaine Broker & cannot abide this Chriſtian frugalitie) hath two principall agents, who follow his cauſes, and are dealers for him in this kind. 1. The Atheiſt. 2. The Papiſt. Againſt both theſe, hee which is a right religious Naboth [i], and crieth, God forbid that I ſhould part with the poſſeſsion of Gods truth, muſt arme himſelfe. Firſt, for the Atheiſt, (who is the diuels hand, as the ſword was in the hand of Ioab toward Amaſa [k], to ſtrike religiō to the hart) that he may not need to double his ſtroke; the beſt courſe in regard of him is altogether to diſclaime him, & not ſo much as to vſe any ſpeeches of chafering with him; but as S. Iames ſpeakes touching the diuell, at the very firſt incounter toreſiſt him [l]. For it is a dangerous thing, in religion, eſpecially in the principall points, as of the godhead, the immortality of the ſoule, the reſurrectiō, & the like, to admit of any diſcourſe, although it may be pretended to be but for conference ſake, whereby the truth of theſe things might bee called into queſtion. Reaſon teacheth vs, that euery Art muſt haue his principles, which muſt not be gainſaid. I remember what the Philoſopher could ſay; If any ſhould diſpute and argue touching this principle, whether there be motion in nature, let him be beaten, till hee confeſſe, that he who ſtriketh him, may deſiſt frō beating him; or, whether the fire be hot, let him be made to feele it; and ſo hee that ſhould call the immortality of the ſoule into queſtion; it were pity but he ſhould ſo be ſerued, as he voluntarily did ſerue himſelfe, who reading of the ſtate of the ſoule ſeparated from the body, threw himſelfe headlong from a rocke that hee might experimentally know it. The Heatheniſh Epheſians were wiſer: for when they heard Paul beginne to call

call the godhead of Diana into doubt, they carried it away with a shoute, Great is Diana of the Ephesians [m], they thought it a thing not to be endured. And through this flood-gate, came this Sea of misery into the world in which wee are all ouerwhelmed, euen, that our grand-mother Heuah, did entertaine a discourse, and parley with Sathan [n], touching the Truth of Gods word: As indeed, to what end are conferences and reasonings of this nature? For, If men will not beleeue Moses and the Prophets [o], nothing can perswade them. Furthermore: because euery man shall now and then feele a little piece of an Atheist in his owne bosome (for each man by nature is that Foole which saith in his heart their is no God [p],) therefore (because also the Principles of Atheisme are grounded vpon mans reason,) it is good to be setled in this rule; that the Mysteries of Christian religion are not to be examined by humane reason. For which cause the Scripture saith, The naturall man perceiueth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishnes vnto him [q], &c. And, The wisedome of the flesh is Enmity against God [r]: and, If any man among you seeme to be wise in this world, let him be a foole, that he may be wise [s]. Is it not in religion, as in naturall things: In them, a Iudgement is grounded vpon experience and obseruation, and the Induction of many particulars, from which is drawne a generall conclusion: In diuinity, the very thing deliuered by Scripture is to be acknowledged, though it be not as yet strengthened by experience. Blessed are they that haue not seene, and haue beleeued, saith our Sauiour [t]: and, Faith is the euidence of things which are not seene [u]: and, wee haue beleeued, and knowne, &c. said the Disciples [x]. As Abraham hoped against hope [y], so a religious man must beleeue against all carnall reason to beleeue. And indeed, if we will tie our selues to reason, there can be no soundnesse in religion: for bring your maine points of religion to reasons barre their to receiue their triall, and what shall be the verdict but this; that the doctrine of the Trinity is senslesse, of the Incarnation of Christ, absurd; of the Resurrection incredible; of the Vnion of Christs two natures, vnlikely; of Regeneration, vnpossible; of Predestination, vniust; of Preaching, Foolishnesse, and so of others: howbeit I holde this also, that where Scripture approoueth reason, there reason may be brought in as a witnesse, although neuer as iudge; as in the case of the reall presence, the Scripture ascribing to Christ a naturall body, maketh naturall reason an argument strong ynough, against such an vnreasonable opinion. Thus if a man shall bring his owne thoughts into captiuitie, which exalt themselues against the knowledge of God, hee shall bee reasonably well guarded against the Atheist, and maintaine this spirituall profession of Gods Truth.

The second Manager of Sathans Businesse, in seeking to draw vs to an vnthriftie selling of the Truth, is the Papist, who was neuer busier, nor fuller of deuices then hee is at this day: labouring by bookes, by priuie perswaders, by bribes, and by all meanes which hellish wit can deuise, to draw men from the acknowledgement and profession of Gods Truth. Their common motiues, are well knowne to those, which know any things, and how they seeke to blinde and dazell the eyes of many with the glorious (but yet pretenced) shewes of antiquitie, vniuersalitie, vnity, lineall succession, Catholike Church, Church planted by the Apostles, Fathers, Councels, Miracles, and the like. Now to shew the weakenesse of euery of these motiues, the falshood of some, the pretensing of other some, the Inualidity of them all, were a long piece of worke, and not possibly to bee (though it were but slightly,) handled, in this shortnesse of time: yet lest I should seeme to name an enemy, and to giue no direction ro resist him, therefore, that euen the meanest Christian, who hath gotten some comfortable knowledge of the Truth, may know how to keepe his right against euery inueigling and catching Papist, I will deliuer these two instructions. The first is, the speech of the Apostle to Timothy, Continue thou in the things, which thou hast learned, and art perswaded thereof, knowing of whom thou hast learned them [z]. I pray you to consider the Place and you shall finde it a notable Preseruatiue, and as good as a grimme Porter to keepe out those Popish factors that would deteate vs of our inheritance. The Apostle presseth to a stiffe & firme continuance in Truth receiued, when as these two things concurre with it: 1. A mans owne perswasion: 2. The consideration of the Qualitie of those which first taught vs. First, for a mans owne Perswasion; marke I pray you, lest I should seeme, in stead of grounded setlednesse, to commend selfe-willed peeuishnesse: By being Perswaded, Paul meaneth thus much, as if he had said to Timothy: If it be an opinion, which thou hast not suddenly entertained, but vpon good aduise; if it hath seated it selfe in thy iudgement, then, when as thou with Care and Conscience, with Humilitie, with vsing the ordinary meanes, with praier vnto God, with hearty desire to be guided into Truth, enquiredst after knowledge, surely thou oughtest not (being by these degrees brought to it and in this manner perswaded in it) rashly and suddenly to forgoe it. This is meant by perswasion in this place; A setlednesse of Iudgement, following vpon an orderly course to bring a man thereunto. The second thing which must concurre, is, Consider and marke of whom thou hast learned them: that is, Obserue, and note well, what kinde of men they are, by whose Ministry thou hast beene instructed, If they be men, who by their fidelitie in teaching, and by the blessing of God vpon their labours, in vsing their Ministry to conuert mens soules, doe carry with them the seale of their Ministry, nay, if thine owne soule can witnesse for them either of these, out of thine owne feeling, then beware of a doctrine contrary to that thou hast bin taught; though I would not haue thee tie thy selfe to any mans Authority, yet be not rash, be well aduised, before thou alter thy iudgement confirmed by such a Ministry. This is the first thing which I will in the Lord commend as a direction, for the meaner sort, (who cannot enter into the examination of euery seuerall) to preserue them from the allurements of Popery, and from selling the Truth to euery cheating companion.

The second thing which I will commend vnto the simpler sort, as a meanes to keepe them, from being entangled, with the large offers of subtill Papists, which seeke to draw men from the Truth, is this; when they shall be perswaded to any point of Popery, differing from the doctrine taught amongst vs at this day, either by writing, or priuie suggesting, or corrupt and vnsound teaching, let them compare it with the contrary which we hold, and well ponder with themselues, (desiring also the assistance of Gods Spirit) which of the two opinions, maketh most for the glory of God, for the comfort of a distressed and distracted conscience, and for the restraint of the libertie of the flesh: and which soeuer of the two, they shall finde, by the witnesse of their owne conscience, (concurring with the voice of the Scripture) to make most for all, or for any of these three, let them take that, to be the soundest, and for their life not dare to renounce it. Marke the Reason. First, the end why God made all things, was the Glory of his owne name [a]: the end why he redeemed mankind was, That no flesh should reioyce in his presence, but that he which reioyceth should reioyce in the Lord [b]; that no man should haue cause to thanke himselfe, but should bee compelled to ascribe all vnto the Lord. By this rule Paul decideth the controuersie touching Iustification by faith and workes [c], Where is then the reioycing? (saith he) It is excluded: By what law; (that is, By what meanes of saluation) of workes? Nay, but by the Law of Faith. Faith taketh all from man, and ascribeth all to the Lord: Therefore we conclude, that a man is iustified by faith without the workes of the Law [d]. So that hence I confirme this rule, that looke which point of doctrine doth most debase man, and giue the whole glorie of all good vnto the Lord, that is the Truth, and that is alone to be embraced. For the second rule, which is touching comfort: Paul saith, that the end why the Scripture was written, was for our learning and comfort [e]: The end of all, both writing and teaching is, that man feeling the extremitie of his owne miserie, might notwithstanding be setled in the comfortable assurance of the loue of God, in Christ Iesus. So then, that doctrine which affordeth

affordeth the ſoundeſt comfort, then, when a wounded conſcience moſt deſireth comfort, that is the Truth, & that is not at any hand to be forſaken. Thirdly, touching the reſtraint of the fleſh, I remember the ſaying of the Apoſtle, Ye haue been called into liberty, only vſe not your liberty as an occaſion to the fleſh[f]: as who would ſay, The doctrine of Chriſtian Religion, though it be a doctrine of liberty to the ſpirit, freeing it from the bondage of ſinne & Sathan, yet it is a doctrine of reſtraint to the fleſh; ſo that when you feele the fleſh begin to break out & take liberty, then know it to be an abuſe of the doctrine of liberty. This was Pauls meaning. So that it is an vnfallible Canon, that that doctrine which preſſeth vpon men, the moſt preciſe & ſtrict obedience to Gods wil, not giuing any the leaſt toleration to any the ſmalleſt ſin, but is ſtill curbing mans naturall inclination vnto euill, the ſame is the Truth of God, that ought euery ſeruant of God to maintaine. I pray you remember this direction. I do not for mine own part (and I ſpeak it hauing often & aduiſedly thought vpon it) know any maine point of popery, but it may well be tryed by theſe Rules. So that you ſhall find all the grounds of that religion, either to obſcure Gods glory, or to weaken mans comfort, or (what pretence ſoeuer it may make, by not ſeeming to ſpare the body[g]) to giue liberty to the fleſh. I pray you try the truth hereof vpon occaſion, and then credit the direction accordingly.

g Col. 2.23.

Thus much briefly how a Chriſtian good husband, who hauing at a deare hand purchaſed the truth, & is willing ſtill to enioy it, may keep the ſame from all huckſters, whether they be ſuch as would draw him to no religion, or ſuch as would winne him to a falſe religion. A needfull point in theſe decaying times, in which Sathan knowing that he hath but a ſhort time, hath great wrath[h], & beſtirs himſelfe exceedingly; & in which alſo, many, as it were weary of Manna, of the ſincere doctrine of the Goſpell, do long for the fleſh pots of Egypt, for the groſſenes of Popery; others go about to make a medley of Popery & true Chriſtianity, to put the Arke & Dagon into one Temple, which cannot be; others conſidering the courſe of times, cary themſelues in a kind of indifferency, caſting (like the wiſe ſteward[i], what they ſhall do hereafter. So that if euer the Papiſts, leauing all other perſwaſions, ſhould haue oportunity (which God forbid) to reſume their old argument, From the clubs, threatning vs, that if we will not ſell our inheritance, they will fire vs out, is much to bee feared, that a great many of vs would reſigne our intereſt, chooſing rather to go ſeeke a new, then to holde our old poſſeſsion vpon ſo hard conditions. I beſeech you therfore let vs as wel remember to take heed of a thriftleſnes in forſaking the truth, as of miſerablenes and nigardice in purchaſing the truth, & let me conclude this place & exhortation, with the words of the Apoſtle; You that are, or hereafter by the bleſsing of God vpon the vſe of the good means ſhall be grounded in Gods holy truth. ſtand faſt, & keep the inſtructions that ye haue bin taught; and I pray Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, who hath giuen vs euerlaſting conſolation, & good hope through grace, cōfort our harts, & ſtabliſh vs in euery word & good work[k].

The next point is, to vrge this inhibition in regard of the truth of obedience; of which alſo this place is to be vnderſtood, which ſaith, ſell not the truth, that is, After thou art once entred into a holy courſe of true obedience, ſee thou neuer forſake the ſame. For the well handling of this point, the moſt full and profitable courſe were this: Inſomuch as Sathan, the Arch-enemy of our ſoule, knowing, that the further we go on in true obedience, the further we are from his iuriſdiction, doth therfore not faile to ſolicite vs, & by many ſeuerall means to be euer tempering with vs, to ſlake our forwardnes, and to kill & coole all zeale within vs; for this cauſe it were good to diſcouer his plots, to deſigne his inſtruments, and to note the ſeuerall ſuggeſtions by which hee attempteth to make vs caſt off all holy obedience to Gods Truth. Sometimes profit hindereth, ſometimes pleaſure miſleadeth, ſometimes a feare to impaire our credite in the world is a ſtop, ſometimes a conceit of too much ſtraitnes & difficulty in Religion diſcourageth, ſometimes an opinion that too much zeale is ſuperfluous, croſſeth vs; ſo that it is a hard matter to play the good husband in holding faſt a good profeſsion to the end. But, becauſe to enter into euery of theſe particulars, would require a more large diſcourſe, therfore as a generall preſeruatiue againſt all occaſions that may withdraw, I will only commend, and confirme vnto you this doctrine, namely, That he which hath entred into a good courſe of true obedience, ought not at any hand to deſiſt and fall away from the ſame. The courſe of Chriſtianity is often in Scripture cõpared to a race, in which it ſufficeth not a man, either to haue run long, or to haue run painfully, vnleſſe he hold out vnto the marke; nay, hee which breaketh off in the mid way, is as farre from a reward as he which neuer ſet one ſtep forward thereunto; So in this caſe, it booteth not a man to haue beene ſometimes very forward, & to haue made ſome ſhew of loue and obedience vnto Gods Truth, vnleſſe he doe perſiſt and continue therein vnto the end. Therefore, So run (ſaith the Apoſtle) that you may obtaine: 1 Cor. 9.24. ſo run [l], that is, moderately in the beginning, conſtantly in the midſt, & cheerfully in the end, making the end rather better, then worſe then the beginning. An vnſtaid, inconſtant, & fickle diſpoſition, to be carried with a humor, and to embrace a thing but for a fit, is a thing ſo diſgraceful euen in common reaſon, that many men oftentimes doe perſiſt in that which is naught, rather then to incurre the ſuſpition of vnſetlednes; much more is it ſhamefull in matters of religion. And therfore, as it is the brand of the wicked to be like a whirlewinde, ſo it is the note of the righteous to be as an euerlaſting foundation [m]. All the promiſes of happines in holy Scripture, are made with condition of continuance. Hee that endureth to the end, ſhall be ſaued [n]; To him that ouercommeth will I giue, &c. Be faithfull to the death, and thou ſhalt receiue the crowne of life [o]. So that if you take away continuance, all hope of happines is vtterly ouerthrowne. In a word, not to ſay ſo much as might be ſpoken in this caſe; they which haue bin zealous, and carefull, and forward, and do after grow cold, their caſe is worſe, & their puniſhment more heauy. Firſt their caſe is worſe, becauſe therby they are brought into the way to that vnpardonable ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, ſo that if euer they recouer, it will coſt them the ſetting on. Againe, their puniſhment is more heauy: For they, who haue eſcaped from the filthines of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord, &c. if they be entangled againe therein, the latter end is worſe then the beginning [p].

Vſe. There is a neceſſary vſe to be made of this point: Back-ſliding, falling away, loſing the firſt loue, are the common ſins of the profeſſors of religion in this age. The Church is full of Demaſes, who haue left their old zeale, and haue embraced the preſent world [q]. The bleſſed continuance of our happy peace, hath bin to many an occaſion of falling: It is time that the Lord ſhould quicken vs by ſome ſharper courſes. There be many of whom it may be ſaid, He was a zealous Gentleman, carefull in the waies of godlines: I knew ſuch a one, an earneſt and painfull preacher, ſtudious, induſtrious, of excellent gifts: There is another was pretily come on, & gaue good teſtimony of Gods graces to him, was a diligent hearer, a man who loued to confer of good things: But now there is a great alteratiõ, the world hath choked them, the vanity of outward things hath beguiled them, and they are not the men that they haue been. Alas that any man ſhould giue occaſion to haue it ſo ſaid of him. I remember the ſaying, It is the moſt wofull thing to haue bin happy: and ſo, it is a miſerable thing to haue bin zealous, & now not to be zealous; to haue had lands and liuings, and large poſſeſſions, & now to be a begger; to haue had the Truth of obedience in poſſeſsion, but now to haue cleane parted therewithall. I beſeech you, if any here be guilty herein (as euery man hath good cauſe to be iealous ouer himſelf with a godly iealouſie) let him be admoniſhed to looke to it quickly, to repent & do his firſt works [r], leſt he incurre a double condemnation. Who will pity him that had land and liuing, and could not keepe it? and how ſhall the Lord bee mercifull vnto him, who hauing knowne the way of Truth, ſhall turne from the holy commaundement giuen vnto him? And for others, which are (perhaps) but yet commers on and beginners in good things, as you ſhall learne other things, ſo learne this withall, that we haue need to keepe a narrow watch ouer our hearts, leſt we waxe weary of well doing[f], leſt at vnawares a kind of ſaciety and fulneſſe creepe vpon vs. To begin a thing is pleaſant, therefore for varieties ſake, many will begin, but vpon ſome occaſions ſoone leaue off; ſo that all the proofe is in the end. f 2. Theſ. 3. 13

There is one point more behinde, no leſſe neceſſary then the former, a branch of my diuiſion, and incident alſo to my Text; and that is, a godly care to enlarge, and encreaſe the Truth which we haue purchaſed. In this frugall and thriuing age, he is, among worldly wiſe men, halfe accounted an vnthrift, not only that maketh away his eſtate, either in whole, or in part, but alſo which doth not by his induſtry and prouidence, ſomething better the ſame. And I pray you marke if my Text do not require ſo much: It is in the nature of euery inhibition, or forbidding commandement, to imply the contrary: As Thou ſhalt not kill, comprehendeth this vnder it, Thou ſhalt by all honeſt meanes preſerue the life of thy neighbour: ſo, thou ſhalt not ſell the Truth; what muſt I then doe (wilt thou ſay:) Thou muſt husband it well, and labour to encreaſe it. So that my Text very naturally, without ſetting it vpon the racke, occaſioneth the vrging of that duty which the Scripture often doth perſwade, namely, A caring and endeauouring to thriue in Religion, to encreaſe both in knowledge, and in obedience. S. Peter Giues a charge, Grow in grace[t], Paul beſeecheth his hearers to encreaſe more and more[u], Salomon compares the ſtate of a Chriſtian to the light, which ſhineth more and more vnto the perfit day[x]. In Ezekiel, the graces of Gods ſpirit, are figured by the waters, iſſuing out of the ſanctuary, which were firſt to the ankles, then to the knees, then to the loynes, then to a riuer that could not be paſſed ouer[y], Dauid cals Gods ſeruants Trees, which bring forth fruit in their age, and euen then are fat, and flouriſhing[z], Chriſt in the Parable[a], reporteth, that the euill ſeruant, though hee kept the Talent in a napkin ſafe, yet was condemned for not encreaſing it. Thus you ſee the Truth of this doctrine. And I pray you let vs make the vſe of it, to be ſtirred vp by it (ſo many as haue gotten ſome knowledge, & ſhewed ſome fruits of obedience,) not to reſt ſatisfied therewith, thinking that we know enough, and haue done enough; but after the worthy example of Paul, let vs ſtill forget that which is behind[b], accounting that wherto we are come to be ſcarce worth the naming, and ſtriuing to goe from grace to grace, from vertue to vertue, from ſtrength to ſtrength[c], according as God hath dealt to euery one the meaſure of faith[d], Fleſh and blood is ready ſoone to ſatisfie it ſelfe, with a little in theſe things, though in other things it be vnſatiable; and worldly men (that would be thought religious for all that) they plead, All is well, & how religious would you haue vs to be? Do we not thus and thus, and what would you haue of vs more? To helpe this I pray you remember this: He is the beſt Chriſtian, who is euer complaining to himſelfe of his owne ſlacknеſſe, and carrieth a kinde of holy indignation againſt himſelfe, that he knoweth no more, and is no more obedient, more grieuing at that which is behind[e], then pleaſing himſelfe in that wherto he is attained. And on the other ſide, he that is in his owne conceit come to a full point, thinking that a little religiō, a litle zeale, a little holines, a litle knowledge will ſuffice, the ſame man hath no zeale, no holines, no knowledge, no religiō at all. My reaſon is, the euil ſeruāt I ſpake of before, though in one place it is ſaid of him, that that was taken from him which hee had[f]; yet elſewhere it is ſaid of him, that that was taken from him which it ſeemed he had[g]. So that it is but a ſeeming of religion, where their is no care of encreaſing. And thus at laſt I haue ended this Text, and though I haue not handled euery point ſo largely, as the worth of it did deſerue, yet I haue, in ſome meaſure, touched euery particular incident to this place. The 4. doct. t 2. WHen I remember the times and furtherances of my education, and conſider with my ſelfe, by whoſe free choice, I was preferred into that worthy Society (the headſhip whereof your Worſhip hath ſo many yeares enioyed) I cannot but ſay to you as Hierome did to a friend of his, Tibi & quod poſſum debeo, & quod non poſſum: *I am indebted to you both to the vtmoſt extent of my abilitie, and in much more then I can performe. Giue me laaue therefore (I beſeech you) not as by way of requitall, (for I will not ſo much either vnder-value your fauour, or abridge my debt) but as by way of acknowledgement (leauing this, as it were a bill of my hand what I haue receiued, and how deeply I am engaged) to preſent you with theſe three Sermons. They are of the Dignity of the Scripture, and therefore (there ſubiect conſidered) are not vnworthy your patronage, being ſo ancient & iudicious a profeſſour of Theologie. The maner of handling, becauſe, as it is lyable to cenſure in this taxing age, ſo it may perhaps through my want either of skill or care, deſerue reproofe; therefore I doe ſubmit it wholly to your Worſhips triall, that after, it may either ſtep further into publike view, or elſe ſtop where it is, accoraing as you ſhall pleaſe to diſpoſe. Howſoeuer it be, albeit I muſt confeſſe, that I ſhould much reioyce in your approouing furtherance, yet at the leaſt I ſhall herein find contentment, that I haue endeuoured out of my vnfained ſenſiblenſſe of our reſpectiue kindneſſe, to make the world a witneſſe of my thankfulneſſe. THE DIGNITIE OF THE SCRIPTVRE.

Hoſea 8. 12.

I haue written to them the great things of my Law, but they were counted as a ſtrange thing.

The firſt Sermon.

THis verſe is, as it were, the Lords complaint touching the wretched careleſneſſe of the ſonnes of men, who enioying the greateſt benefite, viz. the bleſſed liberty of his word, yet notwithſtanding vtterly neglect it, and eſteeme it as a thing not worthy the regarding. That I may both for your profit, and mine owne helpe proceede in handling of it, with the better order, I will diuide it into two parts; the firſt may be not vnfitly called, Gods bounty, I haue written to them the great things of my law; the ſecond may be termed, mans impietie, but they were counted as a ſtrange thing. God hath vouchſafed the free vſe of his word; what greater bounty? Men paſſe by it as a thing not worth the looking to, what greater impietie? of theſe two poynts in order.

The diuiſion of it into two parts.

I haue, &c. In the firſt part we haue two things to conſider, firſt the commendation of Gods word; ſecondly, the mercy of God in vouchſafing it vnto vs: The word of God is commended vnto vs in theſe termes; The great things of the Law: The word which is out of the Hebrew tranſlated here (Great) ſignifieth, honourable, or precious, or ample, and plentifull: ſo that the word of God is commended here by two things; firſt, the plenty, and abundance, and largeneſſe of matter that is in it; ſecondly, the price, and excellency, and worth of the matter. I will ſpeake of both ſeuerally: and I pray you let vs well obſerue them, that the word of God may grow into greater credite with vs then it is.

The firſt part.

Touching the largeneſſe and ampleneſſe of the word of God, I ſet downe this point, That all neceſſary points, either touching faith or manners, are aboundantly contained and layd foorth in the Scriptures; for proofe whereof, that one ſaying of the Apoſtle is ſufficient; The whole Scripture is giuen by inſpiration of God, and is profitable to teach, to improoue, to correct, and to inſtruct in righteouſneſſe [a]. Now what ſpirituall occaſion can there be deuiſed, which is not here mentioned? what matter is there in the whole body of religion, but it may well be referred to one of theſe heads; either teaching, improouing, correcting, or inſtructing? ſo that the word of God beeing ſufficient to all theſe, is not wanting in any neceſſary matter whatſoeuer. Theſe things (ſaith Saint Iohn) are written, that yee might haue life through his name [b]; a plaine teſtimonie that there is enough left written in the Bible, for the begetting of faith, and for the guiding of the ſoule of euery faithfull beleeuer vnto life eternall. I gaue them my Statutes (ſaith the Lord) I declared my iudgements vnto them, which if a man doe he ſhall liue [c]: the taking of that courſe which is prescribed to vs in the word, is all-sufficient to saluation. They haue Mod Luk.16. 31. ses and the Prophets [d], saith Abraham to the rich Glutton in hell; meaning that then they want no needefull instruction, for the bringing of them by repentance vnto life. Infinite are the places of Scripture to this end, shewing the absolutenes of that doctrine, which is contained in the written word, vrging vs to rest our selues satisfied with that which is reuealed, condemning all the inuentions and traditions of man that are added thereunto. And seeing it is a sure thing that the e 2. Pet. 1. 21. Bookes of holy Scripture are penned by the speciall guidance of Gods Spirit [e], as Saint Peter affirmeth; it must needs follow, that if there bee any needefull matter omitted in them, it came to passe, either because they which wrote, did not know it, or because, knowing it they would not reueale it: or because, being willing to reueale it, they forgot it; or else, because though they forgot it not, yet they knew not how & in what manner to performe it. Now whichsoeuer of all these we shall thinke, we shall cast a very great indignitie and disgrace, not simply vpon the pen-men of the Scripture, but vpon the Spirit of God, by whose speciall direction, they wrote euery word and tittle, and vpon whom to lay any imputation, either of weakenesse or vnwillingnesse to performe any thing for the good of Gods Church, were no lesse then blasphemy. Adde hereto for the better opening of this point, that looke what is the spirituall necessity of a Christian vpon any occasion, either of his calling, or of his degree and proceeding and estate in his profession, the word of God is not wanting to giue him fulnesse of direction. If he be a magistrate, it teacheth him how to gouerne; if a minister, it informeth him how to teach; if a master of a family, it instructeth him for the particular duties of his place; whether hee bee a husband, or a father, or a master, or seruant, or seruant, it sheweth him in euery of these, how to demeane himselfe as becommeth a Christian. It giues him direction for his apparell, his speech, his diet, his company, his disports, his labour, his buying and selling, yea and for his very sleepe, and for those things which may be thought most arbitrary and indifferent. It is vnpossible for him to deuise any thing, touching which he may not fetch a needfull direction from the Scripture. Againe, conceiue of him how you will, in regard of the seuerall degrees of Christianty, the word of God is still his Counsellor: if he be ignorant, there be plaine principles of religion, as milke to feede him; if hee be better grounded, there be poynts of greater depth to employ him; if there bee any case of conscience that troubleth him, and scruple that disquieteth him, there is infallible certainety to resolue him; if he be afflicted either in body by sickenesse, or in goods with losses, or in good name with vndeserued reproches, or in minde with the buffeting of Sathan, and his owne corruption; there is plenty of comfort to releeue him, there is store of rules to informe him how to profite by his trials: if hee bee zealous, there is matter to encourage him: if colde and falling backe, there is meanes to quicken him: if he be stubborne and obstinate, there is iudgement to humble him: if he be broken-hearted, there is a salue to restore him: if hee bee turned out of the way by some great sinne, there is as it were a bridle to stop him: whatsoeuer his occasion be, how euer his soule is affected, in what perplexitie soeuer he is, whether it be comfort or counsell, or resolution, or reproofe, or instruction that he needs; the word of God is a plentifull store-house, and meetes to the full with euery spirituall necessitie: So then this is my reason, why the law of God, the word of God, is called Great, or Large, because, looke of what extent and wideneſſe our spirituall wants are, of the same are those holy directions which the Lord hath reuealed in his word. I haue seene (saith Dauid) an end of all perfection but thy Law is exceeding large [f]. Let vs now make vse of this doctrine. The f Psa.119. 96. The Vse. vse of this point touching the largenesse and ampleneſſe of the word of God, extending and stretching it selfe to all the spirituall occasions of all Gods people, is first to ouerthrow the iudgement and practise of the Church of Rome, which, as though though there were some defect in the Scripture, or some needfull matter not reuealed in it, hath added to it a packe and rabble of vnwritten traditions, concerning which it teacheth, that they are to be receiued and embraced with the same affection, with the like zeale, with the same respect, as we doe receiue the written word it selfe, and must bee beleeued also as profitable and necessarie to saluation. Now this opinion and course is plaine against this place of Scripture, in which the word of God is graced with this title, great, or plentifull, or large. If their be any thing left out of it, which is necessary for the information of any mans soule vnto life eternall, sure it hath not deserued that honourable name wherewith it is stiled: I meane, if a Christian man, eyther for the setling of his soule in a matter of faith, or the directing of his course in a matter of conuersation, should find that scantnesse and barrennesse in the Scripture, that hee should be faine to goe seeke direction elsewhere: or if there were no want in the word of God, why should he be so heauily cursed that puts ought vnto it? whereas if there be any point needefull to saluation, which is not mentioned in it, there must of necessity be some addition. And therefore wee must for euer separate our selues from that Church which (when God hath written his word as a perfect direction, full and entire in euery respect) thrusts vpon vs the inuentions of man, daring also to make them in authority equall to the Scriptures. This is the first vse euen to teach vs heartily and vnfainedly to detest all additions to the word of God, and all the authors of them whatsoeuer: & yet with this caution, that we must beware that we be not deceiued in the right vnderstãding of that which we call an addition to the Scripture: we must not thinke as some doe, that this ordinance of God which wee call Preaching, is an adding to the Scripture, it being a course which God in his wisedome hath appointed for the gathering of his Church, and for the opening and discouering vnto the sons of men, the hid treasure. But that is called an addition to the word of God, which beeing commended vnto men as a matter of religion, cannot be iustified, nor warranted, nor made good by the written word, but is grounded onely eyther vpon carnall reason and conceit, or vpon the will of him that vrgeth it: All and euery such addition wee must take heed of, and remember what the Apostle saith: If any man deliuer any other, (meaning any other for substance, though in words and manner of deliuery it may differ) though hee were an Angel, &c. let him be accursed g. Note

g Gal. 1. 8.

The second vse of this point, is to condemne the common neglect, and vniuersall contempt of the precepts and rules of holy Scripture: what occasion soeuer wee haue, the word of God is still at hand to counsell vs, and it is such a direction as cannot deceiue vs, yet in the most of our cases and spirituall needs, wee will seeke to any thing rather then to the Scripture. In the worship of God we do much more esteeme our owne humours and the traditions of our Fathers, then the prescription of the Word. In matters of conuersation, we preferre the examples and guises of the times, the course and practise of the multitude, before the principles of Gods spirit: nay, we thinke it too much preciseneſſe, and a thing very ridiculous and childish, to tie a mans selfe so streight, as not willingly to swarue from the direction and warrant of the Scripture. If we be sicke, we will goe first to carnall meanes, and last to the Scripture: if wee be grieued in minde, and touched in conscience, wee will looke for comfort any were, before we will seeke it in the Scripture: if wee be wronged and iniured in the world, we will runne after the eggings on of our owne corrupt heart, to bee our owne auengers, before we will aske counsell of the Scripture. As in these few, so almost in all other things, any rules please vs better then the rules of the Scripture. In apparell wee are led by the fashion, in meate and drinke by our sensuall appetite; in recreation by company, or by our owne inordinate affection: in dealings with men, by our profite; in getting riches, by our vnsatiable desires; these bee our rules: the precepts of the word of God eyther wee doe not know, or wee doe not esteeme Vse.

them, or wee thinke in a burthen, and a kinde of reſtraint to bee tyed to obſerue them. Thus wee are like vnto thoſe of whome God complaineth by Ieremie, They haue forſaken me (ſaith he) the fountaine of liuing waters, and digge themſelues pittes, euen broken pits that can holde no water [h]; ſo we let goe the beſt aduice which cannot erre, and deuiſe rules and precepts to our ſelues, which muſt needes deceiue vs. To reforme this common euill, let vs remember what wee haue heard, viz. that God hath furniſhed his word with variety of directions, the precepts of it are of equall largneſſe to our ſpirituall occaſions: as many as walke according to this rule, peace ſhall be vpon them [i] (ſaith the Apoſtle:) but to euery other courſe whatſoeuer it be; we may boldly apply the ſaying of Salomon: There is a way that ſeemeth right to a man, but the iſſues there of are the wayes of death [k]. And thus much of the commendation giuen to the Law of God, it is large in matter, and abounding with variety of doctrine.

k Prou 14. 12.

Doctrine 2. Now followeth to ſpeake of the next thing by which it is commended; It is precious, the value and price of the matter, doth equall the largeneſſe and variety of it. The preciouſneſſe and excellency may many wayes bee made knowne vnto vs; firſt by the Author of it, which is God, for which cauſe it is ſo often called the word of God [l]; the law of God [m]; the counſell of God [n]; the oracles of God [o]; The whole Scripture was giuen (ſaith Paul) by inſpiration of God [p]; And it came (ſaith Saint Peter) not by the will of man but of the holy Ghoſt [q]; and, I haue written it (ſaith he) heere in my Text. So that it is no idle tale, deuiſed as Atheiſts ſay, by the witte of man to keepe the vulgar in ſubiection; but it is the very minde of [r] God, and the very expreſſe patterne of that truth, which is originally in the fountaine of all truth, which is the Lord. Secondly, by the matter of it; the matter of the Scripture is in a word, that great miſtery of Godlineſſe, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, God manifeſted in the fleſh [s] &c. A glorious miſtery [t]: A hid myſterie which none of the Princes of this world could know [u]: A myſterie which no man by the wit of man is euer able to conceiue; A myſterie which the Angels in heauen doe admire, and the diuells in hell doe tremble at; A myſterie which the Atheiſts in theire mouthes doe ſcoffe at, but euen at the ſame time in their hearts, doe quake to conſider. This is the matter of the Scripture, Ieſus Chriſt, yeſterday, to day, the ſame for euer [x]: hee is the yea, and the amen [y] of all the promiſes, the Alpha, and the Omega, the firſt, and the laſt [z], the pith and marrow of the whole. Thirdly, by the ſtile of it: Fulneſſe of maieſtie in ſimplicitie of words, the like temper no where elſe to bee found in any humane writer whatſoeuer. I know that in ſundry parcels of the Scripture, there are to be ſeene many more then ſteppes or prints of eloquence, which the wiſedome of God did to make vs know, that he could if it had pleaſed him, haue fretted (as it were) the whole volume of the Booke with excellency of words; yet generally it is ſo carried, in ſuch a lowe phraſe of ſpeech, which yet doth not ſauour of any earthly mould, but makes a man euen as it were in diſpight of himſelfe to admire it: Thy teſtimonies are wonderfull (ſaith Dauid,) yet in the next verſe he ſaith, the entrance into them ſheweth light, and giues vnderſtanding [a]: ſo that there is a depth of myſterie in plainnes of words. Fourthly, the end of it; the end of the Scripture is not to pleaſe the idle humours with variety of delightful matters, neither to exerciſe buſie wits with ſubtilitie of queſtions, nor to bee as a matter of ſtorie onely to acquaint men with the courſe of times, nor to furniſh men with ability to diſcourſe; the word of God aimes at none of theſe ends, (which yet notwithſtanding are the cheife ſcope, and euen the happines of the moſt Authors,) but it driues at this one point, to make a man wiſe vnto ſaluation [b]. To ſhew the path of life [c]; To guide our feet into the way of peace [d]: we may reade in the great booke of the creatures (as I may ſo call it) inuiſible things of God his eternall power and Godhead [e]; yet the knowledge of God gotten there, is of no power, but onely to make vs inexcuſable. And therfore Dauid hauing ſpoken of the maieſtie of God which appeares euen in the creation of things, comes at laſt

last to this, The law of the Lord is perfect, cõuerting the soule [g], to shew, that without the word of God, though man might gain knowledge enough to condemne him, yet he could get none to saue him. And so in another place, hauing declared the testimonies of the power of God which are to be seene euen in the very waues of the sea, at last he concludes the psalme; O Lord thy testimonies are very sure [h], meaning that there is no certaine, and comfortable knowledge of God to be gotten, but onely from thence. And for the same cause Christ told the woman of Samaria, that they worshipped they knew not what [i]; and that the true worship was onely among the Iewes, because they only had the Scriptures. Now then looke how far saluation, life eternall, euerlasting happinesse, doe exceed all other things, by so much is the doctrine of the Scripture of greater price, then all other doctrines, then all other writings whatsoeuer. Thus you see the price and excellency of the word of God; pretious for the author, the God of truth; pretious for the matter, the glorious mistery of Christ; pretious for the frame and forme, plainenesse of stile mixed with maiestie: pretious for the end, to make vs wise vnto saluation. Let vs indeuour now to make the best of this doctrine.

The first vse of it, is to admonish euery Minister, (who by the office and calling is to handle the word of God) to doe it with reuerence and humilitie, in as much as it is a thing of that exceeding price, and therefore a woe shall bee vnto him whosoeuer, that shall rashly, and vnaduisedly, and vnreuerently dispence it. Wee shall reade that among other the holy things which God ordained to bee made in the auncient Tabernacle, hee appoynted a Lauer of brasse [k], in which Aaron and his sonnes should wash their hands & their feet, so often as they went into the Tabernacle, or did goe vnto the Altar to minister; which outward washing commanded to the Priests (and that with such a streight penalty, that they must doe it lest they die [l]) serueth to teach all those that succeed them in the seruice of God in the Church, to take heed how they doe vnholily and without due preparing, and study, and an humble seeking of the Lord, aduenture to meddle with a thing of that heauenly price, as the word of God is. If any man speake, let him speake as the words of God (saith Saint Peter [m].)

Secondly, it is an admonition to all that come to heare, to take heede (as Salomon saith) to their feet before they come into the house of God [n]. I may say to you touching the word of God, as Christ said to the people touching Iohn Baptist, what went you out (saith he) into the wilderness to see [o]? So, what is it that you come from your houses to the Church to be partakers of? is it an idle song, or an olde wiues tale, or a foolish historie, or a friuolous enterlude to be laughed at? or what is it that you come for; it is not the word of God? if you say it is, know you not of what price it is, or doe you consider from whom it commeth, of whom it treateth, and to what end it aimeth? if you doe, how doe you dare to come vnto it with vnprepared, vnreformed, vnsanctified hearts? how is it that wee make no more account of hearing it, then of any other vaine employment? Alasse, who is their amongst vs, but generally hee comes with as great preparation to his worke, or to his market, or to his play, as hee doth to the graueſt exercises of the most pretious word of God? nay, our preparation vsually is greater vnto things of that nature then to this: for whiles we are setting our selues to those occasions, we wil busie our tongues and our thoughts, about the things pertaining to them; but when wee come to the word, wee neuer seeke to disburthen our thoughts of all other matters, that we might bee the more free to intertayne a thing of that exceeding price. Remember what God saide to Moses when hee appeared vnto him when Moses was comming towards the place, God called vnto him: put off thy shooes [p] &c. meaning by that ceremony to strike a kinde of awfull reuerence into Moses, when as he was now to come and stand before God: thereby also teaching vs, that when we come to the exercises of Gods worship, (amongst which the vse of the word is the principall) wee must labour (as the Apostle saith) to cast

Vſe 3. Thirdly, it is to be applied as an aduertiſement to all thoſe that profeſſe themſelues to be knowers & doers of the word, to beware how by their euil liues, they be a meanes to bring the precious word of God into diſgrace: wee ſee by euery dayes experience, how forward men of corrupt mindes are, to prie into the actions and courſes of thoſe, which ſeeme to haue ſome more reſpect vnto the word of God, and to religion, then they themſelues haue, and how ioyfull a thing it is vnto them, when they can haue but any colour of occaſion to ſay, Loe theſe be the men that be ſo ful of Scripture, that talk ſo much of Gods word, behold there fruits, marke if they be not as badde, or worſe then any other. This is a game vnto ſuch, and by this meanes, they wretchedly ſtrengthen themſelues in their contempt of all goodneſſe: woe to him whoſoeuer, that ſhall giue iuſt cauſe to ſuch people, of exception, and to make Gods precious word, to become a by-word in the mouthes of euill men. How often doth the Apoſtle giue charge to the profeſſours of Religion, to looke vnto it, that the word of God be not euill ſpoken of [r]? what a heauy accuſation is it that is layed to the charge of the Iewes? the name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles through you [s]: what a ſharpe expoſtulation is that which is vſed by God himſelfe againſt diſſembling hypocrites, (which like a rower in a boate, who lookes one way and pulles another; ſo they profeſſe one thing, and doe the contrary,) What haſt thou to doe to take my couenant in thy mouth [t]? &c. Dauid was a man deare vnto God, yet becauſe by his adultery and murder hee had made the enemies of God to blaſpheme, the Lord would not ſuffer the fact to goe away without ſome teſtimony of his diſpleaſure [u]: And ſure what-euer thou bee, bee ſure the Lord will puniſh thee, if thy euill life, thy not labouring to maſter thine owne affections, and to make thy conuerſation ſuch as becommeth the Goſpel, doe giue occaſion to any profane perſon, to ieſt at religion, and ſpeake euill of the wayes of godlineſſe. Remember it therefore ye that loue the word, remember it, I ſay, that the word of God is precious, be not you a meanes to bring it into diſgrace. This is the third vſe.

Vſe 4. A fourth vſe is, to cut off all vaine and idle vſing of the Scripture: it is a common grace of ſome to vſe ſome words or ſentences of Scripture, inſteed of ieſts & prouerbs, in their common talke, by which to delight themſelues and other. The word of God is precious, and ought to be vſed with great regard. I will looke vpon him that is of a contrite heart, and that trembleth at my words [x]. There is a great difference betweene trembling at the word, and making of a mans ſelfe merrie by playing and toying with the word; the Lord looketh vpon the one, and pittieth it; hee ſetteth himſelfe againſt the other, and will reuenge it. Wee haue an example of the practiſe of it in the hiſtory of the Church, in that wicked Emperour Iulian; his manner was to reach vnto the Chriſtians boxes on the eare, and withall, to bidde them turne the other; for (ſaith hee) your Maſter biddeth you, that whoſoeuer ſmites you on the one cheeke, you ſhould turne to him the other alſo: And ſo when wee denyed pay to the Chriſtian ſouldiers that were hired by him, and they complained thereof vnto him; his anſwer was, that hee did it to make them fit for the kingdom of heauen, becauſe Chriſt had ſaid; Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heauen: thus this profane wretch ſcoffed at the Scripture: we muſt labour to take heed of the like wretchednes. Pilate was but a heathen, yet the Text ſaith, that when hee heard but the name of the Sonne of God, he was afraid [y]. We that profeſſe our ſelues Chriſtians, ſhould much more reuerence the holy word of God, in euery title whereof, the maieſtie of God may be ſeene. You ſhall reade that the oyle [z] wherewith the Tabernacle and the Arke, and the Prieſts were annointed, was holy, and therefore no man might put it to any other vse, eyther to annoynt his owne flesh with it, or to make a compositiõ like vnto it: The like may be said of the holy doctrine of the Scripture, it is appointed as an holy oyle, to supple, and to refresh the soules and consciences of Gods people, and therefore may not bee diuerted by vs, to any other prophane or yll vse whatsoeuer. It is a taking of the name of God in vaine, and a breach of the third commandement. These are the vses I thought good to make of this, that the things of the law of God are called honourable or precious: And thus much touching the first part of this clause, the commendation of Gods word, the matter of it is very large, and it is very precious.

I come vnto the second part of the clause, touching the mercy of GOD in vouchsafing his word vnto vs, in these words; I haue written vnto them: In the handling of this clause, sundry things are to be opened; as first, How it can be said that God hath written his word: secondly, why it was meete to write it: thirdly, When the word of God began first to be written, & how it was preserued for the Churches vse all that time: fourthly, how we shall be assured, that that which amongst vs is now called the Scripture, is the very same word and precious will of God, which he hath written for the vse and comfort of his people. These points are meete to be opened, both for the well vnderstanding of this place in hand, and for the setling of vs against Atheisme, and the perswading of vs of the authority of the Scripture. Time will not suffer me to enter into them all now, I will proceed as farre as I can. First, how it can be said, that God hath written his word.

God is said to haue written his word in two respects; first, because the ten commandements (of which all the rest that is written in the volume of the Booke, is but as it were a comment or exposition; these I say were written after a secret, vnknowne, and vn-vtterable manner by God himselfe, according as the Scripture doth often mention it: It is called the finger of God [a], by which according to the most ordinary interpretation of the ancient Fathers, is meant the Spirit of God: Secondly, God is saide to haue written his word, because all the rest that was written (though men were the instruments) yet it was done by his appointment, and by his assistance. As concerning Gods appointment, wee reade how Moses was commanded to write [b]; so was Esay [c]; so was Ieremie [d]; so was Ezekiel [e]; so was Habacuk [f]; and so was Iohn, as you shall reade in the booke of the Reuelation [g]: And when as Christ commanded his Apostles to bee witnesses of him, and publishers of his truth and doctrine to the ends of the earth, and to deliuer that, of which the Church should haue continuall vse to the worlds end, no doubt he did in that charge insinuate, that they should not onely preach by word of mouth, but should commit the summe of their doctrine to writing also; that the same might be preserued to all posterities. As it is plaine that God appointed the writing of the Scripture, so hee assisted the pen-men of it, by the extraordinary, and immediate, and infallible guidance of his Spirit; for which wee needs no better proofe then that one of Peters, now once or twice alreadie mentioned [h]: so then because God writ the Law immediately with his owne finger, and then both gaue commandement and order for the writing of the rest, and directed the writers so, that they could not in any thing indited by them be mistaken; the word is said to haue beene written by the Lord.

How the Scripture is said to bee written by God.

The vse hereof is, first, to bee a confirmation to that which I said before, touching the perfection and price of the Scripture; it must needes be an absolute and entire body without any eyther superfluity or defect, and contayne a most necessary & exact forme of doctrine, seeing that God is the author of it, both in his wisdome knew what was conuenient, and in his loue would not keepe secret anything which he knew to be for the necessary behoofe of his own chosen,

Vse of this that the Scripture is the Lords writing.

Againe, it can be no triuiall, base, or vulgar matter which is commended vnto vs, as it were out of the bosome of the Lord; and for the ratifying whereof our Sauiour Christ spent his owne bloud; and in framing whereof the Spirit of a God hath breathed ſo extraordinarily. But the principall and more proper vſe which wee are to make hereof, is, to be an aſſurance to vs of the irreuocable and vnchangeable certainty of the Scripture: and that as our Sauiour ſaith, Heauen and earth ſhall paſſe away before one tittle thereof doe fall to the ground vnfulfilled [i]. It is a good obſeruation of one of the Fathers; If Pilate (ſaith he) being but a man, after hee had ſet the title ouer Chriſts head vpon the Croſſe, and was dealt with by the Iewes to alter it, could ſay, What I haue written, I haue written [k], meaning, that hauing ſet it downe vpon good aduice, he would not change it: much more may we be ſure, that the Lord hauing written his will, and ſet it foorth to the view of the world, as an abſolute rule vnto all, will neuer alter the thing that is gone out of his mouth. Men alter their writings many times, becauſe of ſome ouerſight or miſtaking, or becauſe of ſome ſecond thoughts wiſer then their former; it were blaſphemy to impute any ſuch thing vnto God. Againe, there is much failing in the execution of mans lawes, either through the remiſſeneſſe of thoſe that are intruſted with them, or through want of power to goe thorow with them. The Lord is neither ſlacke as men count ſlackneſſe [l], ſaith Saint Peter, neither yet is his hand ſhortened, that hee ſhould not be able to ſee every parcell of his holy pleaſure put in execution. It may ſeeme needleſſe to inſiſt vpon this point, touching the vnfallible certainety and fulfilling of the Scripture, but if wee conſider our times, wee ſhall ſee it is a needfull doctrine. For, whatſoeuer mens profeſsion is, their conuerſation is ſuch, that a man may well thinke of them, that they imagine the word of God to be but an idle tale, a frightfull ſound to amaze fooles; full of terrible threatnings, but yet lighter then vanity in performance. Doth the vnchaſte perſon thinke it true, that Whoremongers and adulterers God will iudge [m]? Doth the drunkard beleeue, that no ſuch ſhall inherit the kingdome of God [n]? Doth the vſurer imagine that there is any certainety in that ſpeech, that no ſuch ſhall be receiued into heauen [o]? Doth the contemner of Gods word ſuppoſe, that that ſhall come to paſſe which Paul ſaith, that the Lord will in flaming fire render vengeance to them that doe not obey the Goſpell [p]? Doth the deſpiſer of knowledge perſwade himſelfe, that Salomon ſpake with authoritie, when hee ſaid, The Lord would langh at his deſtruction [q]? Do thoſe that preſume vpon Gods mercie, and think they may liue how they will, and repent when they will, giue credit to that where it is ſaid, that thoſe which doe deſpiſe the riches of Gods bounty, and abuſe his patience, doe but heape vp wrath to themſelues againſt the day of iudgement [r]? And ſo I might ſay in many other things. Is it likely that men thinke there is any truth in the words which are ſo flat againſt thoſe courſes, of which their life is a continuall practiſe? Sure it is not: for out of all doubt, if they had any ſuch conceit, and did not rather ſay to themſelues as they did in Ieremies time, it is but winde [s]; they would humble themſelues before the Lord, for their euils paſt, and their future reformation ſhould manifeſt their reuerend perſwaſion of the certainety of thoſe iudgements which ſtand vpon record in the Scriptures. Therefore let vs remember this, this Scripture, this word is not a deuiſe of man, it was written by God; euery curſe written in it, ſhall fall vpon the vnrepentant, and euery bleſsing promiſed therein, ſhall bee made good to the ſoule of euery true beleeuer.

The ſecond Sermon.

THE next queſtion to be handled in this place, touching that which God hath hēere ſaide, that he had written the great things of his law, is, why it was meet that the word of God ſhould be committed to writing. As I haue prooued vnto you that it was not written at aduentures out of the humours of ſome priuate men, but by the ſpeciall appointment and direction of God; ſo it ſhall appeare that the writing of it was not vndertaken, but vpon very great reaſon and for very exceeding good purpoſe. The meane and principall end, was the ſpirituall good and edification of Gods Church; that is not to be doubted, inaſmuch as in all things the Lord hath a chiefe reſpect vnto the glory of his owne name in the good of his choſen: But how, and in what manner, and for what reſpects, the writing of the Word was neceſſary for the Churches good, it ſhall bee worth our labour to enquire. Vnderſtand therfore that the writing of the word, was, & is, for the good of the Church in this reſpect, euen that it may haue one certen and infallible rule, by which all doctrine may be tryed, all controuerſies in religion decided, all doubts reſolued, and euery conſcience firmely grounded and ſetled in Gods truth. For this cauſe we reade, that when there was no word written, but Moſes Law, the doctrine of the Prophets was tried by it [a]. After, when to the Law of Moſes were added the Sermons of the Prophets, then euery thing was referred vnto them: ſo Chriſt cleared his doctrine, and made it good by Moſes and all the Prophets [b]: and Pauls defence was this, that he had ſaid no other things, then thoſe which Moſes and the Prophets did ſay ſhould come [c]. And all the learned in the beſt times which followed, took the ſame courſe, leauing themſelues an example vnto vs, to make the written word, as it were the ſtandard or the kings beame, by which to try all doctrine that is tendred to vs, accepting none for ſound and good, but only that which is agreeing thereunto. So that, looke what neceſsity there was, that the Church ſhould haue a Iudge to decide doubts, and a true rule to finde out, and to diſcerne the truth; the ſame is there, that the word ſhould be put in writing for the common and perpetuall good of all poſterity. If any man thinke that the word of God might as well & profitably haue proceeded from the Churches good, from hand to hand, by liuely voyce, as by writing, the father commending it to his ſonne, and ſo continuing it on after another to the end; hee is much deceiued. For firſt the minde of man is very ſlippery and weake, and ſoone readie to forget the beſt things; ſecondly mans nature is very prone to errour, and apt eyther to entertaine, or to broach new religions: and therefore, to preuent forgetfulneſſe, to auoyde errour, and to preſerue the truth of God from corruption; it was meet the ſcripture ſhould be written. It is worthy to be marked, the ſpeech of Luke in the preface of his Goſpell to that noble Theophilus [d]: hee confeſſeth that he had beene inſtructed in the doctrine of religion; yet he thought to write vnto him from point to point, that he might haue the certainety of thoſe things. So that though he had indifferent good knowledge before, yet writing the ſtory was the meanes to beget certainety. This ſhall be written for the generation to come, ſaith Dauid [e]: writing is the beſt meanes euen (as wee ſee by common courſe) to preſerue a thing vnto poſterity.

Beſides,

Beſides, as in a generality it was neceſſary the word of God ſhould be written; that there might be one certaine rule to iudge the truth by: ſo for one maine point of doctrine it was very behoouefull, namely, to aſſure vs that Chriſt the ſonne of Marie was the true Meſsias, who being once come, none other was to be looked for: To ſettle vs wherein, there could bee deuiſed no more direct courſe then this, viz. that firſt the promiſes of his comming ſhould be recorded, the nature and office and all other circumſtances of his perſon deſcribed; and then the hiſtory of all his acts, his birth, doctrine, miracles, death exactly regiſtred; that ſo the following ages comparing both together, and ſeeing how euery promiſe was fulfilled, and euery propheſie accompliſhed, might reſolue vpon it, that he indeede was the Chriſt; and that their is no name elſe giuen vnder heauen, whereby we may be ſaued. An example of this vſe of the written word, we haue in Chriſt himſelfe, who falling into company after his reſurrection with two of his diſciples, who were in ſome doubt, beganne at Moſes (ſaith the Text) and enterpreted vnto them all the Scripture, the things which were written of him[f]. And whoſoeuer marketh the courſe of the hiſtory of the Goſpel, ſhall often finde, that when ſome ſpeciall action of Chriſt is recorded, this, or the like is added to it; This was done that the Scripture might be fulfilled[g], which ſhewed how behouefull the writing of the promiſes, touching the Meſsias, was to be our ground in this maine point; that Chriſt Ieſus is the onely appointed Sauiour of mankind. Here then is the iſſue of my ſpeech: it was meete the word ſhould bee written, that the Church might neuer want a rule of religion, and in particular might be ſetled in this point, that the Chriſt in whom we beleeue, is that Sauiour, whom we need not doubt to depend vpon. Let vs make vſe of this point.

Vſe.

The vſe is this: Our courſes (conſidering the obedience that wee owe vnto God) ſhould be anſwerable to Gods intents; ſith therefore the intent of God in giuing order for the writing of his word, was the grounding and ſetling of our hearts in the truth of religion; it becommeth vs to labour both to conceiue the doctrine of godlineſſe, ſo much as is neceſſary to ſaluation; and in matters that concerne the worſhip of God and our owne ſoules health, not to build vpon opinion, conceit, or the traditions of men whatſoeuer they be, but onely vpon the Scriptures: becauſe when wee come to giue an account (as wee muſt) of our religion vnto God, it ſhall not goe for currant, I beleeued, or, I thought this becauſe ſuch a one perſwaded mee, or becauſe the law of the times ſo commanded mee, or becauſe my fathers before me ſo thought and from them I receiued it: but this anſwere onely ſhall bee accepted, when a man ſhall bee able to ſay thus; This my heart hath embraced, and vpon this haue I built my faith, becauſe God, bleſſing the miniſtery of his holy word vnto me, I haue plainely preceiued, that it is the expreſſe doctrine of the written word, and the very ſame which God hath left vpon record for me to beleeue. This is the onely anſwer that ſhall bee then excepted of. As many therefore as doe deſire to haue comfort of there religion at the day of Iudgement, muſt giue great heede vnto the reading and preaching of the word, and ſo in humility by praier bee prepared to it, that in there ſecret thoughts they may conceiue, how the word of God is a warrant of there beliefe. Men thinke this is a matter of impoſſibility, and caſt many perills (the diuell helping them forward) with many ſhifts to nouzell themſelues in ignorance; but ſtill the ſaying of the Spirit of God is true, Knowledge is eaſie to him that will vnderſtand[h], and God will alwayes giue a bleſſing, and reueale euen his ſecret (as Dauid ſaith) vnto thoſe that feare him[i], and will be found of thoſe that ſeeke him as they ought to doe. So much of this Queſtion, and the vſe of it, why it was meet that Gods word ſhould be written.

i Pſal. 25. 14.

The ſecond doctrine, touching the time of firſt writing the Scripture.

The next Queſtion neceſſary for the clearing of this place, is, When the word of God began firſt to be written, and how till that time it was preſerued for the vſe of Gods Church. Touching which wee muſt holde, that Moſes was the firſt writer of the word word of God that euer was. It is the opinion of ſome (I know) that Enoch the ſeauenth from Adam, wrote ſomething; and that they thinke may be prooued out of the ſaying of Saint Iude, who alledgeth ſome part of Enochs doctrine But Iude ſaith not, Enochs wrote, but Enoch propheſied [k]: and it was poſsible for the ſumme of Enochs doctrine to be continued without writing. Beſides, one Ioſephus (who himſelfe was a Iew, & writ of Antiquities) ſaith, that Adams of-ſpring had erected two pillars, the one of bricke, the other of ſtone, in which they had ingrauen many things; but theſe things are vncertaine. And that there was no part of Gods word written before Moſes, it may thus be gathered. Firſt, becauſe the Iewes, to whom as Saint Paul ſaith, the Oracles of God were committed [l], had not in there cannon any holy Writ more ancient then Moſes: ſecondly, our Sauiour labouring to prooue himſelfe to be the Meſsias, the Text ſaith, Hee beganne at Moſes [m]: if there had beene any Author of greater antiquitie then Moſes, no doubt our Sauiour would haue alleadged it, in as much as all the Scripture that was before him, was to giue teſtimony of him. And it is likely that God himſelfe by writing the tenne Commandements exttaordinarily with his owne fingers, did acquaint Moſes with the manner of writing, and the vſe of letters, which for ought we can finde to the contrary, vntill that time, was vnknowne. If it be demanded then, whether till then the Church and people of God were vtterly deſtitute of the word? I anſwer, No, for it was alwayes a truth, that God would accept of no worſhip, but that which was according to his word; voluntarie religion was hatefull vnto him, euen from the very firſt beginning. Sith then it is apparent, that before the word was written, God was truely worſhipped, as by Adam, Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, &c. it muſt needes be that there was ſome word, or ſome reuealed and knowne will of God to direct them. If you aske how the will of God was then made knowne, and how preſerued? I anſwer, that the Lord reuealed it by holy oracles, by viſions, and apparitions of Angels, yea and of Chriſt himſelfe, who is ordinarily meant by the name of Angell throughout the olde Teſtament, As ſundry times, and in diuers manners God ſpake to our Fathers in the olde time (ſaith the Apoſtle [n],) He ſpake to Moſes mouth to mouth [o]. He vſed alſo the miniſterie of man for the ſpreading of that truth abroade to many, which by viſion or oracle was reuealed to few. Thus the father to the ſonne, one to an other made knowne the will of God. But when the Church was enlarged, and (hauing beene ſhut vp in ſome few families) beganne to ſpread it ſelfe into a greater compaſſe, and withall, corruption in religion encreaſed, and the people of God by conuerſing with idolaters, were more ſubiect to be miſ-led; the Lord gaue order to write the Lawe, and in proceſſe of time, added the writings of the Prophets as expoſitions of the lawe, and at the laſt, the new Teſtament, to bee a full and manifeſt diſcouerer of that myſterie of Chriſt, which was more darkely (as it were) lapped in the types, and figures, and propheſies of the olde. So that this is the anſwer then to this queſtion; till Moſes beganne there was no word written, yet the Church was not diſtitute, but by other meanes, was made acquainted with Gods will, and was informed in ſuch things as partained to life. We may make vſe alſo of the clearing of this queſtion.

Firſt of all it giueth vs iuſt occaſion to note and obſerue, the continuall care and prouidence of God ouer his Church, in that hee hath neuer left it vnſupplyed, but in all times and ages from the beginning, hath taken a courſe for the right informing it, in ſuch things as were behooueſull, and neceſſarie thereunto. Before Moſes, he taught the world by viſions and oracles ſpeaking vnto the ſonnes of men from heauen with his owne mouth. In the following times he ordayned, and with his owne finger (as it were) conſecrated the vſe of writing, for the perpetuall preſeruation of that truth, which otherwiſe in common reaſon, eyther time might haue worne out, or men of corrupt mindes haue falſified, to the corrupting and poiſoning of the Church. Vſe 2. Secondly, this mutuall following each of other, I meane of the making knowne of the word of God vnto the Church, by viſions, and reuelations, and then after in the appointed time by writing, ſerueth to ſhew vnto vs, that as before the word was written, the power of God was not to be doubted of, but that he was fully able to acquaint his Church with all needfull matter; ſo now the word being written, no viſions or reuelations muſt be looked for. Now the written text is our onely guide; and whoſoeuer he ſhould bee, that vnder pretence of ſome ſpeciall matter extraordinarily reuealed to him from heauen, ſhould indeuour to perſwade vs any thing beſides that which is already written, though hee ſhould bring neuer ſo great probabilities and ſhewes of likelihood, yet he were not to be beleeued. It is true, Chriſt promiſed to ſend his Spirit vnto his Church, and he hath, and doth ſtill make good his promiſe; but yet, not that men vnder a pretence of the Spirit, ſhould contemne the Scripture, but that they ſhould bee better able to profit by the Scripture. For the proofe whereof wee haue an excellent place in Luke, where it is ſaide, that Chriſt comming among his Diſciples after his reſurrection, opened their vnderſtanding, but to what end? what? that they ſhould from that time deſpiſe the written word, and take vpon them to deliuer what they would, vnder a colour of being inſpired from aboue? No; but he opened their vnderſtanding, that they might vnderſtand the Scripture[r]: So that the increaſe of the gift of Gods Spirit in them, did not priuiledge them from tying themſelues ſtill to the doctrine of the Scripture. But you will maruell perhaps to what end I ſpeake this; you ſhall know therefore, that as there were in the elder times certaine heretiques called Enthuſiaſts, which pretended (I know not what) viſions, and ſecret conferences with the Spirit of God, and ſo contemned the written word, ſo out of there aſhes haue riſen in our dayes, men of the ſame humour, knowne by the name of the Family of Loue, who deſpiſed the ordinary courſe of the miniſtery of man, and of attaining to the knowledge of ſaluation by the written word, and ſtood vpon priuate reuelations, and ſuch other idle fancies, commending vnto them there owne dreames, vnder the name of the ſpeciall inſtincts of Gods Spirit: and the dregges of this groſſeneſſe are remaining amongſt ſome to this day. Now, leſt at any time we ſhould be deceiued with ſuch ſenceleſſe and fooliſh pretences, we muſt vnderſtand, that ſince God committed his word to writing, eyther viſions, and the courſes of that nature haue beene very ſeldome, or elſe all thoſe to whom God hath ſo reuealed any thing, haue beene tyed to the iudgement of the Scripture. The holy Apoſtle Saint Paul was taken vp into the third Heauen, and had ſtrange things diſcouered to him, yet this was ſtill his plea for himſelfe, and the thing he ſtood vpon, that hee ſaid no other things then thoſe which Moſes and the Prophets did ſay ſhould come[s]. And therefore if either Papiſts, or Familiſts, or any of the like ſtampe, ſhall vnder any colour of viſions or voices from heauen, & the like, perſwade vs to any thing contrary to that we haue bin taught, let vs ſtrait vrge them to make their matters good by the word written; & then ſhall we finde that true which an ancient father ſaid, that if you bring them once to defend their queſtions by ſcripture alone, they cannot ſtand. It hath alwaies beene the badge of heretikes, that there were (ſcripturarum lucifugæ) men that could not abide the light of the Scripture. And thus much for this queſtion, When the word was written, and how the Church of God was inſtructed vntill then. Tertul. ibidē

Now come wee to the laſt and weightieſt, namely, that ſeeing God ſaith here in our Text, that hee hath written his Law vnto vs, how we may be aſſured that that which wee now haue, and is called by vs, Gods word, is indeede that holy will of his, which commanded to be written for the good and comfort of his people? And this is a point of great moment, becauſe if we ſtagger therein, we can haue no certainty of religion. Wherefore I pray you let vs obſerue it the rather, that we may haue wherewith to ſtoppe the mouthes of Atheiſts and profane ſcoffers, and auoyd alſo the doubtings and queſtions which may ſometimes ariſe in our owne hearts. Vnderſtand therefore this firſt of all, that nothing is able to perſwade a mans conſcience, that the Scripture is the word of God, but onely the Spirit of God. The Apoſtle Paul ſaith truely, that no man can ſay that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt [t]. Therefore my meaning is to ſpeake onely of ſuch teſtimonies which are of force to conuince the conſcience; and to make men that they ſhall not be able to deny the Scripture to bee from God, though to frame their hearts to yeeld vnto it, is in the power of God onely to effect. Now to come a degree neerer to the matter, we muſt know alſo that the beſt proofes for the Scripture, that it is Gods word, are to be fetched out of it ſelfe; for which cauſe it is called light [u], becauſe it diſcouereth it ſelfe: and many times the teſtimonies of the Lord [x], becauſe it beareth witneſſe to it ſelfe. The Papiſts would haue vs ſtand to the iudgement of the Church, which is altogether doubtfull; for there may bee as great queſtion made of the Church, whether it bee the true Church of God, as of the Scripture, whether it bee the true word of God. The teſtimonie and authority of the Church may bee ſome inducement to a man in this caſe, according to Saint Auguſtine ſayth it was to him, but it can bee no certaine Argument. Know this then, that there is a certaine euidence of Gods Spirit, as it were imprinted in the Scripture, which ſheweth the Diuine excellencie thereof, about all the writings of men whatſoeuer. And this ſtandeth vpon ſundry particulars; Firſt, the purity of the Law of God written by Moſes, aboue all the lawes that haue bin euer enacted and deuiſed by the wiſeſt men. We reade of many worthy Law-giuers among the heathen, that ordained ſtatutes of great wiſedome for the gouernement of their people: yet was their neuer any Lawe deuiſed by the wit of man, but it needed ſome reuiewing, and for ſome reſpect was eyther to bee repealed, or abridged, or enlearged; beſides that, ſcarce any law can bee ſo wiſely framed by a ſtate, but ſome or other will finde a ſhift to doe the very thing, which the intent of the Law was to forbidde, and yet free himſelfe from the danger of the Law, & ſtand vpon termes as if he had not broken it. It is not ſo in the law of God, as it was 1. giuen out, ſo it ſtands without any changing, neither was there euer any found, able to carry himſelfe ſo cunningly in the practiſe of any euill, but this law in one reſpect or other would ſurely finde him guiltie. Secondly, the qualitie of the matter in Scripture: In the writings of the heathen we ſhall finde ſome touch giuen here and there of the miſery of mankind and ſome cold comforts taught for the relieuing it, but the true opening of the direct cauſe of mans miſerie, to wit ſinne, and the entring in of ſinne into the world by Adams fall, and the perfect and full remedie for all this, namely Chriſts death was neuer knowne or heard of, but onely from the Scripture. Thirdly, the antiquity of the Scripture; for the bookes of Moſes are more ancient then any humane Writers, in that they ſet downe a Hiſtory from the beginning of the world, a thing which other Writers knew not of, or elſe borrowed from Moſes, or elſe, corrupted with many fables, and ridiculous narrations. Beſides, there is no writer of any humane ſtory, that can be prooued to bee more ancient then

4 Nehemias and Ezra, who were about the yeares of the world 3500. Fourthly, the admirable consent of the whole body of the Scripture within it selfe, al conspiring together in this one point, that through the name of Christ all that beleeue in him; y Act.10.43. shall receiue remission of sinnes [y]: what shewes of vncertainty and differences soeuer may appeare, either in numbring of yeares, or in any circumstance of history, or in any point of doctrine, are so fully and apparently reconciled by those which haue laboured therein, that there can be no iust colour of exception. Fifthly, the

5 certaine euents of the prophesies thereof, as of the comming of the Messias, the calling of the Gentiles, the reuealing of Antichrist, of the going of the posterity of Abraham into Egypt, and there deliuerance thence, of the foure monarchies by Daniel. And it is worth the noting which we read in Esay, who speaking of the captiuity of the people of the Iewes in Chaldea, doth not onely prophesie their z Isay 45.1. deliuerãce, but names the very man by whom the Lord would saue them, Cyrus [z], and yet Esay liued at the least an hundred yeares before Cyrus was borne. Like to that was that prophesie of the man of God against the Altar of Bethel built by a 1 Kin.13.2. Ieroboam, hee names the partie Iosiah [a], and related the particulars what hee should doe, and yet it was at least 330. yeares before Iosiah was borne. So Ieremy told the people iust the number of yeares in which they should bee captiues vnder Babylon, (70. yeares) [b]. And we our selues if we will obserue it, may see daily b Ier.25.11. how the prophesies of the Scripture are accomplished. Paul said in the last times men should broach doctrines of diuels forbiding to marry, and commanding to abstaine c 1 Tim 4.1. from meates [c], wee see it verified in Popery: he saith againe, that in the last dayes d 2 Tim.3.2. men shall be louers of themselues [d], &c. doe we not perceiue among our selues, how these euills doe daily encrease? he saith further, the time will come when men will e 2 Tim.4.3. not suffer wholesome doctrine [e]; we may behold how this is made good enery day. There is no doctrine more wholesome, then that which is applyed to mens particular sinnes, and yet it is a thing which men will not endure. Saint Peter prophesied, and so did Saint Iude, that in the last times, there should be mockers, men f 2 Pet.3.2. Iud.18. walking after their owne lustes [f], we need not goe farre to see the accomplishment of this prophesie. How doe men despise the iudgements of God, and scoffe at all goodnesse and preferre the satisfying of their owne lusts, before obedience to the will of God? Thus that which wee our selues are witnesses of, declareth the certaine euents of the foretellings of the Scripture, and it is an assurance vnto

6 vs, that it is the word of God. Sixtly, the vnpartiall faithfulnesse of those that haue beene enditors of the seuerall bookes. In Moses it is worth the noting how he preferreth the relating of the truth of the story, before the discrediting of his owne birth; hee was borne of the Tribe of Leui, yet if you reade Genesis 49. you shall find hee spareth not to report the hard sentence that old Iacob gaue of Leui at his death; Simeon and Leui, brethren in euill, instruments of crueltie, into their secret g Gen.49. verse.5. let not my soule come [g], &c. And in Numbers [h] he doth not spare Aaron and Myriam his owne brother and sister, but hath left there sinne, and the displeasure of h Chap.12. God against it, vpon perpetuall record: nay, he is not ashamed to reueale his owne errour, and how much the Lord was offended with him, and how for it he threatned him, that hee should neuer come into the promised Canaan: hee doth in the storie many times make mention of it. It is said, that Saint Marke wrote the Gospel out of Saint Peters mouth, and yet the deniall of Peter is more expresly laied downe by the Euangelist Saint Marke then by any other. And Saint Paul setteth downe with his owne penne, his owne faults in more sharpe measure, then any other man would doe, I was a blasphemer, a persecutour, an oppressour [i]. This argueth that these men were guided by God, in that they were so free i 1 Tim.1.13. from flattery, as they spared not themselues. We know it is contrary in other writers: you shall see generally those that write Histories, speake partially either of some men, or of their owne natiue countrie: as if a man should reade the chornicles of England, he would thinke that the only country. It shews the Scripture to

haue beene guided by ſome higher Spirit, it being ſo free from all partiality. Seauenthly, the wonderfull preſeruation of the bookes of the Scripture: At the firſt, the two tables of the Law which were written by Gods owne finger, were appointed by the Lord to be laid vp in the Arke, and the whole tribe of Leui commanded to attend it [k]. Next, the bookes which Moſes himſelfe wrote, as he wrote them by the ſpecial appointment of God (as appeares) ſo he deliuered them to the ſons of Leui alſo to be kept [l]. Ioſhua tooke the ſame courſe for the preſeruation of that which hee had written [m]: So did Samuel [n], yet this is nothing in reſpect of that which followed. The propheſie of Ieremy was burned by king Iehoiakim, thereby thinking to aboliſh the whole memory of it; but the Lord preſently cauſed the ſame to be written againe, yea and added thereunto many words [o]. When Manaſſes & Ammon, two wicked kings, to the end they might the better draw the people to idolatry, & keepe them in it, had ſuppreſſed the booke of the law; yet in the daies of Ioſias, it pleaſed God, that euen in the ruines of the tẽple it was found againe [p]. It is recorded in the booke of Maccabees [q], how that king Antiochus cut in pieces, and burnt all the bookes of the law which he could find, & followed the matter ſo extremely, that whoſoeuer had a booke of the teſtament found by him, hee ſhould bee put to death. And Euſebius an ancient writer of the ſtory of the Church, reports how Diocleſian a heathen Emperour, and a cruell perſecutor, both forbad the vſe of the books of the Prophets and Euangeliſts, and conſumed them with fire alſo. So that indeed it is a very miracle, and an argument that the Scripture is from aboue, inaſmuch as notwithſtanding the perpetuall enmity of the diuell againſt it, the indeuours of heretikes to corrupt it, the practiſes of tyrants vtterly to aboliſh it, and the many hazards which the Church hath beene in, which could not chuſe but endanger it; yet it hath bin preſerued whole and entire, yea euen in the originall tongues, the old teſtament in the Hebrew, and the new in the Greek, euen vnto this day: we may well apply vnto it the words of the Pſalme, It is the Lords doing, and it is maruellous in our eyes [r]. Eightly, the forme and dignity of the ſtile, which is (as I ſaid) fulnes of maieſty in ſimplicity of words. There is no part or tittle of it which ſauoureth of any earthlines; the maieſty of the ſentence is ſuch, as it cannot be fully and wholly conceiued and vttered by any man; and yet it is alwayes more powerfull in matter, then in words. And we ſee the books called the Apocrypha, which haue endeuoured to expreſſe the excellencie of that holy ſtile; are yet ſo far from it, that they are but cold, and euen barbarous in compariſon. Ninthly, if when we conſider the excellencie of the matter, and the heauenly maieſty of the ſtile, we ſhall remember alſo what kinde of men they were which wrought it, it will adde ſome ſtrength vnto this proofe. For if we conſider them ſimply in themſelues, wee ſhall ſee how vnfit they were by all likelihood for ſuch a ſtory. Moſes, firſt a Sheepheard, then a Prophet [f]; Ieremy a very childe By his owne confeſsion [t]; Peter a fiſherman, one that was neuer trained vp in learning [u]; Mathew a Publican, a meere ſtranger to the things of God [x]; Luke a Phiſician [y]; learned, but yet not accuſtomed in things of that qualitie; Paul a perſecutor, a profeſſed enemy to the doctrine of the Goſpell [z]: it could not chuſe but be ſome heauenly and ſpirituall power, that ſhould call, and afterwards enable theſe men vnto this weighty buſineſſe to be the pen-men of that, in which ſo admirable excellency appeares. Tenthly, let vs conſider alſo the power and efficacie of the Scripture. There is no man, but if he obſerue it, and hearken to it, ſhall finde the power of it, how it ſearcheth into the very ſecret of the heart, and diuides aſunder the ſoule and the Spirit, and is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents [a]: it ſtrikes a terror into the conſciences of thoſe, which are the greateſt enemies vnto it, and would ſeeme to deſpite it; and that is the very thing that hath cauſed it to haue ſo many aduerſaries among men. Wee may behold alſo how it worketh to the reclaiming of many men from their euill waies; what fruits of holines it bring forth in the liues of diuers that profeſſe it, what contempt of the word, what hatred tred of ſin,what duties of mercy;yea,and how the loue and ſweetnes thereof hath ſo poſſeſſed the hearts of ſome,that they haue bin content not onely to ſacrifice, their wealth, their credit,their good name, their liberty for it, but euen there very liues, and to chuſe rather to beare any torments, then to diſclaime that holy truth, which by the teaching of the Scripture, they haue once throughly entertained. Thus this power of the word in conuincing ſome, in conuerting others, in amazing ſome,in reioycing others,in drawing ſome earneſtly to loue it,in prouoking others deeply and tyrannouſly to deteſt it,this ſame ſecret and effectuall working of it (I ſay) vpon the ſecret powers of the ſoule, is a teſtimony for the Scripture, that it is no deuice of man, but the very ſacred will of God. Theſe ten tokens, I haue thought good to commend vnto your care and conſideration,by which it may be manifeſted vnto vs,that that which wee call the Bible,and is daily commended vnto vs to be the Word of God, is indeede that which it isſaid to be, and the very thing by which wee ſhall be iudged at the laſt day; 1. the purity of the law; 2. the matter of the Scripture, the deſcription of mans miſery,and of the true remedy for it; 3. the antiquity of it; 4. the conſent of it with it ſelfe; 5. the certaine euent of all prophecies;6. the vnpartiall dealing of thoſe that doe write it; 7.the miraculous preſeruations of it from the firſt writing till now;8.the maieſticall ſtile wherein it is written; 9. the condition of the penne-men before they were called to that ſeruice; 10. the power and efficacie of it in the working vpon mens conſciences. Howſoeuer (as I haue ſaid) nothing is able to perſwade the minde, but onely the Spirit of God,yet theſe particulars are of force to conuince, and to prooue vnto men,whether they will or no; that the Scripture is no humane hiſtory, but the Oracle of God, ordained by him, to bee as it were, a light ſhining in a darke place [b], (as Saint Peters words are) that by the direction thereof,our feete may be guided in the way of peace.

b 2.Pet.1.19.

Vſe.

The world groweth to a ripeneſſe and perfection of all kinde of ſinne, and the Lords long-ſuffering hath made many to thinke,that religion is but a toy,and all Scripture meerely vanity: and many hearing manifeſt teſtimonies alleadged out of the Scripture againſt their lewdnes, are not afraid to ſay, that ſure it is not all from God,which is ſaid to be his word: Beſides that euery man by nature ſhall finde a ſpice of atheiſme, euen in his owne boſome, and he ſhall finde doubtings ariſe ſometimes euen in theſe maine points,how he ſhall know ſcripture to be ſcripture, and that there is ſuch a God,and a Chriſt, and a hell,and a heauen, as is there made mention of. And therefore for ſtrengthning of vs, both againſt the Atheiſts and ſcorners which wee ſhall meete with in the world,and the doubtings which may ſpring vp in our owne hearts, I haue thought good (my Text giuing me ſo iuſt occaſion,) to diſcourſe thus largely of this matter: for whereas God ſaith here, he hath written to vs his Lawe,we cannot poſſibly make any true profitable vſe of this ſpeech,except we be cleared in this point; That that which we account Gods law, is that ſame doctrine which his will was ſhould be committed to writing for our good.

The third Sermon.

The ſecond part of the Text.

Vt they were counted as a ſtrange thing. This is the ſecond part of this verſe, the former ſhewed the bounty of God vouchſafing his law;this ſhewes the vnthankfulnes and impiety of men in deſpiſing his Law; ſith that by the very courſe of the words it is plaine, that there is a fault here diſcouered,therfore in the handling of this part,I will follow this courſe; 1. I will ſhew the nature of the fault; 2. I will open the greatnes of it; 3. I will

will declare what punishment is belonging to it; 4. I will apply it, to see whether it be not also our fault; 5. when it is manifest, that to count the word of God as a strange thing, is a fault, and such a one as shall be punished, and which is also our fault: I will then teach of what vse all these points ought to be vnto vs, and what we must indeuour to learne thereby; these be the parts and points of this dayes sermon, all necessary to the profitable handling of this clause. And first what the fault was, and wherein this people trespassed, when they are said to haue counted the great matters of Gods Law, as a strange thing.

The doctrine.

The effect and substance of the fault, in a word, was this; that howbeit the Lord had committed and commended his word vnto them, for there necessary vses, intending that it should be familiar vnto them, and alwayes at hand with them as a counsellour in all their occasions, to aduise them, yet they reputed it as a matter not pertaining to them; so that wherein they ought to haue beene most conuersant in it, they were the greatest strangers; neither were they lesse seene, or more slenderly expereienced in any one thing, then the rules and precepts of the Scripture. That is briefly the very true fault, for which the vnthankfull Iewes are challenged in this place, and that was my first point. Now lest when we shall bee found guilty of the same trespasse, it should seeme vnto vs but a slight offence, let me draw you to the next point, which is the greatnes of it, and how grosse a thing it is to count the honorable matters of Gods law, as a strange thing. I will endeuour to make it manifest after as familiar a manner as I can. This is that therfore which I say of it, that it was a fault, compounded and made of three grosse euils; 1. is disobedience; 2. vnthankfulnes; 3. neglect of there owne priuate good euen the good of their soules. First, it was disobedience; for the commandement of God was very streight, that they should all, one and other acquaint themselues with the things of his law, wherof that one place which is in Deuteronomy, is a sufficient witnes; And these words, [a] &c. Therefore besides the ordinary course of teaching by the Leuites in the Temple, the Lord commanded, to bind them as signes vpon their heads, & write them vpon the posts of their house, & vpon their gates, and all to the end that the law of God by that means might become familiar vnto them: so that it was a manifest contempt of Gods commandement, to passe that by, as a matter which concerned them not, which the Lords desire and will was, by all meanes, to accustome them vnto, as it was disobedience to the expresse will of God (and so according to the saying of Samuel to Saul, as bad as sin of witchcraft [b].) so it was vnthankfulnesse also and a most odious abuse of Gods kindnes. Consider how, marke the words of my Text, I haue written to them, &c. saith God, so that the written word is as it were an Epistle or Letter sent from the Lord vnto his Church. A Letter I say of which the matter is weightie, and such as concernes all euen in the highest degree; so the carriage and frame of it, considering what the Lord is in respect of vs, is full of exceeding kindnes, many gracious promises, many kind intreaties, many fatherly aduertisements, euery word in a manner sauouring of vnspeakable loue. Now put-case a King should write a letter to his meanest subiect, nay to such as being traitours to him, stood at his mercy to be disposed with at his pleasure (for so is the case betwixt God and vs) and should in all temperate maner speake graciously vnto them, promising vpon their submission, a finall remitting of their mis-behauiour, yea and a purpose to take them finally into his fauour; if these men thus at the Kings pleasure, and thus kindly written vnto, should throw the Letter aside, not vouchsafing to peruse it, what name would we giue vnto this demeanour? wee would say vnthankefulnesse were to fauourable a tearme, presumption, villany, intollerable insolency; wee would not know how to describe it. How must it not needes then be ingratitude in a higher degree, that the Lord writting to his enemies (as we are all by nature [c]) such a gracious Letter of reconcilement, suing to winne vs, when as it were meeter that we should euen with teares of blood importune him: yet the sonnes of men whose breath is in their nosthrils, not weighing this vn-vtterable kindnes, should dare to set at nought such a message, and to let it slip as if it were some idle stuffe, nor worth the looking on? Againe, whereas it is often touched in the Scripture, that the Lord had a speciall regard ouer the Iewish nation, more then to any other vnder heauen; the liberty of enioying of the law of God, is noted as the principal benefit which the Lord vouchsafed them: What nation is there so great (saith Moses) that hath ordinances and lawes so righteous, as all the law which I set before you this day[d]? And Dauid in the Psalmes hauing spoken at large touching the prouidence of God ouer all mankind, commeth at last to shew wherein the Iewes had the pre-eminence aboue all other, in these words; he shewed his word vnto Iacob, his statutes & iudgements vnto Israel, he hath not dealt so with euery nation[e]. And Saint Paul propounding to himselfe this question, What is then the preferment of the Iew? answereth it thus, Chiefly, because vnto them was committed the Oracles of God[f]. So then, seeing among all the blessings that God bestowed vpon them, this was the choice, that the great things of the Law were committed vnto them, it must needs be an argument of extreme vnthankfulnes in them to make so slight account of so great a fauour.

f Rom.3 1,2.

The third euill of which this euill here reproued in them, was compounded, was, neglect of their owne priuate good. For the Lord hath not commended to them, the things of the law, simply a meane by which they might shew their obedience vnto his authority, but the intent of the Lord therein was the furtherance of their good. I gaue them (saith God) statutes and ordinances, which if a man doe, he shall liue in them[g]. The glory should haue returned to God by their obedience, but the cheife profite should haue beene their owne: and therefore for them to let the law lie, like some olde booke out of vse, or some other forlorne or forren matter, it could not argue a most miserable neglect, and bewray them to bee men of a most profane and dissolute disposition. So then if you demand what great matter this was, for which this people was so highly blamed in these words, they haue accounted the great things of the lawe as a strange thing? I answer, it was an error comprising vnder it three foule euils; first, rebellious disobedience to Gods expresse commandement; secondly, presumptuous contempt and base estimation of Gods great kindnesse; thirdly, the desperate neglect of the saluation of their owne soules. This is the second point. Now for the third.

g Ezec.20.11

Which is, touching the punishment due to this fault: if wee haue obserued what hath beene said before touching the nature of the sinne, wee cannot doubt, eyther that it deserues a punishment, or that the Lord will surely proceed against it in his due time: but yet if we shall consider what the Scripture saith of it in particular, it will much more affect vs. Thus much therefore we may generally vnderstand, that the Lord punisheth no sinne more grieuously, then the contemning of his word; and thereof we haue no more full and pregnant example then this Iewish nation. For whereas sundry times before the comming of Christ in the flesh, the wrath of God came vpon them, that the iudgements wherwith they were visited, made euen their eares to tingle that heard them, and brought that very people, whom he had carried (as it were) in his armes out of Egypt, to become a hissing and a by-word to the whole world; whosoeuer obserues the course of the Prophets, shall finde that the principall ground of all this, was their slight account of the holy doctrine of God, their preferring the inuentions of men, the guises of other nations, and the traditions of their fathers, before the blessed will of the Lord, manifested and reuealed to them in his law. But lest we should thinke this is nothing to vs (though indeede it was left written to admonish vs) concerning this matter there are two places of holy Scripture especially to be considered, and they are both in the booke of the Prouerbs, the one is, Hee that turneth away his eare from hearing the Law, euen his prayer shall be abhominble[h]: marke I pray you, there is no duty in the holy Scripture, to which the Lord hath promised

miſed a greater bleſsing then the duty of praier; the Lord takes it as an honour vnto him, to haue this title, to be called the hearer of prayers [i]; yet the neglect of Gods word, the making no account of the meanes to bring vs to the knowledge of it, turnes all a mans prayer into ſinne, ſtoppeth vp the eares of the Lord vnto all his ſuites, doth (as it were) bar vp the gate of heauen againſt him, that though his requeſt be neuer ſo earneſt, yet it is vnpoſsible for him to haue entrance. God will heare no prayer that proceeds from him which doth not eſteeme the knowledge and vnderſtanding of his word; a fearefull iudgement. i Pſal 6.5.2.

The other place is, O you fooles how long will you loue fooliſhnes, and the fooles hate knowledge? and againe, You haue deſpiſed all my counſell, & would none of my aduice: marke now what followeth, I wil alſo laugh at their deſtruction, & mocke when their feare commeth [k]. I beſeech you in the feare of God let vs conſider it. The Lord is often reported of to vs in the Scriptures by the name of a merciful God; a God that puniſheth not willingly; a God that delighteth not in the death of him that dieth; what a grieuous ſinne then muſt that needes bee, which turneth that ſo ſweete and gracious nature of God into that extremity, that hee ſhould euen reioyce at mens deſtruction, and take pleaſure in there torment? And yet this reckoning the word of God as a ſtrange thing, brings forth this ſtrange effect, and makes that God who delighteth in mercy, to pleaſe himſelfe in the fierce execution of his vengeance. k Chap. 1.22. 25.

Thus then we end this poynt. If you aske what iudgement is due to this offence of not regarding the great things of Gods Law: I anſwer, in generall, it ſetteth vpon the very floudgate of Gods wrath, as appeareth by the example of the Iewes; 2. in particular, it makes all our praiers odious, and the torment of our ſoules, a matter of reioycing and pleaſure to the Lord. It is truely ſaid of our Sauiour, To whom God giueth much, of him he requireth much [l]. The libertie of his word is the greateſt bleſsing, and therefore the contempt thereof muſt needes bring vpon vs the greateſt vengeance. l Luk. 12. 48.

Come we now to the next point, to ſee whether this fault thus deſcribed, and thus deſeruing to be puniſhed be not our fault alſo, that ſo wee may by degrees make a way to that which is the vſe and drift of this whole Scripture.

And firſt heere, to the end that it may appeare, that this is our fault, to neglect Gods word, we muſt neceſſarily enquire, whether the Lord hath not affoorded vs the ſame bleſsing, I meane the liberty of his word. It is a thing that cannot be denyed, that the kindneſſe of God in this behalfe towards vs is no whit inferiour to that which in former times he ſhewed to the Iewes; I doe thinke that no man can name any one particular, tending to the diſcouery and making manifeſt of the Law of God, which is not granted to vs in as great a meaſure as it was to them. Nay, looke by how much the miniſtery of the Goſpel exceedeth the miniſtery of the Law, by ſo much is the mercy of God greater vnto vs, then vnto them; becauſe it is free for vs to behold the ſubſtance of that, whereof they ſaw but the ſhadowes onely. So that the Lord may euery way, and in euery reſpect, ſay to vs as truely, as euer he might ſay to them, I haue written to you the great things of my Law. It is manifeſt then I thinke to euery one that vnderſtandeth any thing, that we are nothing inferiour to the Iewes in reſpect of the bleſsing, I doubt not but it ſhall alſo appeare, that we do fully match them; nay, I beleeue, go farre beyond them in the contempt. And to the end I may make good that which I ſay, let me ſhew it in particulars how the word of God, the holy will of God reuealed in the Scripture, is a meere ſtranger vnto vs; a thing that is farre from being ſo well knowne, and ſo familiar vnto vs as it ought to be; and let that which I ſay be credited, onely ſo farre as your owne conſciences ſhall find it to be true. The word of God is a ſtrange thing to our iudgements, a ſtrange thing to our thoughts, ſtrange to our affections, ſtrange to our tongues and ſpeeches, ſtrange to our courſes, and to our ordinary conuerſation. If this bee true, how

ſhall we be able to ſhift off the like challenge from the Lord, which is here made againſt the Iewes; namely, that we haue accounted the great things of Gods Lawe as a ſtrange thing? Firſt, it is ſtrange to our iudgements; that appeareth by our exceeding ignorance in the things of God, and by that extreame dulneſſe of conceipt which is ſtill to be ſeene in vs: There is ſcarcely any one thing of thoſe, which doe neceſſarily and generally concerne men, wherein the greateſt part of our people are leſſe ſeene, then the doctrine of Gods word; there is nothing which they heare ſpoken of, in any company, or vpon any occaſion, the meaning, courſe, and ſcope whereof they doe leſſe apprehend, then the rules and precepts and inſtructions of the Scripture: men of yeares and great experience, skilfull in the courſes of the world, wiſe in there affaires and very politike, well ſeene in matters of law, able to ſpeake well and with good aduice about outward things, a man would wonder to heare their weakneſſe and ſimplicity in religion. This ſheweth that the Law of God is a ſtrange thing to our iudgements; there is nothing leſſe knowne, there is nothing leſſe conceiued. Secondly, it is ſtrange to our thoughts; Truth is, thoughts are knowne onely to God, who is the ſole ſearcher of mens hearts; but yet (if our conſciences beeing appealed vnto) wee will ſpeake the truth as it is, I beleeue that wee muſt (whether we will or no) confeſſe that our mindes are ſo (in a manner) wholly taken vp with couetous, ambitious, idle, wanton, reuengefull thoughts, riſing out of our corrupt hearts, as from a continuall ſpring, that there is ſcarcely any roome or time for any priuate queſtionings or communings with our ſelues touching the words of eternall life [m], and the great things of Gods Law. Such meditations may ſometimes (perhaps) knocke at the outward doore of our hearts, or (it may be) finde, vpon a fit ſome ſodaine and ſuperficiall entertainment, but (alas) they are quickly vaniſhed; and like a ſerpent vpon a ſtone, or a ſhippe in the middes of the ſea [n], leaue no print behinde them; and by that meanes neuer come to pitch with vs, or to dwell plenteouſly [o] in our hearts. Thirdly, there is a ſmall acquaintance betwixt the word of God and our affections: I needs ſay no more to prooue it but this, namely, that there is nothing which doth ſooner tyre vs out, and make our ſpirits dull and lumpiſh, then the exerciſes of the word, in what kinde ſoeuer. In other things we are like to the Horſe-leaches daughters, which cried, Giue, giue, and we are ſeldome heard to ſay, it is enough [p]: but in matters of religion we are verie moderate; compendious ſermons, briefe diſcourſes, ſhort praiers, haſty meditations, theſe pleaſe vs beſt. Indeede, were it not for very ſhame, we would haue none at all. Thus Gods word is not to vs as a beloued friend, of whoſe ſweet acquaintance we could neuer be weary, but as ſome vnwelcome ſtranger, who (it may be) by importunity, getteth a nights lodging with vs, but his departure pleaſeth vs better then this comming. Now fourthly, for our tongues and ſpeeches, let vs call to minde our ordinary conferences, at home, at worke, in iourneies, in meetings, in going and comming too and from the Church, and then ſay truly, whether if our Sauiour Chriſt ſhould ſodainly choppe in amongſt vs, as hee did to ſee the two diſciples trauelling to Emaus, and ſhould ſay to vs as he did to them, What manner of communications are theſe that ye haue one to another [q]? we ſhould bee able to anſwer him for one time of a thouſand, that we are reuerently and ſoberly communing together of good things, conferring of the things in which publikely we haue beene taught, that ſo we might both edifie our ſelues in our moſt holy faith [r], and might alſo prouoke and ſtirre vp one another to good workes [ſ]: doubtleſſe (as it was ſaid to Peter) our very ſpeech would bewray vs [t], and the barrenneſſe of our talke, would diſcouer the drieneſſe and deadneſſe of our hearts. But now laſtly, although the word of God doe now and then twang vpon ſome mens tongues, and be made a matter of diſcourſe and table talke, to take vp the time, or to ſhew wit, or elſe be called in by ſome profane ones, as Sampſon was by the Philiſtims, to make them paſtime [u], yet it is moſt vniuerſally a ſtranger to mens liues and conuerſations. It is madneſſe in the worlds account for a man in all things (with Dauid) to make the teſtimonies of the Lord, his counſellours [x], and to ſtand vpon thoſe ſtrict and nice termes of conſcience, as not to aduenture vpon any thing, but that which hee may warrant vnto his owne ſoule thereby. Shall it not hinder my profite? will it be no blemiſh to my reputation, may I thereby further ſuch and ſuch purpoſes? are they any examples of men of ſome note and faſhion in the world, running the ſame courſes? Here is the ordinary religion of the world; but as for laying the precepts of the word as preciſe rules for the ordering of all our wayes, and the guiding of our liues in the Lords path it is a thing ſo ridiculous, and vnreaſonable in common iudgement, and through diſcontinuance in theſe euill times ſo out of vſe, that when as the word challengeth that right of gouerning vs which the Lord hath giuen it, men foorthwith (ſo ſtrange a thing it is vnto them, to beare the yoke) ſnuffe, and are not afraide to expoſtulate with it, as the Sodomites did with Lot, ſhall it, beeing a ſtranger, iudge and rule ouer vs? Thus I haue by particulars confirmed this point, that wee are as deſerued lyable to this reproofe, as the Iewes were. The Lord wrote vnto them [y] the great things of his Law; ſo he hath done to vs; they accounted them as a ſtrange thing, wee are very equall to them in contempt.

Now for the laſt point propounded, namely, the vſe of all that hath beene ſayd, it muſt needes be this: That ſeeing to account the great things of Gods law as a ſtrange thing: is, firſt, a fault; ſecondly, a grieuous fault; thirdly, a fault liable to ſo extreame puniſhment; and fourthly, our fault: their is no remedie (vnleſſe by a bolde perſiſting in an apparent euill wee will prouoke God) but wee muſt henceforth giue all diligence, that the word of God may be no more a ſtranger vnto vs, but a dweller with vs, and may become familiar vnto vs. That this is a dutie from which no man is exempted, the Scripture is manifeſt, in which (if the whole body of it throughout be examined) there is no releaſement or diſpenſation giuen vnto any to neglect the ſearching of Gods booke; neyther was it euer maintained by any doctrine, but by doctrine of Popery, that ordinary men need not ſeeke to be made acquainted with the Scripture. We reade that when the Philiſtims had the Iſraelites in bondage, one policie to keepe them vnder, and to detaine them in prepetuall thraldome, was this; they left them neuer a Smith throughout all the Land, and what was their reaſon? Leſt (ſaid they) the Hebrewes make them ſwords and ſpeares [z]. If they tooke away their weapons from them, it was an eaſie thing to oppreſſe them. The very like policie was vſed in the dayes of Popery, to the end to continue the people in blindneſſe, that they might not deſcry the abhomination of that religion, by the light of the Scripture. They tooke the Bible from them, and ſhut it vp in Colledges and Libraries, and ſuffered it not to paſſe, but in a language which the Vulgar vnderſtood not. And as in that bondage of the Iſraelites vnder the Philiſtims, no man could ſharpen his mattocke, his axe, and his weeding hooke, but they muſt bee beholding to the Philiſtims, and take of them ſuch helpe, as they would vouchſafe to affoord them [a]; So in the dayes of popiſh blindneſſe, no common man wanting the helpes of learning and knowledge in the tongues, could enioy the benefit of any ſpiritual ſharpening, any comfort for his ſoule, but as it pleaſed thoſe tyrants ouer Gods heritage to beſtow vpon them. So that the contempt of the Scriptures of God (which is the common ſickneſſe of the countrey) is nought elſe, but a very dregge of Poperie; Ignorance beeing the ſcepter of that kingdome, and the reaſons which euen the moſt learned Papiſts alledge for the diſcharging of the Laity, from the conuerſing with the Scripture, beeing the very ſame which euery profane ignorant perſon, is able by the priuate teaching of his owne corrupt heart, to pleade on the behalfe of his owne careleſneſſe. Well, the ſcope of this place (which is a part of that holy truth by which wee muſt bee iudged at the laſt day) requireth at our hands better things: and if we be any whit aſhamed

of our former neglect, and thinke our ſelues bound in conſcience, to grow into a farther degree of familiaritie with the word of God, the vſing of theſe helps ſhall be a great furtherance.

1 3. Helps to make the Scripture familiar to vs.

An humble ſetting our ſelues to ſchoole to the publike minſterie. In Chriſt are hid all the treaſures of wiſdome and knowledge [b]; and in the ſound and ſincere preaching of the word, there is plainly ſet out vnto vs the very myſtery of Chriſt. To this courſe is the bleſsing promiſed, that it ſhall ſaue them that beleeue [c]; eſpecially when it is yeelded to with humility, and with a holy diſclayming of a mans owne ſeeming wiſedome. For the Lord will guide the meeke in iudgement, and teach the humble his way, yea his very ſecret is reuealed vnto ſuch [d], accordin as on the contrary hee catcheth the wiſe in their owne craftineſſe [e], and maketh them become fooles [f], when they profeſſe the greateſt wiſedome. If we would then grow into more and more acquaintance with the Scripture, we muſt weare out the threſhold of the Lords houſe, and watch daily at his gates, and giue attendance at the poſtes of his doores [g]. For, if thou cauſe thine eares to hearken after wiſedome, and enclyne thine heart: then ſhalt thou vnderſtand the feare of the Lord, and finde the knowledge of God [h]. If in our affections and care we be ſtrangers to publike teaching, we may perhaps haue ſome ſmattering and ſuperficiall knowledge, but can neuer haue any true taſt of the marrow and ſweetnes of the Scripture. Secondly, priuate exerciſe namely firſt, an aduiſed, intentiue, and well prepared reading (if wee be able) or a hearing others reade. This rubs vp the memorie of things heard publikely, confirmes the iudgement, makes fit to depend vpon the Church inſtruction, and inureth to the Phraſe and language of the Scripture: ſecondly, a buſie and ſecret meditating and exerciſing the thoughts about ſuch things as wee haue receiued. This doth (as the Apoſtle ſpeakes) deliuer, and (and as it were) caſt vs into the form and mould of doctrine which wee heare i, and ſeaſoneth the inner man, euen the ſpirit of the minde (k), with that holy truth which we haue learned: thirdly, a reuerent and diſcreet conference touching heauenly things as occaſion falleth, ſometime with our miniſter [l], ſometimes with our neighbours [m], ſometimes at home with our families [n], ſometimes abroad euen as we walke by the way [o]. This is a notable quickening for our ſelues, and a great helpe to others; The lippes of the wiſe do ſpread abroad knowledge, and feede many [p].

At the leaſt ſome of theſe priuate exerciſes ſhould daily be performed: for miſerable is that man, who for one whole day together, doth neyther buſie his tongue, nor employ his thoughts, nor apply his eares to ſome holy vſe, to heare, or talke, or muſe about ſomething by which hee may be built vp in Chriſt Ieſus.

Thirdly, carefull and ſtedfaſt practiſe proceeding from a reſolute vow, and as it were a ſolemne oath taken betwixt God and mans owne ſoule, to keepe the Lords righteous iudgements, and to haue reſpect to all his commandements [q]. Vſe in all things breeds cunning, and he which makes it his care to put in execution ſuch good duties as he heareth taught, praying the Lord to eſtabliſh him in euery word and good worke [r], will in time grow ſo perfect [s], in good things, that he ſhall euen with a kind of pleaſure (for the Lords yoke is eaſie [t]) walk in the law of the Lord [u] neuer being idle nor vnfruitfull in the knowledge of Chriſt [x], but adorning the doctrine of God our Sauiour in all things [y]. The conſcionable practiſe of theſe duties ſhall, by the bleſſing of God, reforme our common fault of being ſtrangers in Gods booke, and ſhall by making Chriſts word dwell with vs, fit, and make vs ready to dwell with him for euer in his kingdome.

SIR, being called vpon, to prepare theſe Sermons for a new Impreſsion by reuiewing them, I haue emboldened my ſelfe, to requeſt your good leaue, that they may be entitled to your name. Neither let them I pray you be the more vnwelcome, becauſe they become (as it were) at a ſecond hand; but be pleaſed rather to interpret my purpoſe thus; that I would firſt trie them, how they could beare the light before I would aduenture them to your preſence. Now therefore that they haue once paſſed the hands and cenſure of others with ſome fauour, I haue ſo much the more courage to commend them to your vſe; not doubting withall, but that if at any they ſhall paſſe TAMAR, the credit of your name, written in their front, ſhall much further their acceptance, chiefely with thoſe, to whom your long continued reſpect to the truth of Religion, is not vnknowne, I hope alſo that your Worſhip will account this as an euidence of my loue to your ſoule, for which I muſt hold my ſelfe bound to haue care; becauſe albeit you liue not vnder my miniſterie, yet inaſmuch as out of that part of your faire Inheritance which lyeth heere, I receiue ſome of my maintenance, I muſt needs thinke it my duty to beſtow ſome ſpirituall gift [a], by which I might ſomething further you in your paſſage towards that Countrey which I truſt you ſeeke [b]; *and for your obtaining whereof I will not ceaſe to pray. THE ABRIDGEMENT OF THE GOSPEL.

The first Part; and the first Sermon.

Luke 1. verse. 67. &c.

Then his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and propheſied, ſaying: Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.

The general diuiſion of the whole place.

IN this paſſage of ſpeech, in which the hymne of Zacharie is reported, two things are to be conſidered: firſt, the preface to it: ſecondly, the hymne it ſelfe. In the preface againe, there are two points obſerued, firſt, the ſpeciall enabling of Zacharie to this buſineſſe: ſecondly, the generall nature of the thing performed. The enabling of Zacharie, is in theſe words, He was filled with the Holy Ghoſt.

By [the Holy Ghoſt] we muſt not here vnderſtand the very eſſence and deitie of the third perſon in Trinitie, but the gifts and graces of the Holie Ghoſt, according as the word is often ſo taken in the Scripture [a]. By beeing filled with the holy Ghoſt, wee muſt not imagine, that Zacharie till this time was deſtitute of the graces of the Spirit, but this is the meaning, that at this time, and vpon this occaſion, a more large and plentifull meaſure of the graces of Gods Spirit appeared in him. In this we may obſerue, that Zacharie afflicted formerly with the dumbneſſe of many moneths, hath not onely the libertie of his ſpeech reſtored, but beeing endowed with a fuller portion of Gods graces, his tongue is made the inſtrument of the Holy Ghoſt, in vttering a matter of extraordinary conſequence. From whence wee may collect this doctrine: That the comforts which God heapeth vpon his afflicted ſeruants doe come in with a kind of aduantage: there is not onely a remooving of the affliction, but a beſtowing withall of ſome ſpeciall kindneſſe. Zacharie is not onely now, not dumbe, but (which is more) is inabled by an extraordinarie meaſure of ſpirituall gifts, euen in an admirable manner, to ſet forth the whole myſterie of the redemption of mankind. We meete with like examples in holy Writ. Great was the affliction of Ioſeph, He was ſolde for a ſlaue, they held his feete in the ſtockes, and he was laied in yrons [b]. But when the Lord had thorowly tried him, as ſiluer is tried, in the furnace of a long and greeuous affliction, he was not barely enlarged, but withall, aduanced to a place of great reſpect; The King made him Lord of his houſe [c], &c. Moſes his triall is at large ſet downe in the ſtory [d], his feare, his flight and his long ſeruice Midian; but when Gods appointed time came, hee not onely reſtored him to the fellowſhip of his owne country-men; but made him the guide and captaine of his people, ſo that he neuer wrought greater things by the hand of any meere man, then hee did by the hand of Moſes. Notorious is the Hiſtorie of Iob, how hee was tormented in perſon, and waſted in eſtate: but when the Lord turned his captiuity, he gaue him twice ſo much as he had before [e], and bleſſed his laſte dayes more then the firſt [f]. To this agreeth that of Dauid, who ſaith that the Lord did not onely bring him out of the horrible pit, but also set his feete

g Psal.40.2. vpon a rocke, and ordered his goings [g]. And that of the afflicted people is of like nature; After two dayes (say they) he will reuiue vs: that is not all, but in the third day
h Hos 6.2. he will raise vs vp, and we shall liue in his sight [h]. Hee would not onely pull backe his hand and forbeare to smite (which yet had beene much) but he would come as a skilfull and tender hearted Surgeon, to lappe vp their sores, to powre oyle into their wounds, to giue them beauty for ashes, the garment of gladnesse for the spirit
i Isa.61.3. of heauinesse [i]: neyther would hee alone in some little measure reuiue and quicken them, but he would giue that large measure of strength that they should liue in his sight. They which went weeping, doe not onely returne with ioy, but they doe k Psal. 126.6. ouer and aboue bring their sheaues with them [k].

The reason of the Lords so dealing proceeds; first, from his mercy: He know-
l Psal. 103.14. eth whereof we be made (saith Dauid) he remembreth that we be but dust [l]: therefore lest his afflicted seruants should bee swallowed vp with heauinesse, and euen ouercome with discouragement, hee doeth not onely withdraw his hand of chastisement, but hee addeth some speciall mercy, to the end that they may bee comfortably assured, that whatsoeuer was done; was done to prepare them for a greater kindenesse. Secondly, it proceedeth from his Wisedome: hee knoweth that none do valew his kindnesses more, or are fitter to employ them to their owne good and the good of others, then those that haue beene most humbled by afflictions: according as no ground is so fit to receiue seede, euen with a full hand, as that which hath beene most torne with the plough, and beaten smallest with the labour of the husbandman: For this cause God is wont to make ready his seruants for great graces by great crosses: affliction is his schoole, in which he traines them vp for the best purposes.

The Vse. This doctrine is full of comfort to all, who being vnder the crosse in what kinde soeuer, doe looke vp to the hand which smiteth, and seeke to profite by tribulation. The Lords yoke is vnpleasing to flesh and blood, and his chastisements like bitter pilles which cannot goe downe without much annoyance to the stomacke; but if thou wilt haue true solide comfort, looke not so much vpon the m Heb.12.11. present grieuance, as vpon the quiet fruit of Righteousnesse [m] which will surely follow: and take it for a rule which neuer faileth, that the crosse (if care bee had to profite thereby) neuer departs but it leaueth a blessing behinde: God giues some speciall fauour or other in lieu of the former burthen. Zachary, who had beene dumbe tenne moneths, not onely speakes, but beeing furnished with a large portion of new grace, he speakes more heauenly than before. Learne thus to bee humbled with Zacharie, and loe, thus thou shalt be comforted.

Doctrine 2. Secondly, from hence we are taught another doctrine; That those whom God intendeth to employ in any speciall seruice, he furnisheth with gifts sutable to the nature of the businesse, in which he will employ them. Zacharie is appointed to propheſie: the businesse is weighty, therefore hee is filled with the holy Ghost, that he may bee able to performe it. This may bee made plaine by many particulars: The Lord meant to send Moses vpon a seruice of great consequence. I will send thee to Pha-

Gods ſending him [u], ſo there is alſo of Gods furniſhing him [x]. Chriſt tolde his Diſciples, that he would make them fiſhers of men [y], that is, that he would traine them vp to bee competently fit for the ſeruice to which hee ordained them: For this cauſe, before hee chooſe them, he ſpent the whole night in prayer to God [z], hee breathed on them the holy Ghoſt [a]. He willed them after his aſcenſion, to tarry at Ieruſalem, vntill they were endued with power from on high [b]. Bezaleel and Aholiab, inſomuch as they were to worke in the tabernacle, were filled with an excellent ſpirit [c]: and when God choſe Saul to the kingdome, he gaue him another heart [d]. If God ſhould not thus deale, it were contrary to thoſe principles of holy wiſedome which himſelfe hath left vpon record in his Word. As vineger is to the teeth, and ſmoake to the eyes, ſo is the ſlothfull to them that ſend him [e]. Hee that ſendeth a meſſage by the hand of a foole, is as he that cutteth off the feet [f]. No wiſe man will ſend a foole on an arrand of moment: Who will ſet a freſh ſouldier ouer an armie, or entruſt a dumbe man with an embaſſage? It were an odious imputation to the wiſeſt God, to thinke him leſſe carefull in his buſineſſe, then men in their affaires. Beſides, great is the corruption of our nature, our heart wicked aboue all things [g], the imaginations of it are onely euill [h]. Now, as men doe not gather grapes of thornes, nor figges of thiſtles [i], ſo the heart of man, which is in it ſelfe, euen as a very mint of vanitie, and a forge of profane, godleſſe, and irreligious thoughts, can not bring forth any good matter without ſpeciall enabling.

This is a good admonition to all thoſe which intend to enter into any ſeruice of weight, either in the Church or common-wealth. It is a dangerous thing to thruſt ones ſelfe into the Lords buſineſſe. Heauy will that ſaying be, when God ſhall ſay of any; I haue not ſent them, yet they ranne [k]: And woe to him who ſhall be challenged with that; Friend, how cameſt thou hither [l]? Now hee that would know whether God hath ſent him, muſt not ſtay for reuelations or ſome ſpeciall informations from heauen, but hee muſt ſearch his owne heart, to ſee with what graces he is furniſhed: If betweene the calling hee intends, and his ſufficiencie, there be any proportion, there is an euidence of ſending; where there is not, hee that vndertakes it, is but an intruder, and his reckoning will be terrible.

Now followeth to conſider the generall nature of the buſineſſe to which Zachary was enabled: It is ſaid, he propheeied. To propheeie, in Scripture ſignifieth two things: Firſt, to foretell things to come, and ſo the word ordinarily ſignifieth in the olde Teſtament: Secondly, exactly and ſoundly to interpret the Scripture, to which ſenſe the word is often applyed in the new Teſtament [m]. Zachary his propheeying may not vnfitly be referred to both: For hee partly foretolde things to come, as of Iohn Baptiſt, and partly alſo hee did excellently interprete things anciently written of the Meſsias: Once, this we ſee, that the holy Ghoſt in him was not idle, but did diſcouer it ſelfe in ſome holy and religious employment; ſo that hence this is gathered, That the graces of Gods ſpirit whereſoeuer they be, are not idle, but are alwaies to be ſeene in the doing of ſome ſpirituall good, according to their places and callings, who are indued therewith. Zacharie is filled with the holy Ghoſt, and ſtraitway he propheeieth: the more graces hee had receiued in himſelfe, the more good proceedeth from him to others. He that beleeueth on me (ſaith our Sauiour) out of his belly ſhall flow riuers of water of life [n]. The graces receiued ſhall iſſue out to the refreſhing of others. Paul ſaith, that it pleaſed God to reueale his Sonne to him, that hee might preach him among the Gentiles [o]; and that God did comfort him in all his tribulations, that he might be able to comfort others [p]. It is an expreſſe commandement; Euery man as he hath receiued, ſo let him miniſter vnto another, as a good diſpoſer of the manifold graces of God [q]. Euery one is a Steward, not to engroſſe Gods graces to himſelfe, but to employ them to a common benefit. The word (ſaith the Prophet) was in my heart as a burning fire ſhut vp in my bones, & I could not ſtay [r]: and, We can not but ſpeake, ſay the Apoſtles [ſ]. Vse 1. This, first may be an aduertisement to those, which being called to the seruice of the Church, are negligent in their places: some such would be accounted learned and good schollers. But it cannot be so: Where the graces of God are, they are neuer idle: Where there is idleneſſe in action, there is emptineſſe in affection. It may be that in such a loiterer as the Prophet speaketh of, who lieth and sleepeth, and delighteth in sleeping [x], there may be a great deale of confused knowledge, but certainely there is no sanctifying learning: There is no holy Ghost in thy heart, if (thy calling requiring it) there be no prophecie in thy mouth; and what vse is there of a head full of learning, with a mouth full of nothing? It is truely said that the Priests lippes should preserue knowledge [y]: But why? to hoord it vp as misers doe their corne? No: But that his lippes may feede many [z], and may spread abroad knowledge. Therefore also (saith the Prophet) the people must seeke it at his mouth [b]. Wherefore let vs holde this: The gifts of the Spirit and profitable employment cannot be separated: he is not truly learned, who doth not truly labour: When thou art conuerted strengthen thy brethren [c].

Vse 2. Secondly, this may haue a larger application to all; thus, Paul saith, If any man haue not the spirit of Christ, the same is none of his [d]: Now if wee would know whether Christs Spirit be in vs or no, we must follow Christs rule, of iudging the tree by the fruits [e]. Let vs see what comes from vs, which may be profitable to others in matters concerning life eternall. Where be those particulars spoken of in the Scripture, admonishing the vnruly, comforting the feeble minded [f], &c. Where is our considering one another to prouoke to loue and to good workes [g]? Where be our prayers, exhortations and instructions in our families? Where such fruits as these be are wanting, there the graces of Gods Spirit are not present. He that is not carefull in his place to profite others in the waies of godlineſſe, himselfe is farre from any true taste of godlineſſe. Zacharie was filled with the holy Ghost, and he was forthwith employed in a spirituall seruice, of which euen we haue the benefit to this day. The diuision of the hymn into 2. parts. The Prophecie or Hymne it selfe may be diuided into two parts: the first of which is touching Christ and the worke of Saluation by him wrought, vnto the 76. verse: the second is of Iohn Baptist and his office in respect of Christ. The former part againe may be cut into two members: First, a proposition (Blessed be the Lord God of Israel:) Secondly, the proofe thereof,) For he hath visited and redeemed his people, &c.

The 1. part. diuided.

In the proposition we haue to note two things: First, a duty performed: Secondly, A description of the party to whom it is performed. The duty performed, is a Blessing of God. To blesse God, is an ordinary phrase of Scripture, it betokeneth nothing else, but to giue thankes to God for his blessings receiued: These words, praise God, or blesse God, or giue thankes to God, are indifferently translated: it is all one as if Zacharie had said, All praise, honour, and thankes be giuen vnto God. The doctrine commended to vs is this; That the praising and blessing the name of God for his goodnes, is one part of that spirituall worship & seruice, which is owing from vs vnto God. It is plaine by the text. For I aske what that was which Zacharie here performed: It must be answered, that he offred vp a sacrifice of thanksgiuing to God. I aske againe, Did he therein worship God? Questionleſſe he did, and that which he did, proceeded from the Spirit of God, and could not chuse but be acceptable before him. Out of these it must needes follow, that thanksgiuing is one part of that duty which is to be performed by vs vnto God. This will easily be made good by Scripture: Call vpon me (saith God) in the day of trouble, so I will deliuer thee, & thou shalt glorifie me [h]. Let vs offer the sacrifice of praise alwaies to God [i], This kinde of seruice is in those words compared to those sweete smelling sacrifices which in the time of the Law were offered to God. Paul bids ioyne giuing of thankes with our requests which we shew vnto God [k]: so that this duty is like the salt with which all our seruices must bee seasoned. Hence are the commendations giuen of it, It becommeth vpright men to be thankefull [l]: It is a good thing to praise the Lord [m]. It is a pleasant thing, and praise is comely [n]. Hence was Dauids care to giue euidence of speciall thankefulnesse vpon speciall occasions: from whence came that phrase of his, A new song [o], signifying his course of particular insisting vpon particular fauours. The default heerein remaineth as a great staine in the good name of Hezekiah, He did not render according to the reward bestowed vpon him [p].

This should prouoke vs to make conscience of this duty, euery man saying to his soule with Dauid, My soule praise thou the Lord, & all that is within me praise his holy name [q]. Thanksgiuing was ordained as an exercise for man in paradise, and shall be an exercise in heauen, when as all other exercises are determined. In heauen the word and Sacraments shall cease, but the blessing of God shall neuer cease, seeing it is the peculiar exercise of the Angels and Saints of the Lord: The more we practise this duty now, the more wee haue our conuersation in heauen [r]: If it be a seruice tedious vnto vs, heauen it selfe will be a burden. When this duty is named with the particulars of it, many will be ready to steppe forth and say with him in the Gospel, All these haue I kept from my youth [s]: we thanke God (say we) for all: but when it commeth to triall, the case will be like that of the tenne Lepers, Tenne were cleansed, but one onely returned to giue God praise [t]. Many enioyers of Gods blessings, few which returne backe to shew their thankfulnesse. And this appeareth by three things: First, by our generall carelesnesse in the duties of Christian holinesse. True thankefulnesse stands not in words and shewes, but in the practise of obedience. The sonne in the Gospel who said, I goe sir, yet went not [u], was he dutifull? so he who saith, I thanke God, and, Blessed be God, &c. and yet careth not to dishonour God, is he thankefull? Offering praise, and disposing ones way aright, are coupled together as companions [x]: where the latter is wanting, the first is but a ceremony. He that hauing receiued a kindnesse from me, shall come and say, he thankes me, and when he hath turned his backe, shall doe mee a displeasure; I will neuer thinke him to be thankefull. He that commeth to God, like the Pharisee, with Lord I thanke thee [y] in his mouth, and yet maketh no conscience of sinne, is but a dissembler. Hee hath Iacobs voyce, but Esaus handes [z]. His words are the words of blessing, but his deedes are full of cursednesse. Sith then men generally liue in grosse sinnes to the dishonour of God, and to the discredit of religion, let their words be as they will, yet they shall be cast off as men guilty of vnthankefulnesse. The second signe of our vnthankefulnesse is, our passing ouer daily fauours without respect: health, liberty, rest, food, successe in our affaires, these things are daily bestowed, yet we vse them as swine, who eate the maste, but neuer looke vp to the tree from whence it falleth: wee goe to our meate, to our rest, to our labour without any signification of our acknowledgement from whom these things come; or of our opinion, that nothing can doe vs good without Gods blessing. The third signe is, the cursednesse of many of our language. S. Iames makes it a matter of impossibility, that God should be blessed by a cursed tongue, Doth a fountaine at one place send forth sweet water and bitter [a]? Swearers, railers, slanderers, vicious speakers; as holinesse cannot dwell in their hearts, so neither can their tongues be messengers of any true thankfulnesse vnto God. To conclude this point then, if we will be thought truly to worship God, let vs make conscience of the duty of thankefulnesse: if we will be thought truly thankefull, let vs declare our thankefulnesse by obedience, let vs take all occasions to bless God for blessing vs, and let vs beware how we defile our tongues with cursednesse. Thus much of the duty to be performed.

The

The second Sermon.

Because hee hath visited and redeemed his people.

WE haue heard of the Propositon, (that the Lord God of Israel is to be praised.) Now followeth the proofe thereof: For he hath visited and redeemed his people, &c. The sum of the proofe is; that God is therefore to be praised, because of that great worke which he hath wrought for the good and saluation of his Church. Here we haue two things to speake of: first, the parties to whom the benefit of this great worke appertaineth, and for whose sake it is wrought: secondly, the worke it selfe.

Touching the first, they are Gods people, that is, those which belong vnto the election of grace, and which are in Gods eternall counsell ordained vnto life. Hence we are taught, That the blessings which doe directly and immediately concerne life eternall, onely those are interessed in them, which are Gods people. This is plaine in this place: For if the question be, whom the Lord did visite and redeeme? It is answered by the Spirit of God in Zachary, that hee visited and redeemed his people: so speaketh the Scripture. It was the saying of the Angell, He shall saue his people from their sinnes [a]: there the benefite of saluation is restrained onely to Gods people. So againe, I bring you tydings of great ioy which shall be to all the people. The birth of Christ is a message of ioy, but to whom? not to all: (for all doe not reioyce therein) but onely to the chosen of God: The people: The, is a word of speciall distinction [b]. Peace shall be vpon them, and vpon the Israel of God [c]. Who be the Israel of God, but onely those which are here termed his people? Aske then to whom belongs Peace and mercy? what, to all without distinction? No: but to the Israel of God: Consider the course of the Apostles words. Titus 2.14. For whom did Christ giue himselfe? whom hath he redeemed from iniquitie? whom hath he purged? Onely those whom hath he chosen out to be a peculiar people to himselfe. Christ speaking of his death, tyeth it to his sheepe: I lay downe my life for my sheepe [d]: but who be his sheepe? Euen those which are giuen to him of his Father [e]. It is a speciall speech of limitation which Christ vsed in his prayer: I pray for them, I pray not for the world [f]. Many such places might be gathered together. We heard how God is the God of Israel; the God of his Church: he is so the God of his Church as that none else can haue any interest in his loue.

We heare much of saluation, of life eternall, or the glory to be reuealed hereafter: these things are great, and onely they are happy which shall enioy them. But let vs learne this one thing, and meditate well of it, That eternall mercy, the benefite of redemption of Christ, the deliuerance from the bondage of spirituall enemies, these things belong not to all: Many, euen of those which professe Christ, and which say Lord, Lord [g], yea and which preach Christ, shall be

be thrust out at the day of separation. They be Gods peculiar people onely to whom these things appertaine. Looke to it, be sure thou art one of Gods people; otherwise, when mention is made of the things which concerne eternall life, I say to thee as Peter did to Simon Magus, Thou hast neither part nor fellowship in this busines[h]. But how shall I know (wilt thou say) that I am one of Gods people? I will tell thee plainly: how is a man known to be one of the kings subiects? one (as we say) of the kings liege people? Euen by this: his obedience to the wholesome lawes of the kingdome. So in this, holy obedience is the marke and badge of Gods people: My sheepe heare my voice[i]. Ye are my friends, if you doe whatsoeuer I command you[k]. It is not the twangling of religion vpon the tongue, but the practise of holinesse in the life, which sheweth a man to be a Christian: Gods peculiar people are zealous of good workes[l]. To this therefore wee are now come: Wouldest thou be sure that the treasures of happinesse which are stored vp in Christ, belong to thee? enquire into thy selfe whether thou bee one of Gods people: Remember how Gods people are discerned, They heare my voice, saith our Sauiour. If Christs voice in his word be not euen musicke in thy eares, yea sweeter then hony and the hony combe[m], dearer then thousands of gold and siluer[n], the ioy and reioycing of thy heart[o]: If the fruits of holinesse appeare not in thy life, but rather the vnfruitefull workes of darkenesse[p], those workes of the flesh which Saint Paul speaketh of[q]; thou art none of Gods people, no subiect to his Kingdome, but a very rebell and traitour to his Maiesty; and when thou thinkest to thrust in among Saints, to enioy the felicitie of his chosen[r], thou shalt heare that heauy sentence passe vpon thee and such as thou art; Those mine enemies, which would not that I should reigne ouer them, bring hither and slay them before me[s].

Now we are come to the worke it selfe, where many things come in order to be touched: First, the fountaine and beginning thereof, [He hath visited.] Secondly, the generall nature of the worke it selfe, [Redeemed.] Thirdly, the meanes of it, [And hath raised vp the horne, &c. Fourthly, the euidence of it; the testimonie of the Prophets, in whom the couenant of grace, and the oath of God to Abraham are at large recorded [As he spake by the mouth, &c.] Fiftly, the end of it [That we being deliuered, &c.] Of these shall be spoken in order.

The beginning & fountaine of all, is Gods visitation, [He hath visited.] There is a twofold visiting ascribed to God in Scripture: one of displeasure: In the day of my visitation I will visit their sinne vpon them[t], The Lord commeth out of his place to visit the sin of the inhabitants of the earth[u]. The other is of mercy; The Lord visited Sarah as he had said[x], that is, hee performed the good which he had promised. In this sense, the day of ones conuersion is called, the day of visitation[y]: So then here; God hath visited, that is, he hath graciously and mercifully looked vpon his people, he hath seene and beheld with a pittifull eye the misery and bondage of his chosen, and he is now, as it were, come amongst men to shew them kindenesse. This visiting on Gods part hauing this signification, and being heere put in the first ranke, is the ground and spring of all which followeth; and it affords vs this doctrine: That the kindnesse and mercy, and free grace of God, is the beginning and fountaine of all those good things which doe concerne eternall life. Consider the place: Many things are here spoken of redemption: of a Horne of saluation; of a Couenant and oath of grace: But whence proceed all these, but from the sole mercy of God; euen from his gracious disposition to visite his people? Where visiting is, there is presupposed a very wofull estate: Visite you yonder cursed woman, said Iehu of Iezebel, meaning to respect her aboue her desert[z]. It is easie to shew out of the Scripture, how the loue, mercy, and grace of God are noted, as the beginning of those things which concerne saluation. The Lord (saith Moses to the olde Israelite) did not set his loue vpon you, nor chuse you, because ye were moe in number then any people, &c. but because the Lord loued you[a], &c. Now the people of Israel were a tipe of Gods people: Canaan a tipe of heauen: it was Gods free loue which which mooued him to bring them into Canaan; it is his free grace for which he vouchsafeth to aduance vs to heauen. When mention is made of the course and order of our saluation, these and the like speeches still come in: So God loued the world[b], the good pleasure of his will[c], freely by his grace[d], not by the worke of righteousnesse which we had done, but according to his mercy[e], not that we loued God, but that he loued vs[f], Who hath giuen vnto him first[g]? These speeches agree with the matter of speech here vsed, and doe shew plainly that there was nothing in man to mooue the Lord to reach out his arme of deliuerance; all proceeded from the absolute and vndeserued freedome of his grace. Many things there were in man to prouoke God in his iustice finally to forsake him, nothing which might induce him to shew the least degree of fauour.

Besides that, this doth ouerthrow all Popish opinion of merit, and (which is the maine end of all) sets out the grace and mercy of God to the full; it serueth to quicken in vs that duty of thankefulnesse, of which we heard before, and which Zachary did heere proforme. A great blessing requireth great thankes, but the freer the blessing is, the greater should the thankfulnesse be, All my fathers house (said Mephibosheth to Dauid) were but dead men before my Lord the King, yet didst thou set thy seruant among them which did eate at thine owne Table[h]. The lesse desert he found in himselfe, the more deeply did hee hold himselfe bound vnto Dauid: so that when we looke vpon the greatnes of the blessings on the one side, (namely, life eternall, and a kingdome which cannot be shaken) and then the smalnesse of our own desert on the other side, who were but dead men before the Lord, euen dead in trespasses and sinne[i], we may well say with Dauid, What shall we render vnto the Lord[k]? This must needes condemne our carnall mindednesse: some things doe sometimes fall from vs, by way of thankfulnesse for outward things, as health, peace, seasonable weather, and such like: but the greatest blessing, the chiefest fauour, & to which of all other we can lay least claime, is scarsely once made mention of: Blessed be God that hath visited vs when we were dead in sinne; thankes be to God for his sonne Christ Iesus. How are we bound to his maiesty, who hath shewed vs his mercy, to redeeme vs. It is a rare thing to heare of such a speech. It shewes that we minde onely earthly things l. Corne and wine, a full basket, and a full barne, these things will affect vs; but the Lords mercifull visitation in his Sonne Christ, in pulling vs out of the iawes of Sathan, cannot mooue vs: It is a fearfull signe, euen that we are enthralled vnto Sathan, and in the very bond of iniquity m. For did we feele and apprehend our owne desert, to be eternally forsaken, and the riches of Gods mercy in visiting vs with his saluation, our spirites would be so rauished therewith, that all other things would seeme vile and base in comparison of this one. Thus much for the fountaine of this great worke, which serueth notably to beate downe Merite, and to stirre vp thankfulnesse.

The generall nature of the benefite is set downe in this word [Redeemed] To redeeme is (as we know) to buy out: the very word in the common vsage of it presupposeth a bondage and captiuity. Whereupon iust occasion is giuen vs to consider that miserable seruitude in which by nature we are all. This seruitude is said to be vnder the power of darkenesse[n], that is, vnder the power of spirituall enemies, which are three: first, sinne; secondly, death; thirdly, the deuill. Sinne makes vs subiect vnto death: for the wages of sinne is death[o]. Death bringeth vs into the full and absolute power of the diuell: That wee are naturally seruants to sinne, it is plaine by the Apostles complaint; I am carnall, solde vnder sinne[p]. It is a true rule, To whomsoeuer we giue our selues as seruants to obey, his seruants we are[q]: and whosoeuer committed sinne, is the seruant of sinne[r]: Now it is apparent, that naturally we obey sinne in the lusts thereof: and giue our members as weapons of vnrighteousnes vnto it[s], euery member hath his taske in the seruice of sin, as the Apostle shewes[t]; and whereas slaues and bondmen doe their seruices and base offices grudgingly and discontentedly, wee doe the businesse of sinne, willingly, readily, and ioyfully.

Let vs in this word [Redeeme] (as in a glasse) behold what we are, and what iust matter we haue of humility, and how little reason to bee secure. The very name of a seruant, or bondman, or vassall, were enough to put a man downe in his own conceit; but to be seruant to so base a thing as sinne, to so hatefull a person as the diuell, to so terrible a thing as eternall death, I doe not see how any man may bee able to expresse it. Whosoeuer therefore thou be, who hast bin foolish in lifting q Luk. 18.13. When thou considerest this, smite thy breast with the Publican [q], pray the Lord to humble thee, that the glad tydings of saluation in Christ may be welcom to thee.

Vse 2. Secondly, heere is also a good lesson of obedience; Yet are bought for a price
r 1 Cor.6.20. therefore glorifie God, [r] &c. It is a very direct inference. God hath redeemed vs, freed vs from thraldome and from captiuity: what should we refuse to doe for him, euen by way of thankefulnesse? Besides, it is a matter of great equitie: Ye are not your owne, saith the Apostle [s]; we are not in our owne power, his wee bee religion, serueth our owne lusts, and drowning our selues in the pleasures of sin, who haue receiued so great a deliuerance? God forbid. What shall wee thinke of the vnthankefull Israelites, who being mightily deliuered out of bondage, yet cryed, It had beene better for vs to serue the Egyptians [x]? Wee must needes say they were vnworthy of so great a blessing. Take heede wee do not make it our owne case. God hath sent his Sonne to redeeme vs, and to free vs from the thraldome of death, of sinne, and of Sathan: We professe that we reioyce in this: yet when we be called vpon to shake off the yoke of sinne, & to become the seruants of righteousnesse [y], we seeme to say as those Israelites did, Let vs be at rest: Wee would be content, to be freed from death, the wages of sinne, but the businesse of sinne we would rather then our life wee might continue in. We haue some corrupt humor or other, that, let the Lord say what he will, wee must needs giue satisfaction too. Men would serue God and Mammon too [z], God and their bellies too [a], God and drunkennesse too, God and whoredome too, God and there pleasure too. This is a poore religion: this is a slender requitall for so great a benefit as redemption: Those which are redeemed, are redeemed from their vaine conuersation [b]. If thou bee ensnared in the sensuall delght of thine owne sinnes, I cannot see how it can be said of thee, that thou art one of Gods redeemed. When a battell is ended, can it be saide, that such a one is ransomed from the enemy who still followeth his campe, and willingly doth whatsoeuer he commands? No. If I see the liue in the seruice of sin, I am sure thou art not yet within the compasse of redemption. Remember we this Vse: when thou heareſt Redemption spoken of, thinke thou; Hath God redeemed vs by his Sonnes blood, and shall I draw backe and chuse rather to runne mine olde course in following the lusts of sinne? God forbid: Say rather; O Lord, I am thine, thou hast bought mee, thou hast paied full dearely for me, thou hast best right vnto me: thee will I serue: O strengthen me by thy grace, that my secret sinne may not ensnare me, that corruption may not get dominion ouer me.

The third Sermon.

Verſe 69.

And hath raiſed vp the horne of ſaluation vnto vs in the houſe of his ſeruant Dauid.

The points to be handled in this Sermon.

THe next thing which comes to be handled, is the meanes by which this great worke of redemption is effected; and that is ſet down in this verſe. Where we haue two things to conſider: firſt a matter done [He hath raiſed vp the horne of ſaluation vnto vs:] ſecondly, the place where it is done, [In the houſe of his ſeruant Dauid.]

In the former point, two things muſt be enquired: firſt who is meant by this horne of ſaluation. Secondly, why the party meant by this title is ſo ſtiled. He that is here meant by the Horne of ſaluation, is Ieſus Chriſt: For vnder heauen their is giuen no other name whereby we muſt be ſaued [c], and, to him giue all the Prophets witneſſe [d]. If he then be the party whom all the Prophets pointed at, as the alone reſtorer of mankinde, if there be no other meanes of ſaluation; who would be ment by the Horne of ſaluation, but onely he? Now for the next, why he ſhould be ſo entitled, it will eaſily appeare, if we conſider the vſuall forme of ſpeaking in the Scripture. The Spirit of God is wont by this word [Horne] to note out Power and Strength: as in thoſe words, All the hornes of the wicked will I breake [e], that is, I will take downe and abate the height and ſtrength of the wicked: and Ieremy ſpeaking of the ruine of the Kingdome of Moab, ſaith thus, The horne of Moab is cut off [f]. The power and greatneſſe of ſtates and kingdomes and common-wealths is often deſigned in Scripture by that word, as in Daniel and elſe-where. It is a ſpeech borrowed from horned beaſts, whoſe ſtrength lieth in that part, and which vſe it both for defence if they be aſſaulted, and for offence if they haue an intent to vanquiſh. So that by an Horne of ſaluation is rightly vnderſtood (as it is is vſually tranſlated) a Mightie ſaluation, or, a Sauiour of admirable and exceeding power. Hereupon then we haue occaſion to diſcourſe of the power and ſtrength of our Sauiour, and that two waies: firſt, as it concerneth the ſaluation of his Elect: ſecondly, as it reſpecteth the confuſion of the wicked.

The 1. doctrine.

Touching the firſt, this is the doctrine: That Ieſus Chriſt is euery way furniſhed with ſufficiencie of power, for the accompliſhment of the worke of Redemption which he vndertooke. This is eaſily prooued. It pleaſed the Father, that in him all fulnes ſhould dwell [g]. If all Fulneſſe, ſurely the Fulneſſe of power: and the word [dwell] is very effectuall, ſignifying the perpetuitie of his power: it is not for a turne or two; but eternally remaining in him, for the beginning, continuing, and perfecting of the ſaluation of his choſen. Againe, it is ſaid of him, that God the Father hath ſealed him [h]. God hath (as it were) ſet a marke vpon him, and noted him out, as the onely Sauiour. He hath lifted him vp. Now it were a diſparagement to the wiſedome of God, to call the whole world to a dependance vpon him for their ſaluation, if he were not in full and abſolute manner able to effect it. Thirdly, if we conſider the nature of that which he was to doe for mans redeeming, we ſhall ſee his power to effect it. He had two things to doe, if he would procure our ſalmation. Firſt he was to ſaue from deſtruction (which was due for the multitude of our ſinnes.) Next he was inueſt into eternall happineſſe, into which (becauſe of our ſpirituall nakedneſſe) the iuſtice of God could giue vs no admiſsion. To doe the former of theſe, he tooke vpon him our ſinnes, he bare them in his body [k], he was made ſinne [l], and, that hand-writing which was againſt vs, hee tooke out of the way [m], and vpon his croſſe triumphed [n] ouer all our ſpirituall enemies. To accompliſh the latter, hee put vpon vs his owne righteouſneſſe, that weeſo being clothed whith that White rayment [o], and with the garment of ſaluation [p], as Iacob with the apparrell of his brother Eſau [q], might obtaine the bleſsing. Thus is that fulfilled which was ſaid: God gaue his onely begotten Sonne, that whoſoeuer beleeueth in him, ſhould not periſh, but haue life euerlaſting [r]. Should not periſh, that hee did by being our Redemption [ſ]: But haue life euerlaſting, that he brought to paſſe by becomming our righteouſneſſe. Many things might eaſily be produced for this purpoſe, but theſe may ſuffice. Onely this one thing is to be noted, that the ſaluation wrought by Chriſt, as it may bee called mighty, becauſe of the preſent fulneſſe, ſo doth it deſerue the ſame name, becauſe, beeing done, nothing is able to vndoe it. Othniel deliuered the Iſraelites from Chuſhan, and is therefore called the Sauiour [t], yet they fell after? into the hand of Moab [u]. Ehud reſcued them from the Moabites [x], yet became they ſeruants to the Canaanites [y]. And a Phyſician is ſometimes a meanes of health, in one diſeaſe, yet the ſame party may after ſicken, yea and die for all that. But in this worke of redemption it is otherwiſe, it is a thorow peece of worke. He that beleeueth &c. ſhall not come into condemnation, but hath paſſed from death to life [z]. I giue my ſheepe eternall life, they ſhall neuer periſh [a] &c. Thus we ſee how Chriſt is a Horne of ſaluation: The ſaluation procured by him is plentifull, (euery way anſwerable to our ſpirituall neede) and perpetuall, no ſinne of man, no malice of hell is able to vndoe it.

The firſt vſe hereof is, to let vs ſee the wrong Popiſh religion doth to the whole myſterie of Chriſt. He is called (as we haue heard) a Horne of ſaluation, becauſe of his abſolute ſufficiencie to effect that worke of ſaluation which hee hath vndertaken. Papiſts, as though Chriſt were not ſufficient, or his horne ſtrong enough to batter downe the kingdome of the deuill, and fully and wholly to reconcile vs to God, adioyne other things, as it were to ſupply that which is wanting in him, or to perfit that which he hath begun: as for example, with his offers of grace, our free will; with the righteouſnes, our goods workes; with his ſatisfaction for eternall puniſhment, our ſatisfaction for temporall puniſhment, either here in earth, or in Purgatorie; with his interceſsion, the interceſsion of Saints. Thus they haue maimed the worke of Chriſt, and by their groſſe and vnfitting patcheries haue vtterly defaced it. Wee muſt beleeue the Scripture, which calleth Chriſt an Horne of ſaluation, that is, (as it ſeemes to be expounded by the Apoſtle) one, Who hath by himſelfe purged our ſinnes [b] that which he hath done is a worke compleate and entire; hee himſelfe onely, without any aſsiſtance, hath and doth effect it. Many things are left vnto vs by way of obedience, but nothing by way of promoting that which he hath begunne. Thus this Phraſe [a horne of ſaluation] is as an Horne of yron, to breake downe all thoſe vnwarrantable ſupplies, which the Church of Rome conioynes & couples with the abſolute and all-ſufficient worke of Chriſt.

b Heb.1.3.

Secondly, this is a doctrine full of comfort to euery humbled Chriſtian: as for example; thou feelſt weakneſſe in thy ſelfe, of vnderſtanding, of will, of affection, of action, thou art vnable to doe any thing by which God might bee pleaſed or thine owne ſoule helped forward vnto life: Turne now the eyes of thy faith to this Horne of ſaluation: thou ſhalt not finde ſo much weakneſſe in thy ſelfe, as thou ſhalt finde might and power in him; not ſo much emptines in thy ſelfe, as fulnes in him; not ſo much pouerty in thy ſelfe, as plenty in him; and happy thou if the apprehenſion of thine owne weakneſſe, make thee to long to be eſtabliſhed and vpheld by his power. Offenders were woont of olde to flie for ſuccour and ſafegard to the Hornes of the Altar [c]: ſo when thou feeleſt thy ſelfe purſued by Sathan and and euen to be arrested by the wrath of God, flie to this Horne of saluation labour to hold fast vpon it by faith: say, as Iacob did to the Angel; I will not let thee goe, except thou blesse me [d]. This is the surest couert: thou shalt be sure vnder his feathers his truth shall be thy shield and buckler [e]. Thus much touching the power of Christ for the saluation of his chosen.

Doctrine 2. The next is, that he is of absolute power for the full and finall ouerthrow and confusion of his enemies. For Christ is armed either way; he is a Horne both to defend and to strike: He is a precious stone, and is he a stone of offence [f], and euen in that, that hee is an ouerthrow to the wicked, hee is a saluation to his chosen: according to that saying of Pauls, that persecution was to the aduersaries a token of perdition, and to them which were troubled, a token of saluation [g]: and so the same Apostle saith, that by the fall of the Iewes, saluation commeth to the Gentiles [h]. And of this power we must consider necessarily: now what and how great it is, may be gathered out of the second Psalme. In the beginning of the Psalme, mention is made of the opposition of the world, and men of all sorts, against the spirituall kingdome of Christ Iesus: The Kings of the earth band themselues [i], &c. Afterwards [k] is set downe both the easinesse and the irrecouerableneſſe of there destruction. Hee is compared vnto some mighty man, hauing in his hand an yron scepter, or mace of brasse; his enemies are likened to an earthen pot. Now common sense teaching vs how easie the breaking of a Potters vessell is with a rod of yron: A knocke with an instrument of much more weakenesse were sufficient to breake it, but beeing of yron, the very weight of it alone, must needs crush it into many peeces. As the comparison sheweth the easinesse of the wickeds ouerthrow, so it maketh knowne the irrecouerableneſſe too. And therefore the breaking of a Potters vessell is vsuall in the Scripture, to signifie an vtter and irrecouerable destruction [l]. I remember what is said of Antichrist, one of Christ strongest aduersaries, that yet Christ shall easily destroy him, euen with the breath of his mouth [m]. His enemies shall licke the dust [n]: He shall wound euen Kings in the day of his wrath, and smite the head ouer diuers countries [o]. This was the stone cut without hands, seene by Nebuchadnezzar in his dreame; which smote the image vpon his feete, and brake them to peeces [p].

The vse. This is a caueat to all the wicked enemies of the grace and kingdome of Christ Iesus, they may heere see the certainty of their absolute ouerthrow. A head of glasse, against a head of brasse, what will become of it? The thistle that is in Lebanon, sent to the Ceder that is in Lebanon, said Iehoash king of Israel to Amaziah [q]. Far greater is the difference betwixt this Horne of the house of Dauid, & those presuming weaklings, which are not afraid to withstand him. To all such I say with the Apostle, Do ye prouoke the Lord to anger? are ye stronger then he [r]? But thou wilt say to me, who be these enemies of Christ, whom he thus quell, and destroy? I answer, they are his enemies, who will not that he should reigne ouer them [s]. But now doth Christ reigne? With his word: this is the scepter of his kingdom, & the rod of his mouth [t]. They that obey his word are his subiects, they that disobey are his enemies. But what is it to obey his word, to be present now and then at the preaching of it? No: For so be many sleepers, scorners, atheists, church-papists, drunkards, whoore masters, vsurers, &c. all which notwithstanding shall be shut out of the new Ierusalem [u]. But to obey the word, is, to be ruled by the word, to walke according to the rule [x] of the word. You are my friends, if ye doe whatsoeuer I command you [y]. If any man heare the word of Christ neuer so often, yet do yeeld no obedience to it, he shall haue his part among Christs enemies. So then, Christ is a horne of power to bruise his enemies. Art thou none of his subiects, dost thou not suffer his word to beare sway with thee, & to reforme thy corrupt and carnall conuersation, but liuest rather in grosse sins, to the disgrace of it, and to the reproch of the profession thereof? thou art in enemy to his Maiesty, and one of those whome he will consume with the breath of his mouth, and whom with the rod of his wrath he will breake in peeces like a potters vessell.

We are now come to the second point, the place where this Horne of salvation is raised vp; In the house of his servant Dauid. That we may make the best vse of this place, we must consider in what state Dauids house was then when Zachary endited this hymne. The house of Dauid was the stocke royall, and to his lawfull heires belonged the Crowne of Iudah; but, at this time, Dauids kingdome was decayed, the glory of it was dimmed and defaced, the gouernement and soueraigntie was fallen to strangers; the next heire, as the right of his succession was not ordinarily and vniuersally knowne, so he liued in poore estate: Ioseph was become a Carpenter. Out of this decaied family of Dauid, was this Horne of salvation raised: It did bud z out of this dead stock, euen as a root out of a dry ground [a]. Thus at once were ioyned in Christs person, nobility, and pouerty. Nobility in regard of birth (he was of Dauids stocke:) pouerty in respect of his present estate, the glory and pompe of the kingdome being quite ouerthrowne. Out of this, foure profitable points are to be obserued.

The first is: That that Christ in Whome wee beleeue, is the very same which was to come into the world, and besides whom no other is to be looked for. The Scripture had foretolde that he would be the soune of Dauid, and rise out of his stock. The Lord hath sworne in truth vnto Dauid, and he will not shrinke from it saying; Of the fruit of thy holy will I set vpon thy throne [b]. He shall set vpon the throne of Dauid [c]. I will raise vnto Dauid a righteous branch [d]. As it is cleere in the olde Testament, that the Messias should be made of the seede of Dauid according to the flesh; so the new Testament euidently shewed how the same was fulfilled in Christ for this cause the Euangelists doe labour to make manifest the discent of Ioseph and Marie from Dauid. Mathew [e] maketh it plaine, how notwithstanding the meane estate which Ioseph was fallen into, yet the right of the kingdome rested in him Luke [f] shewed how Mary was naturally descended out of Dauids loines. But Matthew and Luke ioyne in Zorobabel, and from him deriue the line both of Ioseph and Marie; of Ioseph by Abiud [g], of Marie by Rhesa [h]. So that our Sauiour, by Mary was borne of Dauid, by Ioseph was next heire to the Crowne: For although he came not of Ioseph according to the flesh, yet beeing the next of his kinne, and Ioseph being childeless, he was by the Law (of force among all the Iewes) to succeed him as his lawfull heire. This right of Christs was apparent: the Starre shewed it: Herod [k] perceiued it: Christ acknowledged it [l]: Pilate granted it [m], & the Iewes when that matter was questioned before Pilate, could not tell whom to name against Christ but Cæsar [n].

This serueth notable for the confirmation and setling of our faith in a point of the greatest moment, and in which it is dangerous to be mistaken. For what reason haue wee to relie vpon Christ for saluation, vnlesse we be assured that hee is the annointed of God, euen that very Sauiour, vpon whom wee may boldly depend? Our Sauiour tolde vs, that there shall arise false Christs [o]. how shall we bee able to discouer them, and auoide deceit by them, if wee bee not setled in this point? It is good for vs therefore to marke how the old and new Testament do herein agree, that out of the harmony of both, we may for the grounding of our faith deriue a comfortable conclusion.

The second point obserued from hence, is: That our Sauiour Christ is a person of great nobilitie, euen the noblest that euer was. For one way hee was the eternall Sonne of the most High, and an other way (as man) lineally descended from the Patriarks and renowned kings of Iudah. It is a very honourable stile which is giuen him in Scripture, far surpassing the royall stile of any earthly monarch: Wonderfull, Counseller, The mighty God, The Euerlasting Father, the prince of Peace [p]: I will make (said the Lord) my first borne higher then the kings of the earth [q]. And therefore both Kings and Iudges are willed to kisse [r] him, and to doe homage to him, and the very Angels also are commanded to worship him [s].

The vſe. This teacheth men of birth and blood, not to ſtand too much vpon their pedegrees and anceſtors, as though nobilitie ſtoode principally in this, that man is borne of man; If they effect the true nobility, they muſt labour to be the children of God by regeneration in Chriſt. This is the beſt ornament of blood: noble birth without new birth in Chriſt, is but an earthly vanity. Though a man bee able to ſhew neuer ſo glorious a line of progenitours, yet if he be not a repentant ſinner, hee is but baſe and vile in the ſight of God. To bee by faith ingraffed into Chriſt, is the true honour, this doth inueſt a man into that royalty which is in the perſon of Chriſt, and maketh him both to be an heire of the earth, and to haue a title of inheritance into heauen.

The 5. doctrine. The third obſeruation hence ſtandeth thus: That whereas Chriſt, albeit of Dauids ſtocke, and heire apparant to the Crowne, came notwithſtanding when the outward glory of the kingdome was vtterly gone, therefore The kingdome of Chriſt is no earthly kingdome. My kingdome (ſaith he himſelfe to Pilate) is not of this world [x]. Hereupon was his withdrawing, when the people ſought him to make him King [y], and his refuſall when he was requeſted, to determine a caſe of inheritance betweene two brethren [a], and his charge to his Apoſtles, not to bee as the Lord of the Gentiles [b]. It is one of the Iewes errours to thinke otherwiſe, and his Diſciples were long carried away with that conceit; for euen at the point of his aſcenſion, they propounded him a queſtion that way: Lord, wilt thou at this time reſtore the kingdome to Iſrael [c]? But Chriſt came purpoſely when the Scepter was departed from Iudah [d], to ſhew that he came to effect a ſpirituall deliuerance, and not to erect an outward ſtate.

The Vſe. This warneth vs not to affect or embrace the profeſsion of Chriſtianity, as a condition of outward greatneſſe. Our Sauiour muſt not bee followed as a great Lord, grant vs leaſes, and farmes, and good preferment in the world: theſe things muſt not be expected: We muſt follow him rather as one contemend, as the reproach of the world, as a man full of ſorrowes [e]. When Zebedeus ſonnes (dreaming of an outward ſtate) were ſuiters to Chriſt to haue ſome place of reſpect about him: Chriſt preſently (to put that conceit out of their heads) tolde them of drinking of the cup which he was to drinke off, that is, of partaking with him in his affliction; ſhewing how much they are deceiued which looke for worldly aduancement by his ſeruice. True it is, hee is able to beſtow outward honours vpon his followers, (for The earth is his, and all that therein is [g],) and he doth often alſo giue them to thoſe that feare him: But yet they muſt not be held as matters annexed to the ſtate of a Chriſtian, as though euery one that hath them, were by and by a good Chriſtian, and he which hath them not where to be reputed as no good ſeruant vnto Chriſt. For, the fatneſſe of the earth was giuen as well to Eſau as to Iacob [h], and it is poſsible for the beggar to be carried by Angells into Abrahams boſome, when the ſoule of the rich man is condemned to hell [i]. So that this is the thing we are taught, that ſeeing Chriſt, although he be a King, yet is no earthly king; therefore we betaking our ſelues to the ſeruice and profeſsion of his name, ſhould not make outward proſperity, and worldly things, the end of our hope, leſt (ſo doing) we runne into one of theſe two extreamities; eyther if wee haue it not, to grow diſcouraged, and to be weary of our profeſsion; or if we haue it, to preſume, that we are therefore highly in Gods fauour.

The 6. doctrine The fourth point noted hence is this: That outward greatneſſe is of no value for ſpirituall vſes. Chriſt was raiſed to doe this great worke, and to bee the Horne of ſaluation, out of the poore outward eſtate of Dauids houſe: Now if for the ſpirituall vſe, any outward greatneſſe had beene behoouefull, Chriſt would haue choſen a time when Dauids houſe was in the higheſt glory, and not haue come now when the honour of it lay euen in the duſt: and this was the reaſon why all things were purposely carried after a meane fashion. The place of his birth was not Ierusalem (the head citie of the kingdome) but Bethlehem: (little among the thousands of Iudah[k].) The house, not some great gentlemans place about the towne, but a common Inne; In the Inne, not the best lodging or faireſt roome, but the stable; not laid in some rich cradle, but lapped vp in clowts, and thrust into a manger. The tydings of his birth brought first, not to the Scribes and great learned men, but to few poore Sheepheards; himselfe followed not with any traine of note, but with men of the meaneſt ranke, contemned in his life, and euill entreated in his ende. k Micah 5.1.

This serueth to put downe the great, rich and mighty men of the world, who doe so pride themselues in there greatnesse, their wealth, there fulnesse, their glory, their aboundance, that without these they suppose no great thing can be effected: They trust (saith the Psalmist) in their goods, and boast themselues in the multitude of their riches; yet a man can by no meanes redeeme his brother, he cannot giue his ransome to God[l]. Our Sauiour in a poore despised estate, hath done that, which all the monarchs and politicians in the world, though they had laied all their wealth and wit together, could neuer haue brought to passe The vse. l Psal. 49.6,7.

The fourth Sermon.

Verſe 70.

As he ſpake by the mouth of his holy Prophets, which were ſince the world began, ſaying, That he would, &c.

THe euidence of this worke of mans redemption commeth now next to be ſpoken of. In which, theſe ſeuerall points muſt be handled. Firſt, that it is neceſſary for the ſtrengthening of a mans faith, to obſerue the courſe and order and agreement of the Scripture. Secondly, that from the worlds beginning God foretolde all things concerning Chriſt. Thirdly, that part which was deliuered by their mouth, was ſpoken by God. Fourthly what the ſumme is of that which they ſpake. Of theſe in their courſe.

The 1. doct. So that the firſt doctrine now, is this: That for the grounding and confirmation of Faith, it is needfull to note the order and agreement of the Scripture. For indeede, whereupon was Zacharie his faith built, but vpon the courſes of holy Writ? vpon the accompliſhment of the ancient Prophets, which he now beheld. Hee was able to ſay to himſelfe, This which I now ſee to come to paſſe, I am ſure is no other, but that which formerly hath beene foretold; as the Prophets ſpake, ſo is it now fulfilled. To this very thing Chriſt exhorteth; Search the Scriptures, they are they which teſtifie of him [m]. By this he endeuoured to ſettle his Diſciples faith: He began at Moſes, and all the Prophets, and interpreted to them in all the Scriptures, the things which were written of him [n]. This was Paules courſe for the eſtabliſhing of his hearers: He diſputed by the Scripture [o]; he ſaid no other things, then thoſe which Moſes and the Prophets did ſay ſhould come [p]. Theſe and the like ſayings we reade often, That the Scripture of the Prophets might be fulfilled [q]. This is done that the Scripture ſhould be fulfilled [r]: Thus the Scripture was fulfilled [s]; which argueth the care and purpoſe which the Spirit of God had, to ground our iudgements vpon the Scripture. So in our times when we ſee the ſame things happen, which we reade in Scripture to haue hapned; when we ſee ſuch things come to paſſe, as wee find prophecied in Scripture, it is a great comfort, and a ſpeciall ſtrengthening vnto faith. So did they to the Prophets [t], ſaith our Sauiour; ſo it was Then, ſaith Paule [u].

The Vſe This ſheweth what enemies they are to their owne faith, and comfort, who are wilfully ſtrangers in the Scripture. Thou ſaieſt, thou doſt beleeue in Chriſt, but how knoweſt thou that hee is the Chriſt in whom thou muſt beleeue, what aſſurance haſt thou, that hee is the perſon promiſed? When Sathan, or the doubtings of thine owne heart ſhall thus ſift thee, what certainty art thou able to alleadge? and what is become of thy faith, which is built vpon ſuch a weake foundation? If thou didſt dwell in an eſtate of land, of which thou couldeſt ſhew no better euidence, thou wouldeſt thinke to bee quickly ſhutte out of doores. The Lord hath preciſely ſet downe particulars, (ſuch hath beene his care to eſtabliſh our faith:) that wee might bee able to ſay (as euery Chriſtian ought;) Thus it is written, and thus I beleeue: if wee let the Scripture lie like ſome needeleſſe Hiſtorie, turning ouer (as too many doe) the cardes oftner then the leaues of the Bible: well may we talke of faith, but, that faith ſhould be where their is ſuch little experience in the rule, and life, and ground of faith (which is the Scripture) it is vnpossible. These things were written that we might beleeue x. Knowest thou not what is written, how shouldest thou then be able to beleeue ?

The second doctrine of the place is, That God from the worlds beginning foretold by Prophets all things concerning Christ. This is manifest out of the course of the place in hand, and is easily confirmed. First in generall, it is said, that vnto Christ all the Prophets giue witnesse y. Christ appealed to the Scriptures of the old Testament z, and in his discourse with the two disciples iournying to Emaus, he found in euery of the Prophets something touching himselfe a. Secondly, if any shall exactly peruse the olde Testament, he shall finde euery specialty touching Christ distinctly set downe: as namely, when hee should be borne b; where he should bee borne c, of what stocke d, of what kinde of woman e, what manner of person, both God f and Man g, how he should be entertained h, for what end hee should come i, by whom he should be betraied k, what manner of death he should die l, how he should be vsed in his execution m, where he should be buried n, how long he should abide in the graue o, that hee should rise from death p, that hee should ascend into heauen q. These, and many more circumstances then these, the Prophets from the worlds beginning did set downe very exactly: so that there was nothing befell Christ from the first moment of his conception, vntill the last period of his time here on earth, (I meane of those things which are reuealed to haue befallen him; and which befell him as our Mediatour) of which a man experienced in the Scripture might not truly say, Thus and thus it happened, as the Lord spake by his Prophets, &c. Besides the ceremonies in the Temple and Tabernacle, in the daily sacrifices and sacrificers, all of them shadowing out something or other in the Christ to come, who was the substance of euery type, and the bodie of euery representation. It is worthy any mans paines to marke and obserue how the whole mystery of Christ is lapped vp in the prophecies of the old Testament, and how the same is explaned, laid open, and vnfolded in the story and the application of the new: The pith, and marrow, and substance of both being this, Iesus Christ, yesterday, to day, and the same for euer r. The reason heereof on Gods part is twofold: First the confirmation of our faith: These things were written that we might beleeue s. Our faith by this course is strengthned after this manner: we see by this exact foretelling of the Prophets, that the whole course of our saluation is a matter framed by God, and the whole order thereof in euery part and limme set downe in his eternall wisedome and prouidence: out of which we may gather and conclude the certainty thereof, inasmuch as a plot which God hath laide, all the power of Sathan cannot alter. Secondly, many base wrongs, many vile vsages and indignities befell our Sauiour in the dayes of his flesh, the consideration whereof might make a man to doubt, whether hee could bee the Sauiour of mankinde. But when we see that euery such specialty is foretolde by the Prophets, and so, that nothing came to passe but according to Gods appointment, and that for some speciall end, that doubt is remooued, and those particulars of his debasement, become grounds of comfort and of reioycing vnto vs.

The 3. doctrine.

The third instruction standeth thus, That that which was vttered by the mouth of the Prophets, God spake: so are the words: [As he spake by the mouth, &c.] The mouth of the Prophets deliuered those things, but it was by direction and inspiration from aboue. So it is generally said of all the holy Writ: Holy men spake as they were moued by the holy Ghost [e]. All Scripture is giuen by inspiration of God [f]. In the old time God spake by the Prophets [g]. I will be with thy mouth [h], said God to Moses: I haue put my words in thy mouth, to Ieremy [i]. The word of the Lord was in my tongue, said Dauid [k]. The Holy Ghost spake by the mouth of Dauid, said Peter [l]. God doth beseech you through vs, saith Paul [m]. These places shew, that the things vttered by these men, were not of their owne deuising, but came by speciall authoritie from aboue, for the making of the best profite by this point, let vs looke a little further into it. By the foretellings of the Prophets in this place, Zachary (no doubt) vnderstandeth the olde Testament, which is therefore called, the Word of the Prophets [n], and, The Prophets [o], and, The Scriptures of the Prophets [p]. They haue Moses and the Prophets, that is, the Scriptures [q]. Now that which is heere said of the Prophets (that by their mouth God spake) is true also of those which wrote the new Testament, according to that saying, that the whole Scripture is giuen by inspiration of God [r]: and the Apostle speaking of the foundation of the Church, maketh it to be both, Prophets (the olde Testament) and Apostles [f], the new Testament: The body and frame whereof, albeit it was not all compiled by Apostles, yet the doctrine was taught and preached by the Apostles, whose vnderstanding Christ opened [t], and with whome he promised to be [u]. So that it is true of all the writers of the holy Scriptures, that God spake by their mouths. Whereupon touching the Scripture we are here taught three things.

Three things noted touching the Scripture by occasion of this 3. Doctrine.

The first is, the Maiestie of it. For how much not that needes bee full of Maiestie, and of admirable excellency, which proceeds out of the mouth of the most High? Wee see in experience, when bookes come to our hands, which containe some briefes of the orations and speeches of the King, how apt we be to carry an higher estimation of them, then of other ordinarie writings; and all is, because we measure the words by the worth and dignitie of the Author: so in the Scripture, it commeth from a God of infinite maiestie, there must needes be in it more then steps or prints of excellency. Hereupon they are called, the Great, or Stately, or Honorable things of the Law [x]. Dauid calleth them the wonders of the Law [y]. The Lawe of God seemeth to him so full of many admirable things, and the same so full of heauenly brightnesse and glorie, that his naturall eies were euen dazled therewith, therefore hee desired God to doe a cure vpon his sight, that hee may be able to beholde them; Open mine eyes, &c. It is said of Christ, that he taught as on hauing authority [z]; there was another manner of state in his words, then in the verball sermons and lectures of the Scribes: and so (whosoeuer shal obserue it) shall see a kinde of maiestie in the word of God reuealed in the Scripture, more then in any other writings.

y Psal.119.18.
z Math. 7.29.

The vse.

The vse heereof is, to admonish vs to beware of all slight, and base, and contemptuous

temptuous vsing of Gods word. That which God hath spoken must needes bee moiesticall. If the Scripture bee such an euidence of his eternall and incomprehensible Maiestie, who shall dare to vse it without respect? The Maiestie of the Scripture is drawne sundry waies into contempt: First, if it be in preaching handled negligently and irreuerently. Secondly, if the phrases and sentences of it bee drawne into common speech. Thirdly, if it bee heard idlely, carelesly, scornefully, sleepily, which is the ordinary indignity offered to the Maiesty of Gods Word. If it were but one of Esops fables, or a tale of Robin-hood, it could not bee heart with lesse respect, or with more disdaine, then it is by many. Yet, euen Eglon, though but a Heathen, was better then such; who when hee was tolde by Ehud, that he had a message to him from God, rose out of his throne [a]. When Pilate heard of hauing to doe with the Sonne of God, he trembled [b]. Well then, when the Minister addresseth himselfe to the reading, and to the opening of the Scriptures, remember we, that that which wee shall heare is the voyce of God: He speaketh by Mans mouth; let vs thinke with our selues how great Maiesty must needes be in his words; and let vs labour to make our behauiour in hearing, sutable to the state and excellency of that which is deliuered.

The 1. note touching the Scripture.

b Ioh. 19. 8.

The second note touching the Scripture, is the Authoritie of it. Is it Gods voice? Then of it selfe it is of sufficient credit, and needes no other testimony to confirme it: It is also an absolute Iudge for the ouer-ruling of all doubts, and the determining of all cases and questions in Religion. For who is higher then God? when his mouth and word hath giuen the sentence, what exception shall we make, or to whom shall wee appeale? Thus you see that hereupon is grounded the authority of the Scripture: of which authority of the Scripture you see also that there are two branches: One, that it is sufficient credit to it selfe: The other, that it is in matters of Religion the supreme Iudge. Touching the first, wee haue this proofe: I receiue not (saith Christ) the record of men [c]. His meaning is, that he was of credit enough of himselfe, and needed no testimony from any other, for the confirming of that which he had deliuered. That which is true of Christ, is true of the word of Christ, which is the Scripture: It is the voice of God, and needes no other witnesse to avow it. If we receiue (saith S. Iohn) the witnesse of men, the witnesse of God is greater [d]. There is none greater or more certaine, then the diuine testimony. This is enough, God hath spoken it; where shall wee haue a witnesse of better credit? Now for the supreme authority which the Scripture hath in iudgeing, it is the same in the Church, that the Law is in the common-wealth: To the Law (saith God) and to the testimony [e]. Christ submitted his doctrine to the decision of the Scripture [f]: So did Paul [g]. And Vmpire for matter of Religion had needs of three things. First, is must bee of that nature, that wee may bee assured that the verdit thereof is true. Secondly, it must bee such, as from which it shall not be lawfull to appeale. Thirdly, it must be indifferent, and without partiality. Now nothing hath these three properties but the Scripture, and therefore that onely is fit to be the supreme Iudge in matters of Religion.

The Vse of the 2. note touching the Scripture.

This makes first against the Papists: Their opinion is, that the Authority of the Scripture dependeth vpon the Church, that is, that it is therefore Canonicall and of diuine credit and authority, because the Church, (that is, indeede, when the matter is well sifted, the Pope *) hath so determined. This one place is sufficient to ouerthrow this fancy. The Scripture is the voyce of God: shall not the voyce of God be of credit to it selfe? must men come in for a witnesse to iustifie that vnto vs which God hath said is true? God forbid. But, how shall I know (thou wilt say) that God hath spoken this or that? I answer; What, by the Church? Thou (perhaps) wilt say so: but I demand; How shall I know, which is the Church? The Church must proone it selfe by the Scripture, and therefore the Scripture hath not its dependance vpon the Church. Yet thou doest still vrge, how thou shalt know the Scripture to be the voice of God. I answer: By it selfe: Therefore it is often called The Testimony [h]; because it beareth witnesse to it selfe. Thou shalt know it by the effects: it is mighty in operation [i], &c. it will make thy heart to burne within thee [k]. Hee that will not beleeue this witnesse, will beleeue none. It is the Churches Ministry which commends the Scripture, but it is not the Churches authority which maketh it to bee Canonicall. Another opinion of the Papists is, that the Scripture is not the absolute Iudge in matters of Religion *, but the Church, that is, by their interpretation *, sometimes, the consent of the Fathers; sometimes the decree of a generall counsell; sometimes, the verdict of the Pope *, whose faith cannot faile. They * accuse the Scripture to be obscure, imperfit, the matter of contention, and therefore vnfit to bee a Iudge. But if that bee true which is heere, That the Scripture is the voyce of God, who shall bee more fit to determine? But (thou saiest) how shall wee bee certaine of the sense? I answer: The Scripture is the interpreter of it selfe, as the Lawe of the Land is of it selfe: The Scripture is Light [l]: As wee see the light by the light, so the Scripture by it selfe. Who shall iudge what is Gods meaning but himselfe? Scripture with Scripture must bee conferred [m], and that is the way to finde the truth. Secondly, this point may bee fitly applyed to our owne occasions: there is betwixt vs and our Teachers controuersie about sundry things: These and these things are vrged and perswaded, as good and necessary: such and such things are cried out vpon, as euill and vngodly. The Preacher draweth one way by exhortation, we draw cleane contrary by our conuersation. Hee saith we must doe thus and thus; we thinke it to be more then needs: He saith this or that is a grosse sinne, and will bring vs to hell if we continue in it; we suppose there is no danger in committing it. Here is now a question, and by whom shall it be decided? If wee will haue a Iudge which is able to giue an absolute verdit, let vs appeale to the Scripture, let vs hearken what God saith; where shall we finde a more sufficient arbitratour? He is the onely Law-giuer [n] of his Church. Euery action, euery course must stand or fall at his determining. And where or whence shall wee know what his will is, but in the Scripture? The Prophets and Apostles haue written and spoken, but God spake by their mouths: I would we could be perswaded to yeeld to the Lords verdit reuealed in the Scripture: What a notable reformation of sundrie grosse euils would soone ensue? Touching those things which wee goe about to perswade, as, diligence in the worship of God, care to heare and to profit by the Word, sanctifying the Sabbath, Chastity, Sobriety, Mercy, Peaceableness, and such like; sure we are, we haue the Scripture on our sides, and men haue nothing but humor, and custome, and obstancy to oppose. If we will not yeeld to the iudgement of the Scripture now for our conuersion, we shall ere long bee forced to yeeld vnto it for our confusion.

The third thing touching the Scripture noted hence, is the Truth of it: which followeth from hence necessarily. God is the God of truth [o]. How can there bee any vntruth in that which he hath deliuered? I remember that for confirmation this doth often come in, The mouth of the Lord hath spoken [p]. Herevpon are those commendations of the word of God: The iudgements of the Lord are truth [q]; Thy word is truth [r]; The word of truth, which is the Gospel [s]. And not without cause: For there is nothing related in it as done, but it was so, as is reported, with euery circumstance: There is nothing mentioned as a matter to be done, but it shall so come to passe, as is foretold It is more easie that heauen shall passe away, then that one title of the Law should fall. [t] This is also a needefull note. It is probable, that the greatest part of men do not thinke, that there is that absolute truth and certainty in the Scripture: but that they doe suppose it rather to bee an idle tale or frightfull sound to amaze fooles, full of terrible threatnings, but yet lighter then vanity in performance. Therefore it is meete to holde this firme, that the Scripture is the voice of him who cannot lie; Euery curse written in it shall fall vpon the vnrepentant; and euery blessing promised therein, shall bee made made good to the soule of euery true beleeuer.

The fourth generall point in this part touching the Euidence of redemption is, What the Prophets spake: Where we haue to note two things: 1. The summe of that which God by the Prophets promised to doe by Christ. verse 71. 2. The inducement or reason mooving God so to doe, ver. 72,73.

Concerning the first, whereas mention is made of enemies and haters, we must inquire what and who they be. Touching their nature in generall, they are spirituall enemies, or enemies in spirituall things, or for spirituall respects [u]. The chiefe of them is Sathan; hee was the first, and is therefore stiled, A murtherer from the beginning [x], and an Old Serpent [y]: hee desireth vs to winnow vs [z], and walketh about seeking to deuoure [a]. Another enemy is sinne, a dangerous enemie, lurking in our bosome, and still labouring the ruine and ouerthrow of the soule: It fighteth against the soule [b], and lusteth against the spirit [c]. A third enemie is death, so intitled by the Apostle [d], and is therefore said to haue a Sting [e], by which it wounds the soule, and bringeth it within the compasse of eternall misery. A fourth enemy is the world; that is, wicked, vnregenerate, godlesse men. These bee the enemies and haters of Gods people. The world hateth you, saith our Sauiour to such [f]; and, In the world you shall haue affliction [g]; and, Ye shall be hated of all nations for my names sake [h]. Now let vs also see now true this is, that Christ bringeth Deliuerance from these Enemies: First, for deliuerance from Sathan, it is plaine: For this purpose appeared the Son of God, that he might loose the workes of the diuell [i]; and, God hath deliuered vs from the power of darknes [k], Christ hath spoiled the principalities and powers [l]. Secondly, for deliuerance from sinne, the words are expresse: The sting of death is sinne, &c. But thankes be to God that hath giuen vs victory, through our Lord Iesus Christ [m]. Thirdly, for deliuerance from death; Death, (saith the Apostle) is swallowed vp into victory [n]. Lastly, touching deliuerance from the world: Be of good comfort (saith our Sauiour) I haue ouercome the world [o]. Let vs proceede yet further, and enquire into the manner of this deliuerance: Concerning which, I will briefly open two things. 1. The substance and ground of the deliuerance: 2. The manner of declaring it. The ground of the deliuerance is the merit of Christs death. He was made sin [p], and so died, and in death encountred with him, Who had the power of death, the diuell [q]. By being made sin, he tooke away sinne, by dying he ouercame death: sinne being abolished, and death subdued, the kingdome of the diuell was vtterly ouerthrowne. As for the manner of declaring and manifesting this deliuerance, it is either in this life, or hereafter. In this life he deliuereth from Sathan, by restraining his rage, by limiting his malice, by not giuing vs ouer to his assaults: I haue prayed that thy faith faile not [r]. He deliuereth from sinne, by sanctifying vs by his Spirit, by killing the strength of our corruption, by transforming vs more and more into the Image of God. Sinne shall not haue dominion ouer you [s]. He deliuereth from death, by taking away the naturall feare of it, by assuring that it shall be a passage into glory. Thus Paul knew, that being loosed he should be with Christ [t]. He deliuereth from the world, by ordering the rage of euill men, by giuing constancy to maintaine and professe the truth vnto the death. To you it is giuen to suffer for his sake [u]. In the day of iudgement hee will further manifest this deliuerance; for then all teares shall bee wiped away, there shall bee no more death [x], &c. The diuell, with all his angels and wicked instruments, shall bee sent away eternally into hell. The God of peace shall treade Sathan vnder our feet shortly [y]. Many things might heere bee handled, as of the Excellencie of our redemption, farre exceeding that of Moses, Deborah, Gedeon, and others; of our securitie, who hauing so many enemies, yet take no thought to withstand them, and such like points: But the chiefe things obseruable here, is The certainely of the saluation of Gods chosen. If any thing could endanger them, and worke their ruine, it must bee one of these foure, Sathan, Sinne, Death, the World; no fift can bee thought vpon: But none of The 4. doctrine.

theſe foure can. The reaſon is; It was Gods intent, by Chriſt to deliuer them from all theſe: Thinke we that God did faile in the proſecuting his intent? did hee either not follow it, or in following it, did hee not accompliſh it? Farre be it from vs ſo to thinke. Hence commeth that boaſting vſed by the Apoſtle: *Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods choſen? Who ſhall condemne? The Vſe. This is a point of much comfort to all the godly. Sathan rageth, ſinne ſtriueth, death looketh terrible, the world oppoſeth it ſelfe: fearefull are theſe things at the firſt beholding. Looke we to Ieſus the Author and finiſher of our faith[a], the Prince of our ſaluation[b]: he hath to euery of theſe giuen their mortall wound, and they ſhall neuer preuaile againſt any of his choſen. This doctrine is health to the nauell, and marrow to the bones[c]. Yet, leſt any ſhould abuſe it, remember that one of the enemies is ſinne, and one of the deliuerances from ſinne, is from the dominion thereof. A ſlaue to ſinne, a ſeruant to his owne luſts, he which maketh a mocke of ſinne[d], he that taketh to himſelfe the liberty of groſſe euils, ſuch a one hath no right vnto this comfortable deliuerance; his condemnation (without ſpeedy repentance) is as ſure, as the ſaluation of the elect is certen.

The fifth Sermon.

Verſe 72.

That he might ſhew mercy towards our Fathers, and remember his holy Couenant.

73. And the oath which he ſware to our Father Abraham.

NOw followes the inducement or reaſon mouing God to vouchſafe this great Deliuerance: and that was, the manifeſtation and diſcouerie of two things firſt, his mercy, That he might ſhew mercy, &c. Secondly, his truth, And remember his holy Couenant, &c.

In the former of theſe, two things moſt be handled. Firſt, That the worke of Redemption by Chriſt was intended by God, as it were a ſtage, in which the fulnes and euen the riches of his mercy might be ſeene. Secondly, a queſtion, how this worke now wrought (as it were) in the worlds laſt quarter, might be ſaid to be a worke of mercy to the Fathers, who liued in the prime dayes of the world, long before Chriſt was exhibited in the fleſh. The 1. doctrine.

To manifeſt the firſt of theſe two, this firſt is in generall to be noted, that the Elect of God, which are redeemed by Chriſts precious blood, are called Veſſels of mercy[e]: becauſe in the eternall counſell of God they were choſen to this end, that the Lord might declare the riches of his glory, and that their ſaluation might bee to the praiſe of the glory of his grace[f]. The Lord intending a memorable inſtance of his vnſpeakeable mercy, choſe ſome in Chriſt, to bee redeemed from eternall ſlauery by his death. Secondly, it is worthy the obſeruing, that the whole worke of our ſaluation is called by this one word Mercy[g]. The reaſon is, becauſe to which part ſoeuer of it we caſt our eyes, we ſhall ſee more then prints and footſteps of his grace; the whole frame of it (as it were) made of mercy. If wee beginne at the foundation of all, (Gods eternall election) and paſſe downe along to the period and full point of all (the glory which ſhall be ſhewed hereafter) and aske from what roote each part did ſpring, this one, mercy, muſt be the ſumme of euery anſwer: There was mercie in chuſing; mercy in ſending Chriſt; mercy in calling vs; mercy in iuſtifying vs; and what can it be but mercy, that wee ſhall bee admitted to an Inheritance immortall and vndefiled[h]? Mercy the beginning, mercy the progreſſe, the concluſion mercy. In diſcouering hereof, the burthen of our ſong muſt ſtill be like that of the Pſalme, For his mercy endureth for euer[i]. This very ſame thing is ſhewed in that parable of the Prodigall. In the whole paſſage thereof, we ſhall ſee nothing but the fruits of exceeding mercy: He ranne and fell on his necke, he kiſſed him, hee commanded to bring forth the beſt robe, and to kill the fatte calfe,[k] &c. What was here but mercy? The ſame is true in the dealing of God the Father with thoſe to whom he is reconciled in his Sonne: Chriſt beeing for them made ſinne, feeles the edge of his iuſtice; but they, beeing made righteous through Chriſt, enioy the fulneſſe of his mercy.

This is, firſt, matter of information and of ſettlement in the truth. For heere wee ſee, againſt the Papiſts, that in the whole worke of mans redemption by Chriſt, The 1. Vſe.

* How much Papists ascribe to merit, may appeare by Mich. Bai. de Merit. oper. p. 12.

Christ, there is no footing left for humane merite *. Light and darkenesse, God and the diuell are not in a more direct line of opposition eyther to other, then Mercy and Merite: It is vnpossible that these two should admit any compe sition. It is said by Philosophers, that in lower degrees, contraries may haue some concurrence: as light and darkenesse in the twilight: But take two contrary qualities, and let one of them be in the height and full strength, their is no possibilitie of place for the other. So then, seeing in the worke of saluation, the Lord hath intended to make shew, not of some parcles (as it were) out of the very fulnesse of his Mercy, there is no more roome for Merite, then there was for Dagon before

I remember what is saide of him that went into the fielde to gather hearbs, he found a wilde Gourd, and shredde it into the pottage: But when the pottage came to be tasted, the eaters cried out, Death is in the pot m. Such cookes the Papists are: they take vpon them to make ready a potion of comfort, for a perplexed soule; but when they temper with this hearbe of Grace, the leaues of this wilde gourd of humane Merite *, which neuer grew in the Lords garden, or at least was neuer planted by him, but crept in (as a weede) by the negligence of the dressers, they haue giuen occasion to make the same cry, Death is in the pot, and with it they haue poysoned a world of soules, and haue dealt as iniuriously with the Church of God, as the Philistims did with Isaac, when they stopped and

Neither is this to bee obserued, onely because of Papists, but euen because of the common people, inasmuch as the doctrine and opinion of Merite (that is, of doing somewhat whereby to further our owne saluation) is grauen with an yron

q Ier. 17. 1. pen q, in the tables of euery naturall heart. Experience sheweth, that the sowrenesse of his Popist leauen remaineth in many: Good praiers, and good doings; meane well, and doe well: these and the like are the staues they leane vnto. It is said, that the children of the Iewes which married wiues of Ashdod, spake halfe in the speech

r Neh. 13. 24. of Ashdod r: Such is the religion of many: Talke with them of saluation, they speake halfe popishly, and halfe soundly: They will speake of mercy and grace, and seeme to magnifie and esteeme it; yet something of their own shalbe brought in too, and a man shall haue somewhat adoe before he can coniure out this diuell, and bring them to an absolute dependance vpon the freedome of Gods mercy. Remember we then the doctrine of this place: God intended the mysterie of Christ, in which to set out to the full, the vnsearchable riches of his mercy; to couple with it ought else, more or lesse, is iniuriously to darken the beauty of that which the purpose of God was to haue to be seene and beheld in whole without impeachment.

Use 2. Secondly, this doctrine is a matter of comfort. There cannot bee a matter of greater security to the soule of a Christian then to lay his whole hope vpon Gods mercy. The reason is, because the mercy of God is (as himselfe) infinite, eternall, and vnchangable. Where shall I finde a more certaine refuge? When I see a plaister as large as my sore, there is my comfort. The perplexed conscience groaning vnder the weight of sinne, and panting for grace, is the fittest Iudge in f Iob 20 11. points of this nature. Well then, let a mans bones be full of the sinne of his youth f, let x Iob 16. 2. you as Iob did vpon his friends, Miserable comforters ye are all x. He will see such weaknesse, such scantnesse, such maimednesse, such imperfection in his best performances, that hee will not dare to bring them into a reckoning before God, yea the very thought of them, will but adde affliction to his griefe. Thus will his comfort consume like a rotten thing, and as a garment that is moth-eaten [y]. But teach him to build all vpon Gods mercy, labouring that nothing of his owne may be once thought vpon in this businesse, he shall strait see such a breadth and length, depth and height [z] of comfort, which will be as colde waters to his wearie soule [a]. Thus this doctrine is a matter of instruction to ground vs in knowledge, and matter of refreshing to furnish vs with comfort. The soule of a Christian is as the Doue which went out of Noahs Arke [b]; It findes no footing but vpon the rocke of mercy; and it is but an imagination of mercy when any thing is coupled thereunto. This truth hath forced euen the greatest aduersaries to acknowledge it: according as we finde, that no meane Papist, after long labouring against the doctrine of Iustification by onely Faith, doth in the ende confesse, that yet it is the safest way to place a mans trust vpon Gods onely mercy and fauour [c].

c Bellar. lib. 5. de Iustif. c.7.

The next matter to be treated, is the question, How the Worke of Redemption wrought by Christ, can be saide to be a worke of mercy to the Fathers? For the resoluing of this question, this is to be knowne, that there is but one way of saluation to the Fathers before and vnder the Law, and to vs which haue liued since the reuelation of Christ in the flesh: Iesus Christ, yesterday, to day, the same for euer [d]. Hereupon Christ is saide to be the Lambe slaine from the beginning of the world [e]: whereof this is the meaning, that albeit he was manifested in the flesh in the latter end of the world, and not slaine before, yet all the holy men and women euen from Adam, were saued by his blood. The most persons of note vnder the Law, were types of Christ, and all their sacrifices and ceremonies tended to this one thing, to cherish in them the hope of the Messias; and to acquaint them with the whole mysterie of Redemptiō, which was wrought by his means. There is not one litle circumstance in the carriage of our saiuation by Christ, but the same was shadowed out in the ancient complements of the Law: Euen Abraham saw the day of Christ [f]. To them that liued before Christ, Christ was crucified in the Sacrifices and blood-sheddings of the Law; among vs hee is crucified [g] by the preaching of the Gospel: they beleeued on Christ to come, wee beleeue on Christ already come. Zacharie therefore doth here mention the Fathers, to teach, That the efficacie of Christs death is not restrained or limited to one point of time, but is stretched euen to the ages by-past, and that the Fathers from the beginning of the world came within the compasse of this mercy which God shewed to mankinde in Christs incarnation: An this to be true, hath bin prooued in the opening and cleering of this question: Paul said, that the Christian religion which he professed, was the hope of the promise which God made to the Fathers [h]; and Peter in his Oration made in the Synod at Ierusalem, speaking of beeleeuing to be saued through the grace of the Lord Iesus Christ, ioyneth the Fathers with them who then liued; Wee beleeue euen as they [i].

i Act.15.10,11

This is first, matter of Resolution in a needefull doubt. I am taught, if I will be saued, to beleeue onely in Christ Iesus; the ministerie of the word doth still (like Iohn Baptist) point out him vnto me, as the onely person which taketh away the sinnes of the world [k], it saith, that he is the onely way [l]; and that their is no saluation in any other [m]. It tells me moreouer, that this Christ was crucified many hundred yeares since, and that now, in respect of his body, Heauen must containe him [n], till the end of all things. But now here my faith wauereth and is in doubt, asking how his blood, which was shed so long since, can be of force for the purging and cleansing of my sinne. This scruple is taken away by considering that which is here saide: Zacharie affirmeth, that the Mercy of God in Christ, did concerne euen the Fathers, which had long before gone the way of all flesh, and which were asleepe in the dust of the earth. Now then, looke how the Fathers, so long before might haue benefit by his death to come, by the same means may we now so long after receiue comfort by his death past. By faith they beheld Christ to be offered, and are now entred into rest, by faith wee may also looke backe vpon Christ already sacrificed, and be admitted into the fellowship of eternall happinesse. The two Cherubins placed at the two ends of the Mercy-seate, had there faces one to another[o], and both vpon the Arke: so the age by-past, and the age after, looke eyther on the other, but both vpon Christ.

Vse 2. Secondly, this is matter of much contentment to a true beleeuer. For here hee may see, that be he neuer so poore, or despised, or base, though hee lie among the pots[p], or be behind the Ewes with young[q], yet he is by Christ called into the fellowship and partaking of the same saluation, which the holy Fathers and Prophets doe now enioy; Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, &c. these were worthy men, and in great account with God. How truely maiest thou say with Dauid[r], What am I, that I should enioy that mercy which God hath prepared for them? In such a manner doth our Sauiour describe the happinesse of the saued; They shall sit downe with Abraham, Izhak and Iacob in the kingdome of Heauen[s]; and it is one circumstance of the torment of the wicked: Ye shall see Abraham, Izhak and Iacob and all the Prophets in the kingdome of heauen, and your selues thrust out at doores[t]. What shall then become of vs, who neglect so great saluation[u]? who when God hath promised such glorious things[x] for vs, euen the same saluation and mercy which the chiefest of his Saints doe now enioy, yet had rather bee malicious with Cain; tyrannizing with Nimrod; profane with Esau; scoffing with Ishmael; extorters with Ahab; prowd with Iesabel; superstitious with Ieroboam; catching with Iudas; playing the belly-gods with Dines; resisting the truth with Elymas; rayling with Rabshaketh; murmuring with Core; vicious with the Sodomites; (of which persons we haue no other testimony, but that they are reserued in euerlasting chaines vnder darknes vnto the iudgment of the great day[y].) Then seeke to reigne with Abraham, Izhak, Iacob, and the Prophets. If wee desire the same happinesse, we must goe by the same way. It is impossible to haue the Pleasures of sinne[z], and the Felicity of the chosen[a] too.

The other thing which God intended to make knowne in the worke of our redemption, is his Truth [To remember his holy couenant, and the oath, &c.] Heere we must treate touching this Holy Couenant, what it is, and how it was confirmed by an Oath: and then next, how God can bee saide to be mindfull of his Couenant and Oath. As for the former, we all know the nature of a Couenant. By it here are meant those Articles of agreement which are betwixt God and man concerning life eternall. The substance of this Couenant is, I will be thy God, and thou shalt be my people. This Couenant is twofold. The one of workes, the condition whereof is perfect Obedience. The other in grace, of which the condition is Faith[b]. These two Couenants are one: they differ in manner of dispensation, the one being in types and shadowes after a more obscure manner, and called the Olde couenant: the other being more plaine and perspicuous, deliuered after a new fashion, and therefore called the New: But the summe of both, was, and is, Christ Iesus: No other foundation can be laid[c]: and it was euer a truth, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world vnto himselfe[d]. Now this Couenant is called a Holy Couenant, because it was made by a holy God, and tended vnto holinesse, both to make Christs holinesse to become ours, and to bind vs to shew forth the fruits of holinesse in our liues. Touching the confirmation of it by an Oath, (By my selfe, saith God, I haue sworne[e],) in it, briefly we must examine the qualitie of the Oath, and the reason why God sware. The qualitie of the Oath is, By himselfe. The Lord doth binde (as it were) his Godhead for the performance of that hee promiseth, as though hee should say; If this be not so, let me be God no more. Now for the other, it may be indeede doubted, why God should sweare, seeing his word is certaine in it selfe, and needeth no confirmation: but we must know, that God sware not, to winne more credit to his promise, but he did it for the better confirma-confirmation of our faith, being willing more abundantly to shew vnto vs the stablenesse of his Counsell[f]. [f] Heb.6,17.

Now for that, how God can be said to remember his couenant & oath, seeing God cannot forget, thus it must be vnderstood: The long delaying of the actuall performance of the promise touching the Messias, might giue occasion to some to thinke that God had vtterly forgotten it, and that it was but a verball promise without any purpose of accomplishment. But now (saith Zachary) hee will fulfill all to the vtmost, and by so doing make it manifest, that whatsoeuer men might suppose, yet the performance of the Couenant was euer in his minde. The sense then of the whole place is this; that whereas God had freely, and of his owne accord made a holy league with his Church, grounding the same vpon Christ, and binding it (for better assurance) with an oath, which notwithstanding because of the delaies of so many yeares, might seeme to be euen buryed in forgetfulnesse, he would now make knowne his neuer-failing faithfulnesse, and shew to the world, that nothing of all that he had said, should fall to the ground vnfulfilled.

One end of the incarnation of Christ was, that there might in it be an euidence giuen to the world, that the Lord neither could nor would be vnmindfull of his promise. Jesus Christ was a Minister of the Circumcision for the truth of God, to confirme the promises made to the fathers [g]. I will not falsifie my truth, my couenant will I not breake, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips [h]. It was a worthy resolution of the Prophet, long before Christ was borne: Thou wilt performe thy truth to Iacob, & mercy to Abraham, as thou hast sworne to our fathers in old time [i]. God cannot lie [k], nor deny himselfe [l]: Thou art the same (saith the Psalm [m]): I am the Lord, I change not [n]. This is the reason he is called Iehouah, because as he giueth being to all things, and hath his owne being from himselfe; so he makes that to be, which he hath promised.

g Rom.15. 8. h Psal.89.33, 34. i Mic. 7. 20. k Tit.1.2. l 2.Tim.2.13 m Psal.102. 27. n Mal.3.6.

Of this there is a double vse. First, here is much matter of vpholding for the faith of a Christian. God hath promised; that is much: he hath bound his promise with an oath; this is more. He hath sent his Son in the fulnes of time [o], in whom all his promises are Yea and Amen [p]. What can be more absolute? The faith which is strengthened with this threefolde cord, cannot easily bee broken. It is an old custome of the diuell to lay siege to the truth of Gods word: Yea, hath God indeed said [q]? So now, the maine point that he laboureth in, is, That God will not be so good as his word, he will forget to be mercifull, & his promise will faile for euermore [r]. To put backe this assault, remember this one instance of the manifestation of Christ: all promises had their reference to him. His birth and sufferings are left as an vndoubted pledge of the performance of whatsoeuer God hath spoken. We may say as the Apostle: Hee that gaue vs Christ, how shall he not with him giue all things also [s]? So, he that hath performed the promise concerning Christ, wherein shall he faile? He that hath kept his word in this, I will make no question of his truth in any thing. The 1. Vse.

o Gal.4.4. p 2.Cor.1.20. q Gen. 3. 1. r Psal. 77. 89. s Rom. 8. 32.

Secondly, (for a second vse) here is matter of very needfull aduertisement to vs all. Here is mention made of the couenant of God, of the oath of God, and of the certenty of both. This couenant consisteth of two parts: in the one God bindes himselfe to vs, to be our God; in the other we bind our selues to him, to be his people: I will say to them, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God [t]. His is a couenant of mercy, ours is a couenant of obedience. He promiseth happinesse, we holinesse; he glory, we duty: he hath tyed himselfe by an oath, wee haue bound our selues by the vow of Baptisme. Will he be mindfull of his couenant, and shall we forget ours? Will not he alter, and shall we faile? Will not hee trifle with vs, and shall we dally with him? God forbid. Yet this faltring in that part of the couenant which concernes vs, is a common euill. The most of our liues rather argue a resolution to breake promise, then a purpose and endeauour to performe The 2. Vse.

performe it, Blessed be thou of the Lord (said Saul to Samuel) I haue fulfilled the commandement of the Lord. But Samuel said. What meaneth then the bleating of the sheepe in mine eares, and the lowing of the oxen which I heare [u]? So, it is like enough, we will be ready to iustifie our selues: and when we are challenged for breach of promise, will be ready to say, like the gain-saying Iewes, Wherein [x] haue we trespassed? But it shall be said to vs, as it was to Saul, What meane then these and these things? If we make conscience of the couenant, what meane these grosse sinnes, which cry loud in the eares of the most High, and vnder which he is pressed, as a cart that is full of sheaues [y], swearings, whoredomes, drunkennes, oppressions, cruelties, contempt of the Word and Sacraments, and all these with an high hand [z]; many beeing growne to that extremity, that they cannot haue any shame [a]: the very triall of their countenance testifieth against them [b]? Is this our promise? Is this to be mindfull of our couenant? With what face can we lay claime to the couenant of mercy, when we shall be so manifestly conuicted to haue troden vnder our feete the couenant of obedience? How euer it be, God will keepe his word, but not of fauour, but of iustice, euen that which Moses speakes of, enough to make his two eares to tingle [c], and his belly to tremble [d] that heareth it: The Lord will not be mercifull vnto vs, but his wrath and iealousie shall smoake against vs, and euery curse that is written, shall light vpon vs, and the Lord shall put out our name from vnder heauen [e]. This is their portion which forget God, and deale falsly concerning his couenant [f]: this is the heritage that they shall haue of God for their workes [g]. Remember then, as the substance of the couenant on Gods part, so the condition on ours: he hath couenanted, so haue we: he hath sworne, so haue we also: he will not forget his part, let vs make conscience to remember ours.

The ſixth Sermon.

Verſe 74.

That he would grant vnto vs, that we being deliuered out of the hands of our enemies, ſhould ſerue him without feare, &c.

WE are now come to the laſt part of the worke of our redemption, which is the end and drift thereof; and which is alſo a branch of the couenant which God made to the Fathers, and a limme (as it were) of that good which hee promiſed to beſtow.

Touching this end, I will ſpeake firſt, generally; and then, more particularly I wil diſcuſſe thoſe things which do neceſſarily concerne that maine duty, at which God aimed in vouchſafing vs ſo great a deliuerance by Chriſt Ieſus.

The generall ſumme of this end of our redemption is, that wee beeing deliuered from our enemies, ſhould ſerue God. Concerning theſe enemies, who they are, and what is the deliuerance from them, I ſhall not neede to ſpeake; theſe things were opened in the 71. verſe. The ſenſe and generall doctrine of the place, is this; That the purpoſe of God in freeing vs from the ſpirituall bondage in which we were by nature, was, that wee ſhould euen conſecrate our ſelues to the glory, and honour, and ſeruice of himſelfe. This point is plaine in the words of this place, and eaſily to bee further manifeſted by the Scripture. Beeing made free from ſinne, ye are made the ſeruants of righteouſneſſe [h]: that is, ſeeing the Lord hath dealt thus graciouſly with you, to reſcue you by the death of Chriſt from the ſlauery of ſinne, this is that which is now expected of you, euen that you ſhould deuote your ſelues to the practiſe of righteouſneſſe, being henceforth as zealous in good ſeruices, as yee haue formerly been earneſt and eager in fulfilling your owne luſts, and in glutting your ſelues with the pleaſures of ſinne. Like to this is the reaſoning of the ſame Apoſtle elſe-where in the ſame Epiſtle: I beſeech you by the mercies of God, that you giue vp your bodies [i], &c. He perſwades vnto a godly life, by propounding vnto vs the mercies of God. Now this kinde of reaſoning were of no force, were it not for this, namely, that the drift of all Gods mercy vnto vs in Chriſt, is, the drawing and recouering of vs from the ſeruice of Sathan, vnto the obedience and ſeruice of himſelfe: Such is that ſpeech of his in another place: Ye are bought with a price, therefore glorifie God [k], &c. as if he had ſaid, God hath redeemed you, therefore it ſtandeth with equity, & it is agreeing to his purpoſe & meaning, that you ſhould ſerue him. Excellent is that place to Titus: The grace of God, &c. hath appeared, and teacheth vs, that we ſhould deny vngodlineſſe, &c. and that we ſhould liue ſoberly, &c. in this preſent world [l]. The meaning is, that the doctrine of the Goſpel (the ſumme whereof is, Redemption in and by Chriſt (is preached publikely vnto all, but not to encourage them to continue in ſinne, but to vrge them to lay aſide prophaneneſſe, and to renounce their owne luſts, and to haue their fruit in holineſſe as they hope to haue their end, eternall life. For (ſaith the Apoſtle) Chriſt gaue not himſelfe for vs, that we ſhould the more boldly giue the raines to our owne luſts, but that we ſhould be zealous of good workes [m]. To theſe wee may ioyne that of Saint Peter: Paſſe the time of your dwelling here in feare, knowing that we were redeemed not with corruptible things, &c. but with the precious blood of Chriſt [n]. There hee vſeth the

the price of redemption as a speciall motiue to a religious life, in as much also as the drift thereof was to free vs from our vaine conuersation. Many particulars of this kinde might bee heaped vp: I will conclude this enumeration of places with the saying of Dauid; Thou hast (saith he) deliuered my soule from death, and also my feet from falling, that I may walke before God in the light of the liuing [o]. Hee makes the end of all the deliuerances which God had vouchsafed him, to bee this one thing, that he might spend his daies in a sincere course in the sight of God. And indeed this is a matter of great equity. Who planteth a vineyard, & eateth not of the fruit thereof [p]? And so; who shall pay a price of Redemption for him, by whom he shall receiue no seruice? Gods we are by the right of redemption: Ye are not your owne (saith Paul [q]:) we are bought with a price for his vse, therfore all which we can doe, is to be diuerted to his glory.

q 1 Cor.6.19.

The Vse. Hereby it appeareth, that the case is not so as the most suppose: The Gospell is no doctrine of carnall liberty, as though because of the abundance of mercy, and in respect that Christ hath performed sufficient for the presenting of vs without fault in Gods sight, and for the acquiting vs from the guilt of all our sins, be they neuer so many, or so great, therefore it might be lawfull for vs to liue after our owne will, and to giue liberty to our owne inordinate affections. No: the doctrine of the Gospel tieth vs to as strict tearmes of obedience, as the law. There is not any one holy duty which in the Scripture God requireth of a Christian, from which the freedome of our being iustified by the grace of Christ, doth giue vs any colour of dispensation. For to this purpose is the saying of the Apostle, after he had largely disputed of our free iustification by Christ, and had proued that the workes of the Law are of no force to deserue saluation; Do we then (saith he) make the Law of none effect through faith? for so it might seeme to be a matter indifferent, whether we doe well or no, and that the doctrine which he had taught being true, there is no vse of the Morall Law. God forbid (answereth the Apostle) yea we establish the Law [r]. The doctrine of grace is so farre from ouerthrowing the Law, that it binds all which hope to be saued to a more strait obedience: good workes are ordained for them to walke in [s], and God hath therefore called them vnto grace, that he might be glorified by their pure conuersation. Let all profane ones consider this, all despisers of good things, swearers, Sabbath-breakers, wantons, drunkards, Libertines, &c. Such (some of them) doe pretend a faith in Christ, they will say they hope they are redeemed by him, and looke to bee saued by his death. I aske of thee, who so hopest and yet liuest in the seruice of the diuell, and in bondage to thine own lusts, what thinkest thou? Doest thou beleeue that God did therefore send Christ, or that Christ did therefore shedde his precious blood, that men might take liberty thereby to enter into all manner of excesse? Did hee therefore raise vp an horne of saluation, that vnder hope thereof men might lay iniquity to iniquity, and then salue vp all with this, I beleeue in Christ, I know mine owne workes cannot saue me? &c. God forbid, that any man should so imagine. It is plaine against the Scripture, and directly contrary to the purpose of God in the worke of mans redemption. Marke this place: God hath visited, redeemed, raised vp the horne of saluation, &c. not to establish sinne, but to dissolue sin, not to discharge vs from our obedience, but to binde vs vnto duty. Therefore, eyther be sure that thy setled resolution and purpose is, to mortifie and subdue thine owne corruption, and to sacrifice euen thy sweetest and best pleasing sinnes vnto God, and to limit thy selfe by all meanes within the compasse of Christian obedience, or else thou art one of those of whom S. Iude speakes, which art of old ordained to condemnation [t]; the benefit of redemption belongeth not to thee, thy damnation sleepeth not, and thy iudgement long agone is not farre off [u]. Thus much in generall, touching the end of our redemption, to serue God.

u 2 Pet.2.3.

Now follow the particulars appertaining to it, and they are these: 1. The party from whom the power and grace to doe this, (to wit, to serue and glorifie God) must muſt be looked for; That he would grant vs. 2. The manner of ſo doing it; without feare. 3. The time to which the performance of this duty is tyed; All the daies of our life. 4. The ſpeciall duties wherein it ſtands: holineſſe and righteouſnes. 5. The triall of the truth of theſe duties: before him. Of theſe in their courſe.

Firſt, touching the party from whom the power to ſerue God muſt bee expected: That he would grant vnto vs (ſaith Zachary.) This is a chiefe difference betwixt the Law and the Goſpel. The Law commandeth good things, but ſheweth no meanes of doing them. The Goſpel doth not onely enioyne things right, but declareth alſo, how and whence that may bee ſupplyed which is wanting in vs. Therefore Zachary doth not onely manifeſt the drift and intent of God in redeeming vs, (namely, that wee ſhould ſerue him) but doth alſo point his finger to the fountaine, and teacheth vs who it is, that will enable vs to doe it. And indeede this is a part of the Couenant of grace, That as God will expect ſervice at our hands, ſo he will make vs able to performe that acceptable ſervice which he requireth. In the handling of which doctrine, I will declare two things. 1. That in vs there is no ſuch power. 2. That God worketh it in thoſe whom hee hath choſen. The former of theſe is apparent out of the manifeſt teſtimonies of the Scripture. All the imaginations of the thoughts of mans heart are onely evil continually[x]. We are not ſufficient of our ſelues to think any thing as of our ſelues[y]. Without me you can do nothing, ſaith Chriſt[z]. Now, who can bring a cleane thing out of filthineſſe[a]? or whether can men gather grapes of thornes[b]? There is nothing but crookednesſe in our nature, and how is it poſsible that any good thing ſhould come there from? The ſecond branch, touching the ſupply from God of that which is wanting in vs, is very cleere. What man is he that feareth the Lord, him will he teach the way that he ſhall chuſe[c]; Thou ſhalt walke ſafely by the way, and thy feete ſhall not ſtumble[d]; I will cauſe you to walke in my ſtatutes[e]. Theſe places ſhew how that the Lord will furniſh his redeemed with ſuch a meaſure of grace, as that they ſhall walke in ſuch a way, and runne ſuch a courſe as ſhall bee pleaſing and acceptable to himſelfe. The order and manner of the Lords bringing this to paſſe in them, is this: Firſt, becauſe the heart is the fountaine of all out actions, therefore Gods firſt work in them, is, to put a new ſpirit into their bowels, and to take the ſtony heart out of their bodies, & to give them a heart of fleſh[f], that is, to remooue their naturall vntowardneſſe, and to make their hearts more inclinable and pliable vnto good. Secondly, hee putteth his Law in their inward parts, & writeth it there[g], he planteth them in the true ſauing knowledge, he openeth their hearts[h], making them to conceiue and vnderſtand it, he cauſeth them to loue it, and to delight in it, hee kindleth in them a deſire to practiſe it, and to walke in all holy obedience to it. Thirdly, he furniſheth them with the aſſurance of a ſecret director, a word behind them ſaying to them: this is the way, walke in it[i]; and thus he keepeth their feete[k], and guides them in the way[l]. Fourthly, he filleth them with the fruits of righteouſneſſe[m], that is, he enableth them to bring foorth that good into outward act, the knowledge whereof is ſeated in their hearts; that ſo they may not be idle nor vnfruitfull[n], but may adorne the doctrine of God their Sauiour in all things[o]. Laſtly, he doth not ſo leaue them, but the hand of his mercy is ſtill ſtretched out, to ſtabliſh them in euery word & good work[p], to confirme them & to make them perfit[q], that ſo they may hold out, & may not be weary of well doing[r], but that the yoke of Chriſt may become eaſie[ſ] vnto them, and the Chriſtian life may not ſeeme (as it doth to the wicked) burdenſome and vnſauory. Thus it is manifeſt, that ſerue the Lord of our ſelues we cannot; and withall, that God hath euen tied himſelfe by promiſe to enable his ſeruants thereunto.

you the Maiesty of God, what he is in himselfe, and what hee is to you, and so let your hearts stand in awe of him, and be you afraid to displease him. Againe, the end of our redemption is, that we should serue God without feare, saith Zacharie: This is his meaning; Whereas the face of God is naturally a terror vnto vs, euen as the face of a Iudge is to a theefe, and whereas that which we doe is so full of maimes and blemishes, that we can haue no courage to present it vnto God, nor hope that he will accept it; this is the end of our redemption, that being certainly perswaded of the fauour of God in Christ, and of remission of sinnes by him, all this fea e may be quite remooued, & we may boldly come to the throne of grace, and comfortably assure our selues, that God for Christ will accept, euen the imperfect and scant measure of our obedience. This is the true sense of the place; this is the feare, in the freedome from which standeth the true seruice of God. So that now this is the doctrine; That till the mind & conscience of a Christian be quieted and pacified by the knowledg of ones personall acquittance before God by Christ, a man cannot truly serue God, nor yeeld vnto him that obedience which he ought. This is plaine out of the place: the true manner of seruing God is Without feare, that is, without astonishment and suspense of minde how God will accept that which we do. Now this feare cannot be banished, but by the comfortable apprehension of a discharge by Christ; therefore without this comfortable apprehension, no man can serue and obey God as he ought to doe. These things are all manifest. The reason also of the doctrine is apparant thus: As often as I recount with my selfe the seuerity and Iustice of God, how that he cannot abide iniquity, and is in his wrath a consuming fire [t], and doe consider withall, how full of corruption my heart is, and how farre short the best I can do, comes of that which is required; what heart shall I haue to tender my seruice vnto him, vnlesse I be some way assured that my person is accepted in Christ, and that Gods iust displeasure is allaied towards me for his sake, so that my scant performances shall be shrouded vnder his most absolute and perfit obedience? Hence is that saying of Dauid: There is mercy with thee, that thou maiest bee feared [u]. It is the hope and apprehension of mercy which encourageth to obedience. Seeing we haue these promises (saith the Apostle) let vs cleanse our selues from all filthinesse [x], &c. See what Paul inferreth vpon the promises of mercy which God hath made. Paul saith in one place, that Whatsoeuer is not of Faith, is sinne [y], meaning that whatsoeuer is offered to God, which proceedeth not from faith, the same is a sinne. In another place he saith, that by faith our consciences haue peace with God [z]. Both the places put together doe shew thus much, that vntill the conscience bee pacified by the assurance of reconciliation with God by Christ, nothing that is done can finde acceptance with the Lord. The order of the words touching Habel, is worth the noting; The Lord had respect to Habel, and to his offring [a]: First, to Habel, then to his offring. So that till I know that God doth accept my person, I can haue no hope that he will respect my seruice.

By this it is plaine, first, that it is vnpossible for a Papist rightly to serue God, or to yeeld vnto him any true obedience. This will be thought a hard censure, especially touching those which seeme so deuout, and make so great a profession of good workes: But it is easily iustified by the doctrine of this place. God is not rightly serued vnlesse it be without feare, without that flauish awe, which ariseth out of the not knowing a mans owne particular reconciliation with God. Now it is certaine, that Papists do stifly maintaine it, that it is vnpossible for a man by an ordinary faith to be assured of Gods fauour. By the decrees of the Councell of Trent, a man must doubt of his saluation as long as hee liueth in this world [b]: so that indeed a Papist can neuer attaine any true peace of conscience by his owne doctrine: if he keepe himselfe to it, he must resolue while he liueth to be in suspense & vncertaine of Gods fauour: What a racke is this to a mans conscience, to be taught that he can neuer be sure in this world that his sinnes are pardoned, and that God is reconciled to him in Christ Iesus? What cheerefulnesse or boldnesse

b Sess. 6. Cap. 9. & Can. 13. 6.

can a man haue to serue God, when it is taught that there is no possibility for him to bee assured in his soule that God in Christ will accept his seruice, and forgiue his weaknesses? Let this be a rule to vs to iudge of Popery: it is a desperate comfortlesse doctrine. Christ came into the world to free vs from this seruile feare, and to fill our hearts with cheerefulnesse, by shewing vnto vs Gods louing countenance: Popery holdeth vs in suspence, and labours to vphold that feare which is the very direct enemy to true obedience.

The 2. Vse. Secondly, this maketh also against the common opinion, which in (this point) is the same with the Papists. The most doe talke (I know not what) of seruing God, and professe to doe it euery day: but if it be asked what ground they haue of peace with God by Christ, this will be found to be a very strange demand, and they will not know what to answer: Security they haue enough, but, what true peace of conscience is, they vnderstand not. Well may they seeme to bee without feare in regard of there common brutishnesse: but let their consciences bee touched and awaked, by some crosse, or iudgement, or by deaths approching, then this seruile feare, this dismall horror of heart will soone appeare, and it will bee a hard matter to comfort them. Know we therefore, that vntill we labour to know our owne particular reconciliation with God by Christ, & to that end reuerence the ordinance of God (the Word and Sacraments, which serue to no other vse but to apply Christ to our soules) careless we may be, frozen in our dregges we may be, benummed and senseless we may be; but true peace of conscience we can neuer haue, neither can any seruice come from vs which shall be pleasing and acceptable vnto God: vnlesse my heart can witnesse with me, that I serue and obey God cheerefully, and with a free spirit, knowing that God for Christ hath and doth accept me, and that my weake seruices shall be fauourable looked vpon, God measuring them reather by the sincerity of my affection, then by the measure of my performance, I can not say that I serue God; that which I doe, commeth from the spirit of bondage, and God esteemes it not.

The

The seauenth Sermon.

Verse 75.

All the dayes of our life, in holinesse and righteousnesse before God.

THE next point to be handled, is, the Time, to which our seruing of God without feare is limited: All the daies of our life. Heere I will handle two points. 1. That this life is the time of our seruing God. 2. That it must not be done in some part, but in all the daies of our life.

Touching the first, this is the doctrine; That the time of our liuing here in the world, is the alone time, in which those duties are to be done, which ought to be performed by vs in token of thankefulnesse to God for our redemption, and in respect of the hope which we haue of life eternall. This plainely followeth hence: for, if the question be, when and at what time the duty of seruing God (which is the end of our redemption) must be done; the answer is, it must be done in the daies of our life, while we liue here, or not at all. This is agreeing to the Scriptures in other places. While we haue time let vs doe good [c], &c. that is, while we liue here, for when that time is gone, we haue no further opportunitie. In this present world, saith the same Apostle elsewhere [d]; The time of our dwelling here, saith Peter [e]; During my life, saith Dauid [f]. I haue finished my course, said Paul, when he was neere his death [g]: He could not haue so spoken truly, if, after his departure hence, there had beene any thing further to be performed. Thus all is confined to the compasse of this present life. After death commeth the iudgement [h]: then is a time of reckoning, not of practise. Besides, death being come, the time of grace is expired, the ministry of reconciliation ceaseth; therefore now is the accepted time, beholde now the day of saluation, saith the Apostle [i]. The 1. doct.

This serueth first, to batter downe the wals of the Popes supposed purgatorie: the ground whereof is this, that there is a place for repentance after this life, and that as some, which are perfit Christians, goe directly after death to heauen, and others, which are extreamely wicked, goe straight to hell; so there are a middle kinde, who hauing not perfited their obedience in this world, nor made full satisfaction for all their sinnes, must stay by the way, in a place of torment, where the reliques of sinne must bee purged out, and the full summe of their duty made vp, before they can be admitted into heauen. This is held as an article of faith, and they are said to bee certainely damned so many as doe not beleeue it [k]. Indeede Papists haue reason to maintaine it, it is a fire which hath well heated the Popes kitchin, and the conceit and feare of it, together with an opinion that the offerings of Priests can helpe to shorten a mans time in it, hath brought them in no small reuenue: they may truly say, that by this craft they haue their goods [l]. Now the opinion is plainely confuted by this place. For whatsoeuer is required of vs, either toward God, or toward man, is to be done in the daies of our life, or neuer. The dead in the Lord, doe rest from their labours [m]: This could not be true, if they were either busied in doing good workes for the getting to heauen, or were tormented in fire. They sweare much to make good this fancie; but in vaine: sure we are, the Scripture maketh mention of two only places, for the dead [n]: neither was there in Moses law appointed any sacrifice on the behalfe of the dead. Vse 2. they neuer thinke vpon doing good vntill they die; while they liue, they rake, and catch, and extort, and oppresse: A man may as soone wring water out of a flint, as draw ought from them to a good purpose; then they grumble like Nabal, shall I q 1. Sam. 25.11 take my bread &c. and giue it to men, whom I know not whence they be q? But when they come to the knife, and die, they must leaue there goods behinde them, then (it may be) shall some drop or two be giuen to the poore, or to some good seruice. I doe not condemne it if any man by will bequeath ought to the Church or poore; this I condemne, when such things are neuer done till then: It is an argument, that that which is then done, is but a formall and extorted beneuolence.
Formall; men therein will doe as others doe: Extorted; because it is done most commonly to stop the mouth of an accusing conscience. Remember wee therefore that the obedience which we owe to God, or to man for Gods sake, reacheth it selfe to the whole life, and is not to be restrained to the last act. That knowledge which we will learne, and that good which we will doe, let vs apply it now:
It is a miserable thing when men must be catechized in principles, and must first begin to exercise charity, when they are going to appeare before God to giue account of their life.

Vse. 3. Thirdly, this doth presse a kinde of hastning in the duties of godlinesse, without delaying or putting off. For marke how the Spirit of God speaketh. Hee saith, that the life present is our only time of well doing: but how doth he define life? not by monethes or yeares, but by daies, which is also the vsuall manner of the u Psal. 90.12. vp the time of our life, that considering the shortnes of it, we may learne this wise-dome to doe that first which most concernes vs; so that if by the sudden comming of death, any thing for lacke of time be left vnperformed, it may not be that, the not doing whereof will be the vndoing of our soules. Memorable is the speech of x Gen. 27.2, 3. Isaak: Behold I am now old, and know not the day of my death, wherefore now x, &c. as if he had said; There is a thing to be done, which must be done before I die, and I know that as the daies of my life are but few, so the greatest part of them are gone and past, therefore that which I intended I will hasten to doe it: so should euery Christian reason with himselfe: My time is short, my life a span, my daies not many, therefore Lord frame my heart, that whilest it is called to day I may turne to thee, and seeke thy fauour. This care is a chiefe difference betwixt the godly and the wicked: For they argue cleane contrary, Let vs eate and drinke, for to morrow

z Reu. 12.12. humour is he: He hath great wrath, knowing that he hath but a short time z.

The second point now followeth. For so Zacharie teacheth vs, that as God is to be serued in our life (which is the more generall point,) so it must be all the daies of our life. Here come to be opened two doctrines. 1. That religion is to be par-ctised euery day. 2. That it is to be practised to the end of our daies. The former of these requireth assiduity, and dailinesse; The latter perpetuity and lastingnesse.
a Psal. 145.2. I will blesse thee daily (saith Dauid) and praise thy name for euer a: That speech may be in steed of a commentary to this place. I will speake of both seuerally. The Doctrine 2. former of the two doctrines is; That a Christian man is bound by the word of God to a daily praise of religion. Euery day, and euery action of the day must be a witnes of his care to approoue himselfe in all holy conuersation vnto God. It will not be hard

hard to prooue this by the Scripture: namely, that a godly life is to be brought into euery daies practise. Wee must henceforth liue as much time as remaines in the flesh, not after the lusts of men [b]. As much time: so that no time is exempted from liuing after the wil of God. Let thy hart be in the feare of the Lord continually [c]: There is no allowance for any intermission of time, to be spent as it were a little more vainly or carelesly then other. Paul speaks of being giuen vnto euery good work continually, or of attending thereupon daily [d]. Euery good worke: there is no toleration for any sin: Euery day: there is no exemption of time. I endeauor my selfe to haue alway a cleare conscience [e]. Alway, or throughout, that is, at one time as well as at another, one time of the day as well as another. There are very few duties of religion, but the Scripture speaks of the dailines of them either by precept or example. For daily praying, besides the cõmandemẽt pray continually [f], we haue Daniels example, of three times a day; & Dauids, of seuen times a day [h]. For reading we haue the charge giuen to Iosua: Let not this book of the law depart from thee [i]. For meditatiõ, we heare Dauid: Oh how I loue thy law! it is my meditation continually [k]. For talking of good things: My tongue shall talke of thy righteousnes daily [l]. For watching ouer our owne selues: Keepe thy heart with all diligence, saith Salomon [m]. Watch in all things, saith Paul [n]: Take heed lest at any time there be in any of you an euil heart [o]. For depending vpon Gods prouidence, we are taught to aske daily bread [p]. For preparation for the crosse, there is speech of taking it vp daily [q]. For seeking to doe good to others, there is a precept to exhort one another daily [r]. These places & many like, shew that one day as well as another, is to be consecrated to God, and the duties of religion tending to Gods glory, the edification of our own soules, and the good of others, are to be performed euery day. And if it were not so, why should God be so carefull in the Scripture to giue such directiõs for euery specialty that can be incident to any day; as, apparell, meate, calling, company, speech, solitarinesse, recreation, health, sickenes, prosperity, crosses, friends, &c? whatsoeuer occasion may at any time take vp a man in any part of the day, the Scripture giueth a direction for it, because a man is bound to make conscience of the practise of religion in euery particular. Now a double reason there is for this doctrine. First, Gods compassions are renued euery morning [s], and he ladeth vs daily with benefits [t]. Now sith there is no slacking of Gods kindnes, why should there be any intermission of our duty? Secondly, Satan goeth about seeking to deuoure [u]: when a man beginneth to be a little secure, and to giue the raines a little to his owne heart, to wander after it owne waies, then taketh he his aduantage; and the soule being by some intermission of a godly care thus (as it were) let loose, doth quickly fall into his snares.

The first vse of this doctrine is, to remoone two opinions, which are common in the world touching religion: The one is, that it is an easie matter to be a Christian, a thing of no great paines to be religious; some generall desires, some superficiall good meanings, some formall shewes, some deuotion now and then by fits, some few actions of charitie; this is enough to saluation. Hence commeth our common security: Moiling and droiling there is for the world without measure: To some carnall and carking humours, the day is not long enough, the weeke is too short, euen some of Gods day must be borrowed for earthly occasions. Godlinesse is followed but at leisure times: heauen wee suppose will come of it selfe without seeking. How many daies passe ouer vs in a yeere, in which matters of the soule are not once thought vpon? But how much are we herein deceiued? religion is a taske for euery day: He that doth not make conscience euery day to looke to his Religion, to profit in his Religion, and to shew forth the fruits of his Religion, that he may comfortably at night say, he is so much neerer his iournies end to heauen, then he was at his first setting out in the morning; that mans Religion is not as it ought: and hee which thinketh to come to heauen by this idle and negligent course, shall be called the least in the kingdome of God [x]. The second opinion is, that if there be some shew of deuotion and care to serue God

x Math. 5. 19.

on the Sabbath day, then vpon other dayes men may be left free to themselues, and may take a little more liberty to bee secure. If matters of godlinesse be banished from their thoughts, and tongues, and liues, all the whole weeke long, they thinke it to be no great offence: This opinion is ouerthrowne by this place. We were redeemed to serue God euery day: Though the Sabbath be to be imployed more especially (God then vouchsafing more plentifull helpes to godlinesse) yet all euill is to bee auoided euery day, and all such good is to be done, as in our callings and liues we shall be occasioned: Endeauour we must to walke in the sanctification of our hearts, and innocency of life in other daies, as well as on the Sabbath day.

The 2. Vse. Secondly, this must be a motiue to vs euery day, euen at our first awaking, to deuote and consecrate our selues to the Lord, and to arme our selues with a holy resolution to striue against sinne: This will be a matter of no little benefit: For by this meanes God will enable vs to be blamelesse and pure, and without rebuke [y], and we shall be kept from presumptuous sins [z]. The want hereof draweth many of Gods children sometimes into great inconueniences, namely, when as, not considering the slippery path which they walke in here in the world, and being without feare of their owne frailty, they do not couenant with themselues to be very watchful, and to commit their way vnto the Lord, and to stand vpon their guard against euery sinne: We haue an example of this in Peter: Doubtlesse hee had no setled purpose to deny his Master: yet to what a case did his owne rashnesse bring him, while he did not seriously cast with himselfe what danger might arise, by the place and persons, neither yet weighed his owne weaknes, how easily he might be snared, hauing no warrant to be there. This drawes many into ill company, to swearing, drinking, gaming, &c. I will not say, that these euils in some do alwaies proceede from a purpose so to doe; but rather from the want of a purpose to withstand them, and to giue vp themselues vnto God. I would this were written in euery ones heart, that euery day must bee consecrate to God, euery day must be a holy day to a Christian though not according to our sense in respect of cessation from labour, yet in respect of watching and striuing against sinne.

z Psal. 19. 13.

The 3. Vse. Thirdly, if euery day must be giuen to God, what shall we say of those which spend so many whole daies in the seruice of Sathan? whole daies (I say) or the better part of the day, in drinking and reuelling, in sports, in pranking vp themselues, in plotting to defraud, reuenge, & eat out others: How doe these consecrate there daies to God? What religion or godlines is in these fashions? When men make euery day either for vaine pleasure, or sensuality, or Epicurisme, or worldly benefit, what is become of Gods part? Thinke vpon it: I doubt not, but the serious thinking vpon this, that God challengeth euery day, will reforme many corruptions. Thus much touching the dailinesse of seruing God. Now followeth the perpetuity.

The 3. doct. The doctrine then is this; That as we must make conscience of diligence in good duties for the present time, so we must haue a care of continuance & perseuerance also. All the daies of our life, saith Zachary; therefore the last day as well as the first. The Scripture is full in this point. Christ expounds the seede which fell into good ground, of those which bring foorth fruit with patience [a]. That onely is good fruite which is accompanied with continuance. Oftentimes we shall finde the condition of perseuerance put in. He that endureth to the ende, he shall be saued [b]. In due season we shall reape, if we faint not [c]. Be thou faithfull vnto the death and I will giue thee the crowne of life [d]. The labourers in the vineyard, none of them had wages, vnlesse he wrought vntill the euen [e]. Wee must not onely obey the call of Christ, Come to me [f], but the charge also which he giueth, Abide in me [g]. If ye continue in my word, then are ye verily my disciples [h].

of society will quickly creepe vpon vs, and those good duties, which at the first seeme pleasing, will (without great care) bee a wearines [l] vnto vs, according as we see in many. I haue knowne some, to whom the preaching of the word was more welcome then now it is; who were more carefull to vse priuate meanes to profit by it then now they are; who had a little restrained some corruptions, to which now they are carried with full streame. They looke backe vpon Sodom & they could almost be content to be in Egypt againe. Looke to it, thou which art guilty to thy selfe of thine owne backsliding: remember thou owest vnto God all thy daies: The tree planted in the Lords house bring forth fruit in their age [m]; and they which doe not so, shall be hewen down and cast into the fire [n]. It must not be in religion as in bankets, In the beginning good wine, and then after that which is worse [o]; but rather, like those of Thyatira, our workes must be more at last, then at the first [p].

The fourth generall point in this passage of speech, is, what bee the speciall duties in which this our serving of God stands: In holinesse and righteousnesse. These two words answer to the two tables of the morall law. By holines are vnderstood those duties which are owing immediately from vs vnto God; and are set downe in the foure first commandements: namely; a holy regard to the truth and maiesty of his Godhead, in the first commandement: a holy manner of worshipping him according to his will, in the second: a holy vsage of his name, in the third: a holy keeping of his Sabbath, in the fourth. By righteousnes are meant those duties which we owe to our neighbour: of all which the summe is, to giue to euery one his due: to wrong no man in his honour, or in that precedence which God hath giuen him, in the fift precept: nor in his life, in the sixt: nor in his chastity, in the seauenth: nor in his goods, in the eight: nor in his good name, in the ninth: nor to entertaine a thought which may draw to any of these breaches, in the tenth: so that now our obedience and seruice of God stands not in following our owne courses, but in making conscience to frame our selues to that which the Lord cõmends vnto vs, to be performed either to himselfe, or to others. Here is a large field to enter into, but I will abridge that plentifull matter which offereth it selfe vnto me, as much as I can. Two speciall points are here taught vs.

The first is; That true religion stands not in verball profession or in formall shewes, but in action, and in the doing of that which God requires. It is plaine here: For here particular duties are designed, in the practise whereof true religion and godlines doth consist. In the Scripture, doing & practise are still vrged. Hearken to the lawes which I teach you to do [q]: Heare the lawes, &c. that ye may take heed to obserue them [r]. Ye shall keepe all the commandements, &c. for to do them [s]. If ye know those things, blessed are ye if ye doe them [t]. Whosoeuer heareth these my words, and doth them not, shall be likened vnto a fooliſh man [u]. Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers onely [x]. If it were not so, it were nothing to be religious, it were no great thing to bee godly: To professe is nothing, to talk & speak of religion, & to make a shew is a matter soon done, the veriest Atheist may goe so farre: doing is the triall, the fruits of holinesse and righteousnesse do shew a man to be a Christian.

This maketh against those, who haue onely tipped their tongues with religion, and haue taken vpon them a name, and put on a vizard of godlinesse. Like they bee to the fig-tree which our Sauiour cursed, abounding with leaues, but without fruite [y]: the Apostle thus describeth them; they haue a shew of godlinesse, but denie the power thereof [z]. Such hearers had Ezekiel; they did come vnto him, and sit before him and heare his words, but they would not doe them [a]: and such haue we: right like him in the Gospel: he came to Christ with a question, Good Master, what ought I to doe to inherit eternall life? The same seemeth to be our desire in comming to the Congregation: well, when hee heard his taske; he was very heauy [b], and went his way doing nothing: euen so, perswade vs to any thing which is crossing to our humours, and commeth athwart our courses, we say straight, This is a hard saying, who can heare it [c]? thing, it is a matter of action. Many at the last day shall say, We haue prophecied [d], and we haue professed thy name, O Lord: but seeing they haue beene well without water, the blacke darkenesse shall be to them for euer [e]. The other doctrine collected hence, is; That in the practise of religion, their must be a ioyning together of these two, holinesse, and righteousnesse; our holy carriage towards God, & our vpright demeanour towards men. It is not said here, holines or righteousnes, as though either might serue, but holinesse and righteousnesse, both together, God hath ioyned them, and man may not seruer them. To this agreeth that of Paul; That we should liue soberly, and righteously, & godly [f], &c. These are two maine parts of the Image of God: Righteousnesse & true holinesse [g]; neither can we assure our selues that wee are truely regenerate, vnlesse we finde in our selues a concurrence of both. It is absurd to be respectiue towards men, and to neglect that duty which we owe to God: It is hypocriticall to make shew of deuotion to God, and to haue no regard how we liue in respect of men: But, to be carefull in the knowledge and seruice of God, and fruitfull in the duties of equity and euennesse amongst men, this is religion, this is the whole duty of man.

g Eph. 4.24.

The Vse. This doctrine is very necessary, because, the renting asunder of these two, holinesse and righteousnesse, is the common euill of those which make a profession of religion. Some there were, who in the outward exercises of religion are very diligent, in repairing to the congregation, in hearing, in communicating, in refraining from open misorders on the Sabbath day: but looke on them in those things which concerne men, there you shall finde them exceeding faulty: proud, disdainfull, malicious, reuengefull, cruell, oppressing, all for themselues, without respect to others: Others there are which shew a kinde of ciuility in outward fashion to the world; quiet they be and peaceable, obseruing a kinde of truth and equity in there dealings, and so gaine a name and an opinion of honest men; yet haue no regard to the exercises of piety, more then for outward forme, despise knowledge, basely esteeme the publike ministry, make no reckoning of the Sabbath. Both these sorts come short, and continuing as they are can neuer be saued. Remember then, to ioyne both together, holines towards God, righteousnes towards men: Art thou a louer to heare a man forward in the publike exercises of religion? thou doest well: see thou make conscience also of equity amongst men, els all thy deuotion is but hypocrisie. Art thou a man of ciuill fashion, that pretendest to giue euery man his owne? see thou season thy carriage to men, with knowledge and zeale in the matters of God, els thy ciuility is but formality: and both the former with his vnrighteous holines, and thou, with thine vnholy righteousnes, shall be cut off from hauing any inheritance in the kingdome of Christ, and of God.

The fift and last point, according to the order first propounded, is the triall of the truth of all these duties, in those words, before him: whereby is meant such holines and such righteousnes, which is framed, not barely to content men, but to please God: where we are taught; That if we would be religious indeed, we must not looke so much how to make a shew, and to be something in appearance and opinion before men, as how to approoue our selues by truth and sincerity of heart vnto God. Truth it is, that the opinion of men is not simply to be neglected: for it is the rule of the Apostle that we should procure things honest in the sight of all men [h]: but yet the approbation of men must not be made the rule of godlinesse, but onely the will & Maiesty of God. It was the commendation of Enoch and of Noah, that the times wherein they liued being ouerrun with lewdnesse, yet they walked with God [i], that is, they considered more what God appointed, then what most men practised, and desired more to approoue themselues by a holy carriage vnto him, then to runne to the same excesse with the multitude, though (perhaps) so to haue done, might haue been more for their outward commoditie. It was the charge giuen by God to Abraham, Walke before me [k], that is, let it still be thy care, that, seeing I am present euery where, and priuy to all thy courses, thou maiest walke as in my sight, &

make thy wayes acceptable before mee. It was the best testimony which Salomon could giue of his father Dauid, that he walked before God in truth, & righteousnes, & in vprightnes of heart with him[l]. It was Hezekiah his best comfort when he thought he should die; O Lord I haue walked before thee in truth[m]. When Iob was censured for an hypocrite (according as it is still the manner of the world, to account euery man who is more carefull in religion then themselues, to be but a dissembler,) well (saith he) my witnesse is in heauen, and my record is on high[n]; you giue your verdit of me as you please, but I am knowne vnto God: I haue walked with him, and I doe rest satisfied with his approouement, which is the thing that I haue alwayes cared for. Paul speaking of the execution of his ministery, saith, that he did not handle the word of God deceitfully: as if he had said, I could easily haue taken another course in preaching, by which to haue pleased the multitude, and to haue gotten my selfe credit, but it was not the thing I looked after: But what then? to approoue my selfe to euery mans conscience in the sight of God[o]. These seuerall examples concurring with my text, doe shew that wee must care more to be religious, then to bee thought religious; and to haue more respect to the approbation of God, who seeth in secret[p], then to the opinion of men, who may be deceiued with shewes.

This doctrine doth vtterly condemne the art of seeming, which euery one (almost) hath learned in these times. The hypocrite, if hee haue Lord, Lord, in his mouth, and be busie about the outward worke, knocking & kneeling, and framing his face to a shew of deuotion: hee thinketh that hee is very religious, and careth not though God seeth him within, to haue neither any sound knowledge, nor any true loue to religion. The couetous worldling who rackes all that can be gotten, if he can set a colour to the world, that no body shall see his plots and cunning shifts, respecteth no more; albeit the Lord knoweth how his heart is set vpon the world, and hath made golde his hope[q], and will doe any thing for gaine, he feareth it not. The vncharitable person, if he can vse a few idle protestations, that he beareth no ill will, &c. perswadeth himselfe it is enough; not remembring that the Lord beholdes his thoughts, and is priuy to his desires to worke mischiefe. The close slanderer, if he can vnder hand raise vp an ill report, that the party wronged may not know he did it, is safe in his owne conceit; howbeit God knoweth that his tongue is like a sharpe razor, which cutteth deceitfully[r]. The euill disposed, who are in houses of misorder when others are at Church, if the doores be shut, and no noise bee made, and officers know it not, they doubt not but to auoid Gods beholding well enough. The whorish woman, if shee can hide her sinne in any sort, so that none can prooue it directly against her, standeth vpon termes of honesty, and is not afraid of Gods presence, from whom nothing can be kept secret: shee wipeth her mouth (saith Salomon,) and saith I haue not committed iniquity[s]. Thus the care of the most is to keepe credit with men; if it be well with vs before men, we care little how the case standeth betwixt vs and the Lord. This will not serue the turne when all things come to receiue their due triall: then the vizard will bee plucked off from euery hypocrite; then shall many a man be approoued, whose course the world now condemneth for folly; and many that now carry a face and beare out matters with a shew, will be found dissemblers, and the lot of hypocrites will bee their portion. Let this perswade vs to affect sincerity and singlenesse of heart, and alwaies to make it our care, more to regard the acceptance with God, then the account and opinion of men. It is a speciall point of godlinesse, and hee hath well profited in religion, that hath well learned this lesson, and this one thing which I shall name vnto you, is the best triall of it; when a man is the same alone and in company; that is, when as that sinne, that euill course which a man knoweth hee would not enter into, in the presence, and sight, and knowledge of men, the same he doth forbeare when hee is by himselfe, and hath many aduantages and opportunities safely and secretly to practise it. To forbeare to doe euill when men are by to beholde it, is nothing, the veriest hypocrite and reprobate in the world may

doe it: but closely and secretly to abstaine, and when one hath many inticements to it, yet euen for Gods sake, and for lothnesse to displease him, to forbeare, that is a thing which none but a good man indeede, a childe of God can come vnto. To make shewes of holinesse and deuotion in a Church, there to looke ciuilly, and in praying to vse signes of great earnestnesse and affection, is no great matter, it is not of any value to build vpon, for an hypocrite may come so farre: But in a priuate corner, in ones Chamber (as Christ saith [t],) apart from the world, where no man can heare or vnderstand, or take notice of it; there to powre out ones soule before the Lord [u], to cast downe himselfe in humility, and to make many sighes and teares, to be the messengers of the hearts desire vnto God; this is an euidence of sincerity, this is done before God, and is without hypocrisie. So then, this is a sure rule to try our selues by, if that which we would be thought to be before men, we trauell with our hearts, and striue to be indeede, when none can take notice of our courses, in regard of the secrecie of them, but the Lord. Hee that maketh conscience of it, to be as honest and as vprightly behaued in the greatest priuacie and solitarinesse, as he would be if all the world beheld him, and could see into his very thoughts, that man may be said indeede to be religious.

The matter I am ſure is not vnworthy of you: As for the forme, you ſhal find it to ſort with my cuſtomary courſe of preaching, which what it hath beene, your ſelfe doth know as well as any. I haue neuer affected any other eloquence, then that of the Scripture, ſo much magnified by* S. SAM. HIERON.

The second part of the Abridgement of the Gospel.

The first Sermon.

Verse 76. And thou babe shalt bee called the Prophet of the most High: for thou shalt goe before the face of the Lord to prepare his waies.

Verse 77. And, to giue knowledge of saluation vnto the people, &c.

THis is the beginning of the second part of this Hymne. The summe of it is a description of the office of Iohn Baptist, which yet is so carried, as that in this part also, the mysterie of Christ, and of saluation wrought by him, is open very exactly. The 2. part of the Hymne.

My Methode shall be this; to let you see, how each branch of these verses dependeth vpon other, as it were so many linkes enchained either to other. First of all Zacharie directeth his speech to the Infant (present, in my opinion) and pronounceth of him, that he shall be called the Prophet of the most High: It it be asked why he shall be so stiled? it is answered Because he shall goe before the face of the Lord to prepare his waies. If we would know what it is, to prepare the Lords waies, he saith it is, to giue knowledge of saluation to the people. If wee demand wherein this saluation stands, he addeth, that it stands in the remission of sinnes. If we enquire further, out of what fountaine this saluation, standing in the remission of sinnes, hath flowed; he telleth vs, that is come from the tender mercy of our God. If we would be informed what is the especiall fruit of this Mercy of our God, hee setteth it downe thus, that by it is come to passe, that the day-spring from an high hath visited vs. If lastly the question be, to what speciall end this Day-spring hath appeared, he shutteth vp all with the sweet and gracious conclusion; that the end is, To giue light to them that sit in darknesse, and in the shadow of death, and to guide our feete into the way of peace. This is the order of this whole place. I will prosecute euery branch in the same order and manner in which it lyeth. The order of the whole place to the end.

And first of the title, to bee giuen to Iohn Baptist, Thou Babe shalt be called the Prophet of the most high. The meaning of which speech is, that all men should take notice of Iohn, and acknowledge him to be a Prophet of God, called from aboue, and appointed by speciall deputation for the seruice of the Church. The verification of which foretelling we reade in the storie: The multitude counted Iohn as a Prophet [x]. All hold Iohn as a Prophet [y]. But here may arise a doubt. Iohn himselfe being demanded whether he were the Prophet, answered no [z]. The answer is easie, thus. It was the errour of the Iewes, that before the Messias there should come a speciall Prophet, besides him that was spoken of, by the name of Elias. So it appeareth by that the multitude said on a time touching Christ: This is of a truth the Prophet that should come into the world [a], and in another place: Of a truth this is the Prophet [b]. This error of theirs arose out of the words of Moses: The Lord thy God will raise vp vnto thee a Prophet like vnto mee from among you [c]. Iohn therefore denieth himselfe to be a Prophet in that sense; hee was no such Prophet as they looked for. This is the sense.

c Deut. 18. 15.

Now the doctrine is this; That it is an estate of preferment and credit, for a man to be deputed to the calling and office of a Prophet and Minister in the Church of God. Marke how this ariseth out of this place. Zacharie directeth his speech to Iohn: Hee was The 1. doct.

now at the time of the speaking of these words an Infant, there was not then any great matter of outward circumstance in him to be taken notice of: yet notwithstanding (quoth Zacharie) euen thou O babe, little though thou now be, wrawling in thy cradle, and wrapt vp in clouts, shalt in time obtaine this honour, to be reputed and called a Prophet of the most High, a Preacher appointed by him to publish the doctrine of saluation to the world. Thus the manner of speaking, Now thou art but a silly babe, yet thou shalt liue to beare the title of one of Gods Prophets, serueth to iustifie this doctrine. There is nothing more effectuall to the cleering of this point, then to consider the matter and busines about which euery true Minister of God is emploied; which is not base or vulgar, but of as great weight and worth as may be: It is to giue knowledge of saluation, to publish peace [d], to declare to a man his righteousnesse [e], to saue them that beleeue [f], to pray men in Christs stead to be reconciled to God [g], to gather together the Saints [h], to be Gods mouth to the people in preaching to them from God, and to be the peoples mouth againe in praying for them to God [i]. These are no base things, no vile seruices, no meane employments, to treate betwixt the Lord and his Church of no worse matter then the glory of the one and the saluation of the other. Many things might easily be heaped vp to this purpose, but I will satisfie my selfe with this, and proceed to the vses of this point, which are three.

The 1. Vse. The first is an admonition to those who haue by their place to doe in the electing and ordaining of Ministers for seuerall congregations; They must remember the charge, Lay hands suddenly on no man [k]. The calling is honourable, and therefore not for euery one hand ouer head to be admitted into. It is not meete that the passage into the Ministry should lye open for whomsoeuer: Who would might consecrate himselfe [l], it was one of the euils of Ieroboams time: It will lay the beauty of the calling in the dust, and make the world full of such wandring Lenites, as the young man of Bethlehem Iudah, whom Micah hired for ten shekels of siluer by the yeare, and a iute of apparell, and meate and drinke [m], which will be ready to serue the turne of euery Church-spoiling patron, and to be at his deuotion, for a piece of siluer and a morsell of bread [n].

n 1. Sam. 2. 36

The 2. Vse. The second vse, is an aduertisement to all that are entred into that function to take diligent heede, that they doe nothing that may disgrace so honourable a calling. A Minister is tyed to watchfulnesse by a double bond; First, as he is a Christian, then as hee is a Minister: Whosoeuer of Aarons seed had any blemish in him should not presse to offer before God [o]. Many things might be pardoned to others, which in vs will seeme intolerable. If the salt hath lost his sauour, it is thenceforth good for nothing [p]. God grant that the eminency and dignity of our calling may beget in vs a steady care to doe nothing which may bring it into disgrace.

p Math. 5. 13.

The 3. Vse. Thirdly (for a third vse), this maketh against the contempt, which is generally cast vpon the ministry. Many scorne it in themselues, accounting it a base thing for them or their children to consecrate their life to the ministry of the Gospel. A cluster of the ciuill or common law, is better (in their seeming) then a whole vintage of Diuinity. It is Pauls rule, that we should be had in singular loue for our workes sake [q]. In the world it is otherwise, hated we be for our workes sake, and despised for our profession sake; It is the common Theme of many being in their cups, or otherwise want of matter to discourse of, to open their mouthes against the ministry. Be it so that some deserue ill enough: yet when men take a pleasure in these kinds of inueying, and seeke out of the misbehauiour of some to colle & conclusions against all, it argueth that they speake not out of the hatred of euill, but out of enmity to the calling, thinking that they haue quit themselues well, if they can bring that into disgrace. Well, touching those which are faithfull and make conscience to feed the people with knowledge and vnderstanding [r] this I say, and yet not I but the Lord; Let a man so thinke of them as of the Ministers of Iesus Christ, and disposers of the secrets of God [s]. The contempt reacheth high: Hee that despiseth you despiseth me [t]. It was Iohns honour, to bee called a Prophet of the most high, why should it be any mans debasement to serue the same master, in the same businesse? Thus farre touching the first branch. t Luk. 10. 17.

The second branch is the reason why Iohn should bee stiled A Prophet, &c. Thou shalt goe before the face of the Lord to prepare his waies. This is a true description of a Prophet or Minister; although in it something there was peculiar to Iohn; notwithstanding true it is of all Prophets and Ministers, that they goe before Christ, The Prophets of old went before Christ to be borne, and they all bore witnesse of him, that through his name all that beleeue in him, shall receiue remission of sinnes [u]. The Ministers since Christ borne, goe before in respect of his second comming to iudgement, to giue warning of it, and to make men ready for it. Iohn went more immediately before Christs face, because hee was the very next Prophet before him, and liued to see him in his body, and with his finger to point to him, Behold the Lambe of God, which taketh away the sinnes of the world [x]. Now although it was peculiar to Iohn, thus immediately to goe before Christ, yet this is common to other Ministers with him, to be messengers of Christ, and to make the people readie to receiue him. Hence ariseth this doctrine; That it is the office and dutie of the true Prophets and Ministers of God, to draw Disciples vnto Christ, and to prepare the people to receiue him. No man shall deserue this name of a Prophet vnlesse he so do: Hee must professe himselfe to bee Christs seruant, and must aime at the aduancement and setting vp of his kingdome. The acknowledgement of this truth may be seene in all the Prophets ioyntly: They all gaue witnesse to Christ [y]: they all directed their course to this one thing, to beget in the peoples hearts an absolute dependance vpon onely Christ. The same did the Apostles, both while Christ yet liued (for that was their errand when they were first sent out, The kingdome of heauen is at hand [z]) and afterwards also, as may bee obserued out of their generall course [a]. Thence came the profession of Paul; We preach not our selues, but Christ Iesus our Lord [b]. For this cause also it is set downe as the marke of deceiuers to draw to themselues, to draw disciples after them [c]. Excellent is the similitude of the Apostle to shew both his owne care and euery Ministers duty: I haue (saith he) prepared you for one husband, to present you as a pure virgin vnto Christ [d]. Often in Scripture is Christ compared to an husband, and the Church to a spouse: This life is the time of wooing, the last iudgement is the mariage day [e]: Ministers are as seruants, or as the bridegroomes friends [f], to attend vpon the Church, and to treat of his spirituall mariage, and to seeke to aray and attire the people of God with the garments of saluation [g], against that solemne day, in which they must be eternally vnited vnto Christ. Thus this is the duty of all Ministers, not to seeke to set vp themselues, or to call the people to them, but to direct vnto Christ, saying, Heare you him, and your soule shall liue [h], If any man sinne, he is the Aduocate. We see the truth of this doctrine: now let vs enquire of what vse it may be. The 1. doct.

First, as it admonisheth all Ministers to set themselues to the aduancement of Christs kingdome, so doth it plainely proue the necessary vse of the publike Ministery. The Scripture maketh no mention of any other outward ordinary means to prepare vs vnto Christ. Wee cannot prepare our selues (for our hearts are wicked aboue all things [k]) and vnlesse we be prepared, Christ cannot be entertained: Wherefore looke of what necessity the presence of Christ is vnto saluation, of the same (when we speake of an ordinary course) is the Ministry of the Word: There is no saluatiō but by Christ, there is no way for Christ to enter in, vntill the word haue made vs ready to receiue him. To refuse Christ, is to reiect grace, to contemne the word preached, is to keep out Christ. Fetch we a similitude from Physicke: The learned Physitian, intending a holesome potion to his patient, first giueth him a preparatiue to fit his body to receiue it: If the preparatiue worke not, he hath small hope to do good with that which was to follow: So in this; Christ purposing saluatiō vnto vs, sendeth his Preachers before to make way for grace, The 1. Vse.

and to beget in vs a desire and expectation of mercy: If the Harbinger be reiected, if we yeeld not to the course taken to prepare vs, there is no hope of Christ, there is no likelihood of saluation. This is the cause why the Ministrie of the Word is compared to an Axe[l], because as no beame put into the building, vntill the worke-mans axe hath made it ready for the place where it must be; so no man is coupled into that spirituall frame (the body of Christ) to become the habitation of God by the Spirit[m], vntill the axe of the Word haue pared off his corruption, and by hewing him againe and againe, haue made him fit for such a heauenly seruice. Take you heed therefore, all you despisers of Gods ordinance: the preaching of the Word is a burthen vnto you, and euen a base thing in your seeming: you say of a Preacher, as the Athenian did of Paul, What will this babler say[n]? O that God might vouchsafe to open your eyes, to see the Diuels policie herein! He will yeeld to you, that, professedly to reiect Christ were dangerous: but to scoffe and repine, and murmure at the Word which you heare, he maketh you beleeue, that is nothing. Why will you suffer your selues to be beguiled? Can you receiue Christ before you be prepared? If you know your owne corruption, you will neuer thinke it: or can you (ordinarily) be prepared but by the publike Ministry? If you know and beleeue the Scripture, you will neuer imagine it. When Christ commeth, his Word goeth before; let his Word bee reiected, and he will not be entertained. Behold I stand at the doore and knocke[o]: what meaneth he by this but his Word? and therefore it there followeth: If any man heare my voyce, &c. If this knocking be not regarded, he himselfe doth neuer enter. It is in vaine to say, I loue Christ, but him which preacheth Christ I do not loue: Either such an one must prepare vs, or Christ Iesus will not dwell with vs.

o Reu.3.10.

Vse 2. Secondly, by this wee may know, whether wee haue truely profited by the Word which we haue often heard. Are our hearts made ready to receiue Christ, are we prepared to entertaine him? We are profitable schollers. Is there no fitnesse in vs for this honourable guest? we haue lost our time, and our hearing hitherto hath bin in vaine. But what is this to be prepared for Christ? for this may seeme to bee spoken somethng too generally. The Prophet Isaiah will tell vs; namely, that we are prepared for Christ; when we are Poore and of a contrite spirit, and tremble at the Word[p]. A man is then ready for Christ, when his soule thirsteth for him, and his flesh longeth greatly after him[q]; when like the woman of Canaan, he would be glad of a few crummes[r] of mercy; when with Paul he counteth all things to be losse and dung that he may winne Christ[s]; when he hath no minde of any thing so much as how hee may finde fauour with God; when his owne sinnes are euen a burden and detestation vnto him, hee euen quaketh in his owne conceit, to thinke how he should doe, if God should call him to a strait account, and proceed against him in extreamitie. Let vs proceede then: I demand of thee, which hast now so long beene a hearer of the Word preached: Is it thus with thee? Hath thy heart beene plowed vp, and rent in sunder by the power of the Word, so that now the tidings of the Gospell are musicke to thine eares, and thy spirit within thee crieth out continually, O say vnto my soule, I am thy saluation[t]? O my Sauiour, turne thy face vnto me and haue mercy vpon mee, for I am desolate and poore[u]? It is an argument that thou hast heard with profite, and mayest giue a comfortable account of thy hearing. Art thou of a dull and dead heart, not knowing out of thine owne priuate feeling what it is to long for Christ, and to thirst after his righteousnes? Surely thy hearing hitherto hath bin fruitlesse, and thou art yet in thy sins. And truely such are the most: Let the mystery of Christ, and of grace in and by him bee laid open vnto vs, neuer so exactly or comfortably, it doth not more affect them, then any of the most idle tales that can bee imagined. It is impossible, that men prepared for Christ, should, when Christ is preached, stop their eares, like the deafe Adder[x], and voluntarily breake themselues to a kinde of setled drowsinesse. Thus much of the reason, why Iohn was to be called a Prophet, where we haue ſeene what is the vſe and neceſsitie of the publike Miniſtrie.

The third branch followeth: wherein is taught, what it is, to prepare the way of the Lord; namely, to giue knowledge of ſaluation to Gods people. Now to giue knowledge, in this place, is not, to infuſe knowledge (for no mortall man can doe that) but it ſignifieth to giue notice, and to publiſh in that manner, that all may perceiue what is meant, and that, if they remaine ignorant, the fault may appeare to be their owne. This was the office of Iohn, and this hee did, as appeareth in the holy Storie [y], and for that cauſe he was called a Cryer [z]. The words thus expounded doe affoard vs three doctrines. y Math. 3.11. &c. z Math. 3.3.

The firſt is; That he who deſires to make way for Chriſt, and to draw diſciples vnto him, muſt ſtudy to be able to open the people the hid treaſure of the Scripture. Wee ſee here, that it is the Miniſters duty to prepare the way for Chriſt; now to prepare a way for Chriſt, is to giue knowledge of ſaluation: And what is that, but (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) to publiſh the ſecret of the Goſpell [a], and to lay foorth the myſterie of Chriſt in that manner, that euen the ſimple may attaine ſharpneſſe of wit; and children knowledge and diſcretion [b] thereby? A miniſter is called an Embaſſadour [c]: and much is required to the diſcharge of an Embaſſage. Hee that ſhall be therein emploied, muſt bee a man of vnderſtanding, able to treat to and fro of the affaires of his Soueraigne as occaſions ſhall be offred. The ſame is true in his ſpirituall meſſage: He that carrieth it had need to haue the tongue of the Learned [d], and it were good, that his lips did preſerue knowledge [e]; that hee may bee able to ſatisfie the doubts of thoſe which deſire certainely of information in Gods truth. This made Elihu call him one of a thouſand [f], and Paul to ſay, Who is ſufficient for theſe things [g]. Doct. 3. a Eph. 6.19. b Prou. 1.4. c 2. Cor. 5.20. d Iſay 50.4. e Mat. 2.7. f Iob 33.23. g 2 Cor. 2.16.

This may bee a good admonition to thoſe which affect this calling: that they preſſe not rawly into it: Looke vnto it: that thou haue eate the rolle [h], that thy mouth may be touched [i], and thy heart filled with the right vnderſtanding of the myſtery of Chriſt; otherwiſe thou canſt haue no hope to prepare the way for Chriſt, or to winne ſoules vnto God. The Vſe. h Eze. 3.1. i Ier. 1.9.

The ſecond doctrine from hence is; That the Miniſter deſiring to prepare ſoules for Chriſt, muſt ſo preach in that plaine and familiar ſort, as that (if it bee poſſible) the knowledge of ſaluation may from him be deriued vnto all that heare him. This is iuſtifiable by this place: For how ſhall a Miniſter be truly ſaid to giue knowledge of ſaluation, if he lap vp his ſpeech in ſuch a miſt of words, that the meaneſt and ſhalloweſt amongſt the hearers cannot vnderſtand it? Such a kinde of preaching is rightly compared to a Trumpet giuing and vncertaine ſound, at the hearing whereof no man can tell how or when to prepare himſelfe to the battell [k]: ſo if he which ſpeakes in publike, doe ſpeake in ſuch high tearmes and obſcure phraſes, that ordinarie men cannot conceiue what hee intends, how ſhall they by his preaching be ſtirred vp to any good ſeruice, how ſhall they prepare themſelues to fight againſt Satan? Hence was that worthy reſolution of Pauls; I had rather in the Church to ſpeake fiue words, &c. that I might alſo inſtruct others, then ten thouſand words in a ſtrange tongue [l]: In which place by a ſtrange tongue, may not only be vnderſtood, the ſpeaking of Latine; or French, or the like amongſt Engliſh men, but the ſpeaking of the mother tongue in ſuch a ſtrange faſhion, that it may ſeeme all one to the hearers, as if one ſpake in the moſt vnknowne language. The want of this painted eloquence brought Pauls preaching into diſgrace among the learned Grecians, whence came that phraſe; The fooliſhnes of preaching [m], yet Paul ſtill went on without excellencie of words, or the entiſing ſpeech of mans wiſedome, & affected only the plaine euidence of the ſpirit [n]: ſo that this was no ſmall comfort vnto him, that hee had preached the Goſpel after that familiar manner, that he might truly ſay, If our Goſpel be hid, it is hid vnto them that be loſt [o]. It is a fit compariſon, in which a Preacher is likened to a Nurſe [p]. Nurſes doe halfe chew the meate to the little The 4. doct. k 1. Cor. 14.8. l 1. Cor. 14 19 m 1. Cor. 1.21 n 1. ones, ones, and doe babble with them in their owne stammering and vnperfite language: so must a Peacher proportion his doctrine to his hearers capacity, and fit his tongue to their conceiuing; otherwise he shall neuer giue the knowledge of saluation but shall rather make it more obscure.

The 1. Vse. This first belongeth as a reproofe to some, who (like the olde Pharises) loued q the praise of men more then the praise of God q, soare so high, in such vncouth words, and in such an affected kinde of eloquence, that they become as Barbarians r vnto their hearers: It were al one if they preached to them in Latin or in French. Let all such remember that their office is, to bring the people to the knowlege of saluation. Now the plainer the Preacher is, the sooner shall the people bee brought to the knowledge of saluation by his meanes.

r 1.Cor.14.11.

The 2. Vse. Secondly, this discouereth the misconceit of many hearers; who, if a Preacher haue gallant words, and delightfull phrases, and interlace his sermon with other tongues, straightway admire him, as extraordinarily learned and profound. But I aske of thee, what knowledge of saluation hast thou got by such a sermon? how is thy vnderstanding holpen in the mysterie of Christ? Thou wilt say (perhaps) that hee was too deepe for thee. What good then shall he doe to thy soule, if, by hearing him, thou art brought no neerer to the knowledge of God than thou wast before? If thou wouldest heare for thy profit, pray to God to send thee such an one, which may speak to thy conscience, which may season thy heart with soundnesse of knowledge, and not tickle thy itching eares s with pleasingnesse of words.

The 3. Doct. The third doctrine from hence is; That those which are ignorant in the true way and meanes of saluation, are not yet prepared for Christ, nor fit to entertaine him The reason hereof is manifest by the text: Iohn must prepare a way for Christ, that is; he must make men ready to receiue Christ: How shall hee doe that? By labouring to bring them to the knowledge of saluation: Therefore they which are not yet come so farre, as to know what is absolutely necessary to saluation, are not come the first steppe towards Christ. It is truely said by the Apostle, that they whose cogitations are darkened, be strangers from the life of God t. Heare what Christ saith; This is life euerlasting, to know God to be the onely very God, and whom he hath sent Iesus Christ u. Knowest thou not Christ, what he is, what he hath done, how that which he hath done, may be auaileable to thy soule? Thou art not yet in the way of life eternall. This Paul begged of God for his hearers, That they might be fulfilled with knowledge of Gods will in all wisedome and spirituall vnderstanding x, that they might be able to comprehend, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the loue of Christ, y &c.

u Ioh.17.3.
y Eph.3.18,19.

The Vse. This serueth to shew the ineuitable danger of the common ignorance of the multitude. They beleeue that they shall bee saued, and yet haue no skill in the doctrine of saluation; they hope vpon Christ, and yet vnderstand not the mystery of Christ: Nay (which is worst of all) when the knowledge of saluation is offered to them, they doe with both hands put it from them, and doe aduisedly seeke to cherish and maintaine themselues in their wilfull blindnesse. Wee are not ashamed to say, What needeth this knowledge, To what end is so much teaching? Thou art laboured with from Sabboth to Sabboth, that thy heart may bee seasoned with the knowledge of saluation, and that thou maist be prepared for Christ: if thou reiect this kindnesse, surely when thou commest to Christ, to seeke fauour from him, he will say to thee: What hast thou to doe with me? depart from mee, I know thee not z: thou hast an ignorant heart, a heart hating knowledge a, I cannot brooke thee.

The

——— By the remission of their sinnes:

Verse 78. Through the tender mercy of our God, whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited vs.

THE fourth branch commeth next in place, namely, how this saluation, the knowledge whereof must be giuen to Gods people, is wrought; and that is, By the remission of sinnes. In handling this point, I am thus to proceede: First, I must teach what Remission of sinnes is. Secondly, I must proue that our saluation stands in the Remission of sinnes. Thirdly, I must apply both to our vse.

Touching the generall nature of remission of sinnes; it is an action of God, whereby for the merit of Christ he accounts sinne as no sinne, or, as if it had neuer beene committed. Hereupon it is, that when there is in Scripture speech made of forgiuenes of sinnes, such manners of speaking are vsed, which doe imply an vtter abolishment. Thou hast cast all my sinnes behinde thy backe [b]. I haue put away thy transgressions like a cloud, and thy sinnes as a mist. I will forgiue their iniquity, and remember their sinnes no more [d]. In those daies, the iniquitie of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none [e]. He will subdue our iniquities, and cast all our sins into the bottome of the sea [f]. Christ calleth it a forgiuing our debts [g], alluding to the manner of Creditors, who then forgiue debts, when they account that which is debt, as no debt, and crosse the booke. Now the foundation of this remission is, the merit of Christ. In him we haue redemption through his blood, that is, the forgiuenes of sinnes [h]. The blood of Iesus Christ cleanseth vs from all sinnes [i]. That we may fully vnderstand this point how sinnes are remitted by Christ and for him; it is to bee noted, that in sinne there are three things: The first is the crime it selfe, or the swaruing and straying from the will of God; by which God is offended. The second is, the guilt, by which the party offending is liable vnto eternall punishment. The third is, the staine or blot, which the sinne committed leaueth in the offender; by which there followeth an aptnesse or proneneſſe either to the same sinne or to any other. These three are taken away by the merit of Christ: The disobedience or crime, is taken away by his obedience. The guilt is remooued by his suffrings. The corruption hidden by his holinesse, and the very being of it daily diminished, and by the strength, power and working of his spirit: If it be demanded how this can be? I answer, it is done by imputation, by which there is a kinde of translation or putting ouer of the beleeuers sinne vnto Christ, and of Christs righteousnesse to the beleeuer. Christs obedience is accounted the obedience of the beleeuer: Christs suffrings, the suffring of the beleeuer: Christs holinesse, the holinesse of the beleeuer. And so God accounteth Christs obedience, passion and holinesse to bee the beleeuers, as much as if they were really in him, and as if hee himselfe had actually and personally performed the same. The right vnderstanding of this point is the key of Religion, and the staffe of all true comfort in Iesus Christ.

Now the second thing to bee opened (which is indeede the doctrine of the place) is; That saluation stands in the Remission of sinnes. And this is iustified by that saying of the Psalme; Blessed is the man whose wickednesse is forgiuen, and whose sinne is couered [k]. Now looke wherein stands happinesse, therein stands saluation: for what happinesse is there besides saluation? And the reason of the doctrine is apparant.

parant. Man was first cast out of Paradise for sinne; neither doth any thing hinder his returne but onely sinne: for so long as his sinnes remaine, they are as a l Psal.38.4. Weightie burden [l], to presse him downe to hell, and his wages and stipend is eternall
m Rom.6.23. Death [m]. Therefore if sinne be taken away and pardoned, God hath against him no matter of displeasure, and Christs obedience being imputed to him, heauen cannot be denied him, hee must needes be saued. This may briefly serue to make plaine this doctrine.

The Vse. The first vse of it, is to strengthen vs in a notable point, which is, that in the matter of saluation, all merit and desert of our own workes, are vtterly excluded: The ground whereof is in this place very expresse. For I demand: wherein doth that saluation stand, which must bee published by the Minister in the Church of God: Zacharie answereth, that it stands in the remission of sinnes. Now, desert and remission cannot agree: If my plea for saluation must be, the pardon of my sins, where is my merit? If I haue saluation by desert of workes, I haue it vpon right: but if I obtaine by the pardon of my sinnes, I haue it wholly vpon courtesie. This is a direct kinde of reasoning: and it is iustified by Saint Pauls course. His u Rom.3.28. maine proposition is, that a man is iustified by faith, without the workes of the law [n]. This hee prooueth (as by other reasons, so) by a testimony fetched out of the two and thirtieth Psalme. Euen as Dauid (saith hee) declareth the blessednes of the man o Rom.4.6. vnto whom God imputeth righteousnesse without workes [o]; &c. Dauid placeth happinesse in the remission of sinnes: It in remission of sinnes, what place is left for workes in this businesse? And this is the expresse doctrine of the Scripture: Eter-
p Rom.6.23. nall is the gift of God [p]: and what is more free then gift? By grace are yee saued
q Eph.2.8,9. through faith, &c. not of works, lest any man should boast himselfe [q]. Not by the works of r Tit.3.5. righteousnes which we had done, but according to his mercy he saued vs [r]. If any workes might deserue, what more meritorious then the suffrings of Martyrs? yet the af- s Rom.8.18. flictions of this present time, are not worthy of the glory, which shall be shewed vnto vs [s]. t Rhem. Test. in Gal. 6,9. This is directly against the doctrine of Popery, which is not ashamed to maintaine, that workes are the proper cause of life euerlasting [t]. Let the Papists (if they can) reconcile and make those agree, how saluation can be grounded vpon the forgiuenesse of sinnes, and yet be ours by the dignitie of our workes. They cry out against vs in regard of this doctrine two waies. First, that life eternall and saluation are often in Scripture promised as the reward of good workes, and that therefore life eternall is of merit. I answer, that reward is twofold. First, of fauour. Seu Rom.4.4. condly, of debt. So Saint Paul himselfe doth distinguish [u]. Now life eternall, is a x Rom.6.23. reward of fauour: It is the gift of God [x]. Indeede in the matter of saluation God hath made himselfe a debter: But how? by his free promise, not by the merite of any worke. If he hath vouchsafed to promise life eternall to our obedience, it is true we may claime it as due, but not because of the excellencie of our obedience, but because of the truth and strength of the promise. Very effectuall is that y Col.3.24. phrase of the Apostle, when hee calleth life eternall, a Reward of inheritance [y]: which prooues, that God doth not giue it for Workes, as a thing by them deserued, but because we are become his children by the free grace of adoption. Secondly, they crie out, that by this meanes we destroy good Workes. I answer, that that is a meere vntruth. For we say, that none can be saued without good Workes z Eph.2.10. because God hath ordained thē that we should walk in thē [z]; we teach, that that Faith a Iam.2.26. is in vaine and dead [a], which doth not worke by loue [b]: For albeit we must be zealous in b Gal.5.6. good workes [c], not with an hope to merit thereby; yet we know and preach, that c Tit.2.14. there are sundry necessarie vses [d] of them, for which they ought not to be negd Tit.3.14. lected. So then this is the first vse of this doctrine, to establish vs in the doctrine of free iustification without workes. If I would be saued, the pardon of my sinnes, the hiding and couering of mine owne actions, in the thing which I must seeke after: therefore that warrant haue I to rely vpon my owne deseruing? This is needfull to be noted, because this errour goeth farre, and too too many doe trust to their owne deeds. If thou wouldest be saued, this must bee thy Plea: O Lord I haue sinned, euen in my best courses, I beseech thee for Christ to pardon me: and not, Lord behold this I haue done, thus I haue deserued, therfore I required thee of thy iustice to reward me.

The second vse, is matter of exhortation to euery one of vs. For beholde, our saluation stands in the remission of sinnes: Doest thou then desire to be saued? then thou must labour that thy sinnes may bee pardoned: This followeth necessarily. It is a woefull thing to looke vpon the most: They pretend an expectation and a desire of saluation; talke with them, they will say they desire it and pray for it: yet of all other things Remission of sinnes, is that which is least laboured for. If any man should with Salomon, stand in the window of his house, and looke [e] and consider the courses of men, how should hee see them employed? Some gaping after wealth, some striuing to become great, and to set their nest on hie [f], some running after vaine delights, some plotting and studying for reuenge, some drinking, some gaining, some playing the wantons, some pranking vp themselues, all of them guilty before God, of more sinnes then there bee grasse piles vpon the earth, and yet scarcely any one seriously busying himselfe about this, how his sins may be pardoned, and his iniquities couered. I we should see a malefactour guilty of many capitall trespasses, taken and imprisoned, and the day of the assise approching, and yet the same man to be secure and iocund and gamesome; would we not all condemne him for a desperate person, and say, wee wondered how hee could bee so merry, hauing so many foule matters to bee put in against him, and not knowing how to escape? yes doubtlesse. And yet euen so is the case with vs. Our sinnes are more in number then the haires of our head [g]; taken we be, and cannot hide our selues from the Lord, (for whither shall we flee from his presence [h]?) answer to particulars we cannot, to endure the triall is a thing vnpossible; for if thou, O Lord straitly markest iniquites, O Lord who shall stand [i]? and, can thine heart endure, or can thy hands be strong in the daeis that I shall haue doe with thee [k]? The very sight of the Iudge at the day of reckning will make vs say to the mountaines, Fall on vs, and to the hils, Couer vs [l]. What then shall we say of our owne selues, who for all this, sleepe vpon the elbowes of our owne security, and put these things farre from our thoughts, and neuer goe about to sue out a discharge; and to bee comfortablely secured in our consciences of Gods fauour? This security cannot bee excused; well may wee sleepe in our negligence, but our Damnation sleepeth not [m], and we shall surely perish in our careleslesse, Thou wilt say (perhaps) vnto me; You speake much of my negligence, you blame mee for not seeking the pardon of my sinnes, but you teach mee not the way by which I might obtaine this fauour. Hearken therefore, whosoeuer thou art, which desirest to bee instructed in this thing. There is none can forgiue sinnes but God; the onely person, in and by whom sinnes are pardoned, is Christ Iesus. The means of obtaining pardon from God the Father by Christ, is set downe briefly by Saint Iohn: If we acknowledge our sinnes, he is faithfull and iust to forgiue vs our sinnes [n]. Thus then thou must proceede if thou desire Remission of sinnes: First, thou must vse a diligent and serious examination of thine owne heart by the Lawe of God, to see how the case standeth with thee, and what sinnes and corruptions thou art guilty of. This the Scripture teacheth; Let vs search and try our waies [o]. Secondly, thou must in thine owne thoughts arraigne thy selfe before God, supposing that euen now the day of reckning were, and thou wert now instantly to answer before God. Thirdly, thou must put vp an accusation against thy selfe, ripping vp all thy knowne sinnes, without lessening them, without excusing them, without hiding them, without taking vpon thee to defend them: Thus did Dauid; I know mine iniquities, and my sinne is euer before me. Against thee, against thee onely haue I sinned [p], &c. Thus did Ezra; Our iniquities are increased ouer our head, and our trespasse is growne vp to heauen [q]. Fourthly, thou must goe on, to giue the sentence against thy selfe, acknowledging

Fiftly, thou must with as much earnestnesse as thou possibly canst, intreate the Lord for Christs sake to pardon thee, and neuer leaue him, till he giue this blessed answer to thy conscience, that all thy sinnes are cleane put out of his remembrance. Thus we are taught to doe; Take vnto you words, and turne to the Lord, and say vnto him, Turne away all iniquity, and receiue vs

x Psal.143.10. leade me into the land of righteousnesse [x]. This is the only way to obtaine remission of sinnes, if we would be saued, this is a thing which ought daily to bee done; wee must be euer reckning with our selues, still asciting our selues before God, still laying open our corruptions before him, still bewailing our weakenesses, still suing for mercy, still labouring that our sinnes may be shaken off, and the graces of God increased in vs. Are these strange things to our knowledge, strange to our practise, haue we neuer thought vpon taking this serious and strict and thorow course with our selues? surely our sinnes doe yet hang vpon the file in Gods high court, the bill against vs is vncancelled, and in the day of account wee cannot escape. It is my duty to giue knowledge of saluation, and to teach that our saluation stands in the remission of sinnes, and to shew you the way how this remission may y 1 Sam.12.23 be obtained. & God forbid that I should cease to shew you the good & the right way [y]. If now, when the way is thus sanded forth vnto you, you will say, as they did of a Deut. 4.26. heauen and earth to record against you, this day, that you shall shortly perish [a]. Thus much for the fourth branch.

The fift is the fountaine out of which this saluation, which stands in the remission of sinnes, doth flow, in those words, Through the tender mercy of our God. The phrase of speech heere is very effectuall. For Zacharie satisfieth not himselfe to say mercy, but he mentioneth, Bowels of mercy. It is spoken after the manner of men, to note out an exceeding tenderenesse and towardnesse of compassion, such as is, when a pitifull person his very bowels yearne and are mooued within him, to behold some wofull or distressed spectacle. So the mercy of God in this case is not ordinary, but more full of commiseration, Then any man possibly can imagine. Hence are we taught that, (which hath bin often touched in this Hymne)
The 2. doct. namely, That the supreame cause, the first root of our saluation, is the riches of Gods mercy, the tendernes of his voluntary & free cõpassion towards vs. Hence is it that the elect
b Rom.9.23. are called Vessels of mercy [b], because the whole worke of their saluatiõ, can be ascribed to no other thing but onely to mercy. Excellent is the place of the Apostle [c]; Thus and thus we were by nature, dead in trespasses & in sins, children of wrath, &c. Whence is it that we are brought into a better estate? *God, which is rich in mercy, &c. hath quickened vs, &c. our wisedome death [q], Reprobate to euery good worke [r]. What was there (thinke we) to induce God, or to encline or bend him to doe ought for vs? how must not all needs be said to flow from his free mercy? Euery spirituall man may truely say in respect of spirituall things, as Iacob did of his wealth, God hath had mercy one mee, and therefore I haue all these things [s]; or as the Church acknowledgeth; Lord thou hast wrought all our workes for vs [t];

q Rom.8.6. r Tius 1.16. s Gen.33.11. t Isay 26.12.

The vse is, still to maintaine the glory of God, and to beate downe the naturall pride and presuming of mans heart: merit and grace can neuer agree [u]: that which is by mercy is not by workes, that which is by Workes is not by mercie. And know we this, that we haue made great proceedings in godlinesse, when wee haue learned out of the due consideration of our owne spirituall weakenesse, and out of the liuely apprehension of our owne lost and desperate estate, effectually and affectionately to acknowledge, that had it not beene for the vnspeakeable riches of Gods mercy, we could neuer haue come one piece of a step towards heauen. And indeede, vntill a man is come to the effectuall acknowledgment and vnderstanding of an absolute miserie in himselfe, without any power left in himselfe, so much as by a thought to wish or further his owne true good, hee may prate of the mercy of God, but he can neuer truely and comfortably apprehend it. God is so iealous of it, that if we goe about to temper any other thing therewith more or lesse, the sweetnesse thereof is vtterly lost.

Vse. 1. u Rom. 11.6

Secondly, this may be a comfort vnto vs, that looke how much we take from our naturall humor by giuing all to Gods mercy, so much wee adde to our spirituall setledneſſe, and to make the estate of our soules so much the surer. For, if that which had the first beginning from Gods mercy, were by our endeauours to bee perfited, we might well doubt of our saluation; but when wee relie wholly vpon Gods mercy, there is no cause of feare: because the mercy of God is (as himselfe) perpetuall and vnalterable. There is nothing in vs that began it, there is nothing in vs that can alter it.

Vse. 2.

The sixt branch now followeth, touching the especiall fruits of this tender mercie of God: & that is, that therby the day spring from on high hath visited vs. Here we must enquire, 1. What the day-spring is. 2. Who is meant by it. 3. Why it is said to be from on high. First, by Day spring is meant literally, the first appearance and breaking of the day, in the East part of heauen, foretelling the neere rising and approching of the Sunne. Secondly, by Day-spring is spiritually vnderstood Christ Iesus. It seemeth that Zacharie had reference to the ancient Prophecies touching a starre that should come of Iacob [x], and of a Sunne of Righteousnesse which should arise [y]. Thirdly, it is said to be from on hie, to teach vs from whence this refreshing commeth, not from earth, not from below, not from the deuice or procurement of Man; but from Heauen, from the free grace and mercy and power of God. And it is also said to visit vs; to note out (as hath beene before obserued) our wofull extremity without Christ: inasmuch as the word (visite) doth ordinarily betoken a sicke and distressed estate in those which are visited. So that this is the sense; that by the great mercy of God, it is come to passe, that Christ Iesus, (who is the light and comfort of his Church) hath broken forth, and hath cast out his beames for the refreshing and cheering of our soules.

If this clause were to bee handled apart, many things might bee gathered thence: but treating of it now with the rest, and so, neither repeating out of it things already touched, nor yet raising from it such points as that which followeth will giue vs more full occasion to consider, these are the chiefe things to bee noted hence. First, That the comming of Christ into the world, to worke our saluation, is the principall euidence and the chiefe fruit of Gods mercy. Consider how this is raised. Zachary had spoken of the bowels of Gods mercie, that is, of the deepest measure of his grace and compassion: Now, as an instance and proofe thereof, he doth insist especially vpon this, the rising of the Sunne of Righteousnesse Christ Iesus. As if he had had said: Many wayes is the mercy of God made knowne vnto vs, the earth is full of it, but this exceeds all, that he hath enlightened the World by his Sonne, and hath visited vs with so great a saluation. To this agreeth the speech of Paul, God setteth out his loue towards vs, seeing, &c. Christ died for vs [z]. His meaning is, that in other things the mercy of God is not obscure, but the mystery of Christ is (as it were) a stage, vpon which he hath set it forth, that all men might behold in it the fulnesse thereof. In this (saith Iohn) appeared the loue of God, because he sent his only begotten Sonne into the World, &c. In this: meaning, that although it appeareth in other things, yet in this especially. The reason is plaine: It is the mercy of God, that wee liue and breathe, and enioy health and peace. In these things Gods loue is to bee seene; but what were these without Christ, according to that saying; What shall it profit a man, though he should winne the whole world, if he lose his owne soule [b]? All other comforts without an interest into Christ, doe but helpe to encrease our condemnation.

b Mat.16.26.

The Vse. This serueth to discouer our folly. Of all the mercies of God, that, of Christ is the chiefest; yet of all the rest it is least sought for. We are (the most) right of the Epicures minde, if the sides and belly be well, let the rest goe how it will Herein we are like children, who looke vpon the babies in a booke, but care not for the matter. These outward things are but toies and trifles in comparison, them wee gaze vpon, vpon them we doe euen fixe our desires. It ought not to be so, neither indeed is it so with true Christians: they are like Dauid; who when he beheld the men of his time, reioycing in their Wheat and their Wine, cried out, Lord lift vp the light of thy countenance vpon mee [c], as it were scorning all things else in respect of that. Remember we then: This is the height of Gods mercy, that he hath giuen vs Christ; let it bee the height, yea, the verie All, of our desires to enioy Christ. Of all cares, let this be our chiefe care, how we may be saued.

c Psal.4.6,7.

Doctrine 4. Another point obseruable hence is; The stablenesse and vnchangeablenesse of that worke of saluation which is wrought by Christ Iesus: It must be so, seeing it is said to be from on high; out of heauen and from God. Apply to it we may that rule of Gamaliel: If this counsell be of God, yee cannot destroy it [d]: so this thing, is frõ on hie, it hath fetched the beginning from God, therefore it cannot be frustrated. All things vnder the Moone are subiect to change, the things aboue are firme and immutable. This is Pauls reasoning touching the certainty of saluation [e]. He goeth vp on hie to the foundation of all, Gods eternall Predestination, that is vnchangeable, therfore their Iustificatiõ is firme, therefore their Glorification is certaine. Hymeneus and Philetus by their false doctrine destroied the faith of certaine (for it was not built vpõ the Rocke (but The foundation of God remaineth sure, saith the Apostle [f].

f 2.Tim 2.19.

The 1. Vse. This is, first, a great comfort to all true beleeuers: Their saluation dependeth not vpon vncertainties: he is come from on hie, which hath vndertaken it. This is an Anchor of the soule both sure and stedfast [g] Your life is hid with Christ in God [h]. The course was framed in heauen, all the strength and power of hell cannot dissolue it.

h Col.3.3.

The 2. Vse. Secondly, this (from on hie) may be a good admonition to vs, if we desire a part with Christ, to labour to pull and retire our affections from earthly things. So reasoneth Paul; If ye be risen with Christ, seeke the things which are aboue [i]. Our saluation is from on hie, and therefore we must labour to looke vpward: It was the speech of Christ: You are from beneath [k], meaning, that because they were such as did sauour onely of earthly things, therefore Religion and grace could not enter into their hearts. If we euer be like swine, muzling in the ground, and like the Mole or want, burying our selues in the earth, we make our selues vnfit for the kingdom of God. The Church hath the Moone vnder her feete [l]: Shee despiseth and setteth light by all the riches, glory, pompe, and carnall pleasures of this world: and indeede still, the higher a man laboureth to lift vp his thoughts to heauenly things, the baser will these earthly things seeme to be vnto him: as when on climeth a high tower or hill, the higher he doth mount, the lesse doth euery thing appeare which is below him.

The

The third Sermon.

Verſe 79.

To giue light to them that ſit in darkneſſe and in the ſhadow of death, and to guide our feete into the way of Peace.

WE are now come vnto the ſeauenth and laſt branch, namely, the ſpeciall end why this Day-ſpring hath appeared, which is, To giue light, &c.

The ſumme of the place is, A kindneſſe or benefit beſtowed: the part by whom it is beſtowed we haue heard of: (The Day ſpring from on hie). Now we haue here two things to bee conſidered of: 1. The ſtate and condition of the parties to whom it is giuen (they ſit in darkneſſe and in the ſhadow of death.) 2. The qualitie of the benefit, (To giue light, and, to guide into the way of peace.) The former ſheweth how miſerable we be without Chriſt: The latter, what happineſſe is offered to vs in Chriſt.

In handling the former we muſt firſt enquire the ſenſe, namely, what is meant by Darkneſſe, and what by the ſhadow of Death. The word (Darkneſſe) muſt not be taken literally, for any outward, materiall, earthly or ſenſible darkneſſe; ſuch as is when the heauens are ouerwhelmed with clouds, the Sunne ſet, the Starres hidden, and the Moone not appearing, and neither fire nor candle to bee gotten: But it muſt bee taken in a ſpirituall ſenſe, with reference to the inward parts, to the ſoule and conſcience. And being ſo taken, it betokeneth two things. 1. Want of true ſauing knowledge: 2. Want of true ſpirituall comfort. Thus Light, in Scripture is taken: firſt, for true knowledge: That the eyes of your vnderſtanding may be lightened[m]. Secondly for true comfort: Light is ſowen for the Righteous, and ioy for the vpright in heart[n]. So alſo darkneſſe, is put for contrary. Firſt, for Ignorance: Men loued darkneſſe rather then Light[o]: Hauing their cogitation darkened[p]. Secondly, for amazednеſſe and perplexitie of ſpirit: If they looke to the earth, behold darkneſſe and ſorrow[q]. Therefore hell, which is the ſeat of Horror, is called Darkneſſe. So then by thoſe which ſit in darkneſſe, are meant thoſe which lie buried in ignorance and blindneſſe, vtterly deſtitute of all true ſpirituall conſolation.

o Ion 3.10.
p Eph. 4.18.
q Iſay 5 30.
r Math. 8.12.

Now to this, there is added another clauſe, (The ſhadow of death.) A phraſe vſuall in Scripture, ſignifying an eſtate brought, as it were, within the coaſtes and borders and (as I may ſo ſpeake) within the reach of death. So that the meaning of both clauſes together is this; That thoſe to whom Chriſt hath appeared as a Sauiour, were without knowledge, without comfort, without any meanes or poſſibilitie of life eternall in themſelues. This is the ſenſe.

Heere then is ample occaſion giuen to ſpeake of our naturall eſtate without Chriſt: The miſery whereof ſtands in three things. 1. Want of true knowledge. 2. Want of true comfort. 3. Subiection and liableneſſe to death eternall. That theſe three are all true of euery naturall man, I will declare briefly.

And firſt, That euery naturall man is deſtitute of true knowledge, the Scripture ſpeaketh plainly. Paul ſaith, that naturally our Cogitations are darkned through ignorance[s]: that we are vnwiſe[t], that is, ſuch as vnderſtand not What the will of the Lord is[u]: that the Wiſedome of our fleſh is death and enmitie againſt God[x]: that wee neither perceiue, nor can know things of the ſpirit of God[y]. And of this ignorance we haue examples; as in Nicodemus, who could not tell what to make of the doctrine

[z] Iohn 3.9. [a] Acts 17.32. ...ctrine of Regeneration [z]; and in the learned Athenians, who mocked at that which Paul taught touching the Resurrection [a]. The most points of Religion seeme to flesh and blood, vnreasonable, absurd, vnlikely. Man hath no knowledge of God by nature, but onely so much as may serue to condemne him.

The 1. Vse. Wee are taught by this, first, to disclaime all opinion of freewill, that is, of power in man (of himselfe) to embrace and to entertane good when it is offered. This is certaine, that where the minde of man hath no power to conceiue, there the will hath no power to embrace. Now it is prooued here, that wee are all in [b] Eph. 5.8. darknesse; nay euen darknesse it selfe [b]. Wee are possessed with that extreame ignorance and dulnesse in the things of God, that (of our selues) we cannot vnderstand them: Therefore, as God must first enlighten our mindes, before we can conceiue any good, so he must first bend and frame and new mould our wils, before wee can truely affect, nay before wee can once encline or leane towards the same. Let the patrons of freewill see how they can reconcile these things, namely, that man should naturally lye groueling in a thicke mist of spirituall darknesse, and yet should haue power in himselfe to chuse that which is good, without speciall and particular enabling.

The 2. Vse. Secondly, this aduiseth vs, not to admit our owne sense and conceit as a Iudge in matters of Religion. The blinde (we say) is vnfit to iudge of colours, and naturall man, to determine of holy things. Hee that will beleeue nothing but that which his owne reason shall approoue, nor doe nothing more then his corrupt affection shall encline vnto, shall neuer beleeue so much as hee ought, nor practise the one halfe of that which is required. A great cause of mens disobedience in religion, is, that they consult with flesh and blood, that is, about matters of the soule, they consult with that which is the greatest enemy to the soule: The first [c] Mat. 16.24. lesson to be learned by a Christian, is, to deny himselfe [c]. It ought to satisfie thee that God hath so commanded, so spoken, so reuealed: whether it bee agreeable to reason or no, it is all one: Say with Peter, At thy word I will doe this, or I will beleeue that. Happy is he, who being priuy to his owne spirituall blindnesse, can stretch out his hand to the Lord, and say with Dauid, Teach mee, Direct my steps in thy Word: Let me not wander from thy Commandements [d].

The 3. Vse. Thirdly, wee are hereby let to see what they doe which please themselues in their ignorance. What is it, but a delighting in their owne misery? It is as if a man should content himselfe to lie in the bottome of a darke stinging dungeon, euen when there is meanes offered to release him. What is the chiefe part of our naturall misery? Is it not this, that we sit in darknesse? But what darknesse is it? Our senses doe tell vs, it is not any outward, bodily darknesse, which is meant: It cannot be any, but the darknesse of the soule. And what is the darknesse of the soule but ignorance and dulnesse? Faith is the eie of the soule, and knowledge the ground of Faith. You then, which wilfully muzzell your selues in ignorance, which desire not to be better taught, which are weary of the meanes of knowledge; what doe you, but euen resolue with your selues to lie still in darknesse, and to rush your selues into that Vtter darknesse, where nothing will be besides weeping and gnashing of teeth [e]? Remember we then, that as by nature in respect of sinne, we are of all [e] Math 8.12. creatures the most miserable, so one branch of our misery is the darknesse of ignorance, the want of true sauing knowledge: if we doe willingly and contentedly cherish our selues therein, and refuse to vnderstand the things which belong vnto our Peace, it is all one as if we should say, We will not be saued; Hell shall be more welcome vnto vs then eternall life.

Doctrine 2. The second part of our naturall misery, is, The want of true comfort. There is no peace to the Wicked, saith God [f]. The conscience, naturally, beeing not yet renued and purged by Christs blood, hath in it, one of these two euils; Senselesnesse, or Amazednesse: Either it is blockish and benummed and feeleth nothing, and so passeth on in a kind of drowsinesse and securitie, like an Oxe that goeth to the slaughter g; or els it is perplexed and distracted with inward horror, not knowing which way to turne it selfe for any true refreshing: And the reason is this; In euery naturall heart, Sathan reigneth and worketh h, and Christ is a stranger from it. Now where the King of confusion reigneth, and where the Princes of peace i is a stranger, what comfort can be looked for? Againe, the foundation of all true comfort, is the perswasion of Gods loue in the forgiuenesse of sins; but this, I am sure, doth not grow in natures garden. And thirdly, let a soule be wounded, a heart pricked, a conscience astonished, with the apprehension of sin, and with the Terror of the Lord k, all the wit of all the wisest men in the world, out of their own reason cannot comfort it. This is a limme of our naturall darknesse. Let vs once be touched with inward sorrow, let nature doe her best, let carnall reason stretch it selfe to the vtmost pin, yet shall we be swallowed vp with dismaiednesse.

k 1 Cor.5.11.

This teacheth vs, what we must doe, when as in sickenesse, losse, disgraces, and in any other sadnesse, and sullennesse of the spirit we desire refreshing. If wee aske counsell of Nature or of carnall friends, what direction shall we receiue? Company, Musicke, discourse, gaming, and things of the like nature; which are like to water taken by one sicke of a burning feuer, which cooleth a little at the first, but after increaseth the heate: or to stickes catched at by a man ready to bee drowned, which promise some hope of helpe, but yet faile in the vse, and perish with him that trusted to them. If we desire true comfort, we must goe out of our selues, and looke vpward, to him, who is the God of all consolation l. In his word we must meditate: Except (saith Dauid) thy Law had beene my delight, I should now haue perished in mine affliction m. The cause of mens deadnesse in the day of sorrow, is their dependance vpon carnall meanes (the reed of Egypt n) while in the meane time they neglect the principall.

n Isay 36.6.

The third part of our naturall misery, is subiection to eternall death. Death is gone ouer all men o: and, The wages of sinne is death p. God told Adam, that in the day that he did eate the forbidden fruit, he should die the death q. Now inasmuch as we haue all taken part with this disobedience, wee haue all a share in this punishment. This punishment is called Death, not because it is an vtter abolishment of the Being of the creature, (happie were it for the wicked if it were so) but it is so called, because the soule is eternally separated from God, who is the fountaine of life and happinesse, and by that meanes, it is euer dying, but dieth neuer, wishing a dissolution, but can neuer obtaine it.

q Gen.2.17.

The vse hereof is to humble vs, and to abate our naturall pride. Among men, if we see one that is a begger by birth, to be proude, and lifting vp himselfe, we account it intolerable. Put case some one were borne to be a slaue or a drudge, we would thinke such an one had little cause of boasting: Yet such is the naturall condition of vs all. The shadow and darkenes of eternall death, is our best inheritance. Let God giue vs our right, and what portion can we expect but the fire of hell? It is natures desert, nay it is euen the desire of nature, to be plunged into it. Why are we secure, whom our sinnes haue cast into such a dismall estate? Thou prideſt thy selfe in thy birth, thou in thy wealth, thou in thy wit, thou in thy painted sheath and gay cloathing, and considered not, thy best desert what it is, and whereto it tends: whereas thou oughtest rather to powre out thy heart like water before the face of the Lord r, and to cry with Dauid: Saue me O God; Deliuer me out of the mire, that I sinke not: Let not the pit shut her mouth vpon me s.

The Vse.
s Psal.69.1, 14, 15.

Thus much touching the state of the parties, vpon whom Christ bestoweth the benefit of saluation: where we see that we are all by nature without the light of knowledge, without the light of comfort, ready to bee swallowed vp in the darkenesse of eternall death. The right vnderstanding of this point, when it workes to the humbling of the soule, is the very first steppe to happinesse, and the first fruits of true godlinesse.

The second thing to bee handled in this Text, is the nature of the benefite, which is here declared in two things: 1. To giue light: 2. To guide our feete into the way of peace. Of these two in their course. In discoursing vpon the former, I must shew first, what is meant by Light; and then how this Light is giuen. The word Light is opposed to the former miserie. Whatsoeuer is vnderstood by Darkenesse and the shadow of death, the contrary thereunto is intended by this word Light: as namely, Light of knowledge, Light of comfort, and Light of life.

The 4. doct All these three are meant by the word Light, and into the world Christ came to impart these three. First, to giue the Light of knowledge; I am come into the world, that they which see not, might see [t]. No man hath seene God at any time, the onely begotten Sonne, &c. hee hath declared him [u]. In him are hidde all the treasures of wisedome and knowledge [x]; and of his fulnesse we must all receiue [y]. Secondly, to giue the Light of comfort: The Spirit of the Lord is vpon me, (the place is meant of Christ) to giue beauty for ashes, the oyle of ioy for mourning, the garment of gladnes for the Spirit of heauinesse [z]: And thence commeth that offer made by Christ: Come vnto mee all that are wearie, &c. and ye shall finde rest for your soules [a]. Thirdly, to giue the Light of Life: He that followeth me, shall not walke in darknesse, but shall haue the Light of Life [b]. He hath brought Life and Immortalitie to Light by the Gospell. And thus is that fulfiled which Christ spake: Whosoeuer beleeueth in mee shall not abide in darknesse [d]: neither in the darknesse of Ignorance, nor in the darknesse of discomfort, nor in the darknesse of eternall death.

Now for the manner and meanes of imparting this Light: Hee who is the Sonne of righteousnesse [e], conueieth the beames of this Light by two instruments: 1. The Word. 2. The Spirit. To assure vs that the Word is the Instrument to conuey the Light of knowledge, it is said, to giue Light to the eyes [f]; and the Ministery of it, is called the Light of the world [g]; the Ministers themselues are said to bee Starres in Christs right hand [h]: they haue committed vnto them, the Key of Knowledge [i], and it is their office to giue knowledge [k]. Againe, that we may know the Word to be the Instrument of comfort [l] it is said to reioyce the Heart, and to be a Comfort in trouble [m]. Thirdly, to certifie vs, that it is the Instrument of Life, it is called the Word of Life [n], and a quickning Word [o]. Touching the Spirit, as much is testified also. By it God giues Knowledge. It is the Spirit of truth and leadeth into truth [p]. The worke thereof is called the opening of the Heart [q], and the opening of the vnderstanding [r]. Secondly, by it commeth Comfort; therefore he is called the Comforter [s], and The oyle of gladnesse [t]. Thirdly, by it commeth Life, for which cause it is called The Spirit of Life [u]. Thus we see, Christ the Day-spring for what end he came, euen to giue Light, namely, the Light of Knowledge, the Light of comfort, and the Light of Life: We vnderstand also, how hee sendeth foorth these his beames vpon vs: Outwardly, by the brightnesse of his Word: Inwardly, by the shining of the Spirit.

But why so? The substance of the Gospell is Christ Iesus, and the summe of his office is to giue Light: What one thing is there in the world more comfortable? When Paul and the rest were in danger of shipwracke, they wished (saith the text) that the day were come [z]. The darknesse of the night added to their danger, and doubled their feare: Euery houre seemed two, vntill the day were broken. Indeed the saying is true of euill doers: The morning is to them as the shadow of death [a]: but to them of honest carriage, the light of the day is exceeding welcome. Therefore Dauid setteth foorth his longing after God, by the watching of the morning watch for the morning [b]. It is said of Abraham, that he reioyced to see Christs day [c]. A little glimpse of this light was the very ioy of Abrahams heart. How great therefore and intolerable is our dulnesse, who take no contentment in the beames of this Light, which shineth vnto vs? A great blessing is it, which is reported of Zabulon and Nepthalim; The people which sate in darknesse saw a great Light, and to them which sate in the Region and shadow of death light is risen vp[d]. Wee (by the goodnesse of God) enioy the like blessing, and yet in the opinion of the most, it is nothing lesse then a blessing: Men had rather lie wallowing in the darknesse of Ignorance, then open their eies to receiue that light which is offered vnto them by the Gospel. This is that which will bring hell and iudgment vpon this generation, according to that speech of Christ: This is the condemnation, that light is come into the World, and men loue darknesse rather then light[e]. A maruell it is, that men should reiect such a blessing: But Christ hath told the reason: It is, because their deeds are euill. This Light of doctrine discouereth their sins, (for it is Light which maketh all things manifest[f]) it bewraieth the grossenesse of their courses, and layeth open many a mans hypocrisie, who seemed to himselfe, and was reputed by others to be such an one as he ought to bee. There cannot bee a greater vexation to men of corrupt minds then to be met with in their sinnes; they cry then with Ahab, Hast thou found me, O mine ememies[g]? This is the cause that the Light of grace, which we ought of all other things most to reioyce in, is become such a burthen vnto vs; it discouereth that, which wee desire by all meanes to keepe close. The world hates me (saith our Sauiour) *because I testifie of it that the workes thereof are euill. Remember we therefore: Christ is the Light, we are they to whom he offereth Light; he hath sent his word to enlighten vs. If wee reioyce not in this Light, but wish rather it were euen blowne out, that we might sleepe freely in our sinnes, it sheweth vs to bee the heires of darkenesse, and that the shadow of eternall death must be our portion.

* Iohn 7.7.

The second vse standeth thus: Sith Christ, as he is Light himselfe, so, imparts his Light vnto vs by his Word and the Ministery thereof, we must remember the counsell which Christ giueth: Walke while ye haue light[h]. Wee haue no assurance of the continuance of that light of the Gospell which wee now enioy. Our sins may bring a storme vpon vs, in which the Sun shal go downe ouer the Prophets, and the day shall be darke ouer them[i]. Our vnthankfulnes and barrennes in our profession, our loathing of the heauenly Manna, hath deserued this, and more: It is holy wisedome therefore for vs, to take the benefit of the light whiles it shineth, lest such a iudgment should come vpon vs, as Christ spake of; namely, that we should desire to see one of the daies, which we now see and value not, but then shall not see them k. Perhaps, in the opinion of some this is no iudgement, nay it is the very thing they desire, being like those, who when the Prophets of God were slaine, reioyced ouer them, & sent gifes one to another[l]. But let them heare what Christ saith, He that walketh in the darke, knoweth not whether he goeth[m]. He that iourneieth not whiles it is day, at last when he is benighted, he loseth his way, falleth into the hands of theeues, rusheth into some down fall where he casts away himselfe. Such is the state of men without the Light of doctrine: They go, they know not whether, they Beleeue they know not what; downe they will bee in the pit before they are aware. But (will some say) will you make vs blinde and so simple that we cannot see the way to heauen without you? I answer with the words of Christ to the Pharises; Now ye say, we see therefore your sinnes remaineth[n]: You which thinke your selues so cunning, there is none so blinde, no bodies case is more desperate.

The third vse is taught by the Apostle, in these words, Walke as the children of Light[o]: That is, Christ is come into the world to enlighten, his word is preached, to conuey the light of grace into our hearts: this is no small priuiledge; behaue your selues therefore agreeably to this mercy, liue as becommeth those whom God hath called into Light. This same thing the same Apostle vrgeth elsewhere: The night is past (the time ignorance is blown ouer) the day is come (the light of grace and knowledge hath appeared) put on therefore the armour of Light[p]. We may thus thus vnderſtand it: Men that by occaſion goe abroade in the night, are not ſo curious about their attire, thinking that whatſoeuer is amiſſe, will bee ſhrouded vnder the mantle of the night: but hee who goeth foorth at noone day, will be more carefull, that nothing may bee ſeene contrary to modeſty, contrary to ciuility. So (ſaith the Apoſtle) in the dayes of your ignorance, happely you might doe ſuch or ſuch things, and becauſe you knew no other, they might (in ſome ſort) be borne withall: but now the caſe is otherwiſe: Light hath ſhined, grace hath appeared, knowledge is preached vnto you, therefore other things are now expected; if you now liue as in times paſt, your fact cannot be hid, your fault cannot be excuſed: We ſee in generall, what the Apoſtle perſwades. That we may more fully conceiue what this is to Walke in the Light; let vs heare him opening the ſame vnto vs: It comprehends vnder it three things: 1. To approoue that which is pleaſing to the Lord [q], which is reuealed in the Scripture, and is more and more made knowne vnto vs by Preaching. 2. To beware the of vnfruitfull workes of darkeneſſe [r], ſuch as gluttony, drunkenneſſe, chambering, wantonneſſe, ſtrife, enuying [ſ], filthineſſe, fooliſh talking [t], &c. 3. To Reprooue them: that is, to carry our ſelues in that holy and blameleſſe manner, that your very liues, (though we holde our tongues) may bee ſufficient to lay open and condemne the lewd faſhions of the vngodly, This is to walke as the children of Light. This is ſtraitly required of thoſe which enioy the Light, but (alas) full ſlightly it is performed. How common, how ſhameleſſe, and how perſumptuous are theſe vnfruitfull workes of darkneſſe; ſecurity, contempt of goodneſſe; ſcorne of Religion; Pride, Whoredome and ſuch like? doe theſe agree with that Light which God hath giuen vs? Thinke we that God hath apart in vs, when theſe things beare dominion ouer vs? It is vnpoſsible. If we ſay we haue fellowſhip with God, and walke in darkeneſſe, we lie, and doe not truely [u]. The concluſion is this: Chriſt is our Light, hee imparteth his beames vnto vs by his word: If we loue this Light, let vs walke as the children of light. The workes of darkneſſe will bring vs into his power who is the Prince of darkneſſe; we cannot eſcape it.

The ſecond part of the Benefit is, To guide our feete into the way of peace. Heere it muſt firſt be enquired what is the way of peace. Secondly, it muſt be prooued that we need a Guide. Thirdly, it muſt be iuſtified that Chriſt is the Guide. Laſtly it muſt be ſhewed, how he doth guide. Of theſe briefly.

The way of peace, is the way which leadeth vnto eternall happineſſe: It is called Gods way, and the way of ſaluation [x]. That we haue need of a guide, it is plaine. The way of peace (by nature) we do not knowe [z]: The way which ſeemed right vnto vs, the iſſues thereof are the wayes of death. It is a part of our miſerie, that wee are turned euery one to his owne way [b]. That Chriſt is the Guide, his owne words prooue; I (ſaith he) am the way [c]. He goeth before his ſheepe, he leadeth them out [d]. Now he guideth euen as he giueth light; By the Word, and by his Spirit: By his Word; Thy word is a lanterne to my feete, and a light vnto my pathes [e]: and the Interpreters of this word are called Guides [f]. 2. By his Spirit is: Thy eares ſhall heare a word behind thee, ſaying, This is the way, walke ye in it [g], &c. The Spirit of truth will leade you into all truth [h]. Thus is that verified which Hannah ſpake in her ſong, that the Lord keepeth the feet of his Saints [i], and (as Dauid ſaith) doth teach them the way that they ſhall chuſe [k].

And indeede we our selues if we doe consider it, must needs condemne it, that it should be so. Why then is it so? Christ calleth dayly vpon vs in his word, while we be trauelling in our owne wayes; Returne ye sonnes of Adam q. Why will yee die, O house of Israel? Cause therefore one another to returne r: yet we turne the deafe are, saying in effect as they did of old; The word spoken vnto vs in the name of the Lord, we will not heare s. Thus euery one turneth to his race t, and the way of sinners u is preferred before the way of peace. The word of God calleth vs on one way, and we will be sure to goe the cleane contrary. If it were asked of vs, whether wee would refuse to follow Christ, we would all say with one voyce, God forbid we should refuse it: but when he offereth his directions to vs in his Word, we will not follow them. Holde we then this: Christ is the head Guide: His Word and the preaching thereof is the staffe and instrument to conduct vs: if we refuse that guidance, we shall neuer finde the way which leadeth vnto peace.

SIR, there is a generation of men now adaies, who hauing little iudgement, and leſſe honeſty, are very forward (in hope, by that meanes to bee reputed ſomething) to cenſure other mens endeauours. Touching ſuch for mine owne part, I am at a point, and ſay with the Apoſtle, I paſſe very little to be iudged of them. Yet 1.Cor.4.3. am I not ſo without regard, but that I would bee loath that any man who hath in him any true worth, and is of a right religious vnderſtanding, ſhould thinke me (becauſe of my diuerſe publiſhing) to be carried with that buſie humour, through which no ſmall many in this ſcribling age, haue euen made the times to ſurfet with their needleſſe papers. Wherefore to cleare my ſelfe to euery ſober iudgement, this I ſay: I was firſt drawne into this courſe of preſenting ſome Sermons of mine to publike view, by the requeſt of ſome friends: next, I receiued encouragement to proceede by the good approouement of ſundry, fearing God. And then alſo, I thought, that by doing ſomewhat in this kinde, I might make my hearers ſome part of a recompence, for that wrong which I doe them ſometimes through my naturall infirmitie of too much quickneſſe in deliuery. Now hauing in theſe ſettings forth, remembred diuers of my deſeruedly reſpected friends, if I ſhould forget your Worſhip ſo neere mee in dwelling, and (vnleſſe I much miſtake) no leſſe neere in affection, I ſhould not know well how to auoid the imputation of ouermuch neglect. I cannot doubt of kinde acceptance, where I haue receiued ſo many teſtimonies of much reſpect. If by further looking into this meane offer, you ſhall receiue any furtherance in that good which I haue euer heartily wiſhed to your ſoule, it will giue me no ſmall contentment. Thus commending theſe Copies vnto you firſt: and then from you to the vſe of Gods Church, I leaue you to his grace, who will neuer leaue thoſe whom hee hath once vouchſafed to loue in Chriſt Ieſus. Modburie.

The first Sermon.

Exod. cap. 34. verſ. 6, 7.

So the Lord paſſed before his face and cryed, Iehouah, Iehouah, ſtrong, merciſull, and gracious, ſlow to anger, and abundant in goodneſſe and truth.

Reſeruing mercy for thouſands forgiuing iniquity and tranſgreſſion and ſinne, and not making the wicked innocent, viſiting the iniquity of the fathers vpon the children, and vpon the childreas children, vnto the third and fourth generation.

THE occaſion of theſe words was this: We reade in the latter part of the fore-going chapter [a], how Moſes, for his better ſtrengthening in that weighty charge with which the Lord had entruſted him, deſired God to ſhew him his glory, to wit, the very fulneſſe of his Maieſty. God anſwered him [b], that the ſatisfying of this his requeſt, could not but be very hurtfull vnto him, in as much as (ſaith he) there ſhall no man ſee me and liue; meaning thereby, that the weakenes of mans mortall nature, cannot beare the glory of his preſence, but ſhall be euen oppreſſed and ſwallowed vp with maieſty, euen as we ſee the ſight of the eye to be dazled with the brightneſſe of the Sunne, or a cryſtall glaſſe to be broken in pieces, with the ſtrong working of the fire: But yet (ſaith God to Moſes) this will I do, I will put thee in a cleft of a rock, and will couer thee with my hand, whiles I paſſe by: After, I will take away mine hand, and thou ſhalt ſee my back-parts, but my face ſhall not be ſeene [c]. By which courſe framed to the capacity and vnderſtanding of Moſes, (and of vs alſo,) in which God ſpeaketh of himſelfe as of a man, hauing face and backe, the Lords meaning was to teach both Moſes and vs, that it is vnpoſsible for any man in this mortality, perfectly and exactly to know and conceiue the nature and being of the moſt High. Our knowledge of him in this life is in part [d], like the beholding of a man ſuddenly paſsing by vs, whoſe back-parts only we can looke vpon: the more full knowing him, is reſerued to that time in which we being made like vnto him, ſhall ſee him as he is [e], euen face to face [f], in his owne kingdome. Now that which God promiſed to Moſes in the former chapter is performed in this; Moſes being placed in the cleft of the rocke, the Lord paſſed by, and vttered a voice, by which was diſcouered ſo much touching God, as Moſes either was able, or elſe needed to conceiue, Iehouah, Iehouah, ſtrong, &c. Theſe two verſes my purpoſe is to open vnto you, to the end wee may haue ſome better vnderſtanding of God, (what an one he is,) then for the moſt part it ſeemeth we haue, any may learne to feare his Maieſty, to loue his mercy, & to tremble at his iuſtice more then we haue done heretofore. Our common conceits of God are very groſſe and ridiculous. Ignorant people ſuppoſe him to be a man in ſhape and paſsion like themſelues: The Epicure, who thought there was no happineſſe vnder the Sunne, but in carnall pleaſure, imagined God to bee of the ſame ſenſuall humour, and deemed, that freedome from buſines was his chiefe felicity. And Dauid ſaith in the Pſalme, [g] that the vngodly perſon, who runs to all manner of exceſſe, ioyning with the theefe, and partaking with the adulterer, and opening his mouth with the ſlanderer, thinkes God to be like himſelfe: And generally our priuate uate thoughts touching God, are not ſo holy, ſo reuerent, ſo diuine, ſo full of reſpect as they ought to bee. So that it ſhall be good for vs to conſider well of this portion of Scripture, which is Gods owne teſtimony touching himſelfe.

Before I come to ſpeak directly of that deſcription which is here made of God, one thing may not vnprofitably be obſerued out of that which is firſt ſaid, ſo the Lord paſſed before Moſes face and cried: and it is this: Moſes his deſire was (as appeareth) to haue ſeene ſome outward and viſibly teſtimony of the glory and Maieſty of God, which euen with his eyes he might haue looked vpon. Now howſoeuer God did not leaue Moſes herein altogether vnſatisfied, for no doubt, at this time, God gaue ſome ſuch ſenſible appearance which affected the eye of Moſes, for which cauſe it is ſaid [h], the Lord deſcended in the cloud, yet the maine thing vſed to informe Moſes in that, which it principally behooued him to vnderſtand, was a voice: All other circumſtances ſerued but as preparatiues to ſtrike an awfulneſſe into Moſes heart, and to fit him to that which the purpoſe of God was to reueale vnto him: It was a voice which was the chiefe inſtrument, to conuey into the mind and vnderſtanding of Moſes, the neceſſary knowledge of Iehouah, which courſe (as to me ſeemeth) ſerued euen then to inſinuate, that Teaching by a voice, ſhould euer be the choice & principall meanes, by which the Lord would bring his people vnto the true & ſauing knowledge of himſelfe. When God appeared to Eliah, [i] we read that before him went a mighty ſtrong wind, which rent the mountaines; but (ſaith the Text) the Lord was not in the winde: After the winde came, came an earthquake, and after it a fire, but the Lord was in neither: But then laſt of all came a ſtill and ſoft voice, & in that the Lord was: and that was it which moſt affected Eliah his heart; For (as the ſtory ſaith) when Eliah heard it, he couered his face with his mantle, and went out, &c. I remember, that where as there is a ſtrait charge giuen in Deuteronomy, touching images and repreſentations to worſhip God by, this is the principall reaſon of the prohibition [k], Yee ſaw no multitude, ſaue a voice. Out of which the Lord would haue them to learne, that as in the firſt deliuery of the law, the inſtrument which God taught them by, was a voice, (he purpoſely forbearing to preſent himſelfe to their eyes in a viſible ſhape, leſt they ſhould ſticke too much vpon outward ſhewes) ſo they likewiſe in the following times, ſhould truſt eſpecially to the ſame meanes which God (as it were) by his own mouth hath ſanctified vnto them at the beginning, namely, a voice. The nature of man is very inclinable to affect rather that which with ſome outward ſhew offereth it ſelfe vnto the eye, then to content it ſelfe with the bare and naked inſtruction of the eare: And therefore we ſee, both how full all falſe religions deuiſed by men, haue euer beene of outward beauty, of images, and ſignes, and bodily repreſentments, and how apt the people haue beene in all times to entertaine that ſooneſt, which to their eyes ſeemed gayeſt. It was the baite of Poperie, and the thing by which the world generally was bewitched, euen the goodly images, and the glorious furniture wherewith the ſacrificing Prieſts were arrayed, and the Churches bedecked. The people were made beleeue, that there was a myſtery in euery dumbe ſhew, and that the varietie of imagery was lay-mens bookes, in which they might with their eyes ſee euen the very body and ſubſtance of religion. In the meane time, the maine inſtrument of teaching, I meane a voice, was either baniſhed, or elſe ſo vttered in a ſtrange tongue, and confuſed tune, that the ſoules of the people could not receiue any edifying thereby. Well might they feede their hungry eyes, with gazing vpon painted idols, or haue their eares ticled with ſome pleaſing noiſe, but that their hearing ſhould bee a meſſenger to their inward parts of any ſound doctrine, by which their conſciences might be comforted, it was impoſsible, nay it was the very thing which was purpoſely auoided. Now although the Lord hath had ſome reſpect vnto our nature, and hath therefore appointed two Sacraments, by which to repreſent to our eyes, that which the word reporteth to our eares, yet the voice of God (which is his word) is ſtill the principall, and vnto it thoſe viſible ſeruices

The vſe hereof (which is alſo the ende why I noted it) is to maintaine the credit and needfull vſe of that order of inſtructing vs, which the Lord his will is ſhould haue the chiefe place in his ſeruice. The wiſedome of man might imagine, that it were no hard thing to deuiſe other meanes, more likely to edifie the ſoule, then this of hearing, according as Moſes (it may be) held opinion, that if his eyes might once ſee the Maieſty of God, it would bee the onely meanes to confirme him: But (as the Apoſtle [l] ſpeaketh) The fooliſhneſſe of God is wiſer then men: and as he thought it fitter to informe Moſes by the eare, then to giue him his deſire, in preſenting himſelfe to his eye, ſo hee doth ſtill holde the ſame courſe, and hath ordained the ſenſe of hearing, to bee (as it were) the pipe by which the ſauing knowledge of his will, may be conueyed downe into the heart, and whoſoeuer doe neglect or deſpiſe this meanes, the Lord will curſe all other helpes vnto them, which together with this, might haue beene exceeding profitable. I remember what the rich man lying in hell, ſaid to Abraham [m]; hee was earneſt with him that Lazarus might bee ſent to aduertiſe his brethren of his miſerie, imagining that would bee a very effectuall motiue to repentance; according as in our reaſon, wee would thinke that if one ſhould come amongſt vs out of the place of the damned, and tell what kinde of men were there, it would ſtrike a feare into mens hearts; If one (ſaith hee) come vnto them from the dead, they will amend their liues. But now what ſaid Abraham? They haue Moſes and the Prophets, if they will not here them, neither will they be perſwaded though one riſe from the dead againe. It ſhewes plainely, that thoſe who will not bee inſtructed by hearing, they are euen paſt hope, there is no courſe though in mans reaſon neuer ſo likely, that is able to recouer them. Let it admoniſh vs, if we deſire to know God, to prepare our eares to the meanes of knowledge: Remember what Salomon hath ſaid, that it is but the ſacrifice of fooles, which all thoſe performe, who come into the houſe of God, and are not neare and ready to heare [n]. Thus much I thought good (by the way) to note hence, that Moſes deſiring to conceiue the Maieſty of God, was inſtructed rather, (at the leaſt) more largely, by the eare, then by outward and viſible repreſentments. I come now to the deſcription it ſelfe.

Touching which, wee muſt vnderſtand that God is heere deſcribed to vs by foure things. 1. His Eſſence or Beeing. 2. His Power. 3. His Mercy. 4. His Iuſtice. The firſt is in that word Iehouah, which for the making of Moſes more attentiue, is twiſe repeated (Iehouah, Iehouah.) This name is properly belonging vnto God, neither can be communicated vnto any creature in heauen or earth whatſoeuer: and it is ſuch as we are not able in our language, by any one word to expreſſe. To omit many buſie queſtions about this name, and to deliuer onely ſo much as is needfull, and may be beſt alſo vnderſtood by thoſe which are euen of the meaneſt capacity, it doth note out vnto vs concerning God three things eſpecially. Firſt, that God is an Eternall Beeing, that is, euen as the Scripture ſaith, one Which is, which was, and which is to come [o]. He hath bin a God euer, he is ſo at this inſtant, and ſhall be ſo without end. For this cauſe he told Moſes elſewhere [p], that his name was I Am, ſignifying therby, that there neuer was any time, neither ſhal be, in which the Lord might not, and may not truly ſay of himſelfe, I Am. And to this end are the ſayings of the Scripture, Before the mountaines were made, & before thou hadſt formed the earth, & the world, euen from euerlaſting to euerlaſting thou art God [q]. Before me there was no God formed, neither ſhall be after me [r]. Thus ſaith hee which inhabiteth Eternity [s]. He is called in another place [t], the King of ages, & is ſaid to haue made the Times [u]. And the word which in the language wherein the Scripture was written, doth vſe to ſignifie Eternall, is drawne from a root which betokeneth to be hid, becauſe the Beginning and the End of God lieth hid, and is a thing altogether vnknowne. neuer finde where his Being began, if he inquire neuer ſo carefully or curiouſly into the times to come, he ſhall neuer find out any limits to it, or any likelyhood of an end. This is Gods Eternity, the firſt thing ſignified and meant by this name of his, Iehouah. The ſecond thing meant by it, is, that he it is which giueth Beeing to all things elſe whatſoeuer. And that this is the meaning of it, appeares by that ſaying, I am Iehouah that made all things *, as though he ſhould ſay, This is my name, thus am I called, becauſe as I haue my Beeing from my ſelf, ſo I giue vnto all things their beeing: according to the ſaying of the Apoſtle, Of him, & for him, and through him, are all things [x]: and in another place, In him we liue, We moone and haue our beeing [y]. Thirdly, this name Iehouah, betokeneth thus much touching God; that hee doth fully accompliſh & make good all his purpoſes: and for confirmation hereof it is a notable place, euen the ſaying of God vnto Moſes, I appeared vnto Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob by the name of Almighty, but by my name Iehouah I was not known vnto them [z]. The meaning is, that howſoeuer the Lord, by creating the world, & after, by deſtroying it for the ſins thereof, and by many other bleſsings beſtowed vpon theſe men, had declared himſelfe to be a mighty and powerfull God, yet hee had neuer ſo fully ſhewed himſelf vnto them to be Iehouah; becauſe they in their times ſaw not the performance of thoſe promiſes which hee had anciently made touching the deliuery of the people out of Egypt: ſo that now Moſes and the reſt, knew his name Iehouah, becauſe they were to be eye-witneſſes, of the fulfilling of the old promiſe touching their deliuerance from Pharaoh his captiuity. We may not ſo vnderſtand the place as though the name Iehouah was not knowne vnto Abraham and the reſt: For God ſo ſtileth himſelfe both to Abraham [a], and vnto Iacob too [b]: but this (as I haue ſaid) was the meaning, that then and at that inſtant, and by that miraculous deliuerance hee would more manifeſtly ſhew him ſelfe to be Iehouah, (that is, a performer of promiſes) then hee had done in former times: The things whith Abraham, and Iſaac, and Iacob, had only heard, Moſes and they which then liued, ſhould ſee fulfilled and accompliſhed. So that this place thus opened, is a manifeſt proofe that he is therfore called Iehouah, becauſe as he himſelfe is, ſo he maketh that to be, which he had promiſed. For which cauſe it is an ordinary thing in the Scripture, when the Lord doth either promiſe or threaten any great matter, he doth put vnto it his name Iehouah, as a ſeal of performing it. I will ſhew you an example or two of it. I will ſend you (ſaith God by the Prophet) famine and euill beaſts, &c. I Iehouah haue ſpoken it, as if he had ſaid, you may be ſure this ſhall take effect, I Iehouah haue decreed it, & I am able to performe it. Thus God beginneth the Law, I am Iehouah, to aſſure that nothing ſhall fall to the ground either of the bleſsing promiſed, or of the iudgements denounced in the ſame. Whoſoeuer readeth Ierem. 31. a chapter abounding with many gracious promiſes, touching the new couenant in Chriſt, touching forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and the writing of the Law in our hearts, &c. ſhall find this name Iehouah, (or for it, Lord, the word Iehouah being vſually ſo tranſlated) two or three and twenty ſeuerall times made mention of. So that all this ſerues to make this point plaine, that God is tearmed Iehouah, becauſe he doth not giue words onely, but certainty, and accompliſhment alſo vnto all his promiſes. Thus we ſee the meaning of this glorious name [d] Iehouah. Let vs proceede to examine what vſe wee may make of all theſe ſpecialties to our ſelues.

Firſt, whereas the Lord our God is ſaid to bee an Eternall Being, which neuer had beginning, and knoweth no end, it ſerueth to ſhew vnto vs, what a hatefull thing it is to go about to expreſſe this Infinitneſſe, in an image of wood or ſtone, or mettall, or any other worke of mans hand. In Iſaiah his Prophecy you ſhall finde this vſe: To whom (ſaith the holy Ghoſt) will ye liken God, or what ſimilitude will you ſet vp vnto him [e]? In that chapter ſundry reaſons are vrged to ſhew what an idle and fooliſh thing it is, but who ſo obſerueth the place, ſhall find the principall to be fetched from the Maieſty & eternity of Iehouah: as indeed it is a groſſe and a

senseleſſe thing to ſeeke to ſhadow him out, who neuer had beginning, and neuer ſhall haue end, by that thing, the beginning whereof we haue ſeene, and which we well know may quickly be conſumed. It were a diſgrace to the Kings Maieſty, if one ſhould vndertake to picture him in the faſhion of a poore, ragged, filthy, deformed, leprous and vnworthy perſon; vnder what pretence ſoeuer it were done, it would be thought very inconuenient: Now there can not be that difference betwixt one man and another, as is betwixt the moſt glorious creature and the Lord. The repreſenting of the Nature and Maieſty of God by Images, is called a turning of the truth of God into a lie [f], becauſe the vpholding of them doth make a falſe report of God, and breedeth in the conceipt of thee looker on, ſuch imaginations touching God, as are indeed very groſſe and vtterly vntrue. And let what colour ſoeuer the diuell can helpe to deuiſe, be ſet vpon it, yet it muſt needs make him that ſeeth the Image, either thinke too honourably of the matter becauſe it repreſents God, or too baſely of God, who is figured out by a dumb ſhew, by a peece of a block, which is ſooner conſumed then it was at the firſt framed. I ſpeake this to this end, that it may beget in vs a deteſtation of Popery, the beauty whereof doth conſiſt in ſuch abominable repreſentations of the eternall Iehouah, whom the mind of man cannot conceiue, much les the work of any hand expreſſe.

The 2. Vſe.

Secondly, ſeeing Iehouah is an Eternall Beeing, one, who as S. Paul ſaith [g], onely hath Immortality, it teacheth vs, to whom we muſt goe, that we may come vnto Eternity. Our ſoules indeed, euen in this ſinfull eſtate, are immortall, and ſhall be for euer, but ſuch is the immortall miſery which we haue made our ſelues ſubiect vnto through ſinne, that that immortalitie is in Scripture called by the name of an Eternall Death: and a thouſand times better were it for a man neuer to haue beene, then not to be deliuered from that dying life. Now as man by falling from Iehouah, brought himſelfe into the danger of this miſerable Eternity, ſo, but by being againe vnited & ioyned vnto him, there is no hope of that glorious immortality. He is the fountaine of euerlaſtingnes, & the life of the ſoule is worſe then death vntill it hath receiued a new quickning from his power. If you aske of me, how this eternity which is in God may be communicated vnto vs, I anſwer, that Chriſt Ieſus who hath ioyned the nature of man vnto his Godhead, is the alone meanes, by which we may bee vnited vnto God. No man commeth to the Father, but by me [h]. Vnto Chriſt we are vnited by his Spirit: his Spirit goeth with his Word: by it he begets a new life in the dead and rotten heart of man; by it he raiſeth him vp vnto the life of grace, and prepareth him by degrees euery day more and more vnto the life of glory. For this cauſe the word of God is called an Immortall ſeed [i], an eternall Word [k], the word of life [l], a quickning Word [m], and all for this cauſe, becauſe it bringeth vs vnto Chriſt, in whom are hid all the treaſures [n] of happineſſe, and in the knowledge of whom life euerlaſting [o] doth conſiſt. So then marke this: God calleth himſelfe Iehouah: what is that? one who is the fountaine & head ſpring of all Eternitie: what muſt the knowing hereof teach me? I muſt thinke thus with my ſelfe, I am by nature no better then others, euen the childe of eternall death; the immortalitie which I haue, doth but make me ſubiect vnto endleſſe miſery: How then might I come to be partaker of that glorious eternity? I anſwer thee, nay the word of God anſwereth thee; But by Chriſt, thou canſt neuer obtaine it: But by the word, thou canſt neuer be ioyned vnto Chriſt. Looke into the word, exerciſe thy ſelfe in that, there thou ſhalt find him: be a ſtranger to the word, care not for it, deſpiſe it, deſire not to know it, thou ſhalt neuer haue part with Chriſt, nor dwell with Iehouah, who is the King of Times, and the Father of Eternity. Theſe two vſes we may make of the firſt thing meant by this name Iehouah: He is Eternall, one that hath his Beeing from himſelfe: therefore not to be repreſented by the fading workmanſhip of mortall man; therefore to be ſought vnto by Chriſt, if we deſire immortality with him in his kingdome.

The two vſes of the ſecond ſignification of Iehouah.

He is called Iehouah alſo, becauſe he hath giuen their Beeing to all other things which

The 1. Vſe. which haue any beeing. This doth teach vs two things. Firſt, touching our ſelues; ſeeing the life and beeing which we haue, we haue it from the Lord, it vrgeth vpon vs the conſecrating and deuoting of our ſelues wholly vnto him. It is a thing which ſtandeth euen with reaſon, that the life which wee haue receiued from his mercy, ſhould be employed wholly to his glory. Who planteth a vineyard (ſaith the Apoſtle) and eateth not of the fruit thereof? who feedeth a flocke, and eateth not of the milke of the flock[p]? Euery man expects a benefit by that wherein he hath beſtowed charge: why may not the Lord then by good right challenge all ſeruice and honour and obedience from vs, ſeeing we are his workmanſhip, & that this, that we can do any thing, hath proceeded wholly from his grace? Salomon ſaith that the Lord made all things for his owne ſake[q]. It was the glory of his onwe Name, which was the chiefe end aymed at by him, in giuing a beeing vnto all things. There is no man in the world, but, if another had riſen by him, and come from no body, to be a man of ſome faſhion & ability, would think he had receiued a great wrong and a foule indignity, if that man ſhould oppoſe himſelfe againſt him, or ſhould not be ready to ioyne with him in his occaſions. His vnthankfulnes ſhould againe and againe be obiected to him, that hee ſhould ſo much forget him from whom hee had receiued all his aduancement. How much more iuſtly may the Lord except againſt vs, when as liuing and mooving only in & through him, we ſhall notwithſtanding affoord the vſe of our life and mooving rather to the ſeruice of the diuel in doing his will, then to the ſeruice of God in the promoting of his glory? When as Dauid vpon the miſinformation of Ziba, challenged Mephibosheth (one of Sauls line) for not ioyning with him and aſsiſting him in his troubles intended againſt him by his ſonne Abſalon, he, to cleare himſelfe of all imputation of falſe heartedneſſe towards Dauid, anſwered on this wiſe: All my fathers houſe were but dead men before my Lord the King, yet didſt thou ſet thy ſeruant among them that did eat at thine owne table[r]; ſignifying thereby that all the world might iuſtly condemn him for a villaine & a wretch, if being ſo aduanced by Dauid, (at whoſe mercy his life ſtood) he ſhould haue entertained a traiterous & diſloyall thought againſt him. I ſpeake it to this end, to ſhew how hatefull a thing it is to forget from whom a man hath receiued his firſt beginning, and vnthankfully to demeane ones ſelfe towards him by whom he is that which he is, and without whoſe gracious ſuſtaining he ſhould ſoone returne vnto his firſt nothing. This could not chuſe but be a very fruitfull and profitable meditation, when a man ſhould view himſelfe, and all the powers and faculties of his ſoule & body, and ſhould conſider withall from whom he had receiued them. How is it poſsible, but a man euen for very ſhame, ſhould thus thinke with himſelfe? Did God giue me a tongue to blaſpheme his Name, to ſlander others, to ſpeake of any thing rather then of his Word? did he beſtow mine eyes to behold vanity, to bee as windowes, to let in vncleane thoughts into my heart? Haue I my body to vſe it to adultery, to defile it with beaſtly drunkenneſſe, and to apply the ſeueral parts thereof as weapons of vnrighteouſnes[t] vnto ſin? Hath he made me able to heare, and ſhall I ſtop mine eares againſt his Word? Hath he giuen me ſtrength and health, to go and to trauell, and ſhal I loyter when I ſhould goe to his Houſe to be imployed in his ſeruice? Am I thus furniſhed thorow him with wit and reaſon, and capacity and vnderſtanding, and ſhall I be apt in other things, and remaine dull, and ignorant, and blockiſh in the knowledge of his will? Am I able to remember and carry away ſuch things as concerne my ſelfe, and ſhall I not labour to make my memory a ſtore-houſe, in which to lay vp ſuch holeſome doctrine, by which I may know how to walke in the waies of godlineſſe? This would be the fruit of this meditation, if when wee feele our owne power of life, and motion, of breathing, of hearing, of vnderſtanding, of remembring, we would conſider that wee haue receiued all this from Iehouah, that ſame Eternall Beeing, and that therefore it would be an intolerable ſhame for vs, not to deuote all that is in vs to his glory, from whom we haue receiued it.

A

A ſecond vſe of this ſecond ſignification of the word Iehouah, is to preſſe vpon vs a ſober and moderate vſe of Gods creatures. Euery thing is that which it is through him, hee is the head-Lord of all, which made all, which preſerueth all, which oweth all, and of his mercy and free grace hee hath allowed the free vſe of his creatures for our neceſſary reliefe and lawfull delight; and euery creature (ſaith the Scripture is good if it be vſed with thankeſgiuing [t]. Now we may be ſure, that he who is the Author of euery beeing, and the maintainer of it, will take account of the waſtfull conſuming of that, which had a beeing through him. It is the honour of God, that all things are through his power, and bee preſerued by his prouidence. Now though man (ſo farre as his commiſsion reacheth,) may ſpend the bleſsings of God, and conſume them for his needfull vſe, yet, without authority to turne that into nothing, which God hath made to bee ſomething, is more then any man ſhall be able to defend before God. It is a good point, to be thought vpon, by all thoſe, who for the ſatisfying of their carnall and beaſtly appetites, do make hauocke and ſpoile of Gods good creatures; ſo, as do drunkards and quaffers, and ſuch to whome their belly is their God [u]; and ſuch alſo as ſuperfluouſly waſt that which might well be ſpared, vpon the vnneceſſary trimming and dreſsing of themſelues. What haſt thou to do, O thou man, to conſume that, by which the Lord accounts himſelfe honoured, that it is his creature? Thou art (I know) a free-holder here vpon the earth, and God hath made all things for thy vſe, but yet (that I may vſe a phraſe of law) not without impeachment of waſte: That nothing be loſt, it was one of our Sauiours Items *. The Lord hath granted thee a leaſe with a very large ſcope, but yet all is confined and ſhut vp with this prouiſo, Prouided alwayes that all things be vſed with ſobriety. Let vs remember this then: all things haue their beeing from God, and (as the Head of this great houſe, the world,) hee will take account how thoſe things which he hath made to bee, man hath made not to bee; and the more liberall hee is miniſtring to our neceſsity, the more ſtrait he will be in puniſhing our ſuperfluity. Theſe be the two vſes of the ſecond ſenſe of the name Iehouah: It is hee which giueth beeing vnto all things; therefore our life is to be ſpent to his glory; therefore that which hee hath made to be, is not to be waſted at our pleaſure, without his ſpeciall Authoritie.

The 2. Vſe.

[t] 1. Tim. 4. 3.

* Ioh 6. 12.

He is thirdly called Iehouah, becauſe hee giueth beeing to all his promiſes, all of them in their due time ſhall receiue their full accompliſhment. This doth alſo teach vs two things: Firſt, it ſerueth to be a ſtrengthening to our faith, and an aſſurance to vs, that what mercy, or grace, or goodnes ſoeuer God hath promiſed, it ſhall certenly be beſtowed. It is as poſsible for the Lord not to be God, as not to keepe his word. Hath he promiſed that Whoſoeuer beleeueth in Chriſt, ſhall haue life eternall [x]? hath he ſaid, that he Which truſteth in him, ſhall ſtand faſt for euer [y]? hath he teſtified of himſelfe, that he Will neuer faile thee nor forſake thee [z]? that if thou draw neere vnto him, he will draw neere vnto thee [a]? that if thou call vpon him in truth [b], he will ſurely heare thee? that if thou obey him, hee will bleſſe thee? Know this; he cannot alter the thing which is gone out of his lips [c], it is not poſsible that any of theſe promiſes ſhould fall to the ground vnfulfilled. This ought to bee laid vp in ſtore by all that feare God againſt the day of triall: Whatſoeuer we thinke in our ignorance and ſecuritie, yet if we belong to God, we ſhall at one time or other feele how hard a thing it is to beleeue Gods promiſes: fleſh and blood being helped forward by the diuell, will affoard ſo many doubts, that we ſhall finde much to do, to ouercome our own diſtruſtfulnes, and to depend wholly vpon the Lord. Therefore let this euer bee remembred, that the God in whom we beleeue his name is Iehouah, that is, one who alwaies giues iſſue to all promiſes. Well he may deferre to fulfill them, for the exerciſe of our faith, and the triall of our patience, but it is vnpoſsible that he ſhould finally diſanull them.

The 2. Vſe.

d Ephes.5.1. God as deare children[d]. As then God will not faile in any promiſe of mercy vnto vs, ſo ſhould we make conſcience not to faile in any promiſe of obedience vnto him. Wee promiſed in our Baptiſme to forſake the Diuell and all his works, to walke in the way of Gods commandements. Euery time wee come to the Lords Table, we renew this promiſe in theſe words; And here we offer vp vnto thee, our ſelues, our ſoules, and our bodies, to be a reaſonable, holy, and liuely ſacrifice vnto thee.) What wee doe priuately God knoweth, but euery time wee meet together here, we make ſhew to beg grace that we may liue a godly, righteous, and a ſober life. Now if we looke and hope that God ſhould be conſtant in his promiſes to vs, it is great reaſon, that we ſhould looke to the vowes with which we haue tied our ſelues to him. With what face can wee lay any claime to the promiſes of Gods mercy, when the Lord ſhall haue ſuch cauſe to accept againſt vs, that we haue but dallied with him, profeſsing to renounce the workes of Satan, and yet walking after the courſe of the world, like the children of diſobedience, ſeeming deſirous to liue ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, and yet liuing in ignorance, in exceſſe, in vanity, in profanenes, in contempt of all goodnes! Wherefore let vs labour herein to be like vnto God: whatſoeuer good he promiſeth to vs, hee will ſurely performe; the obedience which we haue vowed to him, let vs make conſcience to practiſe.

The end of the firſt Sermon.

The second Sermon.

Strong.

OF the first thing by which God is here described, namely his Essence and Beeing, we haue heard. We come now to the next, which is his power, in this word (Strong.) And this point is worthy the examining, forasmuch as there is scarcely any one leafe or page in the whole Bible, in which there is not some mention made of the power and strength of God. I will follow this course in speaking of it. First, I will shew why & in what respects the Lord is called Strong or powerfull; and then next, of what vses this point touching Gods strength may be vnto vs.

The Lord is called a mighty, strong, or powerfull God, for three causes. First, because he doth mightily bring to passe whatsoeuer he will in the whole world, and besides, whatsoeuer he will not, or hath not decreed, the same hee hindreth, confoundeth, and scattereth, so that it can neuer take effect. Touching the former of these two branches, we haue the Testimony of the Psalme, [a] Whatsoeuer pleaseth the Lord, that did he in heauen and in earth, in the sea, & in all the depths: & for the latter, the speech of Salomon is expresse, Many deuises are in a mans heart, but the counsell of the Lord shall stand [b]: the meaning is, that howsoeuer men doe plot, and deuise and consult about many things, yet all their designes are ordered onely by the counsell and determination of the most High: that which he is pleased to crosse, all the strength of all the men in the world is not able to effect. How easily did the Lord confound the great enterprise of the sonnes of men combining together to build a tower, by which to ennoble themselues, and to perpetuate their names and memories among men [c]? A great assault was made against Lots house, the men of Sodome compassed the house round about, from the young euen to the old, all the people frō all quarters [d], yet the Lord smote them suddenly with blindnes, and their attempt was vtterly in vaine. It was a dangerous conspiracy that of Absolom against Dauid; The treason was great (saith the Text) for the people increased still with Absalom [e], so that euen Dauid himselfe, whose heart was as the heart of a Lyon [f], was afraid; yet how soone was all this discomfited, it appeareth in the story at large. It were easie to alleadge many like examples. There is one which may serue in stead of a great many; I meane the Lord his mighty ouer-ruling and ouer-mastring the malice and power of the diuell and his instruments, who had laid so dangerous and hellish a plot for the ouerthrow of all mankind, yet the power of God hath so vtterly defeated him, that the seruants of God may bee bold in this case to vse the words of Dauid [g], His mischiefe shall returne vpon his owne head, and his cruelty shall fall vpon his own pate. This then is the first cause why God is called strong, what soeuer he willeth, that he effecteth, whatsoeuer he disliketh, that same he easily ouerthroweth. The second cause, is, because he bringeth all things to passe without any difficulty. His willing a thing to be done, is the doing of it, his very becke (as it were) and nod, is sufficient to the effecting of such things as he hath determined shall take place. We haue a plaine testimony hereof in the creation of the world. For howsoeuer Epicures and Atheists scoffe at the creation, and when they heare that God made all things, aske in derision, what instruments & leauers, & engines he had, yet the Scripture hath taught vs, that God made all things by his very word: He commanded (saith the Psalme) and they were created [h]: He said, Let there be light, and there was light: Let there be a firmament, &c.

And this is worthy the noting, as an argument of the strength and power of God, that howsoeuer for the most part, he vseth meanes for the bringing of these things to passe, which he hath determined, yet, lest we should so farre admire the meanes, as that in the meane time we should ascribe the lesse vnto him that vseth them, he doth ordinarily effect the greatest things by the weakest and most vnlikely meanes. He brought the Israelites out of the Egyptians captiuity by Moses and Aaron, two silly persons (in mans opinion) to preuaile against so

In the wars of Princes it is thought, that the more strength there is, & the greater multitude of fighting men, the more likely-hood of victory; but yet God said, the company was too great, knowing that the people would be ready to vaunt and to say, Mine hand hath saued me: therefore the Lord brought them from two and thirty thousand, to 300. men. It was all one with him to saue with few as with many: and the smaller was the company, the more glorious was the victory. But in matters of grace and saluation, the matter is much more apparant, how strong God is, to do great matters by weake instruments. The worke is great, to loose the

The wise men of the world looke for some great matter, which might breed astonishment. But what is it? And in another place, when Chriſt was apprehended, and Peter began to make reſiſtance, Put vp (ſaid hee) thy ſword into his place, thinkeſt thou, that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he will giue me more then twelue Legions of Angels e? By which words our Sauiour ſheweth, that both he could haue asked his Father, and that his Father was able thus to haue ſupplied him, but yet neither of them for the time would do that, which they were able to haue done. The like might be ſhewed in other ſpecialties, but theſe may ſuffice. And thus you vnderſtand the reaſons, for which God is called ſtrong. Firſt, what he will he effecteth, and croſſeth the contrary. Secondly, that which he willeth, hee eaſily accompliſheth. Thirdly, his power is not limited to that which he doth; but he is able to doe much more, if it ſo ſeeme good vnto his Maieſty.

Before I come to make vſe of this doctrine, I muſt ſhew with what exceptions it muſt bee vnderſtood: for notwithſtanding this infinite ſtrength and power of God, ſome things there are which God cannot doe, as namely, he cannot ſinne, he cannot lie ſaith the Apoſtle f, and in another place he cannot denie himſelfe g. It is as vnpoſsible that theſe things ſhould come from the nature of God, as it is, that the light of the Sunne ſhould bring darkeneſſe, or that a white colour ſhould make that thing blacke, to which it is applyed. If you aske mee now, how can God then bee ſaid to bee of ſo great ſtrength, ſeeing you haue named ſome things which he cannot doe; I anſwere, that his being not able to doe theſe things, doth argue the infiniteneſſe of his power. It is weakeneſſe in vs that we ſinne, it is fullneſſe of power in him that he cannot ſinne. It is thee great power of God, that hee cannot lie h; If hee could lie, deceiue, or bee deceiued, he were not omnipotent i. Againe, God cannot doe thoſe things which imply a contradiction, as namely, to make a thing to bee and not to bee both at an inſtant, or to make that which hath beene not to haue beene. It is a good ſaying to this purpoſe of a learned man k: Whoſoeuer (ſaith hee) ſaith thus; If God bee omnipotent, let him make thoſe things not to bee done, which haue already beene done; that man doth not conſider, that it is all one, as if he ſhould ſay; If he be omnipotent, let him bring to paſſe that thoſe things which are true, may be falſe, euen in the ſame reſpect for which they are true. And againe l, This ſentence (ſaith he) by which we ſay, that this or that hath beene, is therefore true, becauſe that whereof wee ſpeake, now is not: This ſentence God cannot make to be falſe, becauſe he is not contrary to the truth. And this is to be obſerued againſt thoſe of the Church of Rome, who for that groſſe opinion of theirs, touching Chriſt his bodily preſence in the Sacrament, pleade Gods omnipotencie m. Hee (ſay they) is almighty and ſtrong, able to doe any thing, and therefore able to do this alſo, albeit we cannot conceiue it. Now we muſt obſerue, that though God be ſtrong (as I haue ſhewed) yet this is none of the things for which he is ſo called, becauſe it doth neceſſarily imply a contradiction, For it is in the nature of a body, to be within the compaſſe of one place onely at one time. Now, for Chriſts body at one and the ſame inſtant of time, to retaine the nature of a true body, and yet with all to be in diuers places, and not ſubiect to ſenſe, it is as vnpoſsible, as it is for him to haue a body, and to haue no body, to be Chriſt, and not to be Chriſt all at one moment. Beſides, it is a good rule, that, when we ſpeake of that power of God which the learned call his actuall or working power, we muſt not ſeuer it from his reuealed will. It is a worthy ſpeech of our Sauiour to the Saducees n, Ye are deceiued, not knowing the Scripture, nor the power of God. Whatſoeuer we perceiue to be his will, there we muſt make no doubt of accompliſhment: where there is no euidence of his will, there wee may not preſume of his ordinary power. The Papiſts therefore who in this point of tranſubſtantiation, ſo much vrge Gods power, let them (if they can) prooue it to bee Gods will, to make ſuch a ſupernaturall alteration, otherwiſe their argument fetched from the Power of God, cannot helpe them. Thus much touching the doctrine of the Strength of Iehouah, let vs proceede to the vſes, which may be commended vnto vs out of this doctrine.

The 1. Vſe. The firſt vſe is, to worke and frame vs to a ſtanding in awe of Gods Maieſtie, and to a feare of continuing in any ſuch courſe as may diſpleaſe him. This is prooued out of the ſaying of Peter[o], Humble your ſelues therefore (ſaith he) there is counſell to caſt downe our ſelues in all humility before God; then there is a reaſon for it, becauſe his hand is mighty, he can doe whatſoeuer pleaſeth him. Like vnto this is that ſpeech of our Sauiour[p], Feare him which is able to deſtroy both body and ſoule in hell: as if he had ſaid, you ſee what God can doe, hell fire is at his command to caſt both bodies and ſoules into it, therefore take heede how you offend him, he was neuer yet ouermaſtred. It is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of the liuing God[q]. Reaſon it ſelfe teacheth thus much; to beware of angring him who is able double and treble to requite vs. A tenant is afraid to offend his Lord, he is ready to ride and go for him, and to doe him any ſeruice: and why? he knowes he is able to doe him a diſpleaſure: Nay the borrower, although he payes full dearely for the loane; yet is euen afraid of the lender, and ſpeakes him faire, leſt he ſhould bring him into ſome extremity. They of Tyrus and Sidon (ſaith the ſtory) came with one accord and deſired peace of Herod: & what was the cauſe? their countrey was nouriſhed by the Kings land[r]. Thus the light of nature hath taught to feare, where there is power to reuenge. But in matters of religion it is not ſo: There are many things, touching which it is euident in Scripture both what God can doe, and what he will doe. Concerning his will, we well know what he hath expreſly ſpoken of many ſinnes. If ye will not be reformed by me, but walke ſtubbornely againſt me, then will I alſo walke ſtubbornely againſt you[s]. Hee that when heareth the words of the curſe, bleſſeth himſelfe in his heart, ſaying, I ſhall haue peace, &c. the Lord will not bee mercifull vnto him,[t] &c. Be not deceiued, neither fornicatours, nor idolaters, &c ſhall inherit the Kingdome of God[u]. Many ſuch euidences there are touching the will and purpoſe of God, touching thoſe which walke in their ſinnes *. Now if to theſe and to the like ſayings, we adde that which is ſpoken here touching his Strength, (he wants abilitie to doe nothing which he hath a will to execute) we ſhall well perceiue that theſe ſpeeches are no ſcar-crowes or idle threats, but ſhall come to paſſe as certainly, as we do heare them ſpoken vnto vs in Gods word. Yet when the Scripture is ſo full touching the concurrence of theſe two; Gods purpoſe to puniſh, and his power to puniſh, who amongſt vs (notwithſtanding) is afraid to run vpō the pikes of both theſe? It ſeemes either that wee thinke that it is but an idle tale which is ſpoken touching Gods purpoſe to take vengeance, or elſe that we are at a point & doe not care for the extremity of his power. How is it poſsible, that men beleeuing the Scripture, which ſaith that God will turne into hell all proud contemners of his word, all neglecters of his worſhip, all ſwearers, all prophaners of the Sabbath, all malicious perſons, all wantons, all belly-gods, all couetous ones, all oppreſſors, all guilefull perſons; how (I ſay) can it be, that men beleeuing this, & thinking alſo that there is no impoſsibility with God, to make good that which hee hath ſaid, ſhould notwithſtanding liue in theſe ſinnes, delight in them, glory and boaſt of them, defend them, hate thoſe that admoniſh them, maligne thoſe which goe about to reforme them? Well, yet whatſoeuer prophane men imagine, thinking God to be like them[x], the matter is euident inough, both touching the will of God, and touching his power; if he be wanting in either, he is not God: therefore let vs all know this; If wee learne not to feare Gods power, we ſhall ſurely feele it, he vſeth to ſay nothing, but that which he doth will and can performe.

The 2. Vſe. The ſecond vſe is fitly to be annexed to the former, as a motiue to encourage vs now at the laſt to come out of thoſe ſins in which we haue ſo long continued. True it is, it is a dangerous thing for a man to hold out in any one knowne ſinne, as namely, to haue bin a ſwearer, a railer, a curſed ſpeaker, a ſcorner of religion, a drunkard, a vicious perſon, a deceiuer a long time, for many yeares together: I ſay this is a dangerous caſe, and the ſin of that man is exceeding grieuous in the ſight of God, which hath ſo long cleaued vnto him: yet for all that, if we will yet become new creatures, and truely repent vs of our liues paſt, God is Strong, able to pardon vs, able to tenue vs, able to bring vs out of the power of Satan, out of the bondage and captiuity of ſin. Paul ſaith of the Iewes, that are now cut off from Chriſt through vnbeliefe, and haue ſo continued in enmity againſt him, theſe many hundred yeeres, if they abide not ſtill in vnbeliefe, they ſhall be graffed in: and what is his reaſon? God is able to graffe them in againe [y]: There Paul fetcheth an argument from the ſtrength of God. So in this caſe though it be a fearefull thing to haue continued twenty, thirty, or more yeeres in an euill courſe, yet if at laſt we ſhall returne, and ſeeke the Lord in humility, God is ſtrong to forgiue, ſtrong to ſaue, it paſſeth not his power to put away our tranſgreſſions as a cloud [z], & to make them, although they were red like ſcarlet, yet to become as wooll [a].

Thirdly, that the Lord is a ſtrong God, it is a doctrine of very ſpeciall and ſingular comfort, to all that feare him, & put their truſt in his mercy: becauſe it is an aſſurance to them that they ſhall neuer periſh, and that the gates of hell ſhall neuer bee able to preuaile againſt the leaſt member of Chriſt Ieſus. The elect of God are in this life mightily beſet; it is (as I may ſo ſpeake) the principall part of the diuels buſines, to deuiſe how he may hazard and entrap their ſoules. When they looke into themſelues, they ſhall ſee no meanes of reſiſtance, but a readineſſe rather in their owne nature to entertaine euery baite which Satan layeth, and to yeeld to euery ſin which he ſhall perſwade; ſo that they haue iuſt cauſe, conſidring their owne weaknes, & comparing it with the power of the ſpirituall aduerſary, to cry out as Eliſha his ſeruant did, when he ſaw an hoſt had compaſſed the Citie, Alas, what ſhall we doe [b]? But now in this caſe, the ſtrength and power of their good God, is the ſure & ſtedfaſt ancre of their ſoule [c]: Here is their comfort, euen as Eliſha anſwered his ſeruant, They that be with vs, are more then they that be with them [d]. And this vſe Chriſt himſelfe teacheth vs to make: For, ſpeaking of the certainty of the ſaluation of his elect, he ſpeaketh thus, I giue to my ſheepe eternall life, and they ſhall neuer periſh, neither ſhal any plucke them out of my hand: And what is his reaſon? It is grounded vpon the ſtrength & power of God, My father which gaue thē me is greater then all, & none is able to take thē out of my Fathers hand [e]. This is that which Paul calleth the foundation of the Lord which remaineth ſure [f]: Well may the deuill ſtriue and beſtirre himſelfe, and exerciſe the vtmoſt of his helliſh power, but it is all in vaine: the choſen of God are borne out by an high hand, and in deſpight of Sathan, are kept by the power of God through faith vnto ſaluation [g]. Nay the power of the deuill is in this caſe ſo yoked and ouerruled by the power of God, that as the bloody minded Haman, that thirſted after nothing ſo much as the blood of Mordecai, was yet forced by the kings commandement, to be the chiefe in the gracing and honouring of Mordecai [h]: euen ſo Sathan likewiſe (whoſe mouth is euer open to deuoure) is compelled to aduance and further the ſaluation of Gods people, & is but (as it were) the rod in the hand of God, to chaſten & to humble them, and to bring them neerer vnto heauen. S. Iohn ſpeaking of the danger of falſe teachers, by which many were miſled, comforts the beleeuers againſt them, and aſſureth them, that it was not poſsible for them finally to be corrupted by them; and he groundeth his reaſon vpon Gods power, Greater is he which is in you, then hee which is in the world [i], that is, Chriſt Ieſus dwelling in you by his ſpirit, is mightier and ſtronger then the ſpirit of Sathan, which ſitteth in the tongues of ſeducers, and therefore to you, who are vpheld by his power, there is no danger. Thus the doctrine of Gods ſtrength is a ſtore-houſe of comfort to Gods ſeruants, be their wants neuer ſo great, be their meanes of eaſe neuer ſo ſmall or vnlikely, bee their hopes in regard of outward helpes neuer ſo ſlender, the difficulties, through which they muſt paſſe neuer ſo many, yet here is their ſtay, Faithfull is he which hath called vs, which will alſo do it [k]. This was the ground of Abrahams faith; he was

Now to the end we may rightly apply this forenamed vse, we must ioyne to it another consideration, namely, wee must labour to finde in our selues, and to feele in our owne soules the experience of Gods power. If you demand of me, what kinde of feeling it is which I speake of, in regard that euen the diuels and damned soules, haue a feeling of Gods power, I referre you to an excellent place n Eph. 1. 19, 20. of Pauls[n], where the Apostle is a suter to God on the behalfe of the Ephesians, that he would giue them the spirit of wisedome, to the end they might know the exceeding greatnesse of Gods power towards beleeuers, according to the working of his mighty power which he wrought in Christ. Marke the place well: The Apostle would haue vs to feele in our selues that power of God, whereof Christ Iesus in the dayes of his flesh (as he was man) had experience. Christ vpon the crosse died the first death, which is the separation of the body from the soule; he suffered also in his soule the sorrowes of the second death, so much as was possible for such a soule as he was to apprehend them. After his bodily death, hee was laid in the graue, where death might seeme (as it were) to triumph ouer him three dayes. Now herein God shewed his power, in that hee loosed the sorrowes of the graue, and raised him vp againe from death to life. This is a speciall part of that power of God which he wrought in Christ. Now the thing which Paul aimed at, (& which I doe aime at also in vrging his words) was and is, that we should labour to feele the very same strength and power of God in our selues. How may that bee (will some men say?) Euen thus. The naturall corruption which is in vs, is (as it were) our graue, and as a man lieth dead in his graue and cannot moove, so are wee by p Titus 1. 16. therefore God did manifest his power, in raising vp Christ, so we should also endeauour to haue in our selues a feeling of the same power, in raising vs vp from the graue of sinne vnto newnesse of life. This is that which Paul calleth by this q Phil. 3. 10. name, The vertue of Christs resurrection[q], and for the gaining hereof he counted all things but as dung, euen that hee might secretly feele that power whereby Christ was raised, to raise vp him also from the bondage of his sins. Now to apply this. Thou hast heard of the strength and power of Iehouah, and thou hast beene taught to make this vse of it; to resolue thereby of the certainty of thy saluation, because his strength is such as can not be ouer-mastred. If thou wouldest truly take comfort in this, it behoueth thee to looke into thy selfe, to see what experience thou hast of the power of God in raising thee out of the bondage and slauery of thine owne corruption. If thou art still in captiuitie of thine old wonted courses, there is no change, no newnesse in thee, still thou art one manner of man, no encreasing in knowledge, no renewing in the inner man, no reformation of life, still an ignorant man, still a despiser of good things, still a worldling, still a walker after thine owne lusts, still like the blacke-moore, whose skin beeing often washed, is not changed[r]: I must tell thee plainely and truly; this vse towards the certainty of sal-

r Ier. 13. 23. uation grounded vpon Gods power, appertaines not to thee: well thou mayest feele the strong arme of God, in plunging thee into hell, but thou shalt neuer feele his gracious and mercifull power in sauing thee from destruction. If thou wouldest then finde any sweetnesse in this, that God is so strong in preseruing his seruants soules, that none can plucke them from him, labour to feele that power in raising thee from sinne, which the Lord shewed in raising vp Christ from the graue, a power (I say) killing thy corruption, and raising thee vp to newnesse of life. And so much for this, that Iehouah is strong.

The end of the second Sermon.

The third Sermon.

Mercifull, and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in goodnes and truth, Reseruing mercy for thousands, and forgiuing iniquity, and transgression, and sinne.

I Am in this Sermon to speake of the third thing by which God is described, namely, his Mercy. A point of that largenesse, that I may sooner finde entrance into it, then measure in it. The Scripture saith; that all Gods paths are mercy [a], The earth is full of it, so is the sea great and wide [b], It reacheth to the heauens [c], It is ouer all his workes [d]: The Lord hath stepped no where in heauen, earth, or sea, but hee hath left some prints of his mercy behinde him. No heart can conceiue it, the tongue of men and Angels cannot vtter it. It is so infinite that no affection in nature, no proportion in the whole world hath beene found fit to expresse it. The height of heauen aboue the earth [e], the distance of the East from the West [f], the loue of fathers towards their children [g], of mothers to the fruit of their womb [h], of nurses to the sucklings [i], of Eagles to their young ones [k], of hens to their chickings [l], all these haue beene but shadowes to it, but no sufficient measures by which to scan it. But, (that I may not wander from my Text) we must obserue, that the mercy of God stands in two things, Giuing, and Forgiuing. The former all Gods creatures tast of: Thou Lord doest saue both man and beast [m]. The latter is peculiar onely to his Elect: Hee is the Sauiour of all men, specially of them that beleeue [n]. The first is the larger, but the latter is the most excellent; and of it the Spirit of God especially speaketh in this place.

In treating of it, I will open the particular wordes and clauses, by which this sweet property of Gods nature is laid out vnto vs: And then I will apply my selfe wholly to shew what vse we must make of the doctrine of Mercy.

The order of this Sermon.

Touching this property of Gods nature there are heere sixe branches. The first is, Mercifull. The word in the Heorew, which in our tongue is translated (mercifull) is drawne from a roote, which signifieth the bowels: to note vnto vs (that I may speake of God as of a man for our capacities sake) how tender-hearted the Lord is, and how he doth (as we say) condole our miseries, and euen inwardly commiserate, and pitty our estate. I remember the speech in the Prophet, where the Lord is pleased (to make vs the better to conceiue of his mercy) to take to himselfe the affections of a man; and that he might signifie how litle pleasure hee tooke in the forsaking of his people, and how willing hee would be vpon repentance to receiue them, he saith, his bowels were troubled for Ephraim [o], as who would say, it went neere him, that hee should euen be forced by their vntowardnesse to deale so straightly with them. The like to this is intended in the language of the new Testament; according as it is said of Christ, that when he saw the multitude, his bowels yearned within him, because they were dispersed, as sheepe hauing no shepheard [p]. This is the meaning of the first branch: God is mercifull, that is, he aboundeth in compassion, and is (as the Psalme saith) a pitifull God [q]. The second branch is Gracious. This word in the true and native signification of it, doth report vnto vs touching God thus much: That he doth freely and willingly and (as I may speake) with a kinde of forwardnesse, doe good and shew kindnesse vnto men: as who would say, it were a kind of reioycing to him to haue occasion to shew mercy. Like vnto that which Saint Iames saith, that God giueth to all askers, liberally, or, With franke heart, and vpbraideth no man[r] It is no burden to him to affoord his fauour, hee is neuer weary of shewing kindnesse. This is Gracious.

r Iam. 1.5.

3. Slow to anger.

The third is Slow to anger, that is to say, a God, who though he cannot abide iniquity, yet is full of patience, suffering long, and not proceeding to extreamity, vntill he be by mens impenitency euen vrged thereunto. How slow was hee with the old world, and for how long did his spirit striue with man[s], stopping the course of vengeance, as long as it might stand with the honour of his iustice to forbeare? In the Psalme so ordinarily read vnto vs, it is said, that hee suffered the Israelites in the wildernesse forty yeares[t]. Many a time did they prouoke him by their counsels, saith Dauid[u]. It was long before hee suffered his wrath to breake out, yea, and when he did giue way his iustice, he did oft times call backe his anger, and did not stirre vp all his wrath *. In Isay, he is said, to waite that he may haue mercy [x]. And his slowenesse to anger is so great, that the world accounts it slackenesse [y], and because of his long remitting, doe thinke that hee will neuer iudge, but either is not, or else hath left each man to his owne liberty. This is Slow to anger; he is often prouoked, he is daily vrged, yet he is patient towards all.

4 Abundant in goodnesse and truth.

The fourth is, Abundant in goodnesse and truth. By goodnesse, is meant a disposition euen with kindnesse to winne mens hearts, and by blessings to allure them to himselfe: and by truth is vnderstood, fidelity and constancy in his promises, without failing: so that touching Iehouah in this clause, is said thus much, namely, that as hee doth forbeare to doe that in which iustice hee might doe, beeing so much prouoked by vs, so he doth also prouoke vs by his benefits to returne vnto him; and being a God which cannot lie[z], hee hath tyed himselfe by promise to accept our submission, and when we repent to be ready to receiue vs. Thus doth hee abound in goodnesse and truth.

5. Reseruing mercy for thousands. a 1 King. 10. 27.

The fift branch is, Reseruing mercy for thousands. This serueth to shew vs, that his mercy is euerlasting, like a fountaine, euer springing, which can neuer be drawne dry. There is no earthly King, although his treasure were like Salomons, who gaue siluer in Ierusalem as stones [a], yet if hee should keepe no measure in his giuings, his coffers would soone bee emptied, and his millions of wealth drawne into a little summe: but yet the Lords mercy is without bottome, it is a store that cannot be spent, it is a lampe fed with the oyle of immortality, that can neuer be consumed.

6. Forgiuing iniquity, and transgression, and sinne.

The last branch is, Forgiuing iniquitie, and transgression, and sinne. This is (as it were) the very life and soule of Gods mercy, and the thing to which all the former aymed. Let vs examine the meaning: first, here are three things named, or rather one thing stiled by three names. By the first, here translated Iniquity, is meant that vniuersall corruption of nature, which wee haue all drawne from Adam, as from a root, and in which (as Dauid speaketh) we are all conceiued [b]. By the second, called Transgression, is vnderstood sinne in outward act; properly signifying a falling away from God, because it is a shaking off of that due obedience which we owe vnto him. By the third, tearmed Sinne, is signified a higher degree of euill, as namely, when men are growne hard in sinne, and doe commit it without feare, making no reckoning of reproofe. These three are the very same degrees spoken of in the first Psalme: the first is, the counsell of the vngodly; the spring of corruption which is in euery naturall heart: the second is, the way of sinners, when men breake forth into outward enormities: the third is, the chaire of scorners, when they are become shamelesse, and are enemies to the meanes of their owne good. Now the Lord speaking of forgiuing, nameth these three degrees, to shew, that there is no sinne so hainous, whether naturall corruption, or outward transgression, or stiffe-necked presumption, but (vpon repentance) the mercy of God is able and ready to remit it. This is that which is intended in these three tearmes, Iniquity, transgression, sinne. Let vs now see what it is to forgiue. God is said to forgiue, when hee doth esteeme our sinnes as though they had neuer beene committed, meaning neuer to call vs to any account or

reckoning for the same. For this cause God speaking in the Scripture of forgiuenesse, to signifie the true meaning thereof, vseth these manner of speeches: I haue put away thy transgressions as a cloud, and thy sinnes as a mist [c], meaning that as the strength and heate of the Sunne dissolueth the clouds, and disperseth the mists, that they appeare not, so the bright beames of Gods fauour doe banish away sinne, that it is neuer after to be seene. In another place, I will forgiue their iniquity, and remember their sinnes no more [d]. Againe, In those daies (saith the Lord) the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none, and the sinnes of Iudah, & they shall not be found [e]. To this end God is said to cast sinnes behinde his backe [f], and into the bottome of the Sea [g]. These manner of speeches the Scripture vseth to shew what it is to forgiue, euen to make such a finall and through riddance of our sins, as that they shall neuer be brought into iudgement against vs to condemne vs. The foundation of this forgiuenesse of sinne, is the merit of Christ; In him wee haue redemption through his blood, the forgiuenesse of sinnes [h]. To make this manifest how, by, and for Christ sinnes are forgiuen, we must consider, that in sinne there are three things; The first is, the offence it selfe, the straying and abberration from the will of God, by which God is offended. The second is, the guilt, by which the party offending is lyable vnto eternall punishment. The third is, the blot, the corruption, the staine, which the sin committed leaues and imprints in the offender, as a fruit by which followeth all aptnesse and proneneſse in the heart either to the same sinne, or to any other. These three are abolished by the merit of Christ. The fault is remooued by his obedience: The guilt is taken away by his sufferings: The corruption hidden by his holinesse, and the very beeing of it, daily diminished by the strength and power of his Spirit. If any man aske how this can be, I answer that it commeth to passe, by that which wee call Imputation, by which there is a kinde of translation, or putting ouer of the Beleeuers sins vnto Christ, and againe, of Christs righteousnes to the Beleeues. Christs obedience is counted the obedience of the Beleeuer: His sufferings, the sufferings of the Beleeuer: His holinesse, the holinesse of the Beleeuer. The right vnderstanding of this point, is the very staffe of all true comfort in religion. Thus I haue opened those sixe seuerall branches, by which the nature of Gods infinite mercy is described; The summe of all is this: He is a God full of compassion and pitying our miseries, a God who delighteth in mercy, and vouchsafeth his grace without grudging: one who is not easily prouoked, but suffereth long, prouoking rather by blessings euen the most obstinate, to returne, and binding himselfe by his promises to accept their submission; neither can the riches of his mercy be consumed, he hath enough in store for thousands; and whatsoeuer the euill bee, whether the corruption of our nature, or the sinfulnesse of our liues, or our insolent and presumptuous carriage towards him, all is one, it is soone swallowed vp in the bottomlesse gulfe of his mercy, if the haynous colour of it were as deepe as the scarlet, he will make it white as the snow before him [i]. This is the true sense and meaning of this description. Let vs now come to make vse of this heauenly doctrine of Gods mercy. But first I must shew you two things, 1. the necessity of this doctrine: 2. to what kinde of people it appertaines.

Concerning the necessity of this doctrine, it may (perhaps) seeme to some (the loosenesse of the times considered) not so fitting, and that the men of this generation doe neede rather that one should come among them with a rod, then in the spirit of meeknes [k]. I confesse that our age is a forlorne age, and that iniquity hath got the vpper hand. I know also, that pearles must not be cast before swine [l], nor the childrens bread giuen to whelps [m]; yet I know too, that the spouse of Christ must not bee robbed of this pearle, nor Gods children abridged of their necessary food. Christ himselfe is a stone to stumble at, and a rock of offence to some, yet to others he is elect and precious [n], and wee must haue more respect to one humbled and broken-hearted sinner, then to ninety nine which know not what belongs to repen-

As concerning the neceſsity of this doctrine therefore, this I ſay, it is an eaſie thing to abuſe Gods mercy, but a hard thing to lay holde vpon Gods mercy: To preſume vpon Gods graciouſneſſe, is a thing ſoone done, but to bee well grounded in the aſſurance of Gods loue, is a matter of more difficulty. I deſire no better witnes herein, then a troubled ſoule, a wounded ſpirit, one that ſeeeth the horrour of ſinne, and feeleth (as it were) the very ſcorching of hell fire, whoſe conſcience is ſet vpon the rack: ſuch an one will tell you, what a hard matter it is to be perſwaded of Gods mercy. If you thinke I make a wrong ſuppoſition, looke vpon Dauid; A man would thinke that ſuch an one as hee was, ſhould neuer haue been brought to ſuch a ſtrait, as to haue doubted of Gods fauour, yet

This may cleere this point, touching the neceſsity of this doctrine.

The parties to whom it belongs. Now for the parties to whom it belongs, that is a point which muſt bee added alſo: for though no truth which God hath reuealed muſt be ſecreted, yet all truth muſt warily be deliuered. The doctrine of Gods mercy is to be taught with that caution and diſcretion, that if any man doe abuſe it, the fault may bee his owne, and the occaſion of preſuming may be found to be rather taken by him, then giuen to him. For the thing it ſelfe therefore, this I ſay: This doctrine is the Goſ-

If thou be a man of a contrite heart, that trembleſt at Gods iuſtice, that groneſt vnder the burden of thy ſins, and ſeeſt the woſulnes of thy eſtate, then this doctrine appertaines to thee, it is thy ſoule that I muſt ſpeak vnto, thou ſhalt not taſte. And thus hauing ſhewed the neceſsity of this doctrine, and who they be to whom it doth truely and onely appertaine: I come now to declare vnto you what is the true vſe of Gods Mercy.

The chiefe vſe of Gods Mercy in one word is this, euen to draw men to repentance. Knoweſt thou not (ſaith the Apoſtle) that the bountifulneſſe of God leadeth thee to repentance[g]? The Lord is not ſlack as men count ſlacknes, but is patient towards vs (ſaith Peter); And why? becauſe he would haue vs come to repentance[h]. Theſe are proofes ſufficient for this point. Onely for the clearing of it to euery mans vnderſtanding, let me ſhew you, how the conſideration of the riches of Gods mercy, ſhould be and is to all Gods children a motiue to repentance, This ſhall eaſily bee manifeſted vnto vs, by taking a view of the courſe and order of repentance. The firſt thing in repentance, or (if you will) the firſt degree of it, is a kind of inward perplexity, a mans thoughts being exerciſed and much abuſed about this point, what ſhall become of his ſoule hereafter. It is the thing ſhadowed out in the parable of the prodigall ſonne: It appeareth in the text, that after he had run an ill courſe a long time, to the vtter waſting of his patrimony, at laſt, he came to himſelfe[i], that is, he came to haue a deeper and more ſerious apprehenſion of his owne folly, and to queſtion with himſelfe, how to better his miſerable eſtate, thinking (no doubt) himſelfe vtterly vndone, if hee ſhould ſtill bee left to this wretched condition. This I ſay, is the firſt degree to repentance, and that which ſets an edge vpon all other holy duties of conuerſion; euen a kinde of feare of a mans owne ſelfe, making him to caſt many perils, and to be iealous of his owne eſtate. Now though the thundering out of the threatnings and terror of the law, bee a notable meanes to awake a ſecure heart, yet nothing will ſo much affect a mans minde, and euen melt his ſoule, as the due knowledge and earneſt conſideration of the vnſpeakeable riches of Gods Mercy. For the more a man thinkes with himſelfe of the goodneſſe of God, of his infinite bounty and vnſearchable loue, the greater will be his feare (eſpecially now at his firſt comming to haue any feeling) leſt hee ſhould miſſe it and be depriued of it. And indeede this is one of the maine differences betwixt the righteous and the wicked, namely, that the wicked and reprobate doe ſometimes feare the iuſtice of God, and tremble at the conceit of torment, but the Mercy of God affects them not, vnleſſe it bee that they take heart thereby to be the more ſinfull. But the ſeruants of God doe euen quake with the meditation of Gods gentleneſſe, and of that goodneſſe which the Scripture reporteth to bee in him, namely, leſt they ſhould come ſhort of his grace, and ſhut themſelues from the comfortable enioying of his loue. There is mercy with thee, O Lord, that thou mighteſt be feared[k]. A bleſſed feare which is the daughter of ſo worthy a mother as is Gods mercy. The ſecond degree of true repentance which is begotten by the mercy of God, is a deepe and vnfained ſorrow of heart for ſinne; when a man is touched euen at the very heart to thinke that he doth ſtand guilty of ſo many grieuous ſins before God. Now there is nothing ſo effectuall to beget this ſorrow as the conſideration of Gods mercy: Which that you may the better vnderſtand, I muſt let you know, that the Scripture mentioneth a double ſorrow for ſin: 1. a worldly ſorrow: 2. a godly ſorrow[l]. A worldly ſorrow, is a griefe for ſinne, ariſing from the apprehenſion of Gods wrath, and of the miſeries and torments like to follow thereupon. Thus Eſau ſorrowed, ſo did Ahab, ſo did Iudas, he would haue giuen a world, if he had beene able) that the fact of betraying Chriſt had beene vncommitted. A godly ſorrow, (which as the Apoſtle ſaith) cauſeth repentance vnto ſaluation, not to be repented of, is a griefe for ſinne, becauſe it is ſinne, that is, becauſe it is a thing diſpleaſing vnto God. And this is the true ſorrow: the true begetter and breeder whereof is the mercy of God. For when a man recounts with himſelfe, how gracious a God the Lord is, how rich in mercy, how aboundant in goodneſſe and truth, and ſhall remember alſo how many kindneſſes he himſelfe hath receiued from him, it

it cannot but wound his heart to consider, that hee should so vnthankefully, so wretchedly, and so vndutifully demeane himselfe towards him, of whose rich loue, he hath had that plentifull experience. This was that which struck Dauid so much, and vexed his soule to consider; Against thee, against thee, haue I sinned [m]. There were many circumstances in this sinne of his, which both might, and (no doubt) did iustly grieue him; but that which went neerest his heart was this, euen that God hauing beene so bountifull towards him, he notwithstanding had answered his loue, with so great a dishonour to his name. And the same is also intended in the example of the wastefull youth (the patterne of a true penitent:) you shall see how hee doth insist and dwell vpon that name (Father) I will rise and goe to my Father, and will say vnto him Father, [n] &c. Out of all question, it much increased his sorrow, to remember what a kinde Father hee had, and what an vngracious sonne he had beene to so good a Father. Hence it is, that it is so ordinary a thing in the Scripture, when the Lord would aggrauate mens sinnes, and discouer the haynousnesse of them, to make a rehearsall of his kindnesses, to the end that they might learne to be ashamed of themselues, that they had walked stubbornely against him, who had opened euen the treasures of his mercies vnto them. Thus hitherto you see, how the Mercy of God is a motiue to repentance. The third thing in repentance, is, (after this godly sorrow for sinne) an earnest suite for the pardon of sinne. Now in this it is apparent to euery mans vnderstanding, that there can be no such matter of incouragement to a mans soule, or that can giue him such boldnesse, to poure out his heart vnto God, as the consideration of his mercy. Let the wicked (saith the Prophet) returne vnto the Lord, And why? for hee will haue mercy vpon him, and to our God, for hee is very ready to forgiue [o]. Come (say the repenting people in Hosea) let vs returne vnto the Lord: what is their reason? He hath spoiled, and he will heale vs; he hath wounded vs, and hee will binde vs vp [p]. Dauid speaking of the mercy of God in pardoning his great sinne, sheweth the vse which the godly when they heard it, would make of it: Therefore shall euery one that is godly make his prayer to thee, in a time when thou maist bee found [q]. The Mercy which Dauid receiued, would encourage others to haue recourse in their necessities vnto God. The last thing in repentance, which is (as it were) the life of it, and the triall and token of the truth of it, is newnesse of life. The quickenesse whereof is the feeling of Gods mercy, and the apprehension of his loue. When Iosephs mistresse tempted him to vncleannesse, hee made her this answer [r]: Behold, my master knoweth not what he hath in the house with me, but hath committed all that he hath to my hand: there is no man greater in this house then I, neither hath he kept any thing from me, but onely thee, because thou art his wife; how then can I doe this great wickednesse? As if he had said, By my masters fauour, being at first a bond man, I am now the greatest in his house, there is nothing wherewith he hath not freely & fully entrusted me: with what face then should I doe such a wrong, & commit so great a villany against so bountifull a master? Thus he made his aduancement by his master, and the respectiue vsage hee had receiued from him, as a bulwarke to keepe off the siege of his mistresses incontinency. Euen so the children of God are wont to reason from the loue of God: Thus & thus hath God dealt with me, he hath not only created me, but when I was lost, by the blood of his Sonne he hath redeemed me; by his word he called me, by his Spirit he renued me, by his grace he hath hitherto, & doth still vphold me, what a shame then were it for mee, and how should I answer if I should aduisedly and presumingly offend him, and willingly continue in the open, apparent, and knowne breach of his will? What more forcible argument can there be to a godly life, then that which Saint Paul vseth, I beseech you brethren, by the mercies of God [s], &c. and in another place: seeing then we haue these promises, let vs cleanse our selues from all filthinesse of the flesh [t], &c. Marke how hee grounds his exhortation to a holy life vpon the mercies of God. And to the Hebrewes, Seeing wee receiue a kingdome which cannot be shaken, let vs haue grace whereby we may so serue God, that We may please him with reuerence and feare[u]. Sith God is so mercifull to giue vs a kingdome, we should be so dutifull as to serue him in feare. It is necessary, that our flesh, our corruption should be whipped forward with the scourge of the law, and should be kept in compasse with the terrour of the Lord *: but the obedience which doth not proceed from a heart possessed with the feeling of Gods loue, and respecting more the obedience it selfe then any thing else whatsoeuer, that same is no true obedience, it is but a seruile and an enforced conformity, God esteemes it not. Thus I haue made it plaine how the Scripture not without cause, doth ground the exhortation of repentance, vpon the doctrine of Gods mercy. The consideration of Gods mercy, breedes feare, which is (as it were) the harbinger to repentance, it begets hearty sorrow for sinne, it brings forth boldnesse to come before God to intreat his fauour, it stirres vp a desire to giue our selues vnto him, who hath bestowed so great things vpon vs; so that I may truly say, (as I did) that the maine vse of Gods mercy is to prouoke men to repentance.

* 2. Cor. 5. 11

What shall wee thinke then of the prophane and wretched course of the world, in which there is nothing more common, then to be drawne by the mercy of God vnto licentiousnesse. The yong man will bee loose, the proude man vaine, the drunkard riotous, the oppresser cruell, the swearer blasphemous, the adulterer vicious, each man in his kinde: and all, because God is mercifull, Christ hath dyed, his blood can wash out all. This is the common perswasion. The mercy of God euen the sweetest propriety of his nature, is made (with reuerence be it spoken) a Baude to all manner of vngodlinesse. Men will sinne, that grace may abound[x]. At whatsoeuer time a sinner repent, &c. and the saying of the theefe at the last gaspe; these things are in the mouth of euery Libertine. Thus the diuell hath taught men to turne the wholesomenesse of the Scripture into poyson, and to make that which by the wisedome of God was prouided as a preseruatiue against despaire, to be an encouragement to presumption. If you haue marked what I haue both said and prooued, it hath appeared plainely, that the mercie of God is rather a doctrine of restraint then of carnall liberty, a motiue to obedience rather then a warrant of loosenesse, a perswader rather to speed and hasten then to delay repentance. Is God mercifull? doe thou feare then, lest thou bee depriued of his mercy. Blessed is the man that so feareth[y]. Is hee kinde? be thou ashamed of thy selfe that hast abused his loue. Is hee ready to forgiue? sue to him while thou hast time, and entertaine his grace, while it is called day.[z] Is hee rich in bounty? the more liberall hee is to thee, striue thou to bee so much the more obedient vnto him. This is the doctrine of the Scripture, this is the Lords owne counsell: whatsoeuer other inference (differing from this) thou makest out of the doctrine of Gods mercy, thou shalt bee but as one of those whom Saint Peter speakes of, who peruert the Scripture to their owne destruction[a]. If thou wilt not credit mee, heare what God himselfe hath said, These things thou hast done, and I held my tongue, therefore thou thoughtest that I was like thee, but I will reproone thee[b], &c. and what the Apostle by the teaching of his spirit hath left vpon record, touching all those which are not led by the Lords bountifulnesse to repentance; they do heape vnto themselues wrath against the day of wrath[c]. The mercy of God, if it be rightly applyed, there is nothing more comfortable; if it be abused, as an occasion to the flesh, there is nothing more damnable. Therefore if at any time, when either thy conscience checketh thee, or the word of God reprooueth thee, thou hast by and by a secret conceipt, that thou maiest be bolde a little longer, in as much as God is gracious, and it is neuer too late to repent: know that this is the diuels doctrine, it was forged in hell, and not framed in the shop of the Scripture: and therefore pray with Dauid, Keepe thy seruant from presumptuous sinnes[d]. This is the maine and principall vse of this doctrine.

A second vse of this doctrine of Gods mercy.

Now there is some further vse to bee made of this description of Gods mercy, by way of exhorting vs to the imitation of it, both because we are in generall commanded to be followers of God as deare children [c], and in particular also are willed, to bee mercifull as our heauenly father is mercifull [f]. There are three things therefore in this description of the mercy of God, wherein we must endeauour to imitate God: 1. Compassion: 2. Slowenesse to anger: 3. Readinesse to forgiue.

Touching compassion, this the Scripture teacheth, that we are bound by the law of Christianity to endeauour the succouring and releefe of others of Gods children as carefully, and with as much tenderneſſe of affection, as if their miseries were our own. Remember them that are in bonds, as though you were bound with them [g]. This we are bound to, by that Communion of Saints, which in our Creede we professe to beleeue. This communion, as it stands in the imparting each to other the good graces of God which we haue receiued, so it requireth also a fellowship, and (as it were) a kind of sharing in temporall things. I meane not a communion, as Anabaptists doe, which barreth all propriety, but such as was in the Primitiue Church; of the members whereof it is said, that they had all things common [h], that is, in respect of vse, euery man tendring the common wants of others, as if they had beene his owne proper occasions. An excellent example whereof we haue in that care among the Disciples of Antiochia; who vnderstanding by the prophecy of Agabus, of an approaching dearth, purposed euery man according to his abilitie, to send succour to the brethren which dwelt in Iudæa [i]. And how this is vrged vpon all, it is worth the reading & considering, in that similitude of the Apostle fetched from the body; If one member suffer, all suffer with it: now saith he, ye are the body of Christ, and members euery one for your part [k].

This condemneth the generall want of this fellow-feeling which is in this iron age. It is euen now as of olde, we can be content our selues to take our ease, but no man is sorry for the afflictions of Ioseph [l]. Few men haue that tender-heartednesse, to account themselues (as it were) parties in the calamities of thers Christians, and to be as willing to further their releefe, as if it were their owne case. Well we may speake of the Communion of Saints, and of our good beleefe, but so long as we want these bowels of affection, to make it our care, by comfort, by counsell, by contribution (if we be able) or (at least) by prayer, to be helpfull to the afflictions of others, linked to vs by the bond of one and the same profession, our shewes of religion are but vaine. If we be not like Philemon, of whom the Apostle giues this testimony, that the hearts of the Saints were comforted by him [m], our profession is but vanitie, our faith is but (as S. Iames saith) a dead faith [n], of no estimation, of no account with the Lord.

The next duty of mercy, wherein we must striue to be like God, is slownesse to anger, that is, a labouring to temper the heat of our passions, and to keepe our affections in that good compasse, that they may not easily and suddenly bee prouoked. The Scripture speaketh excellently of this point: Be not thou of an hasty spirit to be angry; anger rests in the bosome of fooles [o]. He that is slow to wrath, is of great wisedome; but he that is of an hasty minde exalteth folly [p]. A foole in a day is knowne by his anger [q]. The discretion of a man deferreth his anger, and his glory is to passe by an offence [r]. Our Sauiour maketh vnadvised anger a degree of murther, and such an one (saith he) shall be culpable of iudgement [s]. Among the workes of the flesh, the doers whereof shall not inherit the kingdome of God, Paul numbreth wrath [t]. This is the verdict of the Scripture in this matter.

y Eccl.7.23.

The third branch of Mercy, wherein wee are to imitate God, is readinesse to forgiue. This is plaine in the Scripture; Forgiuing one another, euen as God for Christs sake forgiue you z. Forgiuing one another, if any man haue a quarrell to another, euen as Christ forgaue you, euen so doe yee a. And our Sauiour expounding that petition of the Lords prayer, Forgiue vs our trespasses, &c. deliuer out of it this expresse point: If you forgiue men their trespasses, your heauenly Father will also forgiue you, but if ye doe not forgiue, &c. no more will your heauenly Father forgiue you b. And after, speaking of this point by a parable of a seruant to whom his master had forgiuen much, but the same by and by was ready to plucke out his fellowes throte for a small summe, His Master (saith he) was wrath, &c. and then he concluds, so likewise shall mine heauenly Father do to you, except ye forgiue from your hearts each one to his brother their trespasses c: There can bee no surer pledge to a mans soule that his owne sinnes are forgiuen with God, then that readinesse which hee findes in himselfe to remit priuate wrongs. That heate which a man feeleth in a warme sunnie day, to be cast vpon him from a stone wall vnder which he walkes, he knoweth it to be a beating backe of the heate issuing against the wall from the Sunne: and so that yeelding, and that relenting which is in one Christian toward another, is but a beame of that grace and mercy which he himselfe hath receiued from the Lord. God may well propound vnto vs his owne example: for it is vnpossible for one man to doe that wrong to another, which wee haue all done to God: What shall we thinke then of our selues, if hee remitting a world of sinnes to vs, we shall not finde our selues content to let go some petty trespasses?

This is an admonition which concernes all: for it is vnpossible to liue heere in the world, without some cause of offence. If a man shall greedily apprehend euery occasion, there will be no end. There is no doubt but a man may in a Christian manner seeke a remedy against wrongs: for otherwise to what ende is ciuill gouernment? The Magistrate beareth not the sword for nought d, and some men are of that vnbridled nature, that if they be not by an ordinary course redressed, they will breake out into greater extremities. But herein men must looke to three things. First, to beware of a heart desirous of reuenge. To take vengeance is Gods office, and wee may not encroch vpon it. Secondly, to bee very aduised that our courses be not scandalous to the Church of God: Offences shall come, but woe be to the man by whom the offences commeth e. Thirdly, to vse extremity of law as a last refuge: it was the Corinthians fault, that they were by and by at the law one with another, when as among themselues matters might haue beene otherwise determined f. Euer remember that of Salomon, It is a mans honour to cease from strife g. A man cannot doe himselfe a greater credit, in the eyes and opinion of those that feare God, then to let goe displeasure.

The end of the third Sermon.

The fourth Sermon.

And not making the wicked innocent, visiting the iniquity of the fathers vpon the children and vpon childrens children, vnto the third and fourth generation.

THE fourth and last thing by which God is in this place described, is this iustice: the Iustice of God is here set out by two things. 1. By shewing vengeance vpon the persons of the wicked. 2. By punishing their posterity to many generations.

Touching the former; (not making the wicked innocent) the words in the Originall are very significant, on this wise: By acquiting he wil not acquite the wicked. It is a manner of speaking peculiar to that language vsed, to note out vnto vs the fulnes and certenty of a thing: as when God told Adam, that if he did eat of the tree in the midst of the garden, by dying he should die [a], that is, the sentence of death should surely ouertake him, and he should not be able to escape; so here, when God saith of himselfe, that he is one who acquiting wil not acquite the wicked, his meaning is, that whatsoeuer may be supposed because of his patience, yet he will not fully and finally discharge those who goe on still in their vngodly courses, and presume vpon his Mercy, without repentance. The point taught vs hence, is, that howbeit the Lord may in regard of his forbearance bee thought to acquite and passe by, euen most vile & wicked persons, yet there is nothing of more certenty, then the seuerity of his Iustice, vpon those which are not drawne by the abundance and riches of his mercy to repent. Iin the Scripture God is called a Iudge [b], yea & a righteous Iudge [c]. This title giuen him must needes imply thus much, that hee will in time take vengeance vpon impenitent sinners, in as much as it cannot stand with the honour of him who takes vpon him the name of an vpright Iudge, to suffer such to escape vnpunished, who breake the bonds of all good lawes, and doe harden their faces to all kinde of vngodlinesse. Salomon saith, that he which iustifieth the wicked, and hee which condemneth the iust, euen they both are an abomination to the Lord [d]: And againe: He that saith to the wicked thou art righteous, him shall the people curse [e]: and by Isay there is a woe denounced to those which iustifie the wicked for a reward [f]. Now, if the Lord doe hate it in others, to acquite those who are by the strictnes and seuerity of good lawes to be suppressed, we may well be sure that he himselfe will be much more strait, according as his eye is sharper to see into the nature of euery trespasse, and his hand heauier to punish and auenge the same accordingly. That God hates all them that worke iniquity [g], that he is a iealous God [h], that he taketh no reward [i], that he accepteth not the persons, no not of Princes [k], that there is no vnrighteousnes with him [l]; these and the like are common and ordinary speeches in the Scripture, which could not bee true, if the Lord should suffer the abusers of his mercy, the contemners of his grace, the man which make a game of sinne, and set nought by his iudgements, to scape away vnpunished. Hee suffered the old world long, but at last he gaue euidence of his iustice: He forbare Sodome Gomorrha many yeares, but in the end his iudgement vpon them was very terrible. Abab and Iezabel flourished and enioyed the glory of a kingdome for a while, but when the time appointed came, God by his visitation made them a spectacle vnto men. The city of Ierusalem was as it were the Queene of the world and the state and pompe thereof continued long, yea although they killed the Prophets, and stoned them that were sent vnto them [m], yea & at last killed the Lord of life [n]; yet yet (as Saloman saith) there was an end [o], the Lord arose to iudgement, and of that glorious city, sometime the mirror of the earth, there is not now left a stone vpon a stone, which is not cast downe [p]. There was neuer any age from the first beginning of times, in which God hath not giuen testimony, as well of his Iustice to punish, as of his mercy to forbare. He spared not the Angels [q], which kept not their first estate [r], hee doth often cause iudgement to begin at his owne house [s], and among his owne chosen people; and (besides that which is left written in the book of God for our teaching,) we doe many times heare of strange visitations, sometimes by plague, or famine, or tempest, or fire vpon whole cities or townes, sometimes by fearefull ends which some noted euill persons haue come vnto, and all to teach vs to drawe out this conclusion, that though a sinner doe euill an hundred times, and God prolong his daies, yet it shall not be well with the wicked, because he feareth not before God [t], his end shall be, to be cut off at the last [u]. This may serue for the prooving, or rather opening of this point, that God although he forbeare long, yet he will not finally discharge or acquite those which go on in sinne without repentance. Let vs now come to the vse.

It serueth first to be an assurance vnto vs of a day of iudgement, in which wee must all appeare before the iudgement seat of Christ [*]. This point is thus collected out of this place. It is said here that the Lord will not discharge the impenitent, but will certenly recompence them their sinne into their bosome: Now we doe not see this ordinarily fulfilled; for generally they are in wealth that rebelliously transgresse [x], waters of a full cup are wrung out vnto them [y], their houses are peaceable without feare, & the rod of God is not vpon them [z], they liue (in shew) contentedly & die (to the outward appearance) quiety, and we our selues see many a prophane contemner of religion, many a swearer, or vicious person, or oppressour, many a tyrant of the world, liue in health and credit, and in a kinde of outward iollitie, visited in body and goods no otherwise but as other men be, nay many times to escape that which other men feele the smart of. Therefore it must needs be, that there is some time yet to come, in which wee shall beholde the certenty of that which now many be thought to be more doubtfull, and in which we shall all haue iust cause to say, Verily there is fruit for the righteous, doubtles there is a God that iudgeth in the earth [a]. Hereupon is that day calleh the day of declaration of the iust iudgement of God [b], because then the Iustice of God shall be openly discouered, and euidence thereof shall bee giuen in the sight of the whole world, whereas before, those men might seeme most happy, which had left religion, and those in the worst case, who made most conscience. If then at any time, considering the course of the world, how they flourish and lift vp their heads, who liue lewdly, and prophanely, and vnchastly, without any feare of Gods maiesty, and how they are hated and despised, and afflicted, who are zealous on Gods behalfe; if (I say) seeing this, thou begin to doubt whether there bee any truth in that which thou hast often heard, touching the day of Iudgement and account, remember with thy selfe that it cannot be, that God should be a fauourer of iniquity, it cannot stand with his honour to acquite the wicked, and therefore be sure that there is a time at hand, in which his Iustice shall appeare, a day at which the vngodly shall well vnderstand how much they deceiued themselues, in thinking the Lord to bee a patrone of their naughtinesse. This is one vse: And to the end you may see it to be the true and naturall vse of this doctrine, you may finde it to be applyed by Paul, speaking to the Thessalonians of their great persecution for the Gospels sake, and of the insolency of their aduersaries, he telleth them that this is a token of the righteous Iudgement of God [c]. So that whereas the world doth reason thence, that surely there is no God in heauen to take vengeance, the Apostle teacheth them to resolue vpon it, euen because of this confusion that was amongst men, that therefore the Lord would come at last in flaming fire rendring vengeance on his enemies, and righting their cause which haue felt the waite of oppression for his truth, truth. this is the first vse of this doctrine: In a word, thus: God will not finally acquit the wicked; yet it may seeme now by the common course of the world, that he doth acquit them: therefore (no boubt) there is a time set, which will come for the full and euident manifestation of his Iustice.

The 2. Vse, The second vse is to roote out of many mens hearts that vaine conceipt, by which they doe deceiue their owne soules, and it is this: they frame vnto themselues a God all of mercy and lenity, they thinke him to be one who at their pleasure, and when they will, is easily intreated, and in one word, because sentence against their euill workes is not presently executed, their hearts are fully set in them to doe euill[d]. It is the comon conceipt which men haue, that if God did so hate euill (as hee is said to doe) surely he would not so long forbeare to make it manifest. I should not thus enioy health, and riches, and credit, and the things which my heart desireth (saith the godlesse man to himselfe) if the Lord did so abhorre my courses, as they say: Is not he the disposer of all things, doe not all things come to passe according to his prouidence, doth not he giue riches, and weath, and honour as he pleaseth, and are not these the rewards for those whome he loueth? wherefore (saith the Atheist, and the man who walketh after his owne lusts) they shall all say what they will, I will neuer beleeue that God is so strait & so seuere, as it is reported: these things would not be thus, if that were true: Therefore I will yet please my selfe in the waies of mine owne heart, a litle more wantonnes, a litle more oppresion, a litle more excesse cannot be dangerous, no doubt but God will shew me mercy at last, it shall neuer be too late for me to returne. This is the prophane communing of euill men with their owne hearts, harping onely vpon this string, that God is mercyfull, and so forget the strictnes and seuerity of his Iustice. But, O thou man, who thus strentheneſt thy heart and thy hand vnto vngodlines because of the Lords long-suffring; thou must know, (and vnlesse thou quickly looke vnto it, thou shalt surely feele it,) that as the Lord is rich in mercy[e], to all which breake of their sinnes[f] by repentance, and bring forth fruits worthy amendment of life[g], so he is terrible in iustice against such as turne his grace into wantonnes[h], & beare themselues bold vpon the kindnesse, to continue in a loose and dissolute course, chooſing rather to liue in the manifest breach of his will, then to abridge themselues of the seeming pleasures of iniquity. Thou that goest on in an euil way, in what kind soeuer, and hauing thy conscience wrought vpon by the power of the word, dost yet gather heart vnto thy selfe out of the mercy of God, supposing that he will tollerate thee, tell me (I pray thee) doest thou beleeue that God spake this with his owne mouth, that he will not make the wicked innocent? and if thou thinkest that he spake it, doest thou suppose it to be a truth? and if thou account it true, in what sense doest thou conceiue it, or of what kinde of men doe & thou take it to be meant? who is he whom the Lord hath (as it were) vowed neuer to discharge? Thinke well of it, what (euen in thy owne iudgement) thou conceiuest to be vnderstood by wicked in this place. If thou say wee are wicked by nature, and that it is not the purest which can liue without a spot: All this is true: But the word (wicked) cannot be so taken here; for then wee are all shut out, and no hope of saluation should remaine to any. Besides, they are not wicked in the Lords accounts, who though they haue many weaknesses, yet striue against their owne corruptions. But if there bee any truth in the Scripture, by wicked here is meant such an one, as thou yet art; who liueth in vngodlinesse, and yet doth make himselfe beleeue that he shall escape Gods iudgement well enough; who thinkes hee may glut himselfe with the pleasures of sinne, without any finall danger to his soule. This is the man, whom the Lord neither will, nor can absolue. Thou askest me how I prooue this which I haue said? I will alleadge to thee two testimonies of Scripture to make it good. The one is this: Surely God will wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy pate of him that walketh in his sins[i]. How canst thou heare, this and beleeue it to be true, & yet dare to walke on in thy sinnes? Thou wilt say, this is true, but yet it hath a ſecret condition of repentance: True: but in the meane ſpace, thou doeſt not repent, thou makeſt thy ſelfe beleeue, thou wilt; but as yet, thou attempteſt it not, neither canſt thou tell how long thou ſhalt enioy the preſent opportunity. The other place is this: If there be any man among you, Who when he heareth the words of the curſe, bleſſeth himſelf in his heart: ſaying, I ſhall haue peace, though I walk according to the ſtubbornnes of mine owne heart, thus adding drunkennes to thirſt, The Lord will not be merciſull vnto him, but the wrath of the Lord & his iealouſie ſhal ſmoak againſt that man, & euery curſe that is written in this booke ſhall light vpon him, & the Lord ſhall put out his name frō vnder heauen [k]. It is a notable place, it ſheweth plainly to whom the Lord will not be merciſull, euen to him, who when he heares vengeance denounced againſt his ſin, perſwades himſelfe, it ſhall be well enough, this thing ſhall neuer ouertake him: the God who cannot lie, hath ſpoken it, he cannot alter the thing which is gone out of his lips, he will not be merciſull to that man, he will not acquit him at the day of reckoning, his wrath ſhall ſmoke againſt him, and according to the meaſure of his mercy ſhewed formerly, ſhall be the meaſure of his puniſhment. I pray God giue vs hearts to conſider it. It is euen a world of ſoules, which the diuel beguileth with this renting aſunder of the mercy & iuſtice of God: to draw men into ſin, he ſings of nothing but mercy: to drowne men in ſin, he ſpeakes of nothing but Iuſtice. It ſhall be wiſedome for vs (like Dauid) to ſing of mercy and iudgment too [l]: both together will make an excellent temper. To conclude therfore this vſe, I will end with the ſaying of the Apoſtle: when he had written earneſtly againſt groſſe ſinne. Fornication, VnCleannes, Couetouſnes, &c. many perſwaded themſelues & others, that God was merciſull, and it ſhould not be ſo: O (ſaith Paul) Let no man deceiue you with vaine words; for for ſuch things commeth the wrath of God vpon the childrē of diſobedience [m]: whatſoeuer men thinke, the word of God cannot faile, they which do ſuch things can haue no inheritāce in the kingdome of Chriſt, and of God. It is good to remember, that the Lord forgiues iniquity & ſin, but he which will truly profit by it, muſt ioyne this with it, He will not make the wicked innocent: He will be fauourable to thoſe which returne, and he will be terrible to thoſe which are not led by his mercy to repentance. Thus much for the firſt thing by which the Iuſtice of God is noted, namely, vengeance vpon the perſon of the wicked; now followeth to ſpeake of the wrath of God againſt their poſterity, Viſiting the iniquities of the fathers vpon the children, &c.

In opening this clauſe, I wil obſerue this courſe, 1. I will ſhew, how this which is here threatned is made good: 2. I wil declare, how it may be ſaid to ſtād with the iuſtice of God ſo to deale: 3. will teach what vſe we muſt make of it to our ſelues

Touching the former: God viſiteth the ſinnes of the father vpon their children two waies, 1. Spiritually. 2. Bodily. Spiritually, when as he in his ſecret and vncontrolable iudgement, withholdeth the meanes of grace from the children, giuing them ouer to blindnes and hardnes of heart, ſo that they become imitators and followers of their fathers ſinnes, and treade in the ſteps of the ſame vngodlines. Thus hath God giuen an inſtance of his Iuſtice in the whole race and generation of mankinde, in that we are all borne in iniquity [n], and ſo through the force of our naturall corruption, we fall into the like fruits of diſobedience. Thus we ſee many times how it alſo falleth out, that idolatrous parents haue idolatrous children, vicious parents, vicious children, and ſo in other ſpecialties: Not that I make it a generall rule which neuer faileth; for we reade in the Scripture of good fathers that had wicked ſonnes, and of euill fathers which were ſucceeded by a righteous iſſue. It is enough for the manifeſting of the Iuſtice of God, that it falleth out ſo ſometimes, namely, that God giues teſtimony of his diſpleaſure againſt the fathers ſin, by raiſing a ſonne out of his loines, who following him in his vileneſſe, giueth the Lord occaſion to be auenged vpon him in his poſterity. Againe, this Lord makes this good by bodily inflictions, when as, finding the poſterity to perſiſt in the wicked courſes of their anceſtors, he executes ſome open vengeance vpon them, and so makes it manifest, that howbeit he might seeme, by passing by their fore-fathers, not to be displeased with those sinnes, yet he will finde a time to punish: yea and which is more, after this manner of outward visiting, God doth oftentimes visit the sinnes of an euill father vpon a godly sonne, as, when a good man left rich in the world by an oppressing and cruell progenitor, falleth into pouerty. Here is an euidence of Gods wrath vpon the violence & couetousnesse of the father, though the Lord may withall blesse it to the sonne, and vse it as a means of his better humbling, and of drawing him from the world neerer vnto himselfe. This then is that which the Lord affirmeth here, that such is the seuerity of his wrath against obstinate & presumptuous going on in sinne, that his iustice is not satisfied by the personall punishment of the offender, but it extends it selfe euen to his off-spring and posterity, sometimes punishing their soules, that they become followers of their fathers sinnes, ordinarily afflicting them in their outward estate, yea though they themselues be such as feare him; taking such a course, both to manifest the anger against their parents vilenesse, and yet withall to weane them from the world neerer vnto heauen.

The next point is, how it may stand with the Iustice of God thus to doe, to punish one for the sinne of another, the posterity for the fathers sake, for the cleering wherof, this I say first: that if we had learned in humility to yeeld to this, that the will of God is the Rule of all iustice, we would not make any question about this matter. This would satisfie vs, that it is so, and that the Lord will haue it so, and therefore it cannot be but iust & equall, in as much as from a righteous God can proceede no iniquity. And if at any time we felt any conceit in vs presuming to impute any straitnes or iniustice vnto God, we should soone curb it with this, O man, who art thou which pleadest against God o? Secondly, lest flesh & blood should yet imagine, that this were to make God no beeter then a tyrant, one which may satisfie his will against the sonnes of men without iust cause, therefore let vs see whether we doe not giue his liberty vnto men in some causes, to make the children feele the smart of their fathers trespasses. Wee account it no iustice, that the sonne of a traytor, though he were in his cradle at the time of his fathers fact, and so was vnable to giue consent vnto it, should for all that be tainted in blood, and lose his inheritance: We account such punishments deuised with great wisedome, to the end that the affection which nature hath taught all men to beare to the fruit of their loynes, may be a meanes to keepe them within compasse. It is an ordinary thing for a father to forfeit his whole estat, to the vtter vndoing of those which shall succeede him. Wee must beware therefore that we doe not tye God straighter, then we tye men: if in mens businesses these things seeme not vniust, why should Gods course be challenged in punishing the fathers euils in the following generations? And lest this which I say should bee deemed onely a probability, and no sufficient plea in this case, whosoeuer shall examine the beginning of the second chapter of Hosea, shall see good warrant for it. You shall vnderstand it thus: It is ordinary in the writings and sermons of the Prophets, for God (to shew his loue) to tearme himselfe the spouse and husband of his people: and for that cause their rebellion and falling from God, is so often called fornication. Now the Lord hauing respect to the Israelites, they began to pleade with him, as though he had much wronged them to forsake them; for which cause God by the Prophets vseth this speech, Plead with your mother, Plead with her, &c. I will haue no pitty vpon her children, for they be the children of fornication p. By their mother God vnderstands the whole body of that state, which by an vniuersal defection had broken faith with the Lord. So that God here reasoneth with the people, as an husband might doe with an adulterous brood, who being brought to some disgrace in the world by their mothers diuorce, begin to challenge their father to haue done the iniury. In such a case the father might iustly say, Blame not me, but lay the fault where it is, vpon the lightnes & vnchastity of your mother: so God reiecting

reiecting the people, when they began to expoſtulate with him in the matter, he bids the pleade with their mother: the whole body of the ſtate (of which they were as the children) had plaid falſe with him, and he had iuſt cauſe to reiect them. So that the ſumme of all is this, that looke as a husband may iuſtly put away an vnchaſte wife, and with her, her adulterous brood: ſo the Lord may alſo plague and forſake both wicked parents, and the wicked children of ſuch parents. Thirdly, to make the matters yet more plaine, for the clearing of Gods iuſtice, this is certen, that there is no man puniſhed for the ſinne of his anceſtours, but euen in his perſon there is found ſufficient cauſe of puniſhment: ſo that if hee lookes well into himſelfe, he ſhall ſee he hath no iuſt cauſe to pleade againſt God; in as much as the conſcience of his owne deſerts will ſtop his mouth, and leaue him without colour of excuſe. We ſhall reade in one of the Prophets, that when God laid his had vpon the people and withall, their fathers tranſgreſsions were often obiected to them, they (thinking themſelues innocent) vſed this as a common by-word, The fathers haue eaten ſowre grapes, & the childrens teeth are ſet on edge[q]. God ſharply reproueth them for this blaſphemie, in as much as they thought, that they were puniſhed vndeſeruedly. As I liue ſaith the Lord, ye ſhall vſe this prouerbe no more in Iſrael[r]: for you ſhall ſee, that the treading in your fathers ſinnes, is the thing that hath made you feele the ſmart of their tranſgreſsions. That ſonne who ſeeth his fathers ſinnes, and doth them, he ſhall die the death, & his blood ſhall be vpon him[s]: But the ſonne that ſeeth all his fathers ſinnes which he hath done, and feareth, neither doth ſuch like, he ſhall not die in the iniquity of his father, but he ſhal ſurely liue[t]. So that there is no manner of iniuſtice in Gods courſe: for if God doe puniſh my fathers ſinne in me, eyther I ſhall finde the ſame euill in my ſelfe, or elſe ſome other, euery way equall thereunto. Thus I haue laboured to ſhew, how it may ſtand without any preiudice to the iuſtice of God, to viſit the ſin of the fathers vpon the children vnto many generations. 1. Gods will is the rule of equity, ſo that if we could ſee no more, yet that ſhould content vs. 2. We thinke it no ſtraitneſſe in men, to let the poſterity feele the ſmart of their parents folly: why ſhould we limit God rather then men? 3. Though God reuiueth the memory of the fathers fault in auenging the poſterity, yet he neuer puniſheth the poſterity without their perſonall deſeruings. Now that wee haue ſeene the manner how this is made good, and that it is no breach of iuſtice on Gods part, let vs make vſe of it to our ſelues

Firſt of all it ſerueth to ſhew, that euill and irreligious parents are the moſt deadly enemies to their owne children; in as much as they through their ſinnes, make them lyable to Gods vengeance. Looke vpon the examples of Ahab, hee ſhed the innocent blood of Naboth; he committed Idolatry & ſerued Baalim: no man could haue brought more euill vpon his poſterity, then he himſelfe did: for hence it was, that the kingdome was taken from his houſe, his children had their heads cut off, and all his race feared the worſe for his ſake. Sauls ſonnes bare the puniſhment of their father, becauſe of his cruelty againſt the Gibeonites[u]. King Ieroboam that famous Idolater, intended the intailing of the kingdome to his own line, yet the very courſe which he plotted to that end, was a canker which did euen fret out his generation: for becauſe he made Iſrael to ſin, the Lord *ſwept away the remnant of his houſe, as a man ſweepeth away dung til all be gone. It is a warning the to al parents, & to thoſe which are to others in the ſtead of parents, if they do not ſo much reſpect themſelues, yet at the leaſt for their childrens ſakes, to beware of hardned preſumptuous ſinning againſt God. The reſpect which nature hath planted in all, to their poſterity, is ſuch and ſo great, that we ſee many do not only moile & toile, and pinch and labour hard to doe their children good, but (which is more) do euen aduenture & hazard their ſoules for their ſakes, raking & wringing againſt equity for the aduancement of thoſe which ſhall ſucceed them. (as they suppose) their posterity: how much more should it work to draw men to such a course of holinesse and of conscience, by which together with bringing a blessing vpon their children, they shall profit themselues, and further their owne eternall saluation? Now as this reason may be thus generally applyed, so ought it to be of force to beget in vs a detestation of three grosse sinnes especially, which are noted in Scripture, as meanes to bring the curse of God vpon a mans children. The first is Idolatry, that is, the worshipping of God falsly, and after another fashion then he hath prescribed in his Word. Therefore we finde it annexed to the second Commandement, the scope wherof is to draw men to the true worship of God, and to banish all humane deuices out of Gods seruice; I say, to this Commandement it is particularly adioyned, that this kind of sinne God will visite vpon the children, vpon the third generation, and vpon the fourth [x]. And (as I haue shewed) Ieroboams idolatry, was the very ouer-throw of Ieroboams off-spring. It behoueth vs the rather to obserue this, because, howsoeuer we are not guilty of that grosse idolatry, which stands in the worship of stockes and stones, and of the worke of mens hands, yet that which is almost as bad, is our common fault, namely, the seruing of God as our selues please. The greatest part of vs care not to know and enquire, how Gods will is to be serued, but what others before vs haue performed: this is the chiefe thing wee looke vnto. And so wee make God an Idol, supposing him to be one which will be pleased with that which best pleaseth vs, and so that which we doe, becommeth euen Idolatry, sith it is a worship which hath not (for ought we know) any ground or foundation vpon Gods word. This sinne God hath punished in others, and he will punish in vs: Nay I am perswaded, that that darknes and blindnes of heart which is in the most, is a iust iudgement of God, vpon our neglect to worship him after his owne prescription, yea and our posterities also shall feele the smart of it, the Lord will punish vs in them, and afflict them for our sakes. The next sinne noted to be punished in a mans posterity is, oppression, cruell, vniust and vnlawfull gettings. Many men doe bestirre themselues in the world exceedingly, thinking (almost) no course amisse, by which they may set their nest on high [y], and make their seede great vpon the earth after them. But in this they are vtterly deceiued, in as much as this is the very next way to bring the curse of God vpon their familie. Many times it comes to passe, that that which a man prouided for his owne heires, neuer falleth to their lot to whom it was intended: And so that is verified which is said, that the riches of the sinner is laid vp for the iust [z]; according as Hamans estate was giuen vnto Mordecai [a], Doubtlesse (saith Dauid) a man walketh in a shadow, and disquieteth himselfe in vaine, he heapeth vp riches, & cannot tell who shall gather them [b] Whose shall those things be which thou hast prouided, saith God to the rich man [c]? Well, although the heire of the oppressour come to the owning and fingering of that which hee hath prepared, yet (saith Salomon) he begets a sonne, in whose hands is nothing [d], one that commeth to beggery, notwithstanding the wealth of his predecessour. And of this, the world euery day affoards many examples; so true is the olde saying, Goods euill gotten scarsly come to the third heires enioying. God hath appointed the stone of the wall, and the beame out of the timber [e], to put him in minde to be auenged. The third sinne which is punished in a mans posterity, is Adulterie. If my heart (saith Iob) hath beene deceiued by a woman, or if I haue laid waite at the doore at my neighbour, &c. This is a fire that shall deuoure to destruction, & which shall root out all mine encrease [f], whether we vnderstand by the word (Encrease) Iobs off-spring, or his wealth, and so take the place to agree to that of Salomon, that for a whoriſh womã a man is brought to a peece of bread [g], all is one for the matter to which I apply it, namely, to shew that God doth so far abhor vncleanesse, that for it he punisheth the very stock & generatiõ of the adulterer; either he wil cut off his seed or he will consume that which should maintain thẽ. Well then this is the summe: Parents, euen for their posterities sake, should make conscience of their wayes, and and endeauour to walke in all holy obedience vnto God: especially they should beware of three euils, 1. Idolatry. 2. Oppression. 3. Adultery. The seede of parents liuing and dying in these sinnes, seldome scape away without a punishment.

A second vse of this doctrine, is to teach vs to cast downe our selues before the Lord, euen for the sins of our progenitors. We haue an excellent example for it in Daniel, in that notable prayer of his: Among other things this he saith, & thus he spakes, O Lord to vs appertaineth open shame, to our Kings, to our Princes, to our fathers [h]: and it is not amisse that we are taught to pray the Lord, not to remember our offences, nor the offences of our fore-fathers. I remember Dauid, fore-telling by the spirit of prophecy, the wrath of God against Iudas which betrayed Christ, vseth these words, Let the iniquity of his fathers be had in remembrance with the Lord, and let not the sin of his mother be done away [i]: which sheweth what a heauy thing it is for the posterity, when the sinnes of the fore-fathers come vnto remembrance before God. Therefore (I say) we had neede to be humbled euen to consider the idolatry and blindnes of our fathers, and to feare lest the Lord should reuiue his iustice against them, by taking vengeance vpon vs: which is a duty contrary to the practise of the most, who doe so dote vpon their Aunceſtours, that they account their courses and actions to be rules for them, and that it is enough for them to be of the same religion that they were: so that because they liued in ignorance of the word of God, and in the worship of dumbe idols, leaning to traditions and superstitious principles, therefore they will be ignorant also, and tye themselues to treade in their steps, without better enquiry. It is plaine by my Text, that there may bee childrens children, yea foure generations successiuely (through the iust iudgement of God) wrapped vp in errour: so that to cleaue to our fore-fathers (without any further question) is a course which may soone deceiue vs. It is a good rule, that we must not looke so much what others haue done before vs, as that Christ hath done who is before vs all. That which they haue done amisse must humble vs, and not embolden vs to be their followers.

THE VVORTH OF THE WATER OF LIFE.

John 4. 13, 14.

Iesus answered and said vnto her, Whosoeuer drinketh of this water, shall thirst againe: But whosoeuer drinketh of the Water that I shall giue him, shall neuer be more a thirst: but the Water that I shall giue him, shall be in him a Well of Water, springing vp into euerlasting life.

THE storie of Christs conference with the woman of Samaria cannot bee vnknowne vnto any which is of any ordinary knowledge in the Scripture: yet partly to giue light vnto my Text, partly to helpe those which are not so carefull to search the booke of God, as they ought to be, it is expedient for me to repeate it.

It fell out, as our Sauiour iourneyed through Samaria into Galile, that hee (beeing a man in all [a] things like vnto vs, yet without sinne) was both hungry and weary. To releeue hunger, hee sent his Disciples into the citie to make prouision; to ease his wearied limmes, he sate him downe vpon a well side, in those times, and in those coastes very famous, in respect of the Author thereof, whose name it still carried, beeing called Iacobs well. Hee sitting there, out commeth mee a woman of the adioyning citie Sichar, to draw water from thence, for her houshold vses. Christ, partly to refresh his bodily thirst, but especially (I take it) to satisfie that is neuer-ceasing desire to doe good, make a motion to her, to afoard him some of the water, that he might drinke. Shee, (being as appeareth by her answers, something a shrewd-tongued woman) by and by cut him vp short; What (quoth she) you Iewes be so fine & proud, that you scorne vs, the poore inhabitants of Samaria: How is it then that thou being a Iew, asketst drinke of me, a forlorne & despised Samaritane? Our Sauiour (to giue vs an instance of the accomplishment of that ancient promise, that he would be [b] (found of them that sought him not,) doth neither forbeare to commune with her, nor yet (as the manner of the world is) doth frame an vntoward speech to her crosse answer; but seeming to pity her ignorance, & blindnes, telleth her; Alas, good woman, if thou knewest the great mercy of God toward thee, and the excellency of his person and office which requesteth thee, thou wouldest become a suter to him rather, and hee would giue thee another manner of water then this, euen the Water of life. The woman answereth him with a scoffe, well enough vnderstanding his meaning, but yet shee iests it out, as though shee knew it not: what art thou (quoth shee) that talkest of the Water of life? canst thou bee better then our father Iacob, who first founded this Well? or can there bee any better water then this Well afoards? thou seemest therefore to mee to bragge of more then thou art any way able to performe. Marke now Christs answer: Oh woman (saith hee) thou art very ignorant, or very froward: I speake not to thee of any visible water, seruing for the bodies nourishment, but of a water of farre more infinite worth, if thy heart were opened to apprehend it. I know the water of this Well is excellent, and Iacob in his time, was a holy man; but beholde heere another fountaine, beholde a greater then

Iacob is heere, euen the ſtaffe of the hope of thy father Iacob. This ſtreame heere releeueth the body for a time, but cannot affoard a perpetuall filling: the water which I haue to giue, ſhall euerlaſtingly ſatisfie the thirſt of the receiuers of it, and it ſhall be in their bowels as a neuer dryed fountaine, ſpringing vp to euerlaſting life. Thus haue you the courſe of the communication betwixt Chriſt and the Samaritane thus farre. By which you may perceiue, that the maine ſcope of this Text is, to ſhew the difference betwixt the things of this preſent life, and the things of a better life: the weakeneſſe of the one, and the worth of the other. The former is ſet downe, verſ. 13. Whoſoeuer drinketh of this water, &c. the latter, verſe 14. But whoſoeuer drinketh of the water which, &c.

Concerning the former, I know, that Chriſt expreſly and by name ſpeaketh of water onely; yet conſidering the chiefe drift of the place is, to draw men from the things which are ſeene, to the things which are not ſeene, from things temporall, to things eternall, from the things which are on earth, to the things which are aboue: Therefore we may ſafely from hence draw this doctrine: That nothing in this preſent world, is able to affoard any true ſatisfying, any filling as it were, vnto a mans ſoule. For that which Chriſt ſaid here of the water of this well, whoſoeuer drinketh thereof ſhall thirſt againe, may truly bee ſaid of all things elſe whatſoeuer, which the men of this world doe ayme at in their courſes, viz. they doe rather encreaſe then kill the deſire, rather inflame then quench the appetite: they are all like to colde drinke taken by a man labouring of a hote ague, which though it ſeeme to ſatisfie for the preſent, yet indeede it encreaſeth the former drought, and maketh both the needs and the deſire of moyſture greater then before. It were no hard thing to ſhew this to be true, by the enumeration of particulars: but my meaning is, not to inſiſt vpon this point, but onely to vſe it as a preparatiue to the reſt. This is all I will ſay, (and I will therein craue no better witneſſe, then each mans owne experience:) If a man, liuing here in the world, ſhould doe as Salomon did, namely, Whatſoeuer his [c] eyes deſire, ſhould not withhold it from them, nor withdraw his heart from any ioy: but ſhould euen ſtudy, as it were, to glut himſelfe with the things of this life, yet in the end he ſhould finde his heart like the ſea, of which the ſame Wiſe man ſaith, that though [d] All the riuers goe into it, yet it is not full: ſo neither ſhall his eye be ſatisfied with ſeeing, nor his eare with hearing, nor his heart with enioying: but he ſhall be like to a man in a maze, wherein when he hath laboured long, yet at laſt hee is as far from that which he ſought for, as he was at the beginning. And the reaſon hereof is expreſſe: the minde is immortall, but all theſe things are tranſitorie: ſo that it is vnpoſsible for the minde to bee filled with earthly things, as it is for a cheſt of wood to be filled with ſpirituall things. It is wittily ſaid, and to good purpoſe, by thoſe which reaſon from the forme of the world, and the faſhion of the heart: the world is round, and the heart three-cornered. As therefore it cannot bee, that a round thing ſhould fill that which is three-ſquared, becauſe the corners muſt needs remaine empty: ſo neither can the things of this world, (which Iohn diuideth into three kindes, [e] The luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, repleniſh a mans ſoule, but ſome one corner (as it were) or other thereof will remaine vnfilled. This briefe diſcourſe ſerueth to ſhew the truth of this point: let vs as briefely make vſe of it.

e 1. Ioh. 2. 16.

The Vſe.] I remember the ſpeech of the Prophet Iſaiah, cap. 55. where by ſolemne proclamation prouoking all men to come to Chriſt, that they may enioy the ſame gracious fauour which our Sauiour maketh offer of in this place, hee doth notably reproue the folly of the greateſt part of men, in theſe words, [f] Wherefore doe you lay out ſiluer and not for bread, and your labour without being ſatisfied? as if hee had ſaid: What folly is this, or what madneſſe is it, which poſſeſſeth your hearts, O ye ſonnes of men, that you doe ſo buſie your ſelues, and ſpend your beſt endeauours, about ſuch things which cannot ſatisfie? thinke you it is a poſſible thing to be fedde with the winde, or will you caſt your affections vpon that which is nothing? This is the effect of the Prophets reproofe: If he were aliue now, hee would (as hee well might) vſe the ſame words. There is indeede much to doe in the world at this day, much trauelling, much plotting, much contending, and wee doe all beſtirre our ſelues as though the duſt of the earth were not ſufficient for euery man to take a handfull: one man buyeth and purchaſeth, and [g] ioyneth houſe to houſe, and field to field, that he may be placed by himſelfe, to be a little King in his owne territories: another couets [h] fields, and takes them by violence, and houſes, and takes them away, and ſo oppreſſeth a man and his houſe, euen a man and his heritage: a third, hee [i] gapeth ouer the heads of the poore, and doth euen ſtore vp violence. In a word, each man almoſt hath enlarged his deſire as the hell, and is as death, and cannot bee ſatisfied, and is neuer well in his conceit, till hee hath euen [k] laded himſelfe with thicke clay: and wee are all trudging like this [l] woman, with our pitchers on our necks, to ſome one well or other, and if it be neuer ſo deepe, it ſhall goe very hard but we will get it out. But (alas) fooles that we be, when we haue done all, wee doe but euen weary our ſelues [m] for very vanity: when we haue drunke of this well againe and againe, yet in the end, our deſire is as it was, rather ſtretched out to receiue more, then filled with that which it hath obtained: when wee haue reached euen to the vtmoſt of our firſt deſires, we are then but like the [n] hungry man, who dreameth, and behold hee eateth, and when he awaketh his ſoule is empty: or like the thirſtie man, who dreameth, and loe he is drinking, and when he awaketh, beholde he is faint, and his ſoule longeth: So it is but an imagination of comfort which commeth by theſe things, and no true contentment. I beſeech you, let this ſhort and yet full diſcouery of our common folly, (who for the moſt part, doe nothing but [o] ſow the winde, and if wee ſo continue, ſhall reape nothing but corruption) make vs to ſay as Iohn Baptiſts hearers did, when they perceiued by his preaching they were cleane out of the way, [p] What ſhall we doe then? If hitherto wee haue aymed at a wrong marke in our deſires, ſhew vs I pray you, how to reforme it: and let your hearts I pray you ſay now to me, as Cornelius ſaid to Peter, [q] We are all here preſent before God, to heare all things that are commanded thee of God: which I doe wiſh ſo much the rather, becauſe that which I am now next to ſpeake of, is that which Salomon in one place calleth [r] durable riches, in another, [ſ] the end of all, which Chriſt tearmeth the [t] One needfull thing: for which the ſoule of Dauid panted [u]; in compariſon whereof Paul * counted all things but as dung. Marke firſt the words, then ſee the order of them. But whoſoeuer drinketh of this water, &c. The points to be in order opened in the handling of this verſe, are theſe: 1. What this water is. 2. That there is both power and will in Chriſt to beſtow it. 3. By what meanes he conferreth it. 4. To whom he giueth it. 5. The benefit of enioying it. 6. The meanes by which each man may know himſelfe to haue receiued it. All theſe points as they are needfull, ſo in the ſeuerall handling of them you ſhall finde them to ariſe directly from the Text.

What is ment by the water which Chriſt giueth.

Firſt, what is meant by the water here mentioned. It is a true ſaying, that the Scripture is the beſt interpreter of it ſelfe, and one place muſt bee expounded by another. We ſee the light by the light, and we doe vnderſtand the true meaning of the Scripture by the Scripture. Wee can therefore haue no better expoſition vpon this place then Chriſts owne words elſewhere, to which the Spirit of God hath annexed an explanation of the true meaning, [x] Hee that beleeueth in mee (as ſaith the Scripture) out of his belly ſhall flow riuers of water of life. This ſpake hee (ſaith Saint Iohn) of the ſpirit which they that beleeued in him ſhould receiue; ſo that by water here, are vnderſtood the gifts and graces of the Spirit, which the Lord is pleaſed to beſtow vpon his children.

It is not enough for mee to tell you thus much in generall Tearmes, but I muſt proceede a little further, leſt I ſhould leaue you vncertaine, in that which my chiefe deſire is to reſolue you. This therefore I muſt tell you: that though it be true, that by water are heere meant the gifts of the Spirit, yet there are certaine gifts and graces of the Spirit, which a man may haue, and yet be a Reprobate. So that you muſt learne to put a difference betwixt the common gifts of the Spirit, and thoſe gifts which are proper onely to Gods children. The world is as it were Gods great Houſe, in which there are both ſeruants and ſons, the one (as Chriſt ſaith) [y] to be caſt out, the other to abide euer. Now in a family, we know there be ſome common fauours, which the ſeruants and drudges doe enioy as well as the heire: and ſo ſome graces there be, which euen the reprobate haue, which it is meete we ſhould know, leſt we be deceiued; and they are theſe: The firſt is, the gift and dexteritie of practiſing a particular calling: For, whatſoeuer, men careleſly and prophanely do imagine that the skill and Art which they haue in any knowledge, as husbandry, merchandize, &c. is from their owne induſtry, yet certaine it is, that the cunning which any man hath in any faculty whatſoeuer, is the ſole and onely gift of Gods Spirit: and therefore the power which Bezaleel and Aholiab had to worke in blue ſilke and purple and carued worke, is called a [z] filling by the Spirit of God. The ſecond common gift, is the gift of enlightening, whereby a man being naturally ignorant in the things of God, is enabled to conceiue the will of God reuealed in the Scripture, yea euen the ſweeteſt points thereof, as of ſaluation and grace in Chriſt Ieſus. A third common gift, is the power of preaching and expounding the Scripture for the common good and behoofe of Gods Church. A fourth, is an ability to reſtraine and temper the affections, ſo that they ſhall not breake foorth into outrage and notorious euils in the behauiour. A fift, is a power to heare the word with ioy, and to ſeeme to take ſome delight, and to finde ſome ſweetneſſe in it. All theſe are gifts and graces of the Spirit of God; but yet they are not thoſe graces which Chriſt meaneth by water here in this place: becauſe theſe be ſuch as may befall thoſe who notwithſtanding ſhall neuer be ſaued. Many a reprobate is gifted with admirable skill in crafts and ſciences. Demetrius ſeemed to be a cunning workeman, yet was he no ſmall enemy to the preaching of the Goſpel. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſeemeth to make it a thing poſsible, to be once enlightened, and to [a] haue taſted of the heauenly gift, yet ſo to fall away, as to be paſt all hope of beeing renued againe by repentance. Thirdly, at the day of iudgement, [b] Many will ſay to Chriſt, Lord, haue we not by thy name prophecied? yet it ſhall be ſaid to them, [c] Depart from mee. Fourthly, many wicked men haue power to conforme themſelues, and to bridle many ſinnes, and to carry themſelues in an outward ciuilitie: ſo Abimelech the heathen [d] abſtained from committing folly with Abrahams wife: and many among the Gentiles excelled in morall vertues, and diuers we ſee (whom we call ciuill men) demeane themſelues in the eyes of the world vnblameably, who yet giue ſmall hope of any true conuerſion. Laſtly, Chriſt in the parable ſheweth, that many hearers for a time beleeue [e], but as ſoone as tribulation commeth becauſe of the word, by and by they are offended.

Now there are beſides theſe, other ſpeciall graces of the Spirit, which are proper onely to Gods children. Paul ſaith, that [f] God is the Sauiour of all men, ſpecially of thoſe that beleeue: ſo it may be ſaid, he giueth graces to all, but in ſpeciall manner to the elect. Chriſt is pleaſed, in Scripture to terme the Church his loue, his ſpouſe. The day of Iudgement, is the marriage day: and the time preſent, is the wooing time, in which he is as it were a ſuter to his Church: and the Miniſters are appointed to prepare the Church for her husband [g], and to preſent her as a pure Virgin vnto Chriſt. Now he which is a ſuter to a woman, himſelfe being a man of worſhip & ability, howſoeuer, to teſtifie his bounty, and to make knowne his loue to his beloued, hee will beſtow gifts vpon the ſeruants of the family, yet if hee haue a iewell of worth and price, that hee reſerueth for her, on whom his loue is fixed: ſo Chriſt Ieſus conferreth common fauours, euen vpon the reprobate, to make knowne his riches, and withall, for the good of his

thoſen, but the ſpeciall, and choice and ſelected graces, theſe he keepeth onely for the true members of his Church. And theſe are the graces meant by Chriſt in this place; and they are in order theſe which follow.

1. The gift of regeneration, which is that, whereby a man of a limme of Satan, is made a member of Chriſt; of a childe of the Diuell, is become the ſonne of God. That this is a worke of Gods Spirit appeareth by Chriſt his wordes: Except a man be borne of water and of the Spirit [h], &c. And therefore fitly is the holy Ghoſt compared to Water, becauſe as water doth moiſten that which is hard: So the holy Ghoſt doth ſupple and ſoften, and put the ſap of grace into the dry, and dead, and rotten heart of man: So that where the Spirit of God is, there the heart is renued, the nature changed, the delight in ſinne aſſwaged, and a loue of holineſſe and godlineſſe, as it were a new iuyce begun in the ſoule. This is the firſt proper gift. The proper gifts. h Ioh.3.5.

2. The knowledge of a mans owne reconciliation to God by the meanes of Chriſt Ieſus. Hereof ſpeaketh the Apoſtle, The Spirit [i] beareth witneſſe with our ſpirit that we are the children of God. It is true, the nature of man cannot attaine to this knowledge, But we [k] haue receiued the Spirit which is of God: That we might know the things that are giuen to vs of God. And indeede, it cannot be, but, that if God haue been pleaſed of his goodneſſe to make any man or woman his childe, he will likewiſe make knowne the ſame fauour vnto him or her: eſpecially ſeeing it is ſo greatly for our comfort. For as, on the one ſide it is the greateſt miſery for a man to be in continuall ſuſpenſe, not knowing whether his ſinnes are forgiuen him: ſo, what greater comfort can there be to a man, then to bee aſſured of Gods fauour towards him? i Rom.8.16. k 1 Cor. 2.12.

3. The gift of obedience: for, as a man that dwelleth in the houſe as the owner of it, ordereth it, and gouerneth it, at his pleaſure: ſo the holy Ghoſt gouerneth all thoſe in whom he abideth [l]: they are led by the Spirit, which are the Lords. The Spirit repreſſeth all bad motions drawing vnto ſinne, ſpringing from the corruption of our nature, ſuggeſted by Satan, and occaſioned by the beguiling entiſements of this euill world, and withall it ſtirreth vp good deſires, and holy thoughts, inclining to piety and godlineſſe. l Rom.8.14.

4. Prayer: that is, a will and ability in ſome good meaſure, to haue recourſe vnto the Lord by prayer vpon all occaſions, and to poure out a mans wants and neceſsities before him. For this is a generall and a certaine rule, that as naturally euery childe, being pinched with want, acquainteth the father with his neceſsities, building vpon his loue and willingneſſe to doe him good: ſo he which is the childe of God, hath alwayes this property, to make prayer vnto God, his firſt meanes whereby to obtaine that which hee doth deſire, and to bee freed from that wherewith hee is oppreſſed. Now that which workes this in vs, is Gods Spirit: For ſeeing we of our ſelues doe neither know our neceſſities, nor knowing them can tell how to bemoane them, therefore Gods Spirit is giuen to helpe our infirmities, to aſsiſt vs in the framing of our ſuits, that ſo our prayers may be pleaſing vnto God, and comfortable to our ſoules. And for this, the Spirit of God is called the [m] ſpirit of ſupplications, becauſe it furniſheth a man both with will and knowledge alſo to poure out his ſoule vnfainedly to the Lord. m Zac.12.10.

5. Comfort in diſtreſſe. For whereas the children of God are ſubiect to manifold grieuances, partly in regard of inward conflicts with ſinne, and the terror of their owne conſcience, partly in reſpect of outward annoyances, the Spirit of God is giuen vnto them, to relieue them, to miniſter comfort vnto them, to vphold them, to make them able with cheerfulneſſe to hold out in the midſt of the greateſt extreamities whatſoeuer. For this cauſe the Spirit is called the [n] Comforter, and [o] Oyle of gladneſſe, becauſe he doth refreſh and cheere the poore diſtreſſed ſoules of Gods children. n Ioh.15.26. o Pſal.45.7.

6. Strength

6. Strength. There are many things which the profession of Christianity requireth at the hands of a Christian, which a Christian of himselfe is not able to performe: as for example, when a man seeth the hideousnesse of sinne, yet in the midst of his sight to lift vp the hand of his faith, and to lay hold vpon the mercy of God in Christ Iesu: when a man is tempted to sinne, to resist the temptation; in persecution to endure; in penury to trust vpon Gods prouidence: these and such like are beyond the reach of mans power: yet the Spirit of God maketh Gods children able to effect them [p], I am able to doe all things (saith the Apostle) through the helpe of Christ which strengtheneth me: and the Spirit for this cause is termed [q] the spirit of Christ.

These are the graces of the Spirit peculiar to the elect, and signified by water in this place: briefly thus: 1. The gift of regeneration to become Gods child. 2. The gift of faith to beleeue Gods promises. 3. The gift of obedience to doe Gods will. 4. The gift of prayer to seeke Gods presence. 5. The gift of comfort, to endure Gods tryals. 6. The gift of strength to holde out and continue Gods seruant.

How these things sauour with you I know not, how sweet they ought to bee vnto you, I know well. It is said of Christ, that to the eyes of the world [r], he had neither forme nor beauty, there seemed to bee nothing in him, why men should desire him, yet all the children of God [s] saw his glory, as the glory of the onely begotten Sonne of God, full of grace and truth. So though these things happely doe no whit affect those [t] which are after the flesh, but doe seeme euen vile in their eyes; yet they whose hearts God hath touched, to them they seeme exceeding precious, and I doubt not but they say in their hearts, as Mephibosheth said to Dauid after his returne from the battell, when Dauid bad him and Ziba diuide the goods betwixt them, nay (saith hee) to testifie his ioy for the Kings victory,) [u] Let him take all, seeing my Lord the King is come home in peace: so I say, all that feare God, say in the truth of their soules, comparing the base things of the world with these graces, Take all for me who will, so that my barren soule may be replenished with these sweet graces of Gods Spirit. Well, hoping the best (as in charity it becommeth me) of you all, and that as you doe prize these graces, this water of life, as it doth deserue, so you will be glad to know the meanes of obtaining them, I come now to the next point: Which is, that Christ hath both power and will to bestow them. He saith here, he will giue them, it is meet therefore that we doe enquire into his ability, whether it be in his power to make good that which he promiseth in this place.

Christ is able and willing to giue this water.

Touching his power the Scripture is a plentifull witnesse. With thee (saith Dauid) is the * well of life. Hee is the [x] fountaine opened in the house of Dauid for sinne and for vncleanenesse. It hath pleased the Father, that [y] in him all fulnesse shall dwell: In him are hid all the treasures of wisedome and knowledge [z]: and it is ordained, that [a] of his fulnesse, we should receiue grace for grace. What better witnesse would we of his power? His will is no lesse then his power, [b] Come vnto mee all yee that are wearie, &c. He hath made an open Proclamation, he stood and cryed, saying, [c] If any man thirst, let him come to me and drinke: and hee hath renued his offer, [d] Let him that is a thirst come, and let whosoeuer will, take of the water of life freely: nay [e] without siluer, and without money. What reason haue wee (I pray you) but vpon his word to beleeue him?

Well then, what followeth vpon this? This

This is the end of our preaching, this is the drift of all our Sermons. You will ſay vnto me, (perhaps) this is a needleſſe exhortation: you talke of going to Chriſt, but where is he? If he were preaching in our Churches, and working miracles in our ſtreets, you ſhould ſee how we would flocke about him, how much we would make of him, and how we would runne to him. Here be good words, I pray God the performance be according. Hearken therefore in the feare of God: I ſay to thee as Paul ſpake in a caſe not much vnlike, [i] Say not in thine heart, Who ſhall aſcend into heauen? that is, to bring Chriſt from aboue: or Who ſhall deſcend into the deepe? that is, to bring Chriſt againe from the dead. There is no ſuch difficulty in the matter: for behold he is neere thee, [k] He ſtandeth in the top of the high places, (ſaith Salomon.) Iohn ſaw him in [l] the midſt of the golden candleſtickes. Hee is in the middle of his Church, he dwelleth in the congregation of the faithfull: [m] where two or three are gathered together in his name, there is he. It is no ſuch hard matter to finde Chriſt, [n] Watch daily at the gates of the Lords houſe, and giue attendance at the poſtes of his dores, there thou ſhalt finde him. When Ioſeph and Marie hauing beene lately at Ieruſalem, had (as it were) loſt him, [o] they went backe to the temple, and there they found him. Goe thou and doe likewiſe: ſeeke him in his word, there thou ſhalt haue him: Wee (ſaith the Apoſtle, ſpeaking of himſelfe, and of his fellow Miniſters) ſtand among you in Chriſts ſtead [p], and God doth beſeech you through vs. Thou wilt ſay vnto mee, yet againe it may be, thou art little the neerer: thou wilt yeeld that Chriſt is the Well of life, and that the congregation is the place where to finde him, but thou wilt adde withall, as this woman did in ſcorne to Chriſt, the Well is deepe, and thou haſt nothing to draw with. Marke therefore (I pray thee) the next point, namely, the meanes how Chriſt beſtoweth theſe graces.

There are three pipes or conduits, (as I may ſo call them) by which Chriſt Ieſus the Fountaine of life conueyeth the graces of his Spirit into the hearts of his children. Firſt, the preaching of the word; ſecondly, the Sacraments; thirdly, prayer.

How Chriſt beſtowes this water.

If then thou wouldeſt drinke of this Well of liuing Water, I doe eſpecially commend to thy godly care the publike miniſtery of the word, not ſhutting out the other two, but chiefly vrging this, becauſe I know that if thou bee a carefull and conſcionable hearer, the exerciſes of prayer and communicating cannot but bee delightfull vnto thee. Obſerue this I pray thee, if thy heart bee affected with theſe ſpirituall graces iſſuing out of the Fountaine of grace, get thee to the word of grace, I meane, (to vſe Pauls words, and to cut off ambiguity) [r] the word of faith which we preach: open thy eares, that it may runne downe to the refreſhing of thy heart. If thou haſt by the goodneſſe of God, a ciſterne of thy owne, and a skilfull drawer, that is (as Elihu ſpeaketh) [t] an interpreter, who knoweth how to giue thee thy [u] portion of water in ſeaſon, then I ſay to thee as Salomon doth *; Drinke of the riuers out of the middeſt of thine owne Well: but if thou dwelleſt (as Dauid ſaith) in a barren and dry land where no water is, or haſt cauſe to ſay as the citizens of Iericho did to Eliſha [x]: The ſituation of thy dwelling is pleaſant, but the water is naught, why ſhould I for any by-reſpects betray the ſoule, and ſpare to tell thee that which I know to be the truth? what ſhouldeſt thou doe in ſuch a caſe but ſeeke it where it is, and labour elſewhere to ſupply thine owne neceſsity? This is the meanes of Gods appointing, this is the ordinary conduit of ſaluation. The ſeeming wiſe men of this world, hearing this courſe commended to them, as it were a liuing ſtreame flowing frō the Well of life Chriſt Ieſus, thinke it incredible, and imagine it to be a baſe meanes to beget grace in a mans heart. I will tell you to whome they are very like in this caſe: to Naaman the Syrian, who trauelling to the Prophet Eliſha to bee cleanſed by him of his leproſie, When hee had word ſent him, to waſh himſelfe in Iordan ſeauen times, hee was by and by in a rage, hee looked for ſome greater matter. Behold (ſaith he)

hee) I thought with my selfe, hee will surely come out and stand, and call on the name of the Lord his God, and put his hand in the place, &c. This is a iest, (thought he) am I come so farre to wash my selfe in Iordan, as though there were not as good waters of Damascus? Euen so, many thinke scorne of this, as of too meane a meanes, and imagine it to bee but an idle thing, by hearing to bee saued. But to all so minded, I say as the seruants of the same Naaman said to him; Father (said they) if the Prophets had commanded thee a great thing, wouldest thou not haue done it? How much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash and be cleane? So say I, If the Lord had imposed some great thing vpon vs, of more charge, and of more difficultie, ought wee not to haue done it? How much more now, when hee saith vnto vs, Heare and bee saued. The weaker meanes, the greater is his glorie: the easier it is, the more is our shame, and the deeper will our condemnation bee if wee despise it. To conclude this point then: The water of life which is originally in Christ, is deriued to vs by preaching: Learne thou then to come by the streames of Preaching to the fountaine of grace, the Lord Iesus. And though (it may bee) thou haue depended vpon it many yeeres, as long as [z] the lame man lay by the poole of Bethesda, and hast not yet gained that full comfort which thou diddest expect, yet assure thy selfe that the good houre is comming, in which thou shalt finde rest and peace vnto thy soule. So much for this point.

To whom Christ doth giue it.

The next followeth: viz. the parties to whom Christ will giue this water. It is not expressed, but yet it is implyed: For marke: Hee that drinkes of this water, shall neuer thirst againe, saith Christ: therefore before he receiued it hee thirsted for it; So that it is plaine by the Text, that they to whom Christ will giue this water of life, are those which thirst after it, which long for it, which feele the want of it: and thereto agreeth the Scripture in many places: Ho[a] (saith the Prophet) come ye to the waters: but who? Euery one that thirsteth. [b] Blessed are they which thirst for righteousnesse. If any man thirst, [c] let him come to me and drinke. I will giue to him that is a thirst of the well of the water of life freely: And; [e] Let him that is a thirst come. If there be no thirsting, there shall be no refreshing; if no longing, no enioying: God will giue his graces, where they shall be esteemed, and esteemed they cannot be, till the want thereof be knowne, and he which feeleth the want of them cannot chuse but vnfainedly desire them.

The vse of this is very expedient. It teacheth vs how and in what manner we must be prepared to the receiuing of the graces of Gods Spirit: vntill our soules doe euen thirst after Christ, as [f] The Hart after the riuers of waters, so that we seeme to our selues the happiest men aliue if wee might haue but one droppe of Christs blood to refresh vs, vntill (I say) it be thus with vs, Christ can neuer be ours, hee will neuer dwell in that soule that hath not euen panted after him, and cryed out in the anguish thereof as Hezekiah did, [g] O Lord it hath afflicted me, comfort mee. And therefore it is no meruaile though there bee euery where so many emptie soules, because there be so few thirsting soules; no wonder though so many are without grace, seeing there be so few that long after grace. True it is, that by nature our selues are destitute of all goodnesse, neither is there so much as a shadow of grace within vs: but yet all feele not this, among other graces which wee want, this is not the least, that wee doe not feele the want of grace. Wee are (the greatest part of vs) like those Laodicians spoken of in the third chapter of the Reuelation; wee say wee are rich, and haue need of nothing, and know not that we are wretched and miserable, and blinde, and naked. This our supposed fulnesse breedes in vs a loathing of Gods graces; they seeme vnto vs, when they are liberally offered not worth the entertaining. So that (mee thinketh) I may not vnfitly compare the state of Gods heauenly graces, in respect of the colde entertainment that they haue with the most, vnto the case of a poore man, which hath libertie to goe through the Church to gather euery mans deuotion for his reliefe: Hee commeth to one, and he maketh wise not to heare; to another, and he bid deth him come againe another time; to a third, and he saith he hath no money about him; to a fourth, and he would giue it hee had wherewith to exchange: to a fifth, and he saith hee is a poore man himselfe, and hath as much neede to aske as hee: And thus euery vnwilling minde finding an excuse, hee picketh out but a few poore pence out of a great and populous congregation. So it fareth with the graces of God offered to vs in the ordinarie Ministery of the word. They passe (as it were) from seate to seate, from pue to pue; from one end of the Church vnto another, humbly suing and forcibly perswading, to be entertained: But (alas) there is such a generall benummednesse and frozen deadnesse, possesseth the hearts of the greatest part, that (I know not how) grace, the more kindly it is offered, the lesse it is esteemed, and though the water of life doe runne (as it were thorough our streetes, yet men will scarcely stoope to receiue it. I am euen woe to thinke vpon it, how men and woman that now thinke all is well inough, and doe i receiue the grace of God in vaine, and [k] neglect so great saluation, shall one day with teares of blood be suters for one drop of grace, and yet shall not be able obtaine it. Well then, if we would drinke of the water which Christ hath to giue vs, let vs labour to thirst after it: you will say vnto me, how shall we come to this spirituall thirst? I will shew you how. There be two things especially beget thirst: the one is Labour. I neede not proue it, yee know it well enough by experience: so then a spirituall labour will beget a spirituall thirst. But what is this spirituall Labour; it is this: a trauelling vnder the waight and burthen of a mans owne sins: If thou canst once say with Dauid, [l] My sinnes are like a sore burden too heauy for mee to beare, thou wilt quickly thirst after the righteousnesse of Christ Iesus. Another occasion of thirst is salt, you know that by experience also. Now marke what Christ saith, he telleth the Apostles and their successors, that in respect of their Ministery, [m] they are the salt of the Earth. Salt hath a kinde of byting nature, so hath the word well applyed; it is sharpe and eager, and hee who is well exercised vnder it, and well schooled by the vrging of the law vpon his conscience, hee will soone thirst after the saluation offered in Christ Iesus. The Gospell will bee glad tidings to him, and [n] as cold waters to a wearie soule. Take this course which I haue prescribed thee, learne to feele the waight of sinne, frequent the powerfull ministery of the word, and thou shalt soone thirst for the water of life.

The next point is the benefite of enioying this water. Hee that drinketh of it shall neuer be more a thirst. And the reason is, because the water shall bee in him, a well of water springing vp into euerlasting life. This is warily to be vnderstood: for it is not so to be taken, as though the children of God beeing once seasoned with grace, were glutted (as it were) and had no more desire for the encrease of grace, for it is cleane otherwise; the more grace a man hath, the more he longeth to haue grace to bee euen heaped (if it were possible) vpon his soule. But the meaning is this; that whereas this outward element of water, which we daily vse, is soone wasted and turned to nothing, and a man that hath vsed it, is within a while as new to seeke, as if he neuer had had thereof, this water of life is of another nature; beeing once receiued, it is neuer dryed vp againe, it is like to a liuing spring which shall perpetually streame, and as it were bubble out vnto eternall life: it is a fountaine that can neuer be drawne dry, an euerlasting stocke that can neuer bee wasted, a store which can neuer bee spent, as a lampe fed with oyle of immortality which can neuer bee consumed. Wee learne an excellent point from hence, and it is this: that the graces, which God once bestoweth on his children are neuer taken from them: this is Christs true meaning: and it is a point easily proued by the Scripture. [o] The gifts and calling of God are without repentance, that is, God neuer altereth his purpose touching the bringing of any man into the ſtate of grace. [p] Whom he loueth, he loueth to the end: for a moment, [q] I hid my face from thee for a little ſeaſon, but with euerlaſting loue I had compaſſion on thee, ſaith the Lord thy redeemer. [r] I haue loued thee with an euerlaſting loue. [ſ] I am perſwaded (ſaith Paul) that he that hath begun this worke in you will performe it. It is a generall rule; where God beginneth a good worke of grace, hee goeth on alwaies to finiſh it. I giue vnto my ſheepe eternall life, and they ſhall neuer periſh, neither ſhall any plucke them out of my hand *. There is no point plainer in the Scripture; Chriſt doth not bring vs into a good courſe, and then leaue vs to our ſelues, but he guides vs in it by his grace vnto the end; and therefore he is called both [t] The author, and the finiſher of our faith.

The Vſe.

The vſe is two-fold: Firſt, to quicken and ſtirre vp our deſires to make vs labour after theſe heauenly graces, ſeeing they are the onely things of perpetuitie. All things elſe are ſubiect to vncertaintie, onely [u] the foundation of the Lord remaineth ſure. Oh then, chuſe the * better part which ſhall not bee taken away from vs. Secondly, this is a point of infinite and vnſpeakeable comfort to all Gods children. For conſider I pray you, is it not a comfortable thing, when a man with great charge and induſtry hath gotten a commoditie, to be aſſured of the continuance, and to be freed from the feare of loſing it? What a ioy muſt it then needs be to a Chriſtian ſoule, to conſider that the Lord hauing begun, in ſome meaſure to bee gracious vnto him, will neuer alter his fauour; that grace being once beſtowed, ſhall neuer bee withdrawne; that his ſoule hauing once beene moyſtened with the dew of heauen, ſhall neuer bee wholly dryed vp againe? It is poſsible I know for the deare childe of God, ſometimes to ſeeme to himſelfe and to others, emptie and barren of all goodneſſe, and theſe graces may bee thought for a time, vtterly to bee conſumed. So the ſappe lyeth hidde in the roote of the tree the whole winter, and maketh no ſhew; and in a very dry and hotte Sommer, you ſhall ſee many ſprings as it were cleane gone, without any appearance of moiſture: yet in Sommer the ſap mounteth aloft into all the branches of the tree, and in a conuenient ſeaſon, the veines of the earth are opened, and the dryed ſpring returneth to his former ſtreaming: ſo, though the children of God may ſeeme ſometimes vtterly to bee fallen backe to their former hardneſſe, yet (as Saint Iohn ſaith) [x] there is a certaine ſeede behinde; there is a hidden moiſture which at laſt breakes out, and ſheweth it ſelfe in the fruits of righteouſneſſe as before. So then, if thou haſt neuer ſo little grace, (as thou thinkeſt) though it be but as yet a deſire of grace, a longing after faith, a thirſting after righteouſneſſe, yet make much of it, reioyce in it, thanke God for it, take it as a pledge that the Lord hath ſome further worke to worke in thee: bee ſure, that he which hath begun it, will cheriſh it, yea and that in his time he will alſo encreaſe it.

The ſignes of hauing this water.

The laſt point remaineth, which is the life of all that hath beene ſaid, viz. how may I for my part know that I haue taſted of this water. Hearken a little and I will tell thee: thou ſhalt know the certaintie of it by theſe ſignes. The firſt is, a cleare ſight of thine owne ſoules eſtate. In a cleare well, a man may ſee a peny in the bottome of it: ſo if a man haue the well of life in his heart, he ſhall behold in it the full proportion (as it were) of his owne ſoule. And aſſure thy ſelfe of this, that the more full ſight thou haſt of thine owne imperfections, of thine owne corruptions, of the rebellions of thy heart, of the crookedneſſe of thy nature, the greater portion thou haſt of this grace. The ſecond ſigne, is the cleanneſſe of the heart: it is the nature of the water to cleanſe and ſcoure: ſo is it the propertie of this heauenly water: no ſope, no nitre, hath that ſcouring power that it hath. [y] The heart is wicked aboue all things: fraughted naturally with corruption, ignorance, vnbeliefe, hardneſſe, ſecuritie, frowardneſſe, vntowardneſſe to good ſeruices. Looke therefore how thy heart is cleanſed, thy ſoule purged from this filthineſſe. Thou wilt ſay to mee (perhaps) the Scripture ſaith,

[z] Who

[z] Who can ſay, I haue made my heart cleane: how ſhall I then thinke to finde a cleane heart? I anſwer, cleane from all blemiſh I know thou ſhalt neuer finde it, yet thou muſt [a] haue a pure heart, for elſe thou ſhalt neuer ſee God. A pure heart, is a heart purged from the bondage of ſinne, a heart [b] cleanſed from dead workes to ſerue the liuing God: more plainely, a heart [c] which deſireth in all things to liue honeſtly. If thou wouldeſt therefore be ſure of a cleane heart, looke for a cleane conuerſation, ſuch a conuerſation as Saint Paul ſpeaketh of, [d] which becommeth the Goſpel, which adorneth the doctrine of our Sauiour in all things, which maketh our enemies and the enemies of our profeſsion [e] aſhamed when they haue nothing concerning vs to ſpeake euill of. The water of life doth alwaies bring foorth ſuch fruit: therefore a good man is ſaid to be [f] as a tree planted by the riuers of water, that will bring forth her fruit in due ſeaſon. And it is ſaid againe, [g] that euery thing ſhall liue, whither that liuing riuer, which floweth out of the Sanctuarie, commeth. Try thy ſelfe by this marke, ſee whether this water hath quenched the boyling heate of thine owne inordinate luſts, and hath begotten a new life, euen the life of righteouſneſſe within thee. The third ſigne, is increaſing in grace: water which is but a ſmall ſtreame at the well head, going further waxeth broader and deeper, and parts it ſelfe into many branches: ſo theſe waters that flowed out of the Sanctuarie, were firſt [h] to the ancles, then to the knees, then to the loynes, then a riuer which could not be paſſed ouer. If there be a care to increaſe in grace, in knowledge, in feeling, in zeale, in obedience, the well of life is in that ſoule: if there be a reſting ſatisfied, as though all were well, and we had religion inough, that is a dry ſoule, the graces of Gods Spirit are not in it. The fourth ſigne, is a care to doe good to the ſoules of others: we know nothing is more free in vſe then the water. Dauid ſaith, [i] God ſendeth out ſprings into the valleyes, to giue drinke to all the beaſts of the field. And Chriſt ſaith, [k] that out of his belly, which drinketh of this water, ſhall flow riuers of water of life, by which many ſhall be comforted. Haſt thou a deſire and a care to be helpefull to other mens ſoules? it is a ſigne, thy ſoule is watered, and ſhall be more bedewed: for [l] he that watereth ſhall haue raine: haſt thou no ſuch care, no diſpoſition to be a meanes of ſaluation vnto others? thou haſt a barren heart, and a graceleſſe ſpirit. Theſe bee plaine and familiar markes, and they be ſuch as will not deceiue vs. The daily vſe of water, may daily minde vs of them, let vs daily try our ſelues how it fareth with vs in theſe things. If wee bee trauelling by the way, and it be told vs, that by ſuch a tree, or gate, or village, wee ſhall know our ſelues to be in the right courſe, we will carefully remember it, and heedfully obſerue it as we iourney. If we ſee the markes we will be glad, if we ſee them not, wee will bee afraid we are out, and returne to make enquirie. Let vs doe ſo in this caſe, by theſe tokens wee ſhall vnderſtand how it goeth with our ſoules, and in which way we are trauelling: let vs labour to remember them, let vs marke daily whether in our courſe and carriage we can finde them. If we doe, let vs bleſſe the name of God, and hold on our courſe with cheerefulneſſe; if wee doe not, let vs be [m] iealous ouer our ſelues with a godly iealouſie, let vs know it is not well with vs, let vs ſpeedily enter into a new courſe, for feare of going on in the broad way which leadeth to deſtruction. And thus an end of this Text.

Dauids longing, and Dauids loue.

I haue longed for thy ſaluation, O Lord; and thy Law is my delight.

IT is truly ſaid, that this 119. Pſalme is the liuely repreſentation of a regenerate man: in regard that it ſo fully, and ſo effectually maketh knowne what ought to be the meditations of his ſoule, the thoughts and affections of his heart, the courſes and exerciſes of his life. So that the liker, by viewing the inward parts, a man ſhall finde himſelfe to bee, to Dauid in this Pſalme: the more hee may aſſure himſelfe, that he is a new creature; and the further hee ſhall perceiue himſelfe to come ſhort of this patterne, the farther he is to thinke that hee is from newneſſe of life. Of this worthy Pſalme (the true image of a renewed ſoule) I haue choſen one almoſt of the loweſt, but not of the baſeſt branches to treate of vnto you: which, as for the generall meaning thereof, it is agreeing to the reſt of the holy and heauenly matter of the Pſalme, ſo in particular, it is an expreſſe witneſſe vnto vs of two things: firſt, Dauids longing: ſecondly, Dauids loue. His longing was for ſaluation, O Lord I haue longed for thy ſaluation: his loue was the law, And thy law is my delight. Of theſe two in order.

In the former we are briefely to examine two things: firſt what is ſaluation: ſecondly, what it is to long for ſaluation. By ſaluation is meant heere no other thing, but that which in the Scripture is ſometime called [a] life eternall, ſometimes the [b] kingdome of heauen, ſometimes [c] the glory which ſhall bee ſhewed hereafter, ſometimes [d] the goodneſſe of the Lord in the land of the liuing, ſometimes [e] the price of the high calling of God in Chriſt Ieſus, ſometimes [f] an inheritance immortall and vndefiled, which fadeth not; in a word, [g] thoſe vnſpeakable, and not to be conceiued bleſsings, which God hath prepared for thoſe that loue him. This was (as wee ſay) the obiect, the marke of Dauids longing. This ſaluation hee calleth the Lords (thy ſaluation) becauſe as for vs, it is neither an inheritance which wee are borne vnto, nor a purchaſe which by any deſert wee can compaſſe, ſo it is the Lords euery way: it is he which hath [h] firſt prepared it: it is he which hath freely diſpoſed it according to the [i] Good pleaſure of his owne will: it is he which [k] reſerueth it in heauen, for thoſe, who are [l] reſerued vnto Ieſus Chriſt. Now what it is to long, wee doe all well enough conceiue, either by experience in our ſelues, or by obſeruation in others, wee know it to bee the ſtretching of the deſire vnto the higheſt ſtraine; it affecteth the heart in that meaſure, that all delaies are euen a very killing to the ſoule, neither can there bee any contentment or true ſatisfaction, but onely in the fruition of that which is longed for. Dauid himſelfe deſcribeth this affection of his by very paſsionate and effectuall termes, [m] My ſoule thirſteth for God, as the Hart brayeth for the riuers of water, [n] My ſoule fainteth for the courts of the Lord. [o] My heart breaketh for the deſire it hath: [p] opened my mouth and panted. Hee was as one who needs to gape for a new ſupply of breath, ſuch was the heate and eagerneſſe of his purſuit. Theſe things ſhew, that Dauids longing was no ſlight deſire, ariſing in ſome paſsion, which kinde of deſire fire many times, is as soone quenched as kindled; but it was an ardent affection, springing from a deepe apprehension of the good of the thing desired, and being in a manner impatient of delaies, till the thing it selfe were enioyed. Adde hereto, that whereas there are in saluation two things, the one the possession of it in heauen, which Saint Peter called, [p] the end of our faith, the other the assurance of it here on earth, which Saint Paul termeth, [r] the first fruits of the spirit, Dauids longing was entended vnto both: for (to vse Pauls phrase) hee did euen [s] sigh in himselfe, desiring to be clothed with that house which is from heauen, and hee longeth also for [t] the earnest of the spirit, to be a pledge to his soule of the future inheritance. Thus I haue briefly and truely opened vnto you the true sense of Dauids longing, the first part of my text. Let vs now come to see what this is to vs, that Dauids desire was so feruent for saluation.

t Eph.1.13.14.

It doth teach vs thus much, and this is the point which I will insist vpon: viz. That in the hearts of all that shall bee saued, there is a vehement desire, and an vnfained longing to bee saued. I pray marke well this point, and bee not readie to thinke it a slight obseruation, till you haue heard it well prooued and well pressed. First of all, touching the sense thereof, it must be vnderstood with this caution & limitation, namely that I doe not extend it to such infants and little ones, which doe belong vnto the election of grace, but onely to such as are of yeares of discretion, which are of power & ability to conceiue & vnderstand, and are come to haue the vse of these naturall powers of desiring and longing which are in all. For as touching the rest as God hath his part in many such ([u] for of such is the kingdome of God) so his manner of drawing them into the state of grace, and of their apprehending it, is knowne only to himselfe. This is the meaning of the Doctrine. Now for proofe of it this one example of Dauid is a sufficient ground: for seeing all Gods children are guided by one spirit, and like the children of one family, sprung of one father, and bred vp after one fashion, are of one disposition in respect of spirituall things, it must needs follow that the longing after saluation which was in Dauid, is (though not haply in the same measure, yet for the generall nature thereof) in all that shall bee saued, and they are able in the witnesse of a good conscience to say as he did here, O Lord I haue longed for thy saluation Yet, lest ignorance in the course of holy Scripture, should make vs to beholde Dauid in this moode, like a Pellicane in the wildernesse, supposing him to be alone herein, and so we should become negligent to frame our selues to so good a patterne, let vs see whether the like affection be not to be found in others of Gods Saints. Beginne first with Abraham the father of the faithfull, without likenesse to whose faith there can be no saluation: what saith Christ of him? * Your father Abraham reioyced to see my day, and he saw it and was glad. We know what our Sauiour meaneth by (his Day) to witte his comming in the flesh for the redemption of mankind. This day of Christ, Abraham [x] saw afar off, and as he reioyced to be assured of it, so we may resolue, that it was the principall desire of his soule, to be interressed into the saluation which was procured by it in due time. The more Abraham reioyced in it, the more he longed for it, and with the greater desire he expected it, with the greater gladnesse of spirit he entertained it. Come downe a little lower from him, to Iacob: that one voice of his vttered by him in great vehemencie vpon his death-bed, while hee was telling the future estate of his progenie, shall witnesse the disposition of his heart in this case: [y] O Lord I haue waited for thy saluation. Hee saw by the spirit of prophecie many troubles and miseries like to come vpon his children, therefore as a man weaned from outward things by this meanes, and taught to relie onely vpon the Lord hee cryeth out, O Lord I haue waited for thy saluation. Was it not the longing after Christ, which made [z] Moses to esteeme the rebuke of Christ greater riches then the treasures of Ægypt? was not Hezekiah his heart full of longing, and was hee not euen readie to faint in his desires after the mercie of God, when he cryed out in the anguish of his soule, [a] O Lord it hath oppressed mee, Comfort me? Was not Iobs desire earnest, when feeling himselfe to be euen ouercome of sorrow, he brast out into these words, [b] Let the Lord cease and leaue off from mee, that I may take a little comfort? In a word, let our Sauiours testimony bee sufficient for the longing of all the Prophets and righteous men that liued in these elder times, [c] I say vnto you that many Prophets and righteous men haue desired to see those things which you see, &c. If we consider the times of Christs visible being on earth, and after, wee shall see the Spirit of God like himselfe, and bringing forth the same fruits, in others of Gods children. Olde Simeon a holy man, here is his style, [d] He waited for the consolation of Israel, and he desired life but only to satisfie this longing. Ioseph an honourable counseller, yet here was his glorie, [e] He waited (or longed) for the kingdome of God. Paul may stand insteede of many examples: what (thinke we) did he long for, when he vttered those words, [f] O wretched man that I am, Who shall deliuer mee from this body of death? adde to this, his [g] sighing in himselfe, his [h] desiring to bee with Christ. The Iewes that heard Peter preach and were pricked by his stinging Sermon, called to them, [i] Men and brethren what shall we doe? was not there longing? The poore perplexed Iaylor which came to Paul and Silas with a crie, Sirs [k] What must I doe to be saued? was not his desire feruent? I might bring in a cloud of witnesses, but these may suffice to shew the generall disposition and affection of all Gods children; All their soules be hungry soules, all their hearts bee longing hearts, the maine thing affected by them is saluation. If you will haue a reason for it, it is no hard matter to yeeld a very sufficient one. There are three things required of a Christian: First, By a feeling of sinne to seeke Christ. Secondly, By a holy faith to finde Christ. Thirdly, By newnesse of life to dwell with Christ. The first of these three, is the same longing for saluation which I intreat of: and therefore, as in a ladder there is no comming to the vpper steppe, but by the nethermost, so there is no dwelling with Christ which is the height of happinesse in this life, but by finding him; found hee cannot bee but by seeking; to seeke him and to long for him are all one: no man seekes him but he which longs for him, and no man longs for him, but he will care to seeke him. Taking this point therefore for granted, because I see no reason why it should be denied, I will apply my selfe to the applying of it.

The Vse. I pray you in the feare of God obserue it. There is nothing which concerneth a Christian more, if either we respect the strait charge giuen for it, or the great comfort rising out of it, then to seeke to assure his soule that hee is in the number of those that shall bee saued. What true comfort can a man take in any thing, who is vnresolued in a matter of this consequence? hee may haue a kinde of slight and deceitfull gladnesse, but (as Iob saith of the ioy of hypocrites) [l] It is but for a moment, and [m] when hee dyeth, his hope perisheth, and [n] his candle shall bee put out with him. Well then, it beeing a matter of that behoofe to euery man, to make his future estate sure vnto his soule, know this of a truth, (I speake it not as desiring to deceiue, but as labouring to resolue) that there is no more certaine course then this, to try thy selfe and to examine thy selfe by this worthy patterne, compounded of so many worthy examples: assure thy selfe the liker thou art to them in this Affection, the neerer art thou to life and happinesse; and the lesse thou art transformed into this Image, the more of the corrupted old man abideth in thee: and if thou hold on so, when the day commeth in which eternall life shall bee shared out vnto those for whom it is prepared, Christ shall dismisse thee with that comfortlesse speech which was sometime vsed to Simon Magus, [o] Thou hast no part nor fellowshippe in this businesse. Let it not bee grieuous vnto thee, that I aske thee a few Questions, and bee thou perswaded, that it is a matter that behooueth thee much, well to answer them: What is the principall degree of thy soule?

ſoule? What is the thing that thou moſt affecteſt? What is that which thou doeſt truely thinke thy ſelfe moſt happy if thou mighteſt once obtaine? What is it which hath moſt exerciſed thy thoughts, and for the procuring whereof thou haſt beene moſt penſiue? What is it, the diſcourſes and the diſcoueries whereof haue beene with the greateſt appetite receiued by thee? What is it, for the thinking whereon, thy ſoule hath euen languiſhed within thee? Speake the truth in the preſence of God, who cannot be deluded: Is it the ſaluation of thy ſoule? Is it to be aſſured in thy ſoule the forgiueneſſe of thy ſinnes? Is the fauour of God in Chriſt Ieſus? Is it that the Hand-writing which was againſt thee is cancelled, and that there is peace in heauen for thee, and a place prouided in that Kingdome which cannot be ſhaken? Is it, that when this earthly houſe of this Tabernacle ſhall bee deſtroyed, thou mayſt bee receiued into euerlaſting habitations? How ſayſt thou? Are theſe things ſtrangers to thy thoughts, or doe they take a chiefe roome in thy affections? Are they deeply apprehended, or are they but ſlightly and curſorily entertained? Are thy meditations touching theſe, ſetled, and ſuch as holde thee long, or are they but like flying motions, which are as ſoone vaniſhed as perceiued? Though thy tongue, if thou ſhouldeſt not ſpeake for thy ſelfe happely would diſſemble, yet I am ſure that if thou talke earneſtly with thy conſcience, that will not flatter thee. Howſoeuer it bee, this I muſt tell thee, that ſuch as thy deſires are herein, ſuch is thy eſtate: doeſt thou long with Dauid? thou ſhalt be ſaued with Dauid. Is ſaluation (if thou wilt ſpeake the truth) leaſt in thy longing? Then ſtand foorth and heare thy iudgement; thou ſhalt be called the leaſt in the kingdome of God. The longing ſoule ſhall be filled, the careleſſe and full gorged ſpirits ſhall be ſent empty away. This is the true vſe of this doctrine.

Howbeit this be the generall rule of this point, yet becauſe [p] the heart of man is deceitfull aboue all things, and there is a [q] ſpirituall Guile which cleaueth cloſe vnto vs, ſo that thou mayſt both make mee beleeue by proteſtations, and thy ſelfe thinke by idle perſwaſions, that thou truely longeſt for ſaluation, when there is no ſuch matter, therefore I pray thee to pardon my feare, and ſuffer mee to bee iealous ouer thee with a godly iealouſie, and tell to thee, which art ſo ready vpon the firſt hearing of this point, to anſwer for thy ſelfe, to tell thee I ſay, that I doe much doubt, it is not ſo well with thee as thou doeſt ſuppoſe. If thou askeſt a reaſon of me, why I ſhould be ſo hard of beleefe, as not to credit thee, when thou ſweſt and proteſteſt, that thou longeſt for ſaluation: I anſwer thee, that I am ſuſpicious, that the ground of true longing is altogether wanting in thee. I will tell thee what that is, and ſo leaue thee to thine owne iudge. It is this, a liuely feeling of thine owne wretchedneſſe and miſery through ſinne. This is the thing which will make a man long to be ſaued, which will make the meſſage of the Goſpell to be glad tidings: the feeling of ſinne cannot chuſe but bring forth a deſire to haue the pardon of ſinne. And indeed, in reaſon it muſt needs be ſo. For as a man which hath offended the law, and is appointed to death, (ordinarily, except hee be a man deſperate) would rather haue a pardon, then any thing in the world beſides, becauſe without it, hee knowes hee can haue ioy in nothing: ſo hee which hath offended God, and findeth himſelfe in the rigour of Gods iuſtice, to be the childe of death, cannot chuſe but more highly praiſe the fauour of God in the remiſsion of his ſinnes, then all the treaſures and riches vnder heauen. When men are ſecure, and without feeling of ſinne, though the grace of God in Chriſt be neuer ſo plentifully offered vnto them, yet they eſteeme it not, it ſeemeth to them as a baſe thing, they regard it not, but if once a man feele the ſting of ſinne, then hee would giue the world for one little drop of Gods mercy. The prodigall ſonne when hee liued at home with his father, and had meate and drinke enough, and knew no want, then he was weary of his abundance, and would needs

So then, now thou ſeeſt, there is ſome cauſe that I ſhould be ſuſpicious of thy pretended longing. Now followeth the ſecond part; Dauids loue, Thy lawe is my delight. Many words of like effect Dauid vſeth in this Pſalme, yet we may not account them any idle repetitions, but rather repute them as teſtimonies of abundance of zeale, the heart of a religious man being like the fire which in the ſtrength therof breaketh foorth into many ſparkles, ſo that alſo, out of the inward abundance, burſteth out into many ſpeeches. Touching the thing it ſelfe, the matter (you ſee) of Dauids loue it is the law. By which word hee doth not here vnderſtand that part of Gods reuealed will, which with a reſpect and reference had vnto the Goſpell, is called the Law, the vſe whereof is (as Paul teacheth) to [b] cauſe wrath, to [c] ſtop euery mouth, that all may be culpable before God; but heere it is taken in a larger ſenſe, for the whole Word of God, and for the entire body of that holy doctrine, which is [d] giuen by inſpiration of God; to make vs perfect vnto all good workes. This was that which was Dauids delight, the ioy of his heart, and gladding of his ſoule, the very quickening and enliuing of his ſpirits. And it is by the way worthy to be obſerued in Dauid, that ſtill, looke what affection hee profeſſeth to carrie to God himſelfe, the ſame hee alſo profeſſeth to carry to his Word: as hee ſaith, he [e] loueth God, ſo he ſaith alſo, [f] hee loueth his Law, [g] as he feareth God, [h] ſo his heart ſtood in awe of the Word; as he ſaid, [i] O Lord that art my portion, ſo he ſaid, [k] thy teſtimonies haue ✝ taken as an heritage for euer: which is meete to be noted, both for the better illuſtration and manifeſtation of Dauids heart, and for the diſcouery of the idle proteſtations, which many make, who if they be dealt with, concerning the true knowledge of God and the way of ſaluation, will anſwer, what tell you me of theſe things, ſay what you can, I am ſure you can tell no more but this, that I muſt loue God aboue all things, &c. And I truſt I ſhall alwayes loue God as well as you, or the beſt learned. But now here is their hypocriſie diſcried, in that they haue ſo ſmall loue vnto the Word. This by the way, though not vnprofitably. To come neerer to the point, the thing which we learne hence out of Dauids ioyning theſe two together, I long for ſaluation, and thy Law is my delight, is this, that it is not enough for a man to ſay, hee longs and deſires to be ſaued, vnleſſe he make conſcience to vſe the appointed meanes to bring him thereunto. It had beene but hypocriſie in Dauid, to ſay he longed for ſaluation, if his conſcience had not beene able to witneſſe with him, that the Law was his delight. It is meere mockery, for a man to ſay he longeth for bread, and prayeth to God euery day to giue him his daily bread, if hee either yet walke in no calling, or elſe ſeeke to get by fraud and rapine, not ſtaying himſelfe at all vpon Gods prouidence. Who will imagine that a man wiſheth for health, who either deſpiſeth or neglecteth the meanes of his recouery? God hath in his wiſedome appointed a lawfull meanes for euery lawfull thing: this meanes being obediently vſed, the comfortable obtaining of the end, may be boldly looked for; the meanes being not obſerued, to thinke to attaine to the end, is meere preſumption. God would deliuer

deliuer Noah from the flood, but Noah [l] must be moued with reuerence, and prepare the Arke, or else he could not haue escaped. He would saue Lot from Sodom, but yet Lot [m] must hie him out quickly, and not looke behinde him, till he haue recouered Zoar. [n] He was well pleased to cure Hezekiah of the plague, but yet Hezekiah must take a lump of dry figs and lay it vpon his boyle. Hee vouchsafed to preserue Paul and his company at Sea, [o] yet the Marriners must abide in the Ship, else ye cannot be safe, saith Paul. The Lord could haue done all these things otherwise, but he was not so pleased, and his power must not be ventured vpon, when his wil, by appointing an honest and easie meanes, is apparant to the contrary. Now that Gods word is the ordinary and appointed outward meanes of saluation, I hope we doubt it not. If it were not, why should it be called as it is? [p] The word of life, [q] the word of grace, [r] the word of faith, [s] the seed of immortality, the [t] key of knowledge, [u] the Lanterne of Gods people, * the Schoolemaster of mankinde, the [x] Glasse of our life, [y] the Scepter of Christs kingdome, [z] the Kingdome of heauen, the [a] Conuerter of the soule, the [b] Enlightner of the eyes, [c] the maker of men wise vnto saluation. I commend you to God (saith Paul [d] in his farewell to those of Ephesus) and to the word of his grace: he puts both together: Quench not the Spirit: despise not prophecying: there is the meanes: [e] stand fast, and keepe the instructions: that is the way to stand. [g] Christ directing his Disciples how to preserue their owne comfort, when he was gone from them; layeth this speciall charge vpon them: Remember the word that I said vnto you. No word, no comfort. O [h] (saith Dauid) take not the word of truth vtterly out of my mouth.

This is an excellent point, worthy to be taken notice of, because it discouereth to vs the cunning and sophistrie of the Diuell, which is this: In good things hee seuereth the meanes from the End, and in euill things he separateth the End from the meanes. As for example, in euill things he beareth men in hand that they may safely aduenture to vse the meanes of damnation, and goe the way that leadeth to Hell, and yet for all that, they shall not be damned. He maketh a young man beleeue that hee may reioyce in his youth, and walke in the wayes of his heart, and yet for all that, escape that which [i] Salomon saith must needes come after, namely, that for all these things God will bring thee to iudgement. And yet the Lord hath so ioyned these two together, that neither the subtilty of youth, nor any wit of man, nor all the Diuels in hell cannot seuer them, to wit, the pleasure of sinne, and the iudgements of God. Thus the Diuell beguiled our first Parents. God hath coupled these two, Eating and dying with an Adamant chaine, he which did the one, must needs haue the other, [k] yet he brought them into this conceit, that they might Eate, and yet not Die. Oh the world of soules which Satan at this day deceiueth with this subtilty. Well, as in Euill he cutteth the end from the Meanes, he telleth thee, thou maist run on in sin, and yet be saued, so in good things he cutteth the Means from the End; He perswadeth men, that they may be Saints in heauen, though they be Diuels on earth, that they may haue the Lords saluation, yet neuer delight in the Lords law: that they may be citizens of the new Ierusalem, and yet no new creatures; that they may for euer dwell with God, though his Word doe neuer dwell with them. Hence it is, that many will professe to seeke Gods kingdome, but care not for the righteousnes of his kingdome, will cry with Balaam [l], Let me die the death of the righteous, but neuer say with Dauid [m], O that my waies were directed to keepe thy statutes. I beseech you let not the Diuell cozen vs any longer, if hee haue thus hitherto deluded vs. Let vs not thinke to bee saued by other meanes then Dauid was, his way to saluation was Gods Law, if thou leaue this way, thou shalt neuer come to that marke. If the Word of God bee not sweet vnto thee, if it be not to thee, as Ieremy saith [n] it was to him, the ioy and reioycing of thy heart, thou exercising thy soule therein, and framing thy heart and life thereto, know it for a certainety, it is a matter of meere impossibility for for thee to be saued. [o] Strangers from the life of God through ignorance, saith the Apostle. Art thou a stranger to the Word, thou art a stranger to God; Heauen cannot be thy portion, except thou claime the Word as an heritage. That I may presse this point further, & with the [p] Hammer of Gods blessed word driue home the nayle of this exhortation euen to the Head: Paul saith that [q] euill men waxe worse and worse, deceiuing and being deceiued. Therefore lest we should (as indeed without very great care we will) deceiue and beguile our selues, thinking that we doe both long to be saued, and also loue the word of saluation, giue mee leaue to teach you what the Word of God hath taught mee, namely, how, and by what signes it shall appeare that we doe indeed loue the Word, and that the Law is our delight. There is no body almost, but if he be asked, for shame he will say, he loueth Gods Word, and that he were a very wretch if he should not. But come to the vndeceiuable markes and vnspeakable signes of this loue, it will then appeare that Gods Word hath but a very few friends.

q 2 Tim.3.13.

The very signe of loue to the Word of God, is, loue to the publike ministery thereof in Gods Church: the reason is plaine. Hee which loueth the Word vnfainedly, must needes loue the meanes by which the Word shall become most profitable vnto him. It is an idle thing for a man to say hee loueth the Word, and yet not to care to vnderstand it, not to desire to know it, not to make conscience to apply it. The Word of God is called a [r] Treasure, of which, if it be kept together in a Hoord, there is no vse. If thou feede thee, cloath thee, minister to others with thy treasure, then it is vsed as it should bee: take away this from it, what difference is betwixt (setting aside the opinion of a worldly man,) and a thing of nothing? If thou then doe loue the treasure of the Word, thou wilt loue the dispensing of it, the right diuiding of it, the sharing it out by Gods Steward to euery mans necessity. Thou doest heare Dauid here say, the Law is his delight; in another place thou shalt heare him say [s] that the Habitation of the Lords house is his delight, and protesting, that to dwell there, and to beholde the Beautie thereof is his chiefe desire. And (why thinke wee) were the Tabernacles of the Lord so deare vnto him? Was accesse thither desired by him as an idle complement? Or went hee like a Time-seruer to escape law? Or like an Athenian [t] to heare newes? Or why went hee? Sure his loue to the Lawe, drew him to the place where they were which could teach him the Lawe. It was with him, as it was with those whom himselfe speaketh of, who going to the Temple had the [u] wayes of the Lord in their hearts, and as with those, * which prouoke one another, Come let vs goe vp to the mountaine of the Lord, hee will teach vs his wayes. So then, thou which saist thou loues Gods Word, let me try thee by this rule: when I looke vpon thy profession, thou art pretty and straight without, let me see now, whether thou be also sound within: thou liuest in a place where the Word of God is diligently and soundly taught, God hath blessed the Congregation of which thou art a member, with a wise Steward, who knoweth how to giue euery one his portion of meate in season. How doest thou like this? Doth it content thee, or doth it burden thee? Doest thou thanke God for it, or will not thy froward heart suffer thee to repute it as a benefite? Is this Manna as grosse vnto thy taste as Horse-bread, or [y] is it more sweet then Hony to thy Mouth? If thou take no comfort in it, if like the Gaderens, [z] thou wouldest account it a commodity, if Christ were departed thy Coasts, thou must giue mee leaue to tell thee, thou neither loues the Word, nor loues God, no nor yet truely loues thine owne soule. Againe, doest thou liue in Iericho, where [a] the situation is pleasant, but the water naught, that is, where there are good outward commodities, but the true treasure cannot bee had, where when thou commest to Church thou beholdest one, who hath got on Elias mantle, but thou mayest say to him, where is the spirit of Elias? who is able to say say nothing to thee to rouze thee vp, nothing to admonish thee, nothing to comfort thee: How doth this please thee? Art thou well enough satisfied herewith, doth thy heart neuer mourne within thee to consider this? Art thou not afraid of Salomons Rule, [b] Where there is no vision, there the people decay? Or doest thou groane vnder this heauie burden, and doth thy soule pant after a better blessing? Looke vnto it, count not thy selfe a Friend to the Word, a Friend to God, a Friend to thy owne soule, if thou art not affected with this misery. This is the first signe.

The 2. marke. c Psal.119.97.

The second signe of loue to the Word, is the priuate vse of it: [c] O how I loue thy Lawe, it is my Meditation continually. There is the tryall of his Loue. The reason is manifest: where wee loue thither doth loue draw our affections. The rich man meditateth of gathering goods, naturall Louers of their loues, ambitious men of their preferments: so the man of God hauing no greater riches nor glorie then in the Word, cannot chuse but meditate in the Word. It is but small pleasure, so long as we are in a garden to be delighted with the smell of hearbes, vnlesse wee carrie of euery kinde some, that so we may haue some benefite of the garden when wee be farre from it: So it is but a flattering Ioy, no longer to bee affected with the Word then wee are in the Church; therefore somethings must be gathered here, which may worke on our affections when we bee gone. Hee which heareth, and ioyneth not this with his hearing, is but like a man colouted in the Sunne; so hee getteth some superficiall knowledge, but it is such as can affoord him no comfort. And this is the cause why there is so much preached and so little practised, euen because there is so little priuate exercise. I know there are other priuate duties, as prayer and conference, but I doe specially stand vpon this, because this is the most generall, and the most effectuall; All cannot reade, all cannot haue opportunity to conferre, but euery man is, or ought to bee, master of his thoughts, to apply to himselfe that which hee heareth, and to vow the obedience of it to the Lord. This is a needfull point to bee stood vpon, either because it is not knowne, or it is not practised. Many may be said to be sermon-sicke, as there are some said to be sea-sicke. They which are sea-sicke, as long as they are vpon the water, are of a very feeble stomacke, faint, and euen (as it were) readie to die; but comming once a land, and hauing pausted some little time, they begin to forget the trouble, and to recouer their former strength: And after the same manner many there are, who beeing at the Sermon, are tossed too and fro by the power of the word, their hearts are sicke, their consciences melt, and they are much troubled; but when they are gone, and haue a little acquainted themselues with the Aire of the world, they forget what they heard and wherewith they were moued, and returne backe againe to their ill courses as before. Remember this therefore, if thou wilt be thought to loue the word, to bestow some priuate exercising of thine owne thoughts, in and about the word. If a man should be stinted to one meale a weeke, hee would haue a pined body at the weekes end: what shall then become of our soules, if we thinke it ynough that they once a weeke be fed with the word of God, and doe not giue them some other priuate refreshing.

The 3. marke. d Ioh.14.25.

The third signe of loue to the word, is loue to the obedience of the Word [d]. If ye loue me (saith Christ) keepe my commandements: so if we loue the word, we cannot but make conscience to doe that which is commanded by the word. The reason is this. Hee which truly loueth the word, must needes tender the credite of it, and labour by all meanes to maintaine it. Now it is the greatest honour to the word of God, that may bee, when men which possesse it, are ruled by it, and walke according to it [e]. Paul commendeth to the Philippians a conuersation which may become the Gospel. Hee vrgeth the like three times in one

Chapter; [f] ſobrietie in elder men and women, and ſubiection and chaſtitie in younger women, that the word of God be not euill ſpoken of [g]: againe, grauity and integritie in young men, chiefly in young miniſters, that he which withſtandeth may be aſhamed, hauing nothing to ſpeake euill of [h]. Thirdly, truth in ſeruants, that they may adorne the doctrine of God our Sauiour in all things. Now the principall fruite of obedience ſtandeth in two things. The one is, the labouring by often and diligent examination of a mans ſelfe, and earneſt prayer vnto God, and by obſeruing the checkes of conſcience, to finde out what are his eſpeciall ſinnes, whereunto he is moſt enclined, and to crucifie them. This is, [i] to plucke out the right eye, and to cut off the right hand; To renounce thoſe ſinnes which wee thinke it were ſome outward inconuenience vnto vs to forgoe. The other thing in which obedience chiefely ſtandeth, is the making conſcience of euery ſinne, and not for by reſpects of profit, or pleaſure, or reputation, to retaine a ſecret determination of continuing in ſome one or more ſpeciall euils. Sinne is ſuch a canker, that it ſpreadeth ſecretly, and there is ſuch a chaine of ſinnes, that hee which pulleth one, draweth with it a great many. Grant a little one, and a great one will follow. Wherefore as it is good wiſedome not onely to auoide the plague, but euen euery ragge that may ſeeme to carry the plague, ſo it is heauenly wiſedome not onely to auoide groſſe ſinnes, but all ſuch ſhewes of ſinne, as may beget other ſinnes. This marke is meete to bee vrged. Firſt, becauſe there be ſo many hypocrites in the Church, many like the Ephraimites, [k] who were much offended with Gideon, becauſe he called not them to the battell againſt Midian, they would haue had the credit of it: ſo many would haue the credit of religion, that doe not care to bring credit to religion, they would be thought to be ſome body, yet make no conſcience of their life, or elſe they pinch with the [l] Lord as Ananias, and reforme [m] ſome things like Herod, but not all. Secondly, there are many profane ones, whoſe liues are a blemiſh and ſtaine vnto the Goſpel, through [n] whom the name of God is blaſphemed among Papiſts and enemies to the truth, as though the Goſpel did ſet open a window vnto carnall licentiouſneſſe. Remember this therefore alſo, to try thy ſelfe by this ſigne, if the credit of the word be deare vnto thee, if thou profeſsing it, laboureſt to adorne it, then indeede thou louedſt it, but if thy life be a ſcandall vnto the Goſpel, and a ſhame to religion, thou liuing more like a heathen then a Chriſtian, be thy profeſsion what it will be, thou art an enemy to the word.

The fourth ſigne of loue to the word, is hatred of all falſe religion which is contrary to the word. [o] I hate vaine inuentions (ſaith Dauid,) and againe, I eſteeme [p] all thy precepts moſt iuſt, and hate all falſe waies. We muſt learne to beware of a fauourable and tolerable and remitting conceipt of erroneous doctrine as of Poperie, &c. It is iuſt with God, to turne a ſlackneſſe of zeale againſt falſehood, into a profeſſed enmity againſt his truth: as Saul not puniſhing wicked Agag, grew after, to perſecute holy and guiltleſſe Dauid.

o Pſ.119.113.

The laſt ſigne of our loue to the word, is to loue it when the profeſsion of it is moſt deſpiſed. This is noted as a ſpeciall fruit of Danids loue. Examine but this one Pſalme. [q] Princes did ſit and ſpeake againſt me, but thy ſeruant did meditate in thy ſtatutes. [r] The proud hath had me exceedingly in deriſion, yet haue I not declined from thy law. [ſ] The bonds of the wicked haue robbed me, but I haue not forgotten thy law. [t] The proud haue imagined a lie againſt me, but I will keepe thy precepts with my whole heart. [u] The wicked haue laid a ſnare for me, but I ſwarued not from thy precepts. * I am ſmall and deſpiſed, yet doe I not forget thy precepts. Here was loue. No iniuries could wearie him, no contempt diſcourage him, no ſlaunders daunt him, no ſubtill policies or dangers quaile him, no cunning allurements could draw him from the true worſhip of God, this was an infallible token, that vnfainedly he loued the law. It is a rare bleſsing, when Religion is generally hated, euen then to loue religion: when

Well then, he that will aduenture his life, credit and reputation for the word, he loueth the word. These be the chiefe signes of loue. And so much touching Dauids loue.

2. TIM. 4. 7.

I haue fought a good fight.

THE beginning of this Chapter [a] presents vnto vs a very graue and solemne charge giuen vs in the name of God & in his most glorious presence by the Apostle vnto his Sonne [b] Timotheus; that considering the euilnesse of the times, and the aptnes of men to turne their eares from the truth vnto Fables, he should shew forth an extraordinary and vnwearied industry in the faithfull execution of his publike Ministery. The reason inducing Paul to bee at this time especially so vehement to this kinde of perswading, and which should also moue Timothie to bee as apt to entertaien the aduice, was the neere approching of the time of his finall dissolution; I am now ready to be offered, &c. [b] as if he had said: I am vncertaine how soone the threed of my life may be cut off, sure I am it cannot be stretched out long, and therefore, whilest I haue time, (and for ought I know, this may bee the last time) I cannot but aduertise thee: And seeing that which I now speake, I speake as one ready to lay downe this Tabernacle, in the depth of my affection to thee, and in the sincerity of my heart to God, (before whom I expect hourely to appeare) thine eares ought with the greater greadinesse euen to drinke in those my last words, and they should so farre forth affect thee, that thou shouldest lay them vp, and hid [d] them, and keepe them in the midst of thy heart [c].

Now the mentioning of death, albeit it worketh little with Euill men, vnlesse it be either to the deading of their hearts, like Nabals, (he was like a stone, [f] saith the Text,) or to the making of them more desperately secure, (Let vs eate and drinke, for to morrow we shall die;) [g] yet in such a fleshly [h] melting [i] renewed [k] heart as Pauls was, yet could not chuse but leaue some impression. For how could it be, that Paul knowing, that when a man returned to his earth [l], his spirit is eftsoones either receiued into euerlasting habitation [m], or else dismissed to be reserued in chaines vnder darknesse, vnto the iudgement of the great day [n], should not also cast with himselfe, which of these two should be the finall issue of his soule? Now then, beholding with the eyes of his minde, the Glory that shall bee shewed hereafter [o] one the one side, and the Burning Lake which is the second Death [p] on the other side, and knowing that each of them is by the ordinance of God (as with a chaine of Adamant) tyed to the holinesse or profainnesse of the former course; therefore of the securing of his owne soule, for the encouraging his pupill Timothie, and for a sauing and comfortable direction to vs all, hee ioyfully lookes backe vnto his life by-past, that from thence hee may derive a hopefull inference for the time to come: I haue fought a good fight, &c. From henceforth is laide vp for mee, &c. Thus with as much fidelitie and plainenesse as I could, I haue let you see, the course and order, and dependance of this Text. It is a notable and a pregnant proofe of the saying of the wise man, [q] The wicked shall be cast away for his malice, but the Righteous hath hope in his death. That Pauls Hope was not in this life onely [r] appeareth by the following verse: what were the grounds of his hope, by which it became Hope not making ashamed [s], is declared in this verse. It is borne vp with three supporters. First, A good fight well

Time will not giue leaue to vntwist euery specialty. I will proceed as I may, and begin with the first, praying you all that inasmuch as the same dissolution of nature awaites vs all, which hath long since brought Paul to his expected Rest, we would yeeld our selues to be so farre forth perswaded by that, which by Gods assistance I shall speake, that by seeking to imitate Pauls hope, we may at last partake the same happinesse which Paul doth.

Doctrine out of the order of the place. Before I come to the more exact discouerie of the hidde Treasure of this my Text, I must commend vnto you this generall obseruation, grounded vpon the course and order of this place, namely, That the most solide comfort to a Christian soule, beholding the griesly and ghastly countenance of approching Death, is the Testimonie which the Heart beareth to it selfe, of the former steadie care to walke in all good conscience before God. I would bee loath to bee charged with offering violence to my Text, therefore I will let you see how this doctrine ariseth kindly and vn-enforced from this Scripture. Wee see first our Apostle, in a resolued expectation of his now very neere at hand departure; (that is expresse) wee see him also assuring himselfe of no smaller honour then a Crowne of Righteousnesse: (so much the verse following will not suffer vs to deny.) If it bee demanded now, whence it was, that his thoughts of death were so full of comfort, and his hopes of happinesse so full of confidence, the truest answer is this, it came euen from hence, that the witnesse in his bosome, speaking the

If you demand a reaſon of this Doctrine, you may thus conceiue it, and I pray you to marke it, leſt I ſhould be miſtaken and thought to place mans hope of comfort in himſelfe. A man which iourneyeth, builds his aſſurance of ſafe arriuing at the place hee aymeth at, vpon his diligence to enquire, and his care to keepe the right path leading thereunto. The place I intend, I know, the way I am well aduiſed of, in it I am ſure I am, I haue trauailed in it as was fit, therefore I am ſure I ſhall not faile in my intent. This is a kinde of reaſoning which cannot deceiue. So is it in this caſe. The way to heauen is Chriſt. (I am the way [h]: By his blood he hath tracked out for vs a new and liuing way [i].) For the helpe of his choſen in this way, he hath giuen his Word: (He hath ſhewed thee, O man what is good, &c [k].) To his word hee hath annexed Miniſters, as Guides [l], for vnderſtanding it: with the voice of his word hee hath coupled the Teaching of the ſpirit: (Thine eares ſhall heare a word behind thee, ſaying, This is the way, &c [m].) He hath ſet markes alſo in the way, by which to know it: as namely, 1. Antiquity. (Stand in the waies and aske for the old way, which is the good way, &c. [n]) 2. Puritie. (There ſhall be a path and a way, and the way ſhall be called Holy, &c [o].) 3. Fruitfulneſſe (He hath ordained good workes that we ſhould walke in them [p].) 4. Straitneſſe, and the fewneſſe of the paſſengers. (The gate is ſtrait and the way narrow that leadeth to life, and few there be that finde it [q].) So then, the marke I haue alwaies aimed at is heauen, euen the Price of the high calling of God in Chriſt [r]: the way to it I haue ſought, not in mine owne heart, nor in the guiſe & humours of the world, but in the Scripture: I haue found it to be Faith in Chriſt working by loue [s] and making a man zealous of good workes [t]: to this way my heart hath beene ſet [u], it hath bin my continuall and inſtant ſuite to be directed in this Path *, and though with much weakneſſe and limping [x], yea and falling [y] ſometimes, yet to it I haue ſtriuen [z] continually: How then without calling Gods truth and faithfulneſſe into Queſtion, can I doubt of the End, when my conſcience is witneſſe with mee, that my ſteady reſpect [a] hath beene vnto the way guiding thereunto? You ſee then the truth of the doctrine, and the reaſon of it, and withall that in it there is no building vpon our ſelues, but a hopefull reſting vpon the Lord, who hauing taught [b] mee the way, and enclined my heart [c] vnto it, and eſtabliſhed mee in it [d], I know him to be ſo farre from denying himſelfe [e] that I cannot miſſe of the end of my courſe, the ſaluation [f] of my ſoule. Thus the pietie, the purity, the ſinceritie of my former courſe ſecureth me of the Glory to come, not becauſe of any connexion betwixt worke and wages, which I truſt vnto, but becauſe the Lord of his owne will [g] and free grace, hath vouchſafed the ſingleneſſe of my heart [h] purged from dead workes by the blood of Chriſt [i], euen amidſt many weakeneſſes to be the way to leade mee vnto life. So that my title is the promiſe [k] of God, and not mine owne performance: the conſcience of my former courſe, is the aſſurer, not the deſeruer of my happineſſe. Some great man out of his bounty giueth thee an inheritance of ſome pounds by the yeare, thou muſt pay a pepper corne for thy Rent; when thou haſt paide it, indeede thou maiſt claime the profits, yea and by law thou maiſt recouer them: but what wilt thou pleade? what? that thou art worthy of it, that thou haſt paid well for it? no: the bargaine is thy plea, the couenant is all which thou canſt alleadge, for betwixt the rent and the reuenue there is no proportion: ſo for thy Graine of Muſtardſeed [l] thy ſmoaking [m] and ſcarce appearing Faith, thy ſcant Obedience, thy Cup of colde water [n] thou maiſt challenge heauen, and God will not, God cannot deny it thee, yea he loueth to be ſo vrged: but yet thou canſt

o 2.Cor.4.17 not say, It is mine, I haue deserued it: (for what is all this to that surpassing, exceeding eternall weight of Glory o) but O Lord it is mine, thou hast promised it. Thus you see how without any preiudicing, nay rather how with the enlarging of the Riches of Gods grace, the comfort of a dying Christian dependeth vpon the witnesse of his conscience, touching the sinceritie of his heart, and the vnblameable carriage of his life.

The Vse. The vse of this doctrine is plaine and obuious to euery mans conceiuing, and it must needs be this, euen to warne vs all, as we tender our owne soules comfort at the instant of Natures dissolution, so to be very regarding of our present course, that out of it we may raise our hopes, that when our earthly house of this Tabernacle shall be destroyed, we shall haue a building giuen vs of God, eternall in the heauens p, that the conscience of our vnlawfull deedes, and vncleanely conuersation q may not fill our faces with shame and our hearts with horrour, making death to be vnto vs The King of feare r, and the thought of Gods presence, (before whom we shall then vnderstand, that we are shortly to appeare) as a preamble vnto eternall misery. Certaine it is, that whatsoeuer wee now in our securitie (through Satans bewitching,) doe imagine, blessing our selues secretly, and saying we shall haue peace s, yet as sure as God liueth, who hath said in his word, that the light of the wicked shall be quenched t, and the hope of the vniust perish u, so surely such as hath beene our course, such shall be our end, if we haue liued without conscience, we shall surely dye without comfort. And to set the better edge vpon this aduertisement, giue mee leaue to draw you a little into the consideration of that thing, as if it were now present, which ere long will indeede be present. We are met here together at this time (by Gods prouidence) men of sundry fashions and of diuers rankes, but (howsoeuer differing otherwise) all by profession, Christians, and by condition, mortall. All our teeth are set on edge, with the fruite which Adam eate, and the law of death, is heauens decree and cannot be reuoked. Well, put case we were instantly arrested with some killing sickenesse, the herauld of approching death) and were to looke backe into that part of the wallet (as the prouerbe saith) which is behinde, and see what hopes for future quiet, wee are able to deriue out of our former conuersation: let vs (I say) consider well and deale faithfully with our selues, whether our fashion of life by-past, be not more like to fill vs with discouragements, and to breede in vs a fearefull looking for of Iudgement * then to embolden vs with a holy resolution to respect a gracious admittance into our Masters Ioy x. And indeede when men in the records of their owne consciences, shall reade written in great letters, the profaneneſse, the Atheisme, the contempt of religion, the scorne of Gods word, the ignorance, the monstrous oathes, the vicious speakings, the cruelties, the oppressions, the whoredomes, the abuse of Gods creatures, and the whole troupes of grosse sinnes, which haue beene in a manner the very businesse of their dayes, what can they expect, but that their death, should be like the mans estate of whom the Prophet y speaketh, who did flee from a Lyon and a Bare met him, so should their dying also bee a discharge from a wretched world, but withall an entrance into another woe, euen an endlesse, easelesse, hopelesse miserie? It is a sure Maxime in diuinitie, that the future, both Happinesse and Miserie, are begun in this present world: sanctification and holinesse are the first fruits of the one: impiety and profanenes the beginning of the other. The Saints by election are Saints by calling z: their conuersation is now in heauen a whose future portion is in heauen. That which God hath coupled together, let no man put asunder b. You wil plead against mee, that so much abused example of the conuerted thiefe at the point of execution c. I answer. First, he began to worke, as soone as he was called: he bewailed his sinne d, he confessed Christ e, he aduised his fellow Thiefe f: 2. Let then this bee the concluſion: The refreſhing of Pauls ſpirit, when his departing approached, was the conſcience of his well-runne courſe: a Chriſtian by calling, a Chriſtian by conuerſation, could not but haue a Chriſtians inheritance. Goe and doe thou likewiſe [h]. Hitherto wee haue conſidered generally the grounds of Pauls hope, his carriage paſt: now let vs examine it more particularly: and firſt of the firſt ſupporter: I haue fought a good fight. What then (will ſome man ſay to me) was Paul a ſouldier, that he ſpeakes here of fighting? Yes, he was a ſouldier, and the ſame no freſh-water, or white-liuered ſouldier, but a valiant, experienced, & beaten champion, one that had paſſed the hazzard of many skirmiſhes, and (as teſtimonies of his hardy courage,) was able to ſhew the ſcars of many receiued wounds, I beare in my bodie the markes of the Lord Ieſus [l]. But as the things wee now diſcourſe of, are ſpirituall things; ſo this fighting muſt be vnderſtood in a ſpirituall ſenſe. Paul a ſpirituall man [m], his aduerſaries ſpirituall; or for ſpirituall reſpects, his weapons ſpirituall [n], his victories ſpirituall. Let me acquaint you with particulars, that ſo the vſe of this Scripture may be the more full:

n 2 Cor.10.4

Paul vndergoeth a double conſideration: 1. either as a Chriſtian, or ſecondly, as an Apoſtle and Miniſter of Chriſt Ieſus: ſome of his fightings more properly concerne his eſtate as a Chriſtian: ſome againe he was more ſpecially tried in, by vertue of his calling. As hee was a Chriſtian, I finde in his owne writings the report of two eſpeciall conflicts: the one *Rom.*7. betwixt Nature and Grace, the Spirit & the Fleſh, the law of his members, and the law of God. Who ſo reades and examines the place, ſhall ſee firſt, the quality of his combatants; ſecondly, the grounds and tearmes of the quarrell; thirdly, the hazzard (as might ſeeme for the time) and doubtfulneſſe of the euent, together with ſome foyles taken on either part; and laſtly, the certainty and comfort of the victory, I thanke God through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord [o]. The ſecond combate is 2 *Cor.*12. and that was more direct and immediate with Satan, although he therein cunningly (as his vſe is) wrought vpon the aduantage of Pauls corruption. In this Paul was much toſſed & goared, and buffeted, and glad to flee once and againe, and the third time for refuge to the Lord. Howbeit, though the aſſault was ſharpe, yet the conqueſt was great. My grace is ſufficient for thee [p], and Very gladly will I reioyce in mine infirmities.

Now his fightings (as an Apoſtle) were diuers, and the ſame not idle or cauſeleſſe, about needleſſe queſtions and ſtrife of words [q], (for ſo fight I, ſaith he, not as one beating the ayre:) but they were graue and weighty, euen for the ſucceſſe of his miniſtery, and the enlargement of the Goſpell of Chriſt Ieſus. They may (for teachings ſake) be thus diſtinguiſhed: to haue beene either againſt the oppoſitions and vnſound cauillings, or againſt the violences and cruelties of thoſe which were aduerſaries to the truth. Of the former ſort, wee haue this combate with Elymas at Paphus [r], with the reuiuers of the legall ceremonies at Antioch [t], with the Stoicks and Epicures at Athens [u], with thoſe Beaſts *, (Demetrius and his faction) at Epheſus [x], with Hymenæus and Philetus [y], with Alexander the Smith [z]. With all theſe, and with many beſides theſe he combated, and ouer all theſe through the help of Chriſt [a], he had the victory. For it may bee truely ſaid of them all, which himſelfe ſpeaketh of ſome, their madneſſe was made euident vnto all men, and they preuailed not long [b]. Not his comfort impeached, for, We faint not, but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed daily [e]. Not his ministery and cause endamaged: for, albeit I suffer vnto bonds, yet the Word of God is not bound [f], and the things which haue come vnto me are turned to the furtherance of the Gospell [g]: Lastly, not the Church of God damnified; for, I suffer all things for the Elect sake [h], and many of the brethren are emboldened through my bands, and dare more frankely speake the Word [i]. Thus farre for the opening of the Text, and the laying the grounds of that which I would say. I haue reported to you things done, I come now to speake of things to be done. For this clause (as all other holy Scripture) is for our learning [l], and is profitable to teach [m]. I will bound my whole speech within the compasse of these two points: first, I will shew that all Christians are called to the like fight: secondly, I will draw to an inquirie by way of application of the whole, how farre foorth we haue fought this fight.

Doctrine. Euery Christian called to the like fight, that Paul fought.

For proofe of the former, if men were (as they ought to be) experienced in the Scriptures, I neede alleadge no more then the Apostles exhortation to the Philippians, where he calleth them to the hauing of the same fight, which (saith he) you haue seene in me, and now heare to be in me [n]. But for the sanctification of all, I will shew you the truth of it by points and parcels. First, touching the fight, in a mans owne bosome, euen in his owne heart, with his owne corruption; Paul deliuereth this generall rule touching all Gods chosen, that in them the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, [o] &c. And S. Peter accords, that the lusts of the flesh doe fight against the soule [p]. The gift of Regeneration (meant by spirit) and the corruption of nature (vnderstood by flesh) are mixed together (like the light and darknes in the aire, in the dawning *, so throughout in all the powers of the soule,) and these two being in a direct line of opposition, and contrariety each to other, there must needs follow a continuall combate, like the strugling which Rebecca felt in her wombe [q], making a Christian cry in a kinde of astonishment as she did, Why am I thus? Happy he which feeles this combate, who is euer wrastling with his owne corruption, labouring and endeauouring himselfe to haue a cleane conscience towards God [r]. The victory is certaine: For as it was said to Rebecca (when vpon the striuing she felt, she asked of God) that the elder should serue the younger, so in this case wee are ascertained that the old man, (our old naturall corruption) shall be cast off and killed, and the new man (the grace wrought by Gods Spirit) created in righteousnes and true holinesse [s], shall bee more and more established. Secondly, touching the fight with Satan, the Scripture is expresse. Hee hath desired you to winnow you [t], said Christ to Peter, and hee walketh about seeking to deuour, saith Peter to vs [u]: well, resist him wee must: (it is S. Iames his rule *) and that cannot be without fighting, and it is not flesh and blood we wrastle with, saith our Apostle, but principalities and powers, &c. and wee had need to prouide, that we may stand fast [x]. He is but a titular Christian, and hath but a shew of godlinesse [y], who hath not had personall experience of the Stratagems of Satan, now puffing vp to presumption, now pulling downe to despaire, one while working to security, another while presing to dismayednes: sometimes extenuating, and hiding, and painting sinne, that before it is committed it may beguile; sometimes opening and aggrauating it, that when it is performed, it may affright: turning himselfe into many shapes, sometimes like an industrious agent to aduance our profit, sometimes like a pleasant companion, to further our delight, sometimes like a true-

true-hearted friend, to reſpect our good name, but alwaies a venemous aduerſarie to empoyſon our ſoule. Theſe are no new things to the children of God: the mercy of God, and the malice of Sathan, they know them well to bee vndiuided companions. Neither is the Scripture wanting to aſſure vs of the conqueſt. It was ſaid of old, that the Serpent, his head being broken, could but bruiſe the heele [z], and it hath beene afreſh renewed, that Greater is he Which is in vs, then hee Which is in the World [a], and wee all, ſo many as are now in the liſts againſt this aſſaylant haue this warrant ſealed, (ſeeing it is a part of the new Teſtament) with the blood of Chriſt, That the God of peace ſhall tread Satan vnder our feet ſhortly [b]. The third fight is for the maintenance of the cauſe of Religion, againſt both the cunning of oppoſers, and the malice of perſecutors. That euery Chriſtian is to fight with a holy zeale for the purity of religion, S. Iude ſhall witneſſe for me, It was needfull for me (ſaith hee) to write vnto you, to exhort you that you ſhould earneſtly contend for the fauth which was once giuen to the Saints [c]. The kingdome of heauen (ſaith our Sauiour) ſuffers violence, and the violent takes it by force [d]. There is force in getting truth, there muſt be a kinde of force alſo in maintaining it. Dauid choſe religion for his heritage [e]. He is not worthy to haue it, which will not ſtriue to preſerue it. Now for this kinde of fight there are two things required: Firſt, skill: and ſecondly, courage. Skill, becauſe euery corner is ſo full of cunning and ſubtill vnderminers of religion: Atheiſts, Ieſuites, Seminaries, Sectaries: theſe fight not with violence and profeſſed enmity, but with plauſible reaſons, with ſmooth perſwaſions, and with all gloſing pretences which hell can deuiſe to entangle. What need haue men then of exerciſed wits [f], and vnderſtanding hearts [g], knowing how wiſely to handle that ſame ſword of the Spirit [h] to reſiſt them? How requiſite is it, that Chriſtian ſouldiers ſhould be daily practiſing the feats of ſpirituall armes, that they may know how to grapple with the aduerſary at euery kind of weapon, and to make their part good againſt euery encounter? As skill is required, ſo courage and reſolution alſo: For know you what the Apoſtle ſaid to the conuerted Hebrewes, i After yee receiued light, (that is, ſome hauing knowledge and feeling of the truth) ye endured a great fight of afflictions: Is not here neede of courage? what thinke we of the mocking of Iſmael, [k], the diſdaine of Herod [l], the ſcourging of Pilate [m], of ſpoyling of goods, of being made a gazing-ſtocke by reproaches [n], nay, of reſiſtance to blood [o]? Doe not theſe things require a reſolution? Were it not fitting that we ſhould be well prouided, who muſt goe through all theſe bickerings, leſt when we haue ſtruck a ſtroake or two, wee ſhould be wearied and faint in our mindes [p], and ſo be like the children of Ephraim, of whom the Pſalme ſaith [q], that being armed, and ſhooting with the Bow, they turned backe in the day of battell?

As the neceſsity of this kinde of fight for the maintenance of the cauſe of Religion, lyeth vpon all, ſo vpon two degrees eſpecially, Magiſtrates and Miniſters. They are both called Leaders [r] of the people, and therefore as of Leaders, whoſe experience muſt inſtruct, and whoſe valour muſt incourage, and put heart into others, there is twiſe ſo much required. It is their office to ſtand in the breach [s], and to goe out and in [t] before the people, and to beare the ſhock and burnt of the firſt grapling. If they be ſound and ſincere, inſtant and reſolute in the cauſe of God, Oh, what life and courage ſhall they put into the multitude, which doe euen depend vpon their conduct? If they be cold and daſtardly, and giue ground in the day of battell, how wil they make the harts of the people euen to die within them, & what hope will Satan haue to ſet vp his ſtandard in the midſt of Gods Church? But as the eagerneſſe in this combate is required of Magiſtrates and Miniſters more then of others, ſo of vs who be Miniſters moſt of all. In the old Law things in the Sanctuary were double to that which was common, the Shekell of the Sanctury twice ſo weighty as the common Shekell [u], the cubite of the Sanctuary twice ſo long as the common cubite *. The Miniſter had need to with as Eliſha did

Thus I haue ſhewed you the particulars of Pauls Fightings, and the neceſsity of the ſame Fight, in euery one of vs that would bee (as wee are called) Chriſtians: now let vs come to the next point, the Inquirie how on our parts this Fight hath been performed, viz. how wee haue fought againſt Corruption, how wee haue fought againſt Satan, how we haue ſtriuen and fought for the vpholding and maintenance of Gods Truth.

The Vſe. An enquiry how we haue fought this fight.

And here in the very firſt entry of my meditation, when I did in my thoughts compare together thoſe which doe Fight this good Fight vnder the banner of the Lord of Hoſtes, with thoſe, who (whatſoeuer their profeſsion is) doe indeede and in truth fight againſt him, it brought into my minde, that which the Spirit of God reports touching the Iſraelitiſh troupes, and the armies of the Aramites their aduerſaries: c 1 Kin. 20. 27 [c] The children of Iſrael pitched before them, like two little flockes of Kids, but the Aramites filled the countrey: the very like compariſon may be truly made betwixt thoſe that fight on the Lords part, and thoſe which fight againſt him, or at the leaſt, (which by our Sauiours rule (d) is all one) fight not with him: d Luk. 11. 23. the one ſide (the better part I meane) are but euen a handfull in reſpect, one of a Citie, two of a Tribe: the other a numberleſſe number, and may well bee titled with the name of the poſſeſſed [e], e Ier. 3. 14. Legion, for indeede they are Many. And therefore true will that bee which was ſpoken of olde by Iſaiah [g], f Mark 5. 9. and hath beene ſince renewed by Paul [h], g Iſa. 10. 21, 22. Though the number of the children of Iſrael (men profeſsing Religion were as the ſand of the Sea, yet ſhall but a remnant be ſaued. It will not bee enough to haue ſaide thus, vnleſſe it be confirmed alſo, I will therefore ſhew you how true it is by degree. h Rom. 9. 27.

Touching fighting againſt mens owne perſonall corruptions, there are (that out of many I may cull out the chiefe) three things, which doe ſhew the number of ſuch Fighters to be but ſmall: The firſt is, the generall ignorance of this point of holy doctrine, concerning the combating together of theſe two, Corruption and Holineſſe, Nature & Grace in euery true Chriſtian. I am not ſo well acquainted with your ſpirituall eſtate that are here preſent, as to be able peremptorily to determine ought: yet perhaps if a man ſhould deale with the particulars of this aſſembly by polle, and ſhould examine them as ſtraitely as the Gileadites did the Ephraimites, touching ſhibboleth and ſibboleth [i], demanding of each this queſtion, i Iudg. 12. How fareth it with thee, touching the Rebellion of thine owne heart, preuaileth it or yeeldeth it to the power of Gods Spirit? How goeth on the quarrell betwixt the law of ſinne, and the law of God? Perhaps (I ſay) this demand would bee quitted with ſuch an anſwer, as was that of Pauls to the lately conuerted Diſciples at Epheſus, k Act. 19. 2. [k] Haue ye receiued (ſaith he) the holy Ghoſt ſince ye beleeued? And they ſaid, We haue not ſo much as heard whether there be an holy Ghoſt. So in this caſe, they would ſay; You make a ſtrange motion, we haue not ſo much as heard whether there be any ſuch contention: And it may be alſo, ſuch as haue ſome better vnderſtanding then the multitude, if in this particular they were well preſſed, would but make ſuch a confuſed anſwer as Ahimaaz did to Dauid [l], l 2 Sa. 18. 29. Is the young man Abſalom ſafe, ſaid Dauid? I ſaw a great tumult, but I knew not what, ſaid Ahimaaz; ſo they would be forced to ſay, Truth is, I haue heard or read ſomething of ſuch a matter but I doe not diſtinctly and experimentally vnderſtand it. Thus (as it was [m] ſaid to Peter) vrens very ſpeech bewrayeth them, and their dumbneſſe when they are asked the Word (as the ſouldiers call it) ſheweth them to be but ſtraglers and hangbyes vpon the Lords campe, and no good Fighters. Well, without iudging I leaue you to the accuſing or excuſing of your owne thoughts [n]: Only this I ſay, that he which is vnacquainted with this point of doctrine, can no more bee ſaid to bee a Fighter in the good Fight againſt corruption and ſin, then he can be reputed a party in a caſe of difference betwixt two, who hath not ſo much as heard of the quarrell. The ſecond proofe that the Fighters on this ſide againſt corruption are but few, is the vniuerſall yeelding of the moſt vnto corruption. When men come with bended knees, offring vp their weapons, yeelding themſelues to be ordered by thoſe whom they ſhould withſtand, there is no likelihood that they haue an intent to Fight. So in this caſe, when men generally haue (as in were) booked their names, and entred into pay, (and euen as a man would thinke) ſworne their ſeruice to groſſe ſinnes, who will take them to be the Lords ſouldiers, or conceiue that there is any meaning in them to Fight againſt corruption? And ſurely this is the common ſtate. I remember what Deborah in her ſong [o] reports of the mother of Siſera, how that ſhe and her Ladies in their expectation of Siſera and his followers their returne in triumph, ſaid either to other (in their aſſurance of the victory) Haue they not gotten and diuided the ſpoile? I may ſay more truely (for that was ſpoken only out of imagination, either as they thought it was, or as they wiſhed it might bee) of theſe foule enormities, which the Word of God hath branded with the hateſull name, that they are the workes of darkeneſſe [p]: Haue they not gotten and diuided the ſpoile? Doe they not lead captiue, I ſay not as they did of Siſera, a maid or two, or (as Paul doth of the wily workemen of his time) a few ſimple women [q], but euen whole multitudes of all rankes, of all callings, of all degrees? So often as I reade theſe places of Scripture, the earth was corrupt before God and filled with cruelty [r], The men of Sodome compaſſed the houſe round about from the young men euen to the old, all the people from all quarters [ſ], They aſſembled themſelues by companies into the harlots houſes [t], From the leaſt euen to the greateſt of them, euery one is giuen to couetouſnes [u], Then they ſtopped their eares, and ran vpon Steuen all at once *, Then aroſe a ſhout almoſt for the ſpace of two houres of all men crying, Great is Diana of the Epheſians [x], All ſeeke their owne, and not that which is Ieſus Chriſts [y]: ſo often (I ſay) as I reade theſe and the like places, in which mention is made of ſwarmes of people banding themſelues together in euill, I cannot but reckon them as fore-tellings of theſe times, and theſe times as Commentaries and expoſitions of thoſe places. Thoſe maſter-ſinnes, Ignorance, Contempt of the Word and godlineſſe, Security, and want of awe vnto Gods Maieſty, neglect of the worſhip of God, Swearing, abuſe of the Sabbath, whoredome, drunkennes, oppreſsion, pride, cruelty, contention, malice, &c. marke how in euery towne, in euery ſociety, in euery family almoſt, they doe euen ride in a kinde of triumph: if there be any better diſpoſed, labouring to be no longer the ſlaues of ſin, but to become the ſeruants of righteouſnes [z], they are as Iſaiah ſpeaketh of himſelfe and ſuch as himſelfe, [a] as ſignes and wonders among the people: and how the world entertaineth them it is knowne well enough: you know what Dauid ſaith [b], The abiects aſſembled themſelues, the falſe ſcoffers at bankets tare me and ceaſed not; and againe, They that ſate in the gate ſpake of me, and the drunkards ſung of me [c]. This is the kindeneſſe of this generation to thoſe who loue the Lord Ieſus in ſincerity [d]. Thus the vniuerſall yeelding to corruption, men obeying ſin in the luſts thereof [e], and drawing it as it were with cart-ropes [f], argueth that they fight not againſt ſinne, Euill raignes [g] in them and ouer them, they doe willingly giue vp their members [h] to follow it, and (as the Apoſtle ſpeakes) they take thought [i] it and ſtudy to fulfill it. The third proofe in this part is, the

Fight which is in the world for corruption: men doe not onely not fight against it, but they doe fight and striue and labour to maintaine it. I remember what I read of Iehu [k] the instrument of the Lords vengeance vpon Ahabs house; as hee entred in at the gate of Izreel, and lifting vp his eyes to the window, saw that painted Iezebel the wife of Ahab, he cryed out, Who is on my side, who? Presently two or three of her attendance looked out, as it were offering their seruice. Cast her downe (saith he) and they did so: so also in the Chapter following, when hee sent to the guardians of Ahabs children, willing them, if they thought it good, to create one of their Masters sonnes King, and to stand vpon their guard, and they returned him answer, We are thy seruants and will doe all that thou shalt bid vs, what said Iehu? If ye be mine and will obey my voyce, take the heads of your Masters sons, and come to me to Izreel by to morrow this time. After the same sort, we professing our selues, by our shewes to be on the Lords side, and to be readie to doe all that hee shall bid, his charge is, that if wee be his, wee cast Iezebel out at the window, we renounce and disclaime, we cast off [l] and crucifie [m] our sweetest, our dearest, our profitablest, our best pleasing corruptions: Mortifie your members which are on earth [n]. If we now shall not onely (contrary to command) preserue the life (which may be imputed to a kinde of niceness and pity) but shall fight for the life and state of Iezebel, and shall set vp one of Ahabs sonnes, some grosse sinne to raigne ouer vs, professing our selues alwaies ready to defend it, how shall the Lord account vs to be his? And yet thus it fareth in these euill times. What sinne, what grosse corruption almost is there, which shall want a patron to defend it, either that it is no sinne, or that it is but a little sinne? This glauering and glozing age, which hath deuised an art to make deformed faces seeme faire, olde wrinkled visages to looke young and smooth, hath also learned to set a colour vpon naughtinesse, the Diuell helping forward, lest sinne appearing in it owne proper likenesse should affright the conscience. Thus the adulterous woman wipeth her mouth, and saith, I haue committed no iniquity [o]. Euery vice doth now goe armed; if you doe touch it neuer so gently, yet (like the nettle) it will sting you; if you deale with it thorowly and directly, it swaggereth like the Hebrew with Moses, Who made thee a man of Authority [p]? What? Is this so great a matter? I trust, this and this is lawfull, or if not, what need you be agrieued? Thus men sometimes like Saul [q] are not ashamed to say they haue kept the commandement of God, when they haue foully broken it; sometimes like the stubborne Iewes [r] cry, wherein shall wee returne, wherein haue we trespassed, what haue we spoken against God? when the very stones in the street are ready to testifie against them, and the earth is wearie in bearing their sins. And thus it appeareth by three vndenyable euidences, that if we be indited before the Lord, for not fighting that good fight which Paul fought, & which euery Christian ought to fight against sinne and corruption, we shall be neuer able to pleade Not-guilty. I with that which hath beene said may so conuict vs, that it may conuert vs, lest going in rebellion against God, that doome befall vs which is foretold. [s] Those enemies, which would not that I should raigne ouer them, bring them hither and slay them before me.

Now as touching our failing in the second fight which is against Sathan, considering what I haue already saide, I shall neede to speake the lesse: for where corruption and sinne are not withstood, there Sathan is not fought against: where they are entertained, there Sathan is serued: so that the proofe of the former point, is a confirmation of this also. Neuertheless, I will a little insist vpon one specialty, an apparant testimony that there is little thought or resolution among the most to fight against Sathan: and that this is, the neglect of one of the principall weapons whereby to encounter him. Thinke you that hee meaneth to fight, who goeth vnarmed? nay, who when a weapon is tendred to him, casts it from him, or who seemeth not to care, though it were with the land, as it was

was once with the ſtate of Iſrael vnder the Philiſtimes [t], of which it is ſaid, There was no Smith found throughout all the land, and, neither ſword nor ſpeare found in the hands of any of the people: hee to whom this nakedneſſe were a pleaſure, or a matter of indifferencie, would you imagine him to meane well, or to bee a friend to his countrey? I am ſure you would not. Now Paul, ſpeaking of the combate wee are to haue with the deuill, and deſcribing by parcels, that holy armour wherewith hee muſt bee vnderſtood, mentioneth among other things, the ſword of the Spirit, which is the word of God [u]. This we ſee was our Sauiours weapon in that conflict which is ſtoried in the Goſpel*: with this two-edged ſword [x] of, It is written, he cut aſunder all thoſe knots, wherewith Sathans purpoſe was to entangle him. Who ſo then ſhall deſpiſe this weapon, ſhall caſt it behinde [y] them, ſhall hate [z] the knowledge of it, ſhall ſay to God, as the wicked are reported to doe, Depart from vs, for we deſire not the knowledge of thy waies [a], ſhall thinke preaching to be (as was ſaid [b] of old:) The burthen of the Lord, ſhall wiſh of it as the Gadarens did of Chriſt [c], that it might depart out of their coaſts: who ſo (I ſay) ſhall bee thus affected, the charitableſt cenſure, and the moſt fauourable verdict which can be giuen of them, is this, that they are wilfull betrayers of their owne ſoules into the power of the deuill. Now it is no hard matter, to ſhew how deſeruedly this imputation may bee laid vpon our times; I haue written vnto them (ſaid the Lord, of olde, to the Iewes) the great things of my Law, but they were counted as a ſtrange thing [d]. I doe not ſee how it can bee denied, but that God may iuſtly complaine ſo now. Great hath his kindneſſe beene to theſe times, in enlarging and improouing the free vſe of his word: and yet (alas) what a world of people is there amongſt vs, to whom the Scripture remaineth as a booke that is ſealed vp [e], nay, (which is euen fearefull to thinke on) who ſeeme to be of that careleſſe and negligent humour, as though it were all one to them, though there had beene neuer any Bible written, nor any ſuch booke by the ſpeciall prouidence of God, preſerued to his Church? Againe, although the Scripture of God bee entertained into ſome houſes, as a kinde of needfull implement, to fill vp ſome corner, which otherwiſe might lie voide, yet with many they are vſed like their harneſſe in theſe peacefull times, made a prey to the ruſt and duſt, or laid vp like the ſword of Goliah which Dauid tooke from him [f], like a monument, that it may be ſaid vpon occaſion. There they be. Few there be that doe make them their Counſellers [g], or that doe endeauour to hoſt them in their beſt roome, euen to let them dwell plenteouſly [h] in their hearts. Furthermore, for the opening and explaning thereof by thoſe whom God hath deputed thereto, (which is, as it were certaine rules and precepts of defence, teaching vs how to handle this weapon againſt our ſpirituall aduerſarie) how is it reckoned of? Where it is had, it is little eſteemed; where it is wanting, it is leſſe deſired. Few doe reuerence it as Gods ordinance, few depend vpon it as vpon the arme [i], and power of God vnto ſaluation [k]. What fighting can there bee againſt Sathan, when this ſword of the Spirit is in diſgrace? what ſpoile of ſoules will the deuill make, when men are not thus armed to reſiſt? Conſider the ſtorie of Sampſon [l]. When the Philiſtimes had taken him and put out his eyes, then they might doe with him what they would, though hee were a ſtrong man, and a noble man, yet they bound him with fetters, and made him grinde like a horſe in a mill: and ſo when as the light of Gods holy ordinance is wanting, Sathan hath opportunitie to worke his will: men may bee drawne to any thing; no opinion ſo groſſe, no worſhip of God ſo ſuperſtitious, no faſhion of life ſo vile, but they will ſoone embrace it. So then if our conſciences tell vs, that Gods word is not to vs, as it was to Ieremy [m], the ioy and reioycing of our heart; that wee are not like the Samaritans, of whom it is ſaid, that when Philip came and preached among them, There was great ioy in the citie [n], nor like the man of Macedonia, which appeared to Paul in a viſion, and becauſe of the want

The last part of the enquirie concerneth the Fight for the maintenance of the common cause of true religion, both with skill against cunning and subtill vnderminers, and with courage against the wrongs and indignities which the world offereth to sincerities: I cannot now vse that largenesse in this point, which I could wish, and which (the times considered) were very fitting, I will onely in a word touch two common euils, which shall serue to iustifie this proposition, that the number of those which fight that part of that good fight here spoken of, which concernes the vpholding and defence of Gods truth, is but small and p Mich.7.1. thin, euen like the Sommer gatherings, which the Prophet speaketh of p. The one euill is the want of iudgement and soundnesse of knowledge in the doctrine of religion. This is an vniuersall and farre-spreading disease, according as euery Pastor can witnesse with mee, who according to the Wise mans counsell

q Prou 27.23. q, is diligent to know the estate of his flocke, and to vnderstand the particular conceipts and dispositions of the people. The multitude is wofully to seeke in matters of saluation, resting to this day vpon that olde Popish rule, to follow the droue, and to beleeue as the Church beleeueth. I remember what is said

r Acts 19. 32. of a meeting of the people at Ephesus by Demetrius his procurement r. The more part knew not wherefore they were come together: it may bee truly said so of many assemblies for holy Seruices, the more part know not wherefore they come: they will say in generall termes to serue God; but, What hee is, Who hee is, how to be serued, Wherein to be serued, and in Whom to bee serued, I beleeue you shall finde them to bee ignorant: So that the deuotions of many are like the s Act. 17. 23. Altar at Athens, To an vnknowne God s: many are of Gallio his religion, of whom

t Act 18.17. it is said, that hee cared not for matters of that nature t. If the belly may bee

* Si ventri bene, si lateri, &c. Hora. filled, and the backe fitted, like the Epicure in the Poet *, if with the fat hearted Israelites, they may sit by the flesh-pots u, and with those whom Dauid speaketh u Exod. 16.3. of, * their wheate and their wine may abound, they are at a point for religion. Few x Heb.13.9. voice of a stranger y: whether Baal bee God, or Iehouah bee God z, their meaning

y Ioh.10 4.5. is neuer to put it to enquirie. How shall these stand to defend Religion, who z 1. King.18. 21. know not what that is which wee call Religion? When we shall see men caring, and studying, and taking paines to finde out that which Luke calleth The Certenty a, and not to be ledde by coniecturall suppositions, but (as hee speaketh)

a Luk.1.4. to bee fully perswaded b, then there will be some hope, that the Lords parts will

b Verse 1. encrease; in the meane time, while they make either the times, or tradition, or their owne humour to bee the measure of their religion, wee may bee sure the cause of God shall from them receiue very small vpholding. The second euill, is the cowardize and faint-heartednesse of the most professours. That I may follow the phrase of my Text; they are like to some vnexperienced and lately pressed souldiers, who, while the training and muster is neere home, vpon a faire greene, where they are neither scanted for victuals, nor straitened for lodging, nor in any hazard of life, march with some shew of resolution, a man would thinke they would euen eate vp the enemie; but when they come to beholde the face of warre in his true proportion, the battell pitched, and a furious enemy in sight euen now instantly to be charged; their hearts faile them, and the sound of the drum is vnto them as their passing-bell, and they would giue a world to see the smooke of their countrey chimnies: Euen so, many professours of religion, while the world applauds their forwardnes, & when the people before, and they that

c Mat. 21 9. follow, c crie Hosanna vnto Christ, who but they? a man would thinke (that I may

drowne their zeale: but when it commeth to blowes, the world frownes, profit is abridged, pleasure is limited, credit and fame is a little eclipsed, their names put out as euill [e]; then they are nipt like an ouer-forward budde with an vntimely frost, then begin they to grow to a demurre, and in fine, either runne away in the plaine field, or else (vnder a colour of discretion) fall backe into the rereward, the battell is sharpe, and it is not good to be too forward. Thus like as in Gideons enterprise [f], of two and thirty thousand which tooke armes, when proclamation was made in the campe (the assault approching) Who so is timerous let him returne, at one clap there went away two and twentie thousand; so of troupes of professors which at the first entrance giue in their names, when it commeth to triall, the greatest part will retire, and they will be but a few that will stand vnto it to the end. Hereby you may see, that when we haue (as Ieremie saith [g]) runne to and fro through our streetes, and made enquiry, we shall finde but a few, who if they were now to end their daies, and to looke backe into their course past, to see how they haue demeaned themselues in this holy warfare, are able to say, without any inward check, I haue fought that good fight, and now I expect the crowne of righteousnes.

g Ierem. 5.

To conclude then, we haue all heard what Paul did, hee fought that good fight: how comfortable it was that hee had done it, it emboldened him to expect a Crowne of righteousnesse: we haue seene our owne carelesnesse, and what will bee the issue if we continue it: the second death is prouided for the fearefull [h], but such as ouercome, shall inherit all things [i]. If we desire comfort in death, and happinesse after death, let vs henceforth arme our selues for this spirituall fight, against our owne corruption, against Sathans temptations, against Sathans instruments which fight against Religion.

This is the onely warre which is the way vnto eternall Peace.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE, ROBERT, Lord RICH, the gracious accompliſhment of the promiſes both of this life preſent, and of that which is to come.

MAY it pleaſe your Lordſhip, to vouchſafe your Honorable name to bee prefixeed to theſe fiue following Sermons. The two former, declare the power and efficacy of the Word preached, how it worketh to the ſundring of Hypocrites from ſound profeſſors, and maketh way for that great ſeparation, which the Shepheard and Biſhop of our ſoules will ſhortly make betwixt the beleeuing Sheepe, and the vnbeleeuing Goates. The three latter lay forth the matchleſſe, and vnuaſuable worth of that grace which is tendered vs in the Goſpell, how by the elect of God, it is entertained, and with what a holy care they labour to cheriſh and encreaſe it in themſelues, that ſo they may walke worthy of the Lord, and pleaſe him in all things, being fruitfull in good workes. The Matter of the two Texts is excellent: If the workemanſhip were ſutable, I might boldly ſay, that it were no diſparagement to your Honour, to affoord your patronage. But now, as the defects of my handling them (fitted after the plaineſt faſhion, to our countrey-hearers) haue need to bee couered and graced by the countenance of ſome, who is of ſome note and reſpect in Gods Church: ſo if your Lordſhip ſhall pleaſe, ſo farre foorth to conniue my preſuming, and to fauour theſe mine endeauours, that by your acceptance they be commended vnto others, I ſhall haue the more encouragement to do that (which notwithſtanding I am bound to doe) namely, to pray to the God of all grace, to double his graces vpon your Honour, and to preſerue you vnto his Kingdome. From Modburie.

The Discouerie of Hypocrisie.

The first Sermon.

Mat. 3. 10.

Now is the Axe laid to the root of the Trees: Therefore euery tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewen downe and cast into the fire.

THIS verse is a part of the Sermon, which Iohn Baptist the Fore-runner, and (as I may so call him) the harbinger of our Sauiour Christ, made in the Wildernes at the time of his first preaching. It was directed principally to the Sadduces and Pharises, who being transported rather with emulation & malice, then stirred vp by any truth of zeale, went out with others to be partakers of Iohns Ministery. Now the Spirit of God reuealing vnto Iohn their great hypocrisie, in that they accustomed themselues to an outward shew of religion without sincerity, he takes them vp very roughly and very roundly, calleth them a generation of vipers, stirreth them vp very powerfully to repentance, laboureth to ouerthrow their presuming vpon the outward priuiledge of being Abrahams seed, as though God were therefore bound to them; and now in this verse he threatneth them with eternall condemnation without speedy repentance. This is the occasion and generall drift of this verse. The occasion of the words.

To make way to the profitable handling of it, it shall be very good to examine in particular, the sense and meaning of the words. Know therefore: It pleaseth God in the Scripture, to take vnto himself the name and title of an Husbandman [a], in respect that he is the first planter, and the continuall dresser and manurer of his Church, which Church also is sometime called a Vineyard [b], sometimes Gods husbandry [c]: And heere in this place, the people liuing in the Church of God, and professing religion, are called trees, such of whom much good & wholesome fruit is expected. By the Axe, is vnderstood the powerfull ministery of the Word; thereby the heauens are cut (as it were) to hasten either their damnation, or their saluation. By the root of the trees, are meant the soules and consciences of men, to which the Word is well applyed: and the latter clause (therefore euery tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen down and cast into the fire) figureth out vnto vs the finall sentence which shall passe vpon all those, who vnder the preaching of the Gospell, shall remaine vnfruitfull. So that it is all one as if Iohn had said vnto the Pharises; Howsoeuer you haue formerly presumed vpon Gods patience, and haue promised peace vnto your selues, yet now is the time to looke vnto it with greater care, for the Lord will be dallied with no longer, hee now begins to take such a course among you by the ministery of the Gospell, that it shall soone appeare who be his: neither shall now your glorious shewes auaile you any more: for after this, all they that remaine without fruits worthy amendment of life, shall be prepared and fitted by the power of the Word, vnto eternall destruction. This is the meaning and true sense of this verse. The meaning.

[c] 1 Cor. 3. 9.

Hauing found out the meaning, let vs come to the examination of the parts of it, that so we may finde what the intent of the Spirit of God is to teach vs in this place. Marke this therefore, that as the maine thing here meant, is the ministery of the Word; so touching the ministery and teaching of the Word, we haue here The order of handling the Text.

here three things to consider: first, the nature of it, it is an Axe put to the roots of trees: secondly, the vse of it, to shew what trees be vnfruitfull, and to hew them downe; thirdly, the issue of those trees, which notwithstanding the continuall exercise of the word, are found vnfruitful, they shalbe cast into the fire. Of these in order.

And first of the nature of the Word preached, an Axe put to the roote of trees. First, it is an Axe. As in building the carpenter is a principall workman; so in the work of the carpenter, the axe is a principall instrument: It serues as in a generaltiy to cut and pare, so in particular to frame and fashion euery peece vnto his proper place. The Church of God is Gods building[d]; it is built vpon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Iesus Christ himselfe being the chiefe corner stone[e]. The Ministery of the Word is (as it were) the axe in Gods hand, by which he gathereth together his Saints, & makes them to grow vp into an holy temple in the Lord[f]. Doctrine 1. Hence it followeth, that it is of a sharpe and cutting nature, and that it is applied by God for the framing and fashioning of his people, to become true parts and members of his Church. That it is of a sharpe and cutting nature, is manifested both by Scripture, and by experience. For Scripture therein is called the Sword of the Spirit[g]: it is said to be mighty in operation, and sharper then any two edged sword[h]. And as for experience, the fury and rage of euill men against it, is a testimony for it, that it cuts. In the Reuelation[i] mention is made of certaine Preachers which the Lord did promise to raise vp, euen in the midst of the kingdome of Antichrist. After, it is said, that by the cruelty of the times they should be slaine, and that the people should reioyce at their deaths, and in token of gladnesse, should send gifts one to another: For (saith the Text, giuing a reason of it) those Prophets vexed them that dwelt on the earth; the word that was preached by them, pierced them to the quick, galled them, and tormented them exceedingly. And so we see euery day how men of corrupt minds repine and kick against the truth, there is nothing that troubleth them more then the hearing of it, nothing that they doe more desire to be freed from, then the ordinary vse of it. It cutteth the Sabbath-breaker, to heare his profaneneſſe still cried out vpon: It cutteth the adulterer, to heare his viciousnes continually found fault with: It cutteth the drunkard, to heare his excesse so often threatned: It cutteth the ryotor and voluptuous liuer, that his course should euer and anon be so eagerly reproued. And so in the other particulars, it doth euen enrage mens hearts, that the word of God doth so meet with them (as it were) at euery turne; and it causeth many to come to heare it no more then they needs must: because though they set a face vpon it, and would make themselues and others beleeue that it is not so; yet this same sharpe axe of the Word, when the edge thereof is turned towards them, doth strike some wound or other into them almost at euery Sermon. So that as Scripture hath auouched it, so common vse will not suffer it to bee vntrue, that the ministery of the Word is a sharp axe, which hath a byting edge, and cutteth, and pierceth where it goeth.

Vse. The vse of it in a word, is to iustifie and to maintaine to the faces of all gainsayers, that that very Word which they heare daily, and which they would faine make themselues and others beleeue, is but an idle Word, is indeed and in truth the very Word of God. For I doe but demand of thy conscience, which doest most withstand, or which art the greatest contemner, whether to thy feeling it hath not a sharpe edge, whether thou doest not perceiue it to be still chopping, to top off some one corruption or other that is in thee: doth it not many times come so neere thee, that thou wouldest thinke it were by the Speaker especially intended to thy person? doth it not inwardly trouble and disquiet thee, and breed a kinde of chafing and discontentment in thee? Is it not still striking & piercing, till it come to the very quicke, as if it were a thing which crept into thy bosome thou knewest not how? Why wilt thou then say, this is not the Lords, it is none of his Word, when as it hath euen in thine owne apprehension, that cutting nature, which nothing can haue, but the liuely and piercing voyce of God. Therefore fore let men take heed how they traduce or contemne that, for which they haue so strong a witnesse in their owne hearts, that it is Gods Word. If it were deuised by the wit of man, it would bee pleasing to the nature of man, it would sute with the reason and disposition of man, and it would finde a generall approbation among men: but now, seeing men themselues doe finde it to be alwaies cutting and crolsing mans reason, paring and pruning of mens most pleasing deuices, and cutting them short of that which they most affect, as namely, the liberty and sway of their owne hearts, and for the sharpnesse thereof, procuring to it selfe many enemies, how can it be a humane deuice? How must it not needes bee the sacred Word of the most High? There is the vse.

An other thing in the axe, is (as I haue said) that as it cuts, so it frameth and fashioneth the hearers to a place in the spirituall building in Gods Church. By nature we are no part of Gods Church, we are strangers from God, and enemies vnto him [k], we haue no aptnesse in vs vnto any good, wee are euen reprobate (as the Scripture saith) vnto euery good worke [l]. And as a crooked and knobby tree must first be hewen and squared, and cut againe and againe before it can sort with the rest of the building: so must wee also be euen cast as it were in a new mould, and transformed into a new shape, before wee can haue a place in Gods spirituall House; there is a great deale of crookednesse and corruption must be pared from vs, we must passe vnder the workemans toole, before wee can bee an habitation of God by his spirit. Now the meanes to frame vs to become fit for the Lords building, is the publike ministery of his Word; by it the Lord doth lop off the superfluity of our corruption, thereby he doth smooth vs and make vs plaine, and compact and ioyne vs in, as it were by certaine mortesses and ioynts, with the rest of that holy frame, that being once fast coupled vnto it, hee may preserue vs euer vnto himselfe. To make this good, wee may consider of the saying of the Apostle, Hee hath giuen gifts (saith hee) vnto men, and ordained some to bee Pastors, and some Preachers, for the worke of the Ministery, and for the edsification or (building vp) of the body of Christ [m]. Therefore wee finde in Scripture, that as the Church of God was neuer destitute of this workemanship: so likewise those, whom his pleasure was to bring into the society of his chosen, they were framed thereby, and first felt the power and edge of the Word, before they were linked together with Gods people. That glorious Temple at Ierusalem, first builded by Salomon, was else but a type and figure of Gods Church, which though it make no shew to the eye (being, as the Psalme speaketh [n], all glorious within,) yet (as the Prophet Haggy fore-told [o],) it farre exceedes the glory of that building. Now as the whole masse it selfe was a representation of the Church, so what was meant by that multitude of workemen which Salomon had in the mountaines, as fourescore thousand Masons and Carpenters, which hewed timber and stones for the building, but that plenty of spirituall labourers, whom God hath and doth, and to the worlds end will employ in the erecting of his Church? So that as then, no stone, or peece of wood was put into that stately house, which was not first squared and hewed by the workemen in the mountaine: so neither shal any (I speake of an ordinary course) bee placed in the spirituall Temple, which is Christs bodie, who hath not by the axe of the Word, been first framed and fashioned thereunto.

The vse hereof is to let all despisers see the danger of contempt, and what enemies they are to their owne good, which are enemies to the preaching and applying of Gods Word. For this is a sure thing (except thou canst shew mee some Charter of priuiledge by which thou art exempted,) that if thou beest not wrought vpon, and (as it were) hewed and squared by the ministery of the Word; thou canst not haue any place in Gods Church. Well thou maiest bee an hypocriticall member of a visible Church here on earth, in which there are as in a net[p]) frogs, as well as good fish: but that thou shouldest be a part of that heauenly and spirituall house whereof Christ Iesus is head, is a thing vtterly impossible. Thou thy selfe if thou build an house, though it be neuer so meane, wilt not put a stone into it as it comes from the quarry, vntill the Masons toole haue fitted it for the place where it must be; neither wilt thou ioyne in a peece of timber as it commeth from the Wood, but somewhat more or lesse shall be done vnto it: why shouldest thou then thinke the Lord to bee more careleſſe in the building and beautifying of his Church, then thou art in fitting and framing a dwelling for thy selfe? Wilt not thou suffer a ragged vnhewen stone to be couched in thy wall, or a misshapen and vnwrought peece to bee ioyned with thy building? and will he admit of an vntoward, crooked, and vntaught, and vnreformed heart to be coupled into that exact and curious, and vnspotted building, which is his Church? Or if thou doest thinke and confesse, that thou must first bee framed and wrought anew for the Lords worke; shew mee, if thou canst, any other instrument appointed by God for that end, then this axe of the publike Ministery; Name me any one that was euer made a member of Gods house, that was found guilty of the contempt and bale estimation of this meanes; which if thou canst not shew, (as sure I am thou canst not) why wilt thou then stop thine eares like the deafe Adder, and cast the Word of God behinde thee, when neither thou canst say, that thou needest no framing, nei her canst proue that there is another meanes by which the Lord will fashion thee? Therefore I say vnto thee, please not thy selfe in thine owne wilfull obstinacie, or in the careleſſe neglect of the Lords workemanship: for this I will tell thee, and thou shalt be sure to finde it true, that as thou, beeing a builder, when a stone breakes, or is vnfashionable, throwest it from thee, to bee troden vnder foot of men; or if a tree which thou hast brought into thy yard, and thy workemen findeth it to bee sappy or hollow, or so full of knots that it wil not serue for the purpose thou intendest, thou leauest it to the fire to be burned: so when the Lord hath tryed thee agai e and againe by the axe of his Word, but the sappe of thy naturall corruption will not bee cut out, the crookednesse of thy froward heart will not depart from thee, but thou euen hatest to bee reformed[q]; surely then the Lord will cast thee off, and leaue thee vnto that vnquenchable fire, of which we shall haue occasion to speake more hereafter. And so much that the Ministery of the Word is compared to an Axe.

[q] Psal.50.17.

It followeth, an Axe put to the roote of trees, that is (as I haue expounded it) vrged and applyed to mens consciences, layd and pressed to the hearts of the hearers. For looke what the roote is vnto the rest of the tree, the same is the heart to the whole man. Thereout commeth life, saith Salomon[r]. This sheweth what ought to bee the manner of the handling of the Word of God, it must not bee fitted to please mens eares, but to stirre vp and to affect their hearts. Wee doe not (saith Paul) handle the Word of God deceitfully, that is, wee doe not huckster it as men doe their wares, caring rather to beguile, then to profit the buyer, but in declaration of the truth, We approoue our selues to euery mans conscience in the sight of God[s]. The same Apostle saith, that the word of God when it is rightly handled, doth make the secrets of euery mans heart manifest[t]. And it is the nature of the Word to enter through, to bee a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart[u]. Nathan the Prophet laide the axe to the roote, when he told Dauid, Thou art the man[x]. So did Elias when hee said to Ahab, it is thou and thy fathers house that haue troubled Israel[y]. So did Amos when hee preached at Bethel, the Kings owne Chappell, the destruction of the Kings owne house. So did Hanany, when he said plainely to the King, that hee had done foolishly, not to rest vpon the Lord[z]. So did Zachariah, when he told Ioash, hee should not prosper, if hee forsooke the Lord[a]. So did all the Prophets, when they shewed the people people their tranſgreſsions, & made them ſee their ſins [b]. So did Iohn Baptiſt, when hee ſpake directly to the Phariſees, and called them a viperous generation, and when he told Herod to his face, hee might not haue his brothers wife [c]. So did Chriſt, when hee preached woe to the Scribes and Phariſees [d], woe to Corazin and Bethſaida [e]. So did Peter, when hee told the Iewes, you I ſay haue crucified and ſlaine the Lord of life [f]. So did Paul when he called them fooliſh Galathians [g]: ſo muſt we all do, leſt we bring the peoples blood vpon our owne heads. If any man will reade the propheſie of Ieremy, hee ſhall finde how the Lord threatneth the Prophets, which haue ſweete tongues, and cauſe the people to erre by their flatteries [h], ſeeking rather by a plauſible courſe to get themſelues a name, then to doe good to the peoples ſoules, by diuiding the word aright, and giuing to euery man his portion in due ſeaſon. It is to no purpoſe, as it were to ſtand hacking at the branches, and to ſtrike here and there vpon the outward rinde, but a man muſt goe to the roote, and knocke at the doore of euery mans conſcience, that euery ſoule may tremble, and men at the leaſt may be conuinced againſt the day of reckoning. If thou doeſt not well (ſaith God vnto Cain) ſinne lyeth at the doore [i]. Sinne is like a cruell beaſt, which lyeth ſleeping at the doore of euery mans heart, it muſt be awaked and ſtirred vp, that men may ſee their danger. The heart of man is deceitfull aboue all things [k], ſaith the Prophet: And there is a whole bundle euen in the heart of a childe [l], ſaith Salomon; what is there then in the heart of a man, who hath ſetled himſelfe in the dregges of iniquity? This ſubtile heart muſt bee well ſifted, euery corner of it muſt bee ſearched, and (as the Apoſtle ſaith) ſiege muſt be laid to euery thought, and euery imagination muſt be caſt downe [m], the ſoule muſt be ranſackt, and ript vp: otherwiſe the ſeede of the word will fall to the ground without profit. This is the right vſe of the word, it was not ordained to be a tale ſounding well in the eare, but to be a ſharpe cutting inſtrument, ſearching deepe into the heart.

I know this courſe ſhall finde little grace among men, and he ſhall haue ſomething to doe, that thus applyeth the word to the roote of euery mans conſcience. Elias was glad for his plaine dealing to hide himſelfe into mount Horeb [n], Amos was baniſhed the Court for his boldneſſe [o], Michaiah was made to take the bread of affliction [p]. Hanani was put in priſon [q], Zachariah was ſlaine in the Court of the Lords houſe [r]. The Prophets generally paid ſweetly for their plainneſſe; Which of the Prophets (ſaith Chriſt) haue they not killed [s]? It coſt Iohn his head for being ſo forward to reprooue Herod [t]: our Sauiour was hated, becauſe he teſtified of the world, that the workes thereof were euill [u]. Peters mouth was ſtopped, and he was commanded to ſpeake no more in Chriſts name [x]. Paul was counted an enemy becauſe hee told the truth [y]. As it was of old, ſo it is now; he that ſhall goe about to tread in the ſteppes of theſe holy Prophets and Apoſtles, ſhall goe neere to drinke of the ſame cup; if hee ſhall ſpeake home and tell the ignorant perſon, the Sabboth-breaker, the contemner of the word, the ſwearer, the louers of pleaſure, the adulterer, the drunkard, the vſurer, the fraudulent perſon, the rayler; that no ſuch ſhall inherite the kingdome of Chriſt and of God, though it be not his owne word, but the Lords, plainely and expreſly ſet downe in holy Scripture; yet hee ſhall be ſure to heare of it, hee ſhall haue cauſe to take vp the complaint of the Prophet Ieremy, Woe is mee my Mother that thou haſt borne mee a contentious man, and a man that ſtriueth with the whole earth: I haue neither lent on vſury, nor men haue lent vnto mee on vſury, yet euery one doth curſe mee [z]. Thoſe that feare God muſt labour againſt their owne corruption, and ſtriue to ſubmit themſelues vnto it: they ſhall finde it, though it bee not very pleaſing to fleſh and blood, yet to be very holeſome for the ſoule and ſpirit, and happy is he that when he commeth to heare, doth beg of God to direct the tongue of the Preacher, that hee may ſpeake to his conſcience. now mislike it, yet hereafter they will crie out vpon vs that wee deale no more plainely with them; and if euer the Lord doe conuert them, they will then confesse, that the direct and powerfull applying of the world, was the chiefe meanes vnder God to recouer them. So much for the first point, the nature of the ministery of the Gospell.

Now next we are to speake of the vse of it, and that is to discouer and make it knowne, what trees be fruitfull, and which be vnprofitable, who bee true and sound Christians, and who bee hypocrites. Now (saith Iohn) that the axe is put to the roote, it, will appeare what is in you; before, you were shrouded vnder the name of Abrahams seede: but now, now that the word is pressed hard vpon your consciences, the hypocrisie that lyeth hid will bee made manifest, and it will bee found that you are nothing lesse then you make shew of. So that this is the vse of the word preached, to make a kinde of separation amongst men, to bring to light their hypocrisie and falshood, which before deceiued both others and themselues, and because of their formall shewes where well reputed of. When a man walketh through the wood, it is hard to know by the eye what trees are good, and what vnsound; many a one there may bee, which is straight without, which yet is rotten or hollow within; there may bee a good rinde or a great top to that tree, which yet is good for nothing, but the fire; but when the workman commeth, and laieth his axe to the roote and felleth them; then that will be seene which before was vnknowne, and then there followeth a separation of some to the fire, and of others to the building; whereas before, they grew vp all together, and there seemed to bee no difference: Euen so if a man come among an vntaught people, he shall find them, in a manner, all of one minde for matters of religion, holding one course, & couched vnder one common title of Christianity: but let this axe be once laid to their hearts; then it will appeare what each man is, and till then, it is vnknowne indeed what religion there is in him. Hee that then can endure the hewing, and groweth more and more fashionable vnto good things, he shall be for the Lords vse: but he, who the more he is wrought on, the more crooked he prooues, and becommeth euery day the more vntoward, shall be laid aside, and reserued vnto the iust iudgement of the Lord. There be sundry similitudes in the Scripture, by which this point is declared. In this chapter, the word is called a fanne in Christs hand [b], by which he purgeth his floore: the dust and the good corne lie together vpon an heape, till that parts them; the wind sheweth what it is for the dunghill, and what for the garner. So the Gospell preached, sundreth the children of the kingdome from the diuels portion. In the prophecie of Ieremy, it is compared to fire [c], which hath a double effect, to waste the stubble & the drosse, and to purifie that which is refineable, as gold and siluer. It is called light, which maketh all things manifest [d], which before lyeth in the dark, were thought to be all of one colour. It is called husbandry [e], which sheweth what ground is good, and which is barren. It was said of Christ, that he should bee the rising of some, and ruine of some, a stone of offence, and a precious stone, and that be his comming, the thoughts of many hearts should bee discouered [f]. As it was in the person of Christ, so in the word of Christ, it doth as it were anatomize the hearts of men, and pluckes off the vizard from the Hypocrite, layeth forth the poyson that lurked before, and displaieth the gall that lay hidden in the heart. We may see the truth hereof in examples: before Iohn Baptist came preaching in the Wilderness, Repent, for the kingdome of heauen is at hand [g], all things seemed to be well, they were all circumcised, all the children of Abraham; but when he laid his axe to the roote, there followed a diuision: some thought well of him, and thought that he had beene the Christ [h], others said plainly, He had a diuell [i]. So when Christ came and preached, many false hearts were discouered, which before were taken to be good men: some desire their hogges rather then his companie [k]: some brought him to the side of a hill, from thence to breake his necke [l]:

ſome laughed him to ſcorne [m]: ſome ſaid, he hath a diuell and is mad, why heare yee him [n]: others ſaid, theſe are not the words of him that hath a diuell in like ſort it was after with the Apoſtles; what corruption did diſcouer it ſelfe after they began to preach, which before made no ſhew, and might haue beene thought rather not to be? When Peter preached, there were ſome doubting, others mocking [o]. when Steuen preached, there was [p] ſhouting, and ſtopping the eares, and running together like men diſtracted. It was neuer knowne how Simon Magus had bewitched the people, till Philip came amongſt them [q]. When Paul and Barnabas came to Iconium, they found all quiet: but when they ſpake boldly in the Lord, the people of the Citie were diuided, and ſome were with the Iewes, and ſome with the Apoſtles [r]. And let any man obſerue the courſe of that Booke throughout, and he ſhall ſee what reſiſting, what blaſpheming, what outrage, what caſting duſt into the ayre, what conſpiring did ſhew it ſelfe, when as before there was a ſhew of nothing elſe but vnity. When Paul was at Rome, the Iewes appointed him a day, and many came vnto him into his lodging, & no doubt when they came, they were all friends and of one minde; but when hee had preached vnto them, and teſtified the kingdome of God, ſome were perſwaded, and ſome beleeued not, and they which came thither peaceably (as may bee thought) when they departed, had much adoe, and great reaſoning among themſelues [s]. This is the nature of the Goſpel, ſtill to ſhew what is in man, and to make for that great ſeparation which ſhall be betwixt the ſheepe and the goates, at the day of iudgement; yea to enter euen into priuate houſes, and to ſet a kinde of diſſention betweene thoſe, betwixt whom nature and blood hath ſet the greateſt amity: yee ſhall haue the father againſt the ſonne, and the ſonne againſt the father [t], ſaith Chriſt. And (as it is ſaid) there ſhall be two in a bedde at the laſt day, betwixt whom there ſhall bee a rent made, & one ſhall be deceiued, & the other refuſed [u]: So the power of the word ſhall goe ſo neere, as in reſpect of religion to ſunder thoſe whom marriage and the like ciuil bounds may ſeeme to make vnſeparable. Nay, this Axe of the word doth not only thus diuide the ſocieties and companies of men, but it entreth euen into the cloſet of a mans owne heart, it diuids betwixt the ioynts and the ſinewes, and the marrow and the bones [x] (ſaith the Apoſtle,) and maketh a man to know touching himſelfe, that which before hee was not aware of. Then ſhall a man perceiue the crookednes and vntowardnes of his owne heart, then he ſhall feele the fleſh luſting againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit ſtriuing againſt the fleſh: then hee ſhall know what enmity there is in his nature againſt GOD, many a combate ſhall hee haue with his owne thoughts; and that heart of his, which before hee thought to bee very yeelding and tractable, hee ſhall prooue it to be ſtubborne and vnteachable, hardly brought to any obedience. When Rebecca was barren, ſhee felt no trouble in her wombe: but when ſhee was conceiued of two, the children ſtrcue together within her, and ſhee cried out, Why am I thus [y]? So when a man is ignorant, barren of all true knowledge, empty of all grace, all things to his ſeeming are in peace; but when the new man is begotten in him by the preaching of the Goſpell, there is an alteration followeth, there is much ſtrugling, and a man ſhall finde that euill lurking in his boſome, which before he did not ſo much as imagine to be in him. Thus wee ſee the truth of this point, what is the vſe of the publike miniſtery, euen to ſhew the true eſtate of men, to diſcouer to the world, yea and to each mans ſoule, what is in the heart and boſome of euery man. Now (ſaith Iohn) euen now, that the axe is laide to the roote, it will bee ſeene what you are: if you be found, it cannot be hid; if you be hypocrites, it is vnpoſsible to conceale it. Let vs make vſe of it.

First of all it muſt be applied to the ſtopping of their mouthes, who to diſcredit the word preached, doe challenge it as the author of diuiſion amongſt men; oh there was much loue, and I know not what in former times (they reckoning no loue, but that which ſtands in eating and drinking and ryoting together) *The 1. but now there is a rent made, and there is not that agreement that hath beene amongst men. A grieuous imputation, if it were true, that the Gospell of peace should breede dissention, and that which tendes to make agreement betwixt God and man, should breake vnitie betwixt man and man. But there is no such matter, it is not the propertie of the Gospell to beget diuision, but it is the malice of Sathan to enrage mens hearts, that they should not receiue it, that his barnes might bee full. Though the word preached and applyed hath a diuers effect, yet it proceeds only from the diuersity of matter that it workes vpon. If the Axe cut down some wood for the fire, some for the building, it is not in the Axe, but in the stuffe: the Axe indeed sheweth what tree is naught, but it makes no tree naught. The Sunne sheweth the differance of colours, but it makes not the difference: the plough teares vp the ground, and makes knowne the nature of the soile, but it is not the cause of barrennesse. The Gospel preached brings to light mens corruption, but it neither perswades nor approoues of corruption. How is it possible, but if one of two, who before haue beene companions in ignorance, in misspending the Sabboth, in vncleannesse, in ryot, common gaming, in exaction, in couetousnesse, in cruelty, bee, by the preaching of the word restrained, the other holding on his course; how I say is it possible, but there shall bee a diuision and a slaking of that mutuall good liking, and ioyning each with other which was before? Hee that is conuerted, must hate the euill course of the other, and the other must needes abhorre the strictnesse and reformation of his old compainion: neither doe we finde enmity so great, as that which is occasioned by religion: what then? should this bee laid to the charge of the word of God, because these two which before were going like friends the broad way to destruction, are now parted, and are not linked in that neerenesse and familiaritie of affection that they were before? God forbid. Let the fault lie where it is, euen vpon corruption of mens hearts that will not be reclaimed, and neuer will loue any but those which shall bee compainions with them in vngodlinesse. Well, the Gospell aimeth at peace, and the preaching of it linketh the hearts of Gods children into one, it must separate the hollow hypocrites from the sound professors, it must reproue the workes of darknesse, it must make the righteous loathe the bad conuersation of the wicked, and it must make the profane hate euen with a deadly hatred, the blameless carriage of the righteous; it must shuffle the diuels company together, and range the people of God into one: this is not a diuision, though it be a separation; it tends to the purging of Gods house, and it is the glory of the Gospell, and the credit to the ministery thereof; and they which, by this, endeauour to disgrace it, euen whether they will or no, doe beare witnesse to it by resisting it. This is one vse.

The Vse. A second vse of this point touching the vse of the word preached, to separate and to discouer, is to assure vs of this, that looke what separation the word now makes when it is preached, and taught among vs, the same shall stand for good, and goe for currant at the day of iudgement. The Lord meaning to part and diuide the world at the day of iudgement, makes way thereunto by the publike preaching of his truth; they which stand out against the word now, shall not be taken in among those which shall bee saued then. Hee whom the word of God, ordinarily taught, can worke to no amendment, it is vaine for him, to expect saluation at the last day. As the ministery of the word, vnder which wee liue, leaueth vs, so shall Gods iudgement finde vs. So it is in vaine for men to flatter themselues in there vnprofitablenesse and contempt; the hewing downe of the Gospell goeth before, and the fire of the last iudgement doth surely follow after.

The ſecond Sermon.

Euery tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen downe and caſt into the fire.

HItherto wee haue heard of the nature of the word preached, that it is an Axe put to the roote of the trees, that is, a powerfull word, preſſed and applied to mens conſciences. Secondly, that the intent of the Lord in entring in with the Axe among a people, is, to make a ſeparation, to ſhew what trees are good, & what are vnprofitable: now followeth to ſpake of the Lords proceeding, which doth alwaies goe with, and accompany the effectuall miniſtery of his word, Euery tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, ſhall be hewen downe, and caſt into the fire: where we are to conſider, firſt againſt whom the Lord will proceed, againſt euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruit: ſecondly, how he will proceede, he will hew downe, and caſt into the fire. The order of handling.

Touching the former, wee are firſt neceſſarily to examine, what is good fruit; and that is to be examined two waies: firſt generally, ſecondly, more particularly; generally that is called good fruit, which growes out of a good tree. If you will haue the fruit good, make the tree good, ſaith our Sauiour [z]: and a corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit [a]. No man can doe a good worke vntill he be iuſtified; the perſon of a man muſt firſt be accepted, before that which hee doth, can bee liked of. Paul before he was conuerted, who could except againſt his life? he walked vnrebukeable according to all the ordinances which the law preſcribed: yet after he was called, he accounted all his righteouſnes but as filthineſſe [b]. Many of the heathen by the meere inſtinct of nature, liued in the hatred of groſſe ſinnes, and walked ſoberly and iuſtly without exception in the world, yet theſe workes becauſe they wanted true Religion, were not good in them, but were as the learned well call them, glorious ſinnes. And ſo, among Papiſts, and many ciuill men of the world it comes to paſſe: eternall righteouſneſſe is a thing that bleareth the eyes of many, and makes them to bee well thought of, and to bee accounted honeſt men; whereas their actions, how glorious ſoeuer to the eye, yet wanting the true ſeaſoning, and there hearts beeing fraughted either with groſſe ignorance in the things of God, or with error and falſe conceipts touching faith, and the meanes of ſaluation by Chriſt; it is as impoſsible for them to be good workes, as it is for a man to bee good without God. And therefore the world is altogether deceiued, and iudgeth wrongfully of good workes, as, that a man may bee an honeſt man and liue well, and goe long among his neighbours, though he be not greatly religious; whereas to the end a worke may rightly be called good, it muſt proceed from an honeſt heart, and driue to a right end, to wit, the glory of God to whome I owe all, nay, more honour and glory, then I can poſsibly performe. So that it cannot bee, that a man erroneous in religion, ſhould bring forth a good worke: that which ſeemeth to bee good in him, is ſtarke naught when it comes to ſcanning and tryall before God. The meaning. Good fruit, what it is. z Mat. 12.33. a Mat. 7.18. b Phil. 3.8. Splendida peccata.

Euery branch (ſaith Chriſt) that beareth not fruit in mee, he taketh away [c]: there may be a kind of fruit, but yet if hee which bringeth it foorth bee not in Chriſt, a man vnited to him by faith, and iuſtified through him before GOD, it is to no purpoſe: euery ſuch ſhall bee cut off by the hand of God. Hee therefore c Ioh. 15.2.

that would bring forth good fruit, must labour to be a good man, that, to haue his heart inwardly seasoned with true knowledge, and to striue with his owne heart to relie onely for life and saluation vpon Christ Iesus. An ignorant man hauing no vnderstanding in the mistery of Christ, not knowing what it is to neede a Sauiour, not finding in any measure how hard a thing it is to beleeue in Christ; not endeauouring daily to cast the whole burden of his sinnes, by which he finds himselfe ouer-loaded, vpon the backe of Christ looking by his stripes onely to be healed [d]; such an one I say may blinde the eyes of the world, with some such actions as in themselues may be reputed good: but ignorant and want of faith, blemishing his person his workes also (whatsoeuer they be, and how great a shew soeuer they make) must needs be hatefull before God.

Now more particularly, the fruit is said to bee good when it is brought forth with a ioynt respe& had vnto all Gods commandements. Oh (saith Dauid) that my waies were directed to keep thy statutes: then should I not be confounded, when I haue respect vnto all thy commandements [e]: as if he had said, My life and conuersation shall be then such, that I shall not neede to bee ashamed of, when as thy conscience shall witnesse with me, that my heart is set to be obedience of all that the Lord requireth, and that I doe not deliberately persist in any grosse sinne, which is manifestly knowne vnto me to be a trespasse against God: otherwise if I should retaine a secret purpose with my selfe, to make small account of the breach of some one or other of the Lawes of God, for my profit, or pleasure, or outward credit sake; though perhaps I might seeme to bee zealous in some other duties, yea to be euen precise in the obseruing them, yet I should bee a shamed to looke God in the face, I could haue no comfort in my conscience, neither could I so perswade my selfe that my heart were vpright before the Lord: this was Dauids meaning when hee said, Then should I not be confounded when I haue respect vnto all thy commandements. We are assured (saith the Author to the Hebrewes) that wee haue a good conscience; Why? because in all things our desire is to liue honestly [f]: so that if there had beene the breach of any one commandement, which he had willingly and aduisedly made no reckoning of. it had beene vnpossible for him to haue had a good conscience.

It is worth the noting, the preface which Moses maketh vnto the tenne commandements. Then (saith hee) God spake all these words; he spake not the first commandement onely, nor the second and third, and lest there, but he spake them All, and gaue vs straite charge to keepe euery one, as any one: no one was vttered by Gods voice, or written with his owne finger more then the other: to teach vs, that whosoeuer will haue any true comfort by his odedience to Gods Law must not content himselfe to looke to one or two, but must make conscience, and haue a care to keepe them all. He that is the Author of one, is the Author of all the rest; hee that hath threatned to punish the offender against one, hath threatned the curse to him that continueth not in all without exception, that is, alloweth to himselfe the breach of any one. Hee that keepeth all, and breaketh one, is guilty of all, saith Iames [g]. You will say to mee, that it is a hard saying: who is there but hee breaketh some one, if not more? I answer thee, that the meaning of the Spirit of God is not, that if a man through infirmity slippe into any fault, hee is made thereby straightway guilty of the whole law; because it may be truely said, that hee which breakes all through weakenesse not allowing himselfe in it. but striuing against it, and groning vnder it, the same for Christs sake is guilty of none. But this is Saint Iames his meaning, that whosoeuer seemeth to keepe all the other commandements, and yet will willingly maintaine and beare with himselfe in the breach of some one, the same cannot bee said to performe true obedience vnto any. The example of Herod is pregnant for this purpose [h], he feared Iohn, hee reuerenced him, hee hard him, hee did many things, yet hee would not reforme his sinne of vncleanenesse; was

he a good man? did he shew forth good fruit? surely no; nay we see how that taking liberty for the seuenth Commandement, hee fell to cast away the care of the rest: as, of the third Commandement in swearing to that wanton daunser to giue her any thing shee should aske; and of the sixt Commandement in being a persecuter of the same Iohn, whom hee so much reuerenced before; so dangerous a thing is it to liue willingly and purposely in the breach of any one Commandement. So that this is the conclusion, that our fruite is then said to be good, when as there is a respect had to all Gods Commandements, without taking liberty to a mans selfe to liue in the breach and ordinary neglect of any one. Let vs make vse of this.

The 1. Vse.

First of all it serues to shew vnto vs, that howsoeuer Papists doe pretend to stand much vpon good workes, and would bee thought zealous therein, yet it is not possible that a Papist should bring foorth good fruit, such as all those must bring foorth, which would escape the casting into the fire, which is here mentioned in the latter end of my text. And my reason for that I say is, because euery Papist doth continue in a wilfull, setled and aduised breach of the second Commandement, which forbids expresly all making of grauen images for the worship of God. All the shift they can make, all the distinctions they are able to coyne, cannot quit them from the breach of the lawe. For it is a cleare case, that that which was the Israelites sinne in making the golden Calfe, is the thing chiefly forbidden in the second Commandement; now their sinne was, the making of an image by which to worship God, and to preserue the memorie of God; for so Aaron proclaimed, Too morrow shall bee the holy day of Iehouah i. And the Psalmist saith, they turned their honour or glory (that is, their God; the true worship of whom was the glory among men) him they turned into the similitude of a bullocke that eateth grasse k: neither could they be so grosse as to thinke, that that molton stuffe, the casting whereof they themselues beheld; was their deliuerer out of Ægypt; common reason would not suffer them to be so sottish: the truth was; this they would haue, after the fashion of other Nations, to worship God by. And the same is the right idolatrie of Papists, they will not bee thought to worship Images, but to worship God by, and at the Image; and therefore it is a plaine breach of the second Commandement, the continuance wherein makes all their great workes abhominable before God, though they bee nener so chargeable to their purses, or painefull to their bodies. So that we must learne to beware of those fauourable speeches which wee will vse touching such, as to say, It is pittie of their errour, they are otherwise thus and thus, and full of good workes; whereas indeede, that which they doe, as giuing to the poore, &c. though in it selfe it bee good, yet in them it is not so: for hee which commands giuing to the poore, commanded also to make no Image; so that he will not be pleased with the one, where and when there is no reckoning made of the other.

The 2. Vse.

Secondly, this plucketh off the vizard from many hypocrites, which liue in the face of Gods Church, who stand much vpon their tearms, and brag of their fruites, and thinke themselues to be such as they ought to bee, because (it may be) they can name, or the world may beholde in them, some one or two things, which are esteemed to be good workes, as (parhaps) some hospitalitie, or now and then some largesse to the poore, or peaceableness, or kinde and gentle conuersation, or truth, and keeping promise in the dealings of the world; and suth like. An other (parhaps) will say that he is no adulterer, or no theefe, or no slanderer, or he neuer went to lawe with any man, &c. Wee finde many such, that for these causes are well thought of with the men of the world, and which doe soothe vp themselues for these things, as though their fruit were as good and wholesome as it neede to bee: and therefore when they heare of any iudgement of God against sinne, they suppose it concernes them not? But by this rule which I haue taught, touching the nature of good fruit, such men shall be soon tried to be hypocrites; for come we but to one particular, and that is touching the exercises of Gods word, and the holy keeping of the sabboth, that will by and by discouer them. The preaching of the word hath no relish with them, they will bee ready to ioyne with the worst people that are, in disgraces of it; they haue no appetite to the Lords Table, but once a yeare: they make no reckoning of spending the Lords day: but imagine, it may be made either a day of businesse, or pleasure, as they shall please, or as they shall haue occasion: yet such men must be said to bring foorth good fruite, and who is able to say to the contrary? I demand of thee therefore that art such an one, and it may bee, dost now thinke of thy selfe that this is meant of thee, what is the reason why thou doest giue to the poore? why art thou peaceable among thy neighbours? what mooueth thee to deale vprightly, and to keepe thy word carefully, amongst men? why art thou no adulterer? what restraineth thee from stealing? what maketh thee to doe any one of those things, for which either thou thinkest thy selfe, or art taken by others to be a good man? Thou wilt say (I doubt not) that thou therefore dost such and such good things, because God hath commanded them, and that thou abstained from such and such euils, because hee hath forbiddeen them. I aske of thee therefore againe, whether God hath not also enioyed the holy keeping of the Sabboth day, whether hee hath not commanded, to loue the place where his honour dwelleth[l]. and to giue attendance at the posts of the doores of his house[m], whether hee hath not appointed hearing as the meanes to bring vs vnto faith; whether it be not his will that looke what he did the night before he was betraied, the same we should doe (often in remembrance of him? I know thou canst not for shame but say, that these things which I haue named, are his Commandements as well as any of the former which thou pretendest to doe, because he requireth them: well then, if thou confessest these things to be commanded by God, this must needes be turned vpon thee, why dost thou not make conscience of those other also, which in thine owne acknowledgement are established by commandement? Thou wilt say (it may be) no man can doe all; wilt thou therefore determinately and vpon purpose not doe all? Surely, if it were the care, and conscience, and desire to obey God, which makes thee liberall, iust, chast, peaceable, the same conscience, and same care, the same desire would make thee also delight in the worship of God, loue his word: take comfort in the Communion of Saints at Gods Boorde, and sanctifie his holy day; all which are the lawes of God, nay lawes of greater waight and more moment, then those other which thou standest vpon, and for the superficiall performance whereof, thou thinkest thy selfe vnblameable. Therefore seeing it is certainely true, that if conscience to obey God draw thee to one good worke, the same would draw thee to others also, which thou now neglectest and makest no account of; followeth, that those things which thou bringest foorth are no good workes, and therefore thou but an hypocrite, and one of those naughty trees, which without speedy and great repentance, shall bee hewen downe and cast in the the fire.

m Prou. 8. 33.

The 3. Vse. Now as there are some, who because of some commendable ciuill practises, thinke themselues full of good fruite, though they neglect the worship of God, and the particulars belonging to it; so others there are, who if they shewe some forwardnesse and care in the outward duties of Gods seruice, thinke that to be ynough; though their life otherwise bee a discredite to the Gospell, and a very shame to their profession: (and of this kinde there are two sorts. The one sort are tainted with some superstition, and thinke, if they shew a little diligence outwardly in keeping their Church, though they full little know what belongs to any dutie that ought there to bee performed, then that may bee a kinde of discharge vnto them, for many other euen grosse defaults, such as are swearing, drunken-drunkennesse, whoredome, idlenesse, &c. They bee iust such ones as Ieremie toucheth: they would steale, murther, and commit adultery, and sweare falsely [n], and then thinke to escape all, by comming and standing before the Lord in his house. The other sort are such as seeme to affect the best things, and a man would thinke they loued to heare, and did take delight in the exercises of religion and of Gods worshippe; yet when their liues are looked into, they take a kinde of liberty vnto themselues, to hold one in the ordinary breach of some part of Gods will, either for lucresake, for our needelesse pleasure sake, which they will follow with as great eagernesse, and as great sharpenesse of desire as any other, yea and will therein bee good fellowes with those, to whom they would bee loath to bee thought like in religion. Both these sorts must bee admonished, that this same looking to some one or two peeces of religion is to no purpose. It is no good fruit that proceedes not out of a heart ayming at the obedience of all Gods will: such kinde of men are but almost Christians, and shall bee almost saued, such as their Christianitie is, such shall their saluation bee; they are come neerer to religion, so they shall but come neerer to heauen. That God which bids thee come to Church, bids thee not to sweare, not to lie, not to slander, not to bee drunke, not to bee filthy: if desire to obey him, made thee to doe the one, it will mooue thee to doe the other also: he which commands thee to heare the word, which willeth thee to accustome thy selfe to the publike duties of Gods seruice; bids thee also follow thy calling, bids thee deale faithfully, bids thee redeeme thy time [o], bids thee not to conuerse with those, and to dilight with them, that are enemies to Gods truth, bids thee to beware of being a louer of pleasure, more then a louer of God [p]: if thou be found a transgressour in these things still, it is not thy seeming to bee well affected, or thy doing so and so by fits, that shall serue thy nature, the word of God will finde thee out, and hew thee downe and make thee ready for the fire. This is the vse of this point.

p 2.Tim.3.4.

Another thing necessarily required to good fruite is, that there bee speciall regard had to the duties of that particular calling wherein a man is placed by Gods prouidence. As God hath fitted euery man to liue in some calling, so each mans calling is appointed him for that end, to be as it were the testimony of his religion, and the matter in which hee should shew himselfe what is in him. For this is to be held for a rule, that religion doth not abolish ordinary callings, nor exempt any man from taking some lawfull way or other, by which to doe good to himselfe, and humane society; but rather it is a mans onely direction for the chusing of a calling, and for the lawfull imploying himselfe in the same. Paul writing to the Thessalonians & exhorting them to increase more and more [q] in Religion, perswades them also, to meddle with their owne businesse, and to worke with their hands. It is said of the sheepheards to whom the birth of our Sauiour was reuealed by the Angels, that when they had beene and seene the babe in the manger, they returned backe to their callings [r]. Iohn the Baptist preaching repentance to the people, when they flocked about him, euery man asking what he should doe, he put them ouer all to their callings; What shall we doe? (said the Publicanes)? require (saith hee)? no more then that which is appointed vnto you: and What we (quoth the souldiers) ? violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages [s].

s Luk.3.13.14.

It is the doctrine of the Apostle touching seruants, that they should be true and faithfull in their places; that (saith hee) the name of God and his doctrine bee not euill spoken of [t]. that from thence may bee drawne a generall rule, that the truth of God is discredited, if men professing religion, be not diligent and faithfull in their particular callings. Hee that being called to bee a Magistrate, doth not care to performe the duty of a Magistrate, the same is no good Christian. He that being by profession a Minister, faileth in the office of a Minister, whatsoeuer

soeuer he be otherwise, yet is nothing in account before God: So of euery man in his place, it is true, that he which is not a good man in his calling, is no good man in the eyes of the Almightie; he brings toorth no good fruit, but must bee hewen downe and cast into the fire.

The Vse. The vse of it is, to admonish all those that haue no callings, and doe liue in no certaine course of life, to take heed; it is impossible for them, continuing as they be, to auoid the wrath that is to come; He that liueth in no calling cannot bring forth good fruit. To walke inordinately (as the Apostle phraseth it [u]) and to be a good Christian, is a thing altogether impossible. He that hath no honest businesse about which ordinarily to be imployed, no setled course to which hee may betake himselfe, cannot please God.

u 2. Thes. 3. 11

Againe, it maketh against those which make no conscience of their callings, but doe either neglect them, spending more time in idlenesse and pleasure, then in their needefull imployments: or else, in the following of their courses, care not what falshood they vse, or what indirect course they take, or how they oppresse, or whom they defraude, so that they themselues may haue the gaine. That cannot be good fruite, because though it bee sweete in the mouth of him himselfe, yet it is sowre and noysome to the taste of euery other, whose good the Lord commands to bee respected with as great care, as our owne priuate commoditie. So that this is necessarily required to make good fruit, the diligence and plainnesse in each mans calling. He that either hath no calling, or is not diligent therein, the same cannot scape hewing downe and casting into the fire.

Thus far then I haue proceeded to shew what is to be called good fruit, namely: that which commeth from a good man, grounded in the knowledge of God, and relying by faith vpon onely Christ; that which comes from a heart respecting all Gods Commandements, and not allowing to himselfe the free breach of any one; and that which is done with speciall care had to glorifie God in an honest calling. Now out of this we haue learned what kind of men the Lord will proceed against. First by his word, Secondly, by his iudgement to come; viz. 1. all ignorant people, void of the knowledge of Religion, and the grounds of faith: 2. all Papists, which relye not onely vpon Christ: but more, or lesse, vpon something of their owne: 3. all hypocrites which doe in shewe some commendable duties, but yet wilfully neglect many other, which the Lord hath commanded as straitly as those which they themselues would seeme to approoue of: 4. all inordinate liuers who haue no calling; al such as hauing a calling, either neglect it, or else in following it, seeke their owne [x] onely, without any charitable regard had vnto others. All these the Lord will proceede against, according to the tenour of this present place: they shall be hewen downe and cast into the fire. This is the summe of all that I haue said hitherto. It followeth yet to examine the place a little further.

Doct. 3. Euery tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen downe and cast into to fire. From hence may be gathered, that for the auoiding of the iudgement to come, it sufficeth not, not to doe euill, but it is damnable not to doe good. Saint Iohn here saith not, euery tree that brings forth no fruit, but euery tree which bringeth not foorth good fruite. The owner of an Orchard is not contented that his trees beare no naughtie fruit, but if thy beare not fruit which is good & wholesome, he will not suffer them. Cease to doe euill (saith the Prophet) that is something, but not all, therefore he ioynes to it, learne to doe well [y]. Abhorre that which is euill (saith the Apostle) that is the halfe, and cleaue vnto that which is good [z], that maketh vp all.

Therefore it is not ynough I say, not to haue brought foorth ill fruits, but the tree which abounds not in good fruit, euen that shall be cast into the fire.

The vse is, to ouerthrow the idle fancie that many haue, which thinke they haue said a great matter in their owne defence, when they can say they neuer did any man harme: wherein howsoeuer they are hardly to be beleeued; yet, suppose it were so, you see by my text it is not enough; for the Lord will in the day of reckoning demand of thee, what good thou hast done, how hast thou beene helpefull vnto others? wherein hast thou bin profitable to the soules of thy brethren? if thou canst shew no good thou hast done, it will bee prooued to bee hurt enough, and there will be no way with thee, but to the fire. Againe, it condemneth those, which I know not what pollicie and pretended discretion, will carry a kind of temper in matters of religion, so as they will goe no further then this, that they will not be found enemies to good things; but to be friends and furtherers, they will no way shew themselues: such they are as those were whom Elias challenged for halting betwixt two opinions; If the Lord be God, follow him, but if Baal be he, then follow after him (saith he) but (saith the text) the people helde their peace [e]: indeed they spake not against the Prophet, but they durst not speake with him. Many such cold friends religion hath now adayes, who if they heare the word of God reproached, or any good course spoken against, thinke it enough if they haue not ioyned with euill speakers, although they haue said nothing for the truth. The saying of Christ agreeth well to such, He that is not with me is against me [f]: our Sauiour accounts them all as enemies to him & to his word who are backward to shew themselues friends thereunto. It is not so much, how we haue hindered the course of the Gospell in the place where we liue, that shall be asked after; and how we haue furthered it: if we haue not laboured the inlargement of Gods truth, if we haue not sought by all meanes to credite and aduance it, and to maintaine it to our power against all gainsayers; we shall be found bad trees, and casting into the fire must needs be our portion: the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it, and it cannot be vntrue.

Another thing which we may learne out of this clause, to reason after this fashion; that if the trees not bearing good fruite, shall bee cut downe, and be throwne into the fire; what shall then become of those trees that bring foorth vnsauorie and stinking fruit? If the rich man bee damned, that did not giue bread to poore Lazarus [g], what shall befall those that take away, and grinde the faces of the poore? If he were bound hand and foot [h], that prosecuted his owne right extreamely against his fellow; whither shall they bee cast that labour the vniust vexation of men, the things wherein they haue no colour of right? If the flood swept away them that did but build and plant, and giue in marriage (all, things in themselues good and lawfull, and are noted onely but in men guiltie of not regarding the Lords warning) whither shall the tempest of the Lords furie carry them that blaspheme his name, reproach his truth, truth, and like swine doe wallow in their owne filthinesse? If the Pharises that came to here Iohn preach, with some shew of a good minde, were sharpely taken vp, and called vipers; what shall bee said of those that doe altogether refuse to here, yea and speake euill of the way of God, and doe neuer vouchsafe with any religious hearts to entertaine the message of saluation brought vnto them. In a word, if the not being fruitfull in good workes shall be punished so seuerely, what shall be done to those that abound in euill deeds, whose mouthes are full of cursing and bitternesse, whose tongues are expert in nothing so much as in the defaming of Gods word, whose liues are stained with wantonnesse, with whoredome, with drunkennesse, with pride, with oppression, with falshood, with vniust gettings; where shall such appeare? what vengeance is in the iudgement of God reserued vnto such? Oh consider this ye that forget God, lest I teare you in peeces, i Psal. 50.22. and there be none that can deliuer you i.

Doctrine 5. Further, we may obserue here the strictnesse and straitnesse of Gods proceeding; Euery tree which bringeth not foorth good fruit, is hewen downe & cast into the fire; no man shall be exempted, neither Prince nor Prelate, neither high nor low, neither poore nor rich; there is is no respect of persons with God; Tribulation k Rom.2,9. and anguish shall be vpon the soule of euery barren and vnfruitfull Christian k. Now mans wealth shall buy him out, no mans high lookes and great place in the world shall discharge him, no mans baseneſse shall make him to bee passed by; no excuse that any man can deuise shall serue his turne; the scorner shall not shift it off with his scorning, nor the proud man with his contempt: euery tree, euery tree, if the fruit of it be not found good, especially if in stead of good fruit, there be found nought else but corruption, downe it must goe, it shall be hewen downe, and cast into the fire.

Exposition: shewing what it is, to hew downe, &c. Hitherto we haue heard against whom the Lord will proceede; let vs now examine briefly the manner of his proceedings; and that is two-folde: first, hew downe: secondly, cast into the fire. This hewing downe, is a course performed by the ministerie of the word. In the Prophecie of Ieremy, it is noted as a part of l Chap. 1.10. the ministers office, to destroy, to plucke vp, to throw downe l. And in Hosea. I haue
m Chap.6.5. cut downe (saith the Lord) by my Prophets m: wee haue ready (saith the Apostle)
n 2.Cor.10.6. vengeance against all disobedience n: So that this hewing down, is a thing executed by the ordinary ministery, and the meaning is this, that those who making an out-Doctrine 6. ward profession of religion continue still fruitlesse and are not reformed, at last this heauy sentence shall passe vpon them, that they are past recouery, and so the Lord will euen giue them vp vnto hardnesse of heart, and leaue them to their owne deserued condemnation. This is the nature of the punishment, this is the reward of vnprofitablenesse. So that the outward agent herein is the Minister, denouncing the heauy vengeance of God vpon vnreformednesse; the inward worker is the Lord, making that good which is so denounced by good warrant and sufficient authority from the word. And to effect this, hee doth either take his word from them, or them from his word. He takes his word from them, when o Acts 13.46. for their contempt, he doth vtterly depriue them of the outward meanes o; euen as the Husbandman forbeares his paines, where no fruite followes after many trials. He takes them from the word, when he brings vpon them the spirit of p Isay 6.10. slumber, making their hearts fat, and their eares heauy, and shutting their eyes p, that albeit they doe enioy the outward meanes, yet they cannot profite; which of all other iudgements which God can inflict in this life, is the most fearefull.

The Vse. Whosoeuer feareth not this iudgement, is already partaker of it: hee that cannot be perswaded by the foretelling of it, to auoide it, is already plunged into it. There is nothing that the children of God desire more, then a melting heart; nothing that they feare more, and more pray against, then a hardned heart: they would rather be plagued with all the miseries of Iob, or botches of Ægypt, then with a heart that is hardned. It goeth not well with vs then, when we feare worldly and bodily puniſhments, more then wee doe hardneſſe of heart, and ſpirituall puniſhments. True it is, a hard heart is an euill very pleaſing, ſo is the falling into a ſwoune; but, as this brings death, ſo the other brings hell at the laſt. Therefore when we heare this fearefull ſaying, namely, that if the Lord ſtill ſeeke for fruit, and finde none, he will hewe vs downe: let vs learne to tremble at it, and feare this ſinne, euen this ſinne of barrenneſſe, which is the onely way to ſubiect vs thereunto.

The ſecond part of the Lords proceeding againſt vnfruitfull trees, is, caſting into fire, which is to bee performed at the laſt iudgement, and is the moſt certaine and vndoubtfull ſequell of the hewing downe by the miniſtery of the Goſpell. Thoſe whom the Miniſtery of the word heweth downe now, the iuſtice of God at the laſt day ſhall ſend them to the fire. Let men imagine as they liſt, and ſay of the preaching of the word, that it is but a blaſt, and the threatning thereof are but winde; yet to their eternall woe, they ſhall one day finde it otherwiſe; the ſentence of the word goeth before, the fire of Iudgement ſhall ſurely follow after. The 7. doct.

Doſt thou liue vnder the miniſtery of the word, where it is tolde the againe & againe, and prooued to thy conſcience out of the word of God; that continuing in thy ſinne, thy ignorance, thy contempt of Gods worſhip, thy profaning his Sabboth, thy blaſpheming his name, thy filthineſſe, thy exceſſes, thy pride, thy couetouſneſſe, thy exaction, thy falſhood, thy vncharitableneſſe; thou canſt neuer be ſaued: be not deceiued, doe not bleſſe [q] thy ſelfe without a cauſe, ſaying to thy ſoule, tuſh, it ſhall not be ſo, for thou ſhalt ſurely finde it, when it ſhall bee too late to auoide it; thou ſhalt feele it to be true, when as all in vaine, thou ſhalt euen curſe thy ſelfe that waſt ſo backeward to beleeue it. The Vſe. [q] Deut. 29. 19.

Now for the Iudgement it ſelfe, it is here called fire, as it is often in Scripture, with threats of ſome addition; as vnquenchable fire, fire & brimſtone, &c. tearmes vſed be the ſpirit of God, to expreſſe the vnſpeakeable torment of it, which is not to bee comprehended, much leſſe to be indured. The torments of fire and brimſtone euen to fleſh and blood, are ſtrange and terrible: therefore ſuch ſpeeches are vſed, to conuey to our vnderſtanding, and which wee before were not able to conceiue. The Scripture (the more to affect vs) is large in deſcribing this torment; as namely, firſt, the extremity of it: ſecondly, the continuance of it. The extremity of it is made knowne two wayes, one by the vniuerſall torment which ſhall be in euery part: ſecondly, by the conſideration of the happines loſt, which euen in their ſight, thoſe whom they haue deſpiſed in the world, ſhall bee partakers of. All this ſhall be without any intermiſsion, without ſo much as a drop of water to coole it; but the violence of it ſhall make them continually to blaſpheme God, for which they ſhall be continually tortured. Now to this the Scripture addes the endleſneſſe of the torment, it is a fire that neuer goeth out, a worme that neuer dieth. If there were but as many yeares to bee endured, as there be graſſe pils on earth, or ſtarres in heauen, yet there were ſome hope; but the end thereof cannot be imagined, and the word neuer is exceeding fearefull. The 8. doct.

Let this teach vs to imbrace the Goſpell, and to yeeld obedience to it, and to ſhew the fruite of it. If fire come, why will we be as ſtubble? if this fierie argument will not cauſe vs to feare, nothing will cauſe vs. Let vs feare theſe things, before hand, and we ſhall eſcape them; let vs neglect them, and we ſhall fall into them: no man is ſo deepe in hell, as he which leaſt thought of theſe things. And if the ſpeaking hereof be vnpleaſant, what thinke we, ſhall it be to feele it? Well, though we were not told, or I ſhould hold my peace, the fire burnes ſtill? and if we neglect to heare of it, by experience we ſhall feele it. The Vſe.

THE PERFITE PATTERNE OF TRVE CONVERSION.

Math. 13. 44.

Againe, the kingdome of heauen is like vnto a treasure hidden in the field, which when a man hath found, hee hideth it, and for ioy thereof departeth, and selleth all that hee hath, and buyeth that field.

THis text which I haue now chosen, followeth fitly vpon the former; for if any man hearing how full of danger it is to liue vnder the setled ministery of the word, and not to profite by it, should demand what were best to bee done for the auoiding of so great a iudgement; our Sauiour would answer him, that this were his best and surest course, that when he hath found this treasure of the Gospell, he should hide it, hee should goe his way and sell all that euer he hath, that he may purchase it. So that my two texts howsoeuer they be not ioyned together in one vndiuided course of words, yet in order of nature they doe well agree; this latter beeing a direction to all those, whose hearts haue beene affected and mooued by the former.

The scope of the parable.

But to come more nearely to the verse it selfe; The drift and scope of it, is to shew that the kingdome of God, and the things appertaining to it, ought to bee and are so highly prised by all Gods children, that they are willing and ready to forgoe any thing that may bee a hinderance to them in the attaining of it. For orders sake in teaching; it may be diuided into two parts; the first setteth downe the inestimable value of the kingdome of God, It is as a treasure hid in the field: the second sheweth the high account that all Gods children make of it; which when a man hath found, he goeth and hideth it, and for ioy thereof, he departeth, and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field. First of the former part; The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a treasure hid in the field. The thing which is heere so much commended, is called, the kingdome of heauen; and therefore we must first enquire what is meant by it here in this place. The kingdome of heauen is taken in Scripture two waies; First for that glorious estate which the Saints and children of God shall enioy when they shall rise with Christ Iesus, and shall raigne after this life with God and his Angels; sinne, death and hell, beeing vtterly conquered and subdued: the vse of this phrase (the kingdome of heauen) is plaine ynough and needs no proofe. Secondly, it is taken for the meanes to bring vs to this kingdome, and to enter vs into the assurance & possession of it in this life; namely the preaching of the word (which is called the Gospell of the kingdome [a]) and the graces of Gods spirit which are offred with the word, and wrought thereby in the hearts of Gods people. That the preaching of the Gospel is called Gods kingdome, and is our entrance into future happinesse, I proone it thus. When as Christ sent out his Apostles to preach, among other directions he prescribed this, that if they were in any place refused, at their departure they should say, Euen the dust that cleaueth on vs of your Citie, we wipe off against you; notwithstanding know this, that the kingdome of God was come neere vnto you [b]: that is, the word being begun to be preached vnto you,

God

God intended to set vp his kingdome among you, and to offer you the meanes how you might haue come to raigne for euer with him in his glory. Againe, Christ threatened the Iewes of their vnthankfulnesse, that the kingdome of God should be taken from them [c]: that is, the Gospel should no longer be preached among them, and so they should be depriued of all ordinary meanes of life eternall. The word shal be remoued, & when it is once gone, be sure that the gates of heauen are euen barred vp against you. We reade that Iacob when he saw in his trauell, the ladder of God, and the Angels ascending & descending, and had the comfortable promise of saluation and of Gods continuall presence and assistance made vnto him, then awaking he said, This is none other but the house of God, & this is the gate of heauen [d]: so that where God doth please to manifest & make knowne the sweetnes & riches of his mercy (as he doth in his word & Sacraments) there is the gate of heauen, there is the way and passage vnto happines. Christ reproueth the Pharises and Doctors of his time; Woe be to you (saith he) you haue shut vp the kingdome of heauen before men [e]. If you demand how it was in their power to shut vp heauen, our Sauiour himselfe shal expound it, ye haue taken away the key of knowledge [f]: they nouzled the people in ignorance, and did not teach them the wayes of God, as they ought to doe; therefore they were said to stoppe vp the way to heauen: so that where knowledge is offered, the truth taught, the doctrine of saluation discouered, there the gate of heauen is opened, there the way to happinesse is made plaine to all that desire to enter in into it. As the preaching of the Gospel is called the way and entrance into the kingdome of glory in heauen; so are those inward graces which the Lord worketh in his children by the word, stiled with the same name; for which purpose I referre you but to one place of S. Peter [g]: where the Apostle commending vnto them to whom he wrote many graces, as vertue, faith, knowledge, temperance, patience, godlinesse, brotherly kindnesse, loue, and exhorting them by these things to make their calling and election sure, addes this as a reason; By this meanes an entrance shall be ministred vnto you abundantly, into the euerlasting kingdome of our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ. So that these graces bestowed in this life, doe giue an entrance into that happinesse which is looked for in the life to come. And therefore also the Apostle Paul calleth those spirituall graces, righteousnesse, peace, ioy in the holy Ghost, the kingdome of God [h]. because where they are, there the Lord raignes, and they which are endued with them, shall raigne for euer with him in his glory. So that by this that I haue said it is plaine, that according to the language of the Scripture, this title (the kingdome of heauen) doth fitly appertaine vnto the good meanes which the Lord hath appointed, by which to bring vs to this kingdome, whether it be the outward exercise of the word and Sacraments, or the inward grace which by the outward meanes hee conueyeth into the hearts of his chosen. And in this sense is this phrase the kingdome of heauen, to bee taken in this place: so that when it is saide, The kingdome of heauen, it is all one as if it had beene saide thus; The meanes of saluation, by which the way to heauen is made knowne vnto vs, and the true knowledge of God, and of his Sonne Christ, begotten in our hearts, is as a treasure hid in the field, &c.

Out of this interpretation which out of the Scripture I haue iustified touching this phrase, the kingdome of heauen, we may by the way learne thus much; That no man shalbe admitted into the kingdome of heauen hereafter, who doth not make entrance into it in this life. For seeing (as hath bin proued) the kingdome of God hath two degrees; (It is begun here on earth, it is perfited & made vp hereafter) it must needs follow, that no man shall possesse it in heauen, that doth not take possession here one earth. The manner of speaking vsed in Scripture, is for opening of this point worth the noting. Our Sauiour in his a prayer litle before his death saith, that to know God and him whom hee hath sent Christ Iesus, is life euerlasting [i]:

marke what is said, is life euerlasting, meaning that it is the meanes to put a man into a setled assurance of saluation; so againe it is said of those that beleeue, that they are already translated from death to life k. The future happinesse is begunne in this life: according as it is said of the vnbelecuers, that they are condemned already l: that is, their damnation is as certaine, as if they were already plunged into it. So againe, the seruants of God beeing furnished with those heauenly graces which God offereth in his word, are said to haue the first fruites of the Spirit m, and the earnest of their inheritance n, because these things are gages, and pledges, and seales vnto them of that happinesse which hereafter they shall enioy. Those whom the Lord will admit to dwell in his glorious presence in the world to come, he doth first traine them vp in the schoole-house of his Church, and frames them by his word and Spirit vnto the inheritance, which hee hath reserued for them with himselfe. It is a true saying of the learned, Oportet vt quibus Deus pater sit, ijs Ecclesia sit mater, they which will haue God for their father, must haue the Church for their mother. Heauen is said to bee a new Ierusalem o, into which none shall come, but new creatures p: now in the Church of God is kept that immortall seede of Gods holy word q, by which we are borne anew, and begotten vnto a liuely hope of eternall life r.

So then, heauen cannot bee enioyed in another world, except entrance bee made vnto it in this world: except the word of God haue outwardly called vs, and his spirit inwardly renued vs, there is no ordinary possibilitie of saluation.

The Vse. The vse of this is, to discouer vnto vs a notable pollicy of the diuell, and that is this: In euill things he separates the end from the meanes, in good things hee ferueth the meanes from the end. As for example, in euill things hee beareth men in hand, that they may safely aduenture to vse the meanes of damnation, and go the way that leades to hell, and yet that for all that they shall not be damned. He makes a young man beleeue that he may reioyce in his youth, and walke in the way of his heart, and yet that he may escape that which Salomon saith must come after, namely, that for all these things, hee must come to iudgement s: and yet God hath so ioyned these together, that neither the subtilite of youth, nor any wit of man, nor all the diuels in hell can seuer them, (the pleasures of the flesh, and the iudgements of God). After this fashion Sathan beguiled our first parents; God had ioyned those two, eating and dying t with an Adamant chaine; he that did the one, must needes haue the other: yet he brought them into that idle conceit, that they might eate and yet not die, (Yee shall not die at all). Oh the world of soules that Sathan hath beguiled with this subtilie. Well, as in euill things hee cuts the end from the meanes, so in good things hee cuts the meanes from the end: he perswades men that they may be Saints in heauen, though they bee diuells on earth; that they may haue glory in heauen, though they haue no grace in earth; that they may raigne with God, though sinne raigne with them; that they may bee Citizens of the new Ierusalem, though they bee no new creatures; that they may euer dwell with Christ, though his word doe neuer dwell with them; that the Lord will crowne them with immortalitie, though as long as they liue heere, they doe euen drowne themselues in worldlinesse. Hence it is that many will professe to seeke Gods kingdome, that yet care not for the righteousnesse of his kingdome u; that will cry with Balaam, O let my soule die the death of the righteous x, who neuer would say with Dauid, O that my wayes were so directed, that I may keepe thy statutes y. Ibeseech you let not Sathan any longer couzen vs, if hee haue thus hitherto deluded vs. The kingdome of heauen is begunne heere: if wee bee not begotten vnto God by the preaching of the Gospell in this world, wee can neuer bee heires with Christ in an other world; if wee be not sanctified heere, wee cannot be glorified there; if the word of God be not now sweet vnto vs, if it be not (as Ieremy saith it was to him) the

the very ioy, and reioying of our heart [z], we exercising our selues therein, and framing our hearts thereto; it is a matter of impossibilitie for vs to be saued. Strangers (saith Saint Paul) from the life of God through ignorance [a]: art thou a stranger to the word? thou art a stranger to God, heauen cannot be thy portion, except thou claime the Lawe of God as thy heritage: neuer looke for the fulnesse of ioy, except thou labour for the first fruits of the Spirit; If thou doe not learne truly to know God heere, thou shalt neuer see his comfortable countenance in his kingdome. Thus much I tohught good to obserue hence, that by the kingdome of heauen, are ment the meanes of saluation: if we enter not into the gate of heauen by the key of knowledge in this world, we shall be euerlastingly banished from heauen into the world to come.

The kingdome of heauen, these meanes of saluation, are called a Treasure: what a Treasure is, you doe all well know. That the meanes of saluation, which giue vs an entrance into the kingdome of heauen, are a treasure, wee cannot doubt, vnlesse wee will call the testimony of Gods Spirit in this place into question: why it is a treasure, this one reason may suffice, because the word of God and the knowledge of saluation contained therein, bring vs vnto Christ Iesus, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdome and knowledge b, and in whom it hath pleased the Lord, that all fulnesse should dwell c. If it be a treasure to enioy Christ, then surely that thing deserueth to be called a Treasure, that bringeth vnto Christ. How excellent a treasure it is, will soone appeare, if we shall a little compare it with those earthly treasures, for which the men of the world doe engage their owne soules, and euen sell away themselues. First, an earthly treasure, though it be of neuer so great price, though it may make a man richer, yet better in any one respect it cannot make him; well it may make him worse, and draw him farther from God, but it is not able to bring him one haires breadth neerer vnto heauen: Assoone as he doth but entertaine a desire to get it, forthwith (as Saint Paul saith) hee falleth into tentation and snares, into many foolish and noysome lustes, which doe drowne men in perdition and destruction [d]: when he hath it, without extraordinary and speciall heede taken, it steales away his heart and when hee heares of any good matter, it chokes [e] it vp, it makes him proud, disdainefull, vainely to presume that hee is highly in Gods fauour, and so to become careless of the chiefest good: so that it was truely said of Christ, that it is a very hard matter for a rich man to enter into the kingdome of God [f]. Thus I say an earthly treasure, howbeit it may better a mans outward estate, yet it can adde no good to his soule, nay it may make his soule a great deale poorer then it was, and make the way to heauen harder then before. But now this treasure of true knowledge and of grace, which is begotten in vs by the preaching of the Gospell, is of an other nature. For whereas the soule of man by nature is of all other things the vilest, and most polluted and loathsome in the sight of God, this beautifieth the soule, this purifieth and cleanseth the heart, this inlighteneth the minde, this purgeth the conscience, this renueth the spirit, and in the man that hath this treasure, is that most heauenly promise verified and made good, I and my Father (saith Christ) will loue him, and wee will come vnto him, and wee will dwell with him [g]. Againe, whereas of our selues we were strangers from God, and were with Adam banished out of his presence, and shut out of Paradise, this treasure, as wee thriue in hauing it; so, it also brings vs still neerer and neerer vnto God, euery day fitting vs vnto that vnseparable and eternall vnion with the Lord, in which wee shall see him face to face, and knowe him as hee is, and raigne with him in his glory. This is one excellency of this treasure aboue all earthly Iewels; they doe no good to the soule, but poison it rather, and draw a man further from God; this garnisheth the soule, and brings it euery day neerer vnto God.

g Ioh.14.23.

ſure aboue earthly treaſures is this; there is no earthly treaſure able to giue vnto a mans ſoule any true contentment: it is a true ſaying of Salomon, He that loueth ſilver, ſhall not be ſatisfied with ſilver [h]: A ſtreame when it commeth forth out of a ſpring, is but little and ſhallow; but running further, and hauing other ſtreames falling into it, it ſwelleth bigger, and groweth to ſuch a ſtrength, that it beareth all before it: ſo the deſire of man at the firſt ſeemeth but ſmall, and pretends to bee onely for needfull things; but the more it receiues, the bigger it waxeth and becomes at the laſt (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) like hell [i], and ſwallowethvp all that comes into it; and is as the Horſeleaches daughter, which alwayes crees, Giue, giue, and cannener ſay it is ynough k. The Prophet Iſay vſeth a ſimilitude of an hungry man, who dreameth (ſaith he) and behold he eateth, and when he awakes his ſoule is emptie [l]: ſo it is but a conceit of ſatisfaction which theſe outward treaſures doe afforde, and no true contentment. On the other ſide, this treaſure ſpoken of here in my text, it breeds contentment in euery eſtate. If a man haue much, it teacheth him the ſober and moderate vſe of it, and allaieth the greedineſſe of his deſire, and ſo rauiſheth his minde with the loue of Chriſt and the things of God, that it maketh him thinke euen baſely of the things below [m], which the world ſo much admireth, and ſo greedily catcheth for. If he haue little, it teacheth him ſo to reſt vpon Gods prouidence, and to delight himſelfe with the hope of the glory to come, that a ſmall thing to him, ſhall be better then great riches to the wicked and mighty [n]. It cauſeth him to hold this faſt as a ground that cannot deceiue him; that he that hath giuen Chriſt vnto him, cannot but with him giue him all things alſo [o].

Thirdly, of the treaſures of this world there is no aſſurance; this is the end of all earthly poſſeſsions, either they are taken from vs, or wee from them; and hee that hath the moſt, and with the greateſt ſetledneſſe, yet (as Dauid ſaith) hee ſhall take nothing away when hee dyeth, neither ſhall his pompe deſcend after him [p]; he came naked, and muſt returne naked [q]. It is true which I haue read vſed in a plaine compariſon thas it falleth out with many of the great ſtorers of this world, as it doth with a Sumpter-horſe, who all the day cartieth the treaſure of his Lord vpon his backe; but at night it is taken from him, and hee thruſt into a foule ſtable, and all the benefit he reaped by the carriage, is, that hee is euen tyred with the waight of it: ſo, many wealthy ones of the world, they are but the carriers of wealth through the toyleſome iourny of this preſent life: but when death comes, their treaſure is taken from them, and they parhapes for their ill vſing it, thruſt into hell; where they finde, that all the good they reape by their ſuppoſed good, is this, that it is an euerlaſting burthen to their ſoule, and an eternall gall vnto their conſcience. But now this treaſure is ſuch, as neither by fire, nor tempeſt, nor violence of robbers, nor by death it ſelfe can bee taken from him that once reioyeth it. It is truely tearmed durable riches [r]; and a bagge that cannot waxe olde, a treaſure that cannener faile [ſ]. It accompanieth the ſoule, when death hath parted it from the body, into the preſence of God; it giues him comfort before him, and ſhall helpe to encreaſe his happineſſe, and to fill vp the meaſure of his ioy, which the Lord hath prepared for him in his kingdome. Thus I haue ſhewed you, that as the things pertaining to life eternall are a treaſure, ſo they goe farre beyond the treaſures of the greateſt price, which the men of the world doe ſeeke for: They beautifie the ſoule, and further the ſaluation of it, they giue contentment to the ſoule, whereas outward treaſures breede vexation: they laſt euer, whereas all other things are ſubiect to vncertainety.

The Vſe.

There is a good vſe to be made of this point. There be many (ſaith Dauid) that ſay, Who will ſhew vs any good [t]? There is a kinde of deſire in a man by the very inſtinct of nature, to be partaker of the true good, by which to make himſelfe happy in the end. Wee all agree, good is to be ſought for; but about the particular, what

what is good, there we are moſt deceiued. The things of the world, with the glittering ſhewes thereof, haue ſo bewitched vs, that (like the Cocke vpon the dunhill) wee doe more eſteeme a barly corne, then the true treaſure of Gods holy word, then the Kingdome of God, and the righteouſnes thereof [u], That which may doe our ſelues good, that we care not for: that which a thouſand to one will poiſon vs, and like bird-lime ſo gleweth together the wings of our minds, that wee can hardly ſoare vp a loft after heauenly things, that all our ſtudy is to obtaine. The treaſure which is onely able to content vs, is euen loathſome vnto vs: but that fading and ſeeming good, which is a torment to the minde, and can breede nothing but vexation, that wee affect; and it is the principall exerciſe of our thoughts, how we may procure it. The commoditie which neuer faileth, and neither Sathan nor death can depriue vs of, is vile before vs; and the more freely it is offered, the more baſely it is eſteemed: that which while he liue here, we can not for our liues be ſure of, and when we die we are ſure to leaue behinde vs, euen that wee onely aime at, and it is the principall end of our chiefeſt endeauours. Thus as Iſay ſaith, we lay out ſiluer, but not for bread [x]: and as Salomon ſpeakes, we caſt our eyes vpon that which is not hing [y]. He that ſhould take vpon him to reade a lecture of thrift, and to teach men a way, by which they might be rich quickely, it is very like hee ſhould haue many ſcholers, and moſt men eares would bee open to heare his counſell. He that ſhould (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) preach of wine and ſtrong drinke [z], or of gay cloathing, or giue men precepts of pollicie and diſſembling, ſuch an one ſhould be well followed. Onely the ſchoole of Chriſt, in which the rules are taught of life eternall, hath few that care, more then for cuſtome and neceſsitie, to come vnto it. Thus we are (as the Scripture ſpeaketh) right like children [a]; an Apple, a toy, a baby pleaſeth vs, but to talke to vs of a happines that ſhall neuer bee ended, of comfort that ſhall neuer bee remooued, of glory that ſhall neuer be diminiſhed, of a kingdome that cannot be ſhaken [b]; it is (as Salomon ſaith) like ſnow in ſummer [c], a thing that alwaies ſeemes vnſeaſonable. Well whatſoeuer mens opinions or conceits be, yet the word of God is true and cannot faile; the word of GOD and the knowledge thereof, is a pearle of inualuable worth, the graces of Gods Spirit are a treaſure, the price whereof cannot duly be eſteemed, he that hath this treaſure cannot bee poore, though to the world he be neuer ſo miſerable; he that hath it not, cannot be rich, though in the eyes of men he be neuer ſo glorious. Art thou a man that art ignorant of the miſtery of Chriſt, that takeſt no delight in the knowledge and vnderſtanding of his word, that doeſt not feele in thy ſelfe the power of Gods Spirit to renue thee, be thou what thou wilt, for riches, for birth, for opinion of honeſty in the eyes of men; yea diddeſt thou weare a crowne, or couldeſt command a kingdome, yet art thou a baſe and wretched creature before GOD. On the other ſide, is the word of God precious in thy ſight? doeſt thou finde the opening and applying thereof ſweet vnto thee? doeſt thou feele Chriſt Ieſus reigning in thy heart, by the ſtrength and power of his ſpirit? though thou bee behind the Ewes with yong, with Dauid [d], or ſet in the aſhes with Iob [e], or lye at the gate full of ſores with Lazarous [f], yet thou haſt a rich ſoule; whileſt thou liueſt here, God will not forſake thee; when thou art gone hence, he will receiue thee into euerlaſting habitations. I would this might worke with vs, to make value this treaſure as it doth deſerue, and to ſet our ſelues from henceforth to be partakers of it. Well, to the end wee may meruell the leſſe that the meanes of ſaluation offered in the word being a treaſure, ſo few (for all that) doe make reckoning if it, let vs come to that which followes.

Doctrine 3.

g Col.3.3. lyeth hid g (as Paul speaketh) what appearance of any excellency to be in him is there in the opinion of a naturall man? A man exceeeding poore, not hauing whereon to lay his head, ill followed with a silly sort of fishermen, and men of no note, hated, persecuted, euill spoken of, despised by those that were reputed wise, accused, condemned, put to a shamefull and opprobious death; what likelihood is there in this in the iudgement of a man that vnder all this basnesse and contempt, the treasures of happinesse should lie hid? who would thinke that this reiected person, this stone whom all the wise builders refused should be the head of the h Mat 21.42. corner h, and should be the peacemaker betwixt God and man, the conquerour of Sathan, the masterer of death, the reconciler of mankinde vnto God? This is a mystery of misteries, this is (as the Apostle calleth it) the very hid wisedome of i 1.Cor.2.7. God i. And this was as a veile before the eyes of many, euen the wise of the world, When the Apostles preached of one Iesus that was crucified, they could see nothing in it, why they should beleeue or place their hope vpon so vnlikely a Sauiour. Come downe next vnto the ordinarie meanes the word and Sacraments.
k 2.Cor. 4.7. The treasure of the word is brought to vs in earthen vessels k. It doth not seeme probable, that by the preaching of a silly man, one of little note in the world, Iesus Christ with all his treasures should be offered vnto vs. It hath beene the an-l 1.Cor. 1.21. cient phrase of profaine men, to tearme it the foolishnes of preaching l; not one among many that imagineth that there is such store of excellent matter tendred vnto vs by so base a meanes as the ministery of man seemes to be. When Naa-
m 2 Kings 5. man the Syrian m being a leper, came to the Prophet of God to bee healed, and he sent him out word to goe wash himselfe in Iordan seuen times, hee was much discontented and thought it and idle thing, that hee should come so farre out of his owne country, as though there had not beene riuers there, as good as Iordan: so when the seeming wise men of the world, heare the charge and direction that GOD giues, that if they would haue the treasure of his heauenly grace, by hearing they must seeke to receiue it, they scorne it by and by, measuring all by the outward appearance; and doe not see the grace that is hidden vnder it. The same may be said of the Sacraments. There is bread and wine in the Lords Supper, there is water in Baptisme, simple things to a carnall eye; who would thinke that vnder these creatures were hid the seales and pledges of the kingdome of heauen? No maruell then that it is called a hidden treasure, it is so wrapped vp in a simple history of a crucified Sauiour, and tendred vnto vs in so silly a meanes as the voice and ministery of a mortall man, and in such slender and vnlikely elemens, of water, bread and wine, and so crossing in all things vnto reason, that the quickest eye of a naturall man can neuer spie it out, he would rather thinke to finde the treasure of grace and life eternall euery where, then there where it is by the wisedome of God pointed out vnto vs. This is one reason why the treasure of saluation, and meanes leading vnto it, is called a hidden treasure. Before we come to note the second reason, let vs make vse of this: wee may learne sundry good things from it.

The 1. Vse. First, it sheweth vnto vs the true cause why so few doe esteeme and make reckoning of the meanes of saluation, but doe euen passe by it, as a thing not worth the looking on: Saint Paul giueth the reason, The God of this world (that is, the diuell) hath blinded their mindes, that the light of the glorious Gospell of Christ n 2.Cor.4.4. should not shine vnto them n. Through the iust iudgement of God, their eyes are holden that they cannot see the treasure that lyeth hidden in the ministery and Sacraments of the Church. I remember what the Apostle saith of the great men which put Christ to death, that if they had knowne it they would not haue
o 1.Cor.2.8. crucified the Lord of glory o. I may truely say the same of the contemners of the word and Sacraments, that if they know what riches were couched vnder (euen) the ministery of man, and vnder those bare elements of bread and wine at the Lords Table; they would neuer dare (as they doe) to tread those holy things things as it were vnder their feet, to ſtop their eares to the calling of the one, and to turne their backes from the partaking of the other. But the wiſedome of God is infinite, and his iudgements are ſecret, his Spirit bloweth where it liſteth [p]: it pleaſeth him (as Chriſts words are) to hide theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and to reueale them vnto babes [q]. The great men and the Doctours in our Sauiours time, could ſee nothing in him, why they ſhould deſire him [r]; but yet the chozen of God ſaw his glory, as the glory of the onely begotten Sonne of God, full of grace and truth [s]. When the greateſt part could behold no excellency in him, but preferred euen their ſwine before him, and called him Samaritane, and ſaid hee had a diuell; yet then ſome (as Martha and Marie, and their brother Lazarus, and Zacheus, and ſuch like) ſaw the treaſure of grace, which was ſhrowded vnder that weake and ſimple ſhew, which he made to the world. So it fell out afterwards in the times of the Apoſtles, a great many deſpiſed both them and their doctrine as matters of no worth, in which there was no likelihood of any heauenly things; yet euen then the eyes of ſome were opened, and they ſaw in that baſeneſſe the wiſedome of God, and the power of God. This is the wiſe and vnſearchable diſpenſation of the moſt high: and with this, in all humility it becommeth vs to remaine ſatisfied; onely this caueat muſt bee giuen to all thoſe whoſe hearts ſecretly doe tell them, that they are the parties who ſee no ſuch great matter in theſe things, which ſome ſo greatly magnifie (I meane the word and Sacraments) they cannot perceiue any ſuch power to bee in the preaching and publiſhing of the Goſpell, that they ſhould ſo much reuerence it, or come to heare it, or be ruled by it; they cannot vnderſtand how theſe creatures of bread and wine ſhould be ſuch notable helpes to ſtrengthen a mans faith, and to comfort his ſoule: I ſay, let not ſuch pleaſe themſelues in their ſenſeleſſe blindneſſe, but let them remember the fearefull ſaying of the Apoſtle, If our Goſpell be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt [t]: if the treaſure of ſaluation bee holden from vs, through the ſeeming baſeneſſe and weakeneſſe of the meanes, by which it pleaſeth God that it is offered vnto vs, it is no matter to be reioyced in, it is a fearefull ſigne; it is ſo ſtill with none but thoſe that are loſt, whom the Lord hath left vnto deſtruction. This is one vſe.

A ſecond is to admoniſh vs to beware, how in the things which concerne the kingdome of God, we doe meaſure matters according to the outward ſeeming. Paul ſaith, writing to the Corinthians; That when he preached Chriſt among the Iewes, they required a ſigne [u], they looked for ſome great miracles, and ſome extraordinarie teſtimonie from heauen, to be giuen to the doctrine: the Gentiles who abounded in humane learning, and were skilfull in Artes, they expected wiſedome, eloquence, excellency of words, and by this meanes, the Goſpell of Chriſt was fooliſhnes to the one, and a ſtumbling blocke to the other: they looked ſo high, that they deſpiſed and thought baſely of the ſimplicitie of the Goſpell. Their error muſt be an example vnto vs. Our manner is to looke vpon outward circumſtances, the age, degree, birth, wealth, learning of the ſpeaker: and as there was a queſtion made of Chriſt, when he was called Ieſus of Nazareth. Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth [x]? ſo wee imagine their can come no great thing, where, in the Iudgement of fleſh and blood, there is ſo great vnlikelihood. But we muſt remember that this is called a hidden treaſure; which many times is, where a man would leaſt of all ſuppoſe it to be. The rich treaſures of the earth (gold, ſiluer, and ſuch like) are not ordinarily fetched out of the goodly fields adorned with graſſe, flowers, trees, hearbs, &c. but out of the more barren places, out of grounds which otherwiſe may ſeeme to bee good for nothing: ſo the graces of God are for the moſt part brought to vs by the weakeſt inſtruments, and by thoſe which carry the leaſt ſhew in the world: and the Apoſtle giues a reaſon for it, ſufficient to ſatisfie any man, That the excellency of the power might be of God & not of us [y]: & againe, That our faith ſhould not be in the wiſedome of men, but

If the Lord should vsually emply such instruments, as for outward respects we shall be ready to admire, it would be an occasion something to darken the glory of God, & we would ascribe that to the meanes, which is in the power of God onely to performe; whereas now, God vsing weak and vnlikely meanes, it must make vs to say, when we feele our selues conuerted & cõforted therby; This is the finger of the Lord, It is his doing, & is marueilous in our eies [a].

The 3. Vse. Thirdly, we are yet to make an other vse thereof, to wit, that seeing this treasure is hidden to the naturall man, therefore we would beg earnestly of God, to enlighten our mindes: we would pray with Dauid, O Lord open my eyes, that I may see the wonders of thy Law [b]. When Elisha the Prophet and his seruant were together, and the King of Aram had sent an hoste of men, with horses and Chariots to take him, his seruant at the sight of it was afraide, and cried out, Alas Master what shall we doe? Elisha prayed to the Lord, and said; Lord, I beseech thee open his eyes that he may see [c]. He saw not the multitude of heauenly souldiers, who were there ready to guard Elisha, till the Lord opened his eyes: so when we come to the exercises of religon, it fareth with vs as it did with the woman of Samaria [d]; little thought shee that that silly man that sate there alone, crauing of her a little water, was the Sauiour of the world: so we doe not imagine, that life and saluation is tendred to vs, in those base meanes which are vsed in the Church; but if we shall pray the Lord to open our eyes, as Elisha did for his seruant, then we shall see that which before lay hidden, euen the arme of the Lord [e], the power of God vnto saluation [f]. This is one reason why it is called a hidden treasure; and these be the vses of it.

Doctrine 4. A second reason why it is called a hidden treasure, is, to put vs in minde of the great paines and care which we must vse in the seeking after it. Treasures cannot be gotten but by digging deepe, & by searching euen into the very bowels of the earth. The kingdome of heauen (saith our Sauiour Christ) suffereth violence, and men take it by force [g]; there is no comming in at the straite gate, without striuing [h].

h Luke 13.24

The Vse. It condemnes our carelesnesse and nicenesse, we thinke to goe to heauen as it were in beds of downe; of all other matters we count it the easiest thing to bee saued. We confesse, a man cannot be rich without care, without industrie, without rising earely, and going late to rest, without forwardnes to take euery opportunitie, without sauing: but as for life eternall, the riches of Christ, the treasure of saluation; we thinke, that, though we loyter at home, & lye in bed when we should come to heare, though we care not to lend our eares when we are at Church, though we seeke for no knowledge in the Scripture, though we haue no wrastling against our owne corruptions, yet we may doe well enough, heauen shall be cast vpon vs, though we doe neglect and despise the meanes to come vnto it. So againe, the bare reading of the text of the Scripture, would well enough content vs; we make no account, we haue no desire of any further opening. To reforme these euils, the Spirit of God cals the meanes of saluation a hid treasure: Indeede the word of God is the field where it is hid; but as, in searching for siluer and gold, we stay not vpon the vpper face of the ground, but digge into the very heart of the earth: so in labouring after the knowledge of saluation, and the comfortable vnderstanding of the mystery of Christ; the vpper face and letter of the text must not satisfie vs; but we must desire to haue the hidden mysteries thereof sought out and reuealed to vs, that will enrich our soules with wisedome and spirituall vnderstanding. The speech of Salomon (with which I will conclude) is very agreeing hereunto, to shew what paines and diligence must be vsed, in seeking out the hid treasure of this sauing knowledge: if thou callest after knowledge; and cryest for vnderstanding; if thou seekest her as siluer, & searchest for her as for treasures, then shalt thou vnderstand the feare of the Lord, and finde the knowledge of God [i]. So that by a slight, careless, and superficiall carriage, men shall not attaine to the hidden treasure of saluation:

i Pro.2.3,4,5

The

The second Sermon.

Which when a man hath found, he hideth it, and for ioy thereof departeth, and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field.

WE are now come to the second part of this text, which sheweth the high account which all Gods children make of the things which cõcerne the kingdome of God; Which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for ioy therof selleth all that he hath to by it. This high account made by the children of God, is shadowed forth vnto vs, vnder the person of a man, that hath found a treasure of some more thē ordinarie worth, in whom (as argument of his esteeming it) are noted these things; First his care to hide it, secondly his ioy that he hath found it, thirdly his consultation what is best to be done for the obtaining it, fourthly his resolution, to sell all that euer he hath, rather then misse it; and lastly his buying it. All those doe note out something or other in a Christian in his entertainement of the meanes of saluation when it is offered, and in his labour to possesse it, according as (God willing) by the examination of seuerall points wee shall perceiue. The exposition.

The first is, he hides it: farre to pursue and presse euery thing in a parable, is not the soundest and surest way, except it be agreeing and proportionable to the maine drift and scope of the whole place. And therefore wee must not imagine the hiding here spoken of, to be like that which is vsed by greedy minded men, which seeke by all meanes to secret & keepe close the treasure they haue found, to the end that no man else may be partaker of it; for, in the finding of the treasure of saluation, it is farre otherwise; whosoeuer hath found it indeed, is desirous to bring others to the knowledge of it, as we see in the examples, of Andrew [k] (who assoone as he had found Christ, went to call Peter) and of the woman of Samaria [l], that ran in hast, to make all her neighbours acquainted with that shee had seene; thence is that which Dauid said, I haue not hid thy righteousnes within my heart, but I haue declared thy truth and thy saluation, I haue not concealed thy mercy and thy truth from the great congregation [m]: but this hiding is otherwise to be taken. For, setting a side the greedy intent of hiding a found treasure, there may bee a good and honest purpose in keeping it close, arising partly out of the feare a man hath of beeing againe depriued of the good thing hee hath found, and partly also out of a purpose better to examine it; he knowing that he may be perhaps deceiued, supposing that to be a treasure which is but a trifle, and to be of great value, which yet indeede is nought worth. To this hiding, arising out of these causes, and done for these ends, the holy Ghost alludeth here in this place; and such a kinde of hiding is vsed by euery true Christian, when the meanes of saluation and life eternall is tendred vnto him in the preaching of the Gospell. I haue hid (saith Dauid) thy promise in my heart [n]: the Virgin Mary kept al Christs sayings in her heart [o]: the words that I command thee shall be in the heart [p]; euen in the middest of thy heart (saith Salomon) [q]: and againe, If thou wilt receiue my words, and hide my commandements within thee, then thou shalt finde the knowledge of God [r]. The necessitie of this so diligent and carefull hiding, ariseth out of the malitious subtilty of the diuell; who like a rauenous bird, waiteth vpon the sowing of the good seede; and because he knoweth that the laying it vp, is such a step vnto life eternall, Doctrine 1.

eternall, therefore he laboureth to steale it away out of the heart, and by drawing mens thoughts to some other matter, to bring them by all meanes to forget it. Now, as speaking of the hiding of an earthly treasure, I said it sprang out of two things: first, a feare to lose it: secondly, a care to examine it. so this spirituall hiding, fetcheth the beginning from the same causes. First of all, the childe of God, hearing the doctrine of salvation liuely and powerfully discouered by the preaching of the Gospell, the sufficiencie that is in Christ to saue all beleeuing sinners, the riches of Gods mercy in him, the kindnesse and graciousnesse of his promise to prouoke all to come vnto him; together with some liking that hee hath of the doctrine, and some feeling of the good that might returne vnto his owne soule thereby, there is a feare also, lest through some either neglect, or vnworthinesse of his owne, he should misse of so excellent a commoditie, and cut himselfe short of such a heauenly blessing. To this end, to make good this point, (which it notwithstanding is by good experience sufficiently knowne to euery true Christian) we may alleadge that saying of the Psalme, O Lord, there is mercy with thee that thou maiest be feared[f]: so that euen the very mercy of God causeth the godly to feare, lest they should any way depriue them selues of so gracious a God as the Lord is, by the report and testimony of his word. Saint Paul speaking of the sorrow, which was among the Corinthians, which he tearmes a godly sorrow, and euen the very mother of true repentance, among other fruits that it brought forth, reckoneth vp feare: yea, what feare (saith he) hath it brought[t]? By which feare, I see not what other thing can be meant, then a certaine frightfull passion in the minde, springing out of some conceit, that they might by their owne folly shut themselues out of the fauour of God, and debarre themselues of the comfortable enioying of his mercy. And it seemes to mee, that this was the very thing, which the Apostle, knowing the behoofulnesse of it, perswaded and exhorted the Hebrewes vnto. Let vs feare therefore (saith he) lest at any time by forsaking the promise of entring into his rest any of you should seeme to be deprined[u]. As if he had said; You see what a gracious promise the Lord makes, what comfort will follow vpon the entertaining it: let vs therefore looke to it, that we cut not our selues off, by our owne neglect, and so come short of that rest which is set before vs. I may adde to all this the words of Paul, which doe well agree with this matter, make an end of your owne saluation With feare and trembling[x]. The seruants of God still, the fuller sight they haue of the riches of Christ, and of the treasure of the word, the more is their feare, least by any meanes they might not enioy it. This feare causeth them to make much euen of euery word of comfort which the Scripture affoards them, and to be vnwilling to let any of it fall to the ground vnremembred. Euen as a man that hath offended the Law, and by desert knoweth himselfe to be the childe of death, greedily layeth hold vpon each word, which (comming from him, in whose power it is either to saue or destroy him) may put him into any small hope of escaping; euery syllable, nay euery kinde looke is deare vnto him: so he that finds his owne miserable and wretched estate through sinne, when he heareth any thing of the grace and mercy of God, catcheth at it with that eagernesse, and listeneth to it with that feruencie of desire, as if he were loth that ought should escape him; he layeth vp euery speech that carrieth with it any comfort, and giueth it a dwelling euen in the most secret corners of his heart. I remember what I read in the Booke of Kings[y], that the King of Aram, being in the warre taken by the King of Israel, his seruants came in all humble and submisse manner to aske pardon, with sacke-cloth vpon their loynes, and ropes about their neckes; now (saith the text) the men tooke diligent heede if they could catch any thing of the king of Israel[z]: and when they heard him say, Is he yet aliue? he is my brother: they made haste and said, thy brother Benhadad; they laid hold vpon that word, because it seemed to argue some relenting and compassion in the King toward their Master. And so fareth it with a man whose heart heart God hath touched, his heart is open to treaſure vppe the words of grace, and to lay holde euen vpon the leaſt inkling of ſaluation. So that feare to loſe the bleſſing, begetteth a care to hide the bleſſing. The next thing that doth mooue the children of God to hide in their hearts the doctrine of ſaluation offered vnto them in the preaching of the Goſpell, is, an intent and purpoſe which they haue, ſeriouſly to ſcanne and thoroughly to examine it; euen as a man (according as I ſaid before) that hath found a treaſure, keepeth it cloſe, till hee bee ſure that it is as good as hee tooke it to be. There is nothing ſo ſecure and preſuming, as ignorance and blindneſſe: and none ſeeme to bee freer from all doubts that they are in the way to life, then they which are not as yet entred, no not the very firſt ſtep vnto it: on the other ſide there bee none ſo iealous ouer themſelues, none that caſt ſo many perils, none that are ſo inquiſitiue, and ſo diligent to ſearch out touching matters of Religion, and the means of ſaluation, as thoſe who are now as it were in the firſt degree of conuerſion. They thinke with themſelues, they doe indeed heare of a way and meanes to come to heauen, which if it be the right way, is very worthy the entertaining; therefore as they will not raſhly embrace it, till they know more of it, ſo will they neither vtterly diſclaime it, but will lay it vp in their hearts, (meaning by prayer and hearing, and obſeruing the Scripture, and by the vſe of all good meanes, to labour to know whether it be the very thing which it is ſaid to bee) the gate of grace, and the way to happineſſe. This is a thing whereof we haue a memorable example in thoſe of Berea[a]; they found a treaſure in Pauls preaching, yet becauſe they knew wel they might be miſled, therfore they laid it vp in their hearts, and brought it to the touchſtone, to ſee whether it would holde there. They ſearched the Scripture (ſaith the Text) whether thoſe things were ſo[b]: they did neither reiect the doctrine vnder a pretence that the Apoſtles were but men, and might deceiue them, neither yet did they hand ouer head without enquirie entertaine it; but they heard it with reuerence, and then examined it. It is the thing which the Apoſtle exhorts euery man vnto, Proue your ſelues (ſaith he) whether yee are in the faith[c]. Try againe and againe how it fareth with you; it is an eaſie thing to be deceiued, and in ſuch a caſe as this is, which concernes your ſoules, it is a dangerous thing to be miſtaken. This is the ſecond cauſe of hiding and ſtoring this treaſure, the meanes of ſaluation, the knowledge and vnderſtanding of it in the heart, euen that by that meanes it may be tryed and examined, that ſo a man may ſay with Dauid; O Lord, thy Word is prooued moſt pure, and thy ſeruant loueth it[d]: I haue tryed the worth of it, and I cannot chooſe but imbrace it. Thus much for this hiding (which I may call the firſt degree in a ſinners conuerſion) the meaning, and cauſes of it. Let vs make vſe of it to our ſelues.

The vſe of it is, to teach vs what wee muſt firſt doe, if we deſire to bee ſaued, wee muſt endeauour to lodge euen in the beſt and ſafeſt cloſet of our hearts, the true knowledge, and right vnderſtanding of the meanes of eternall life, with which the Lord hath beene, and daily is pleaſed to make vs acquainted by his Word. If wee ſuffer our thoughts to bee fraughted and ſtuffed with other idle matters (in compariſon) as of worldly profit, of vaine pleaſures, ſo that there is no roome for the Word of truth to harbour; if we let ignorance, blindneſſe, vncharitableneſſe, obſtinacy, frowardnes, ſo to keepe as it were the doore of our hearts, that the things which belong to the Kingdome of God can haue no entry, wee ſhall but deceiue our ſelues in hoping to be ſaued. As I prooued that there is no happineſſe in the world to come, except it be begunne in this world; ſo it is certaine, true happineſſe cannot be begun in this world, without the right vnderſtanding of the doctrine of ſaluation, grounded vpon Chriſt Ieſus: except this pearle be ſtored vp carefully, and hidden in our hearts, wee can neither liue the life of grace now, nor the life of glory hereafter. I pray then, let vs thinke with our ſelues, what ſhall become of a great many of vs; put caſe the ſecrets of our hearts were as well knowne vnto men, as they are vnto God, or to our owne ſelues, alas what poore ſtorers ſhould we be found to be of this heauenly commodity. The heart of man is of great receit, and able to containe many things; I know that vpon this priuy ſearch wee ſhould not bee found empty, but euen peſtered rather with the world and the things thereof, and euery one of our inward lodgings euen altogether taken vp therewith: but this in the end would be the iſſue, that the word of Chriſt, the doctrine of God, the knowledge of ſaluation, the way to life is a meere ſtranger vnto vs, one that through a kind of neceſſity entreth in ſometime at the outward gate of our eares, but can neuer finde any entertainement in our hearts. Nay, many will be found rather to vſe meanes to keepe it out, then to make a way to receiue it: for what meaneth the ordinary and voluntary abſence of ſo many from the Church, their dulneſſe and careleſnes when they are there, their falling by and by to their owne courſes, as ſoone as they are gone; but, that men haue euen determined with themſelues, that let the Word of the kingdome rouſt where it will, ſure with them it ſhall not harbour, it ſhall knocke and knocke againe and againe at the doore of their hearts, but yet they will not open to receiue it. For ſure, if we had a diſpoſition to make our ſoules as a cheſt for the knowledge of God in Chriſt to be hid in, we ſhould ſee and behold better fruits then theſe. He that had a meaning to hide the meanes of ſaluation in his heart, would not hide himſelfe in a chamber, or vnder a hedge, or in an alehouſe, when the ſame were offered to him; the publike aſſembly ſhould be a witneſſe of his deſire; and his diligence there, ſhould diſcouer the readineſſe of his heart, to treaſure vp the knowledge of God which is reuealed in the Scripture. But whence is it may we thinke, that men had rather affoord the vſe of their hearts to any thing, then to this hidden treaſure of the Goſpell? Surely euen from hence, that men haue no feeling of their owne ſpirituall pouerty: and therefore finding this treaſure, and meeting with it againe and againe, neither doe any thing feare the loſſe of it, neither do they entertaine any ſuch opinion of the goodneſſe of it, as to grow into an examination thereof, to ſee whether it be indeed that treaſure, which is able to make their ſoules rich vnto eternall life. For, if they were once come ſo farre as to be in feare to loſe heauen, or to be in any doubt and iealouſie of their owne eſtate, or to intend the ſifting and ſcanning of euery pretended way to ſaluation, till they had found out the true path; then ſhould that which is heard, bee more eſteemed of, and euery little word of comfort bee made much of, and held as a iewell of ſome worth: whereas now euery man thinking his owne ſoules eſtate ſure enough, and being without all feare of that which is to come; this pearle is vile in mens eyes, neither doe they make any conſcience to hoord it vp in their hearts, but are very willing to forgoe it. Well, howſoeuer wee haue done formerly, or whatſoeuer others doe, let vs hereafter perſwade our ſelues of the truth, againſt which I am ſure wee can make no exception, (if the Word of God bee true) that the very firſt ſteppe to heauen, is to lay vp in our hearts the Goſpell of the Kingdome, euen that comfortable knowledge of ſaluation and eternall life, which is grounded onely in Chriſt Ieſus. If wee doe not beginne heere, but affoord entertainement to any thing rather then to this, ſuffering ignorance and contempt of godlineſſe to keepe poſſeſſion in vs, vnleſſe wee looke that God ſhould worke a miracle in ſauing vs, there is no ordinary way left to bring vs vnto heauen. Thus much for the firſt argument of eſteeming the treaſure of ſaluation; hee that hath found the meanes hideth it.

ioy,

Ioy. It is a thing incident to treaſures, when they are found, to worke ioy, and great is their reioycing that can make themſelues the owners of them; but farre greater is his ioy, that findeth the treaſure of ſaluation. O Lord (ſaith the Prophet [e]) lift thou vp the light of thy countenance vpon vs: and this ſhall make vs to haue more ioy of heart, then the men of the world haue, when their wheat and their wine doth abound. When the Eunuch reading by himſelf in the Bible, had by the great mercy and goodneſſe of God, attained to the vnderſtanding of a notable place in Eſay touching Chriſt, the Scripture ſaith, hee went on his way reioycing [f]. In the beginning of the ſame chapter it is ſaid, that when Philip the Apoſtle came into Samaria, and preached Chriſt vnto them, there was great ioy in that City [g]. So it is ſaid of the Iayler, that he reioyced, that he with all his houſhold beleeued in God [h]. I reioyced (ſaith Dauid) at thy words, as one that findeth great ſpoyles [i]: great is the ioy of them that finde ſpoyles; for ſpoyles bring victory, and victory makes the triumph: ſpoyle brings profit, and victory brings pleaſure: both then muſt needs cauſe exceeding ioy. Dauids meaning then was this, that what battell ſoeuer he did fight, what towne ſoeuer he ſpoyled, his ioy was nothing ſo great, as it was by taking pleaſure in the knowledge and vnderſtanding of Gods word. The Scripture is very large in the commendation of this ioy. It is better then life (ſaith Dauid [k]) It is a peace which paſſeth all vnderſtanding, ſaith Paul [l]. It is a ioy vnſpeakeable and glorious, ſaith Saint Peter [m].

Of all other ioyes it may be truly ſaid, as Iob ſpeakes of the ioy of hypocrites, they are but for a moment [n], like a fire of thornes, that caſts a great blaze & crackleth greatly for the time, but is out with the turning of a hand; yea as Salomon ſaith, euen in the laughing of worldly men, the heart is ſorrowfull, and the end of that mirth is heauineſſe [o]: but the ioy of Gods children in the things of God, is ſetled and perpetuall; your ioy ſhall no man take from you, ſaith Chriſt [p].

As reioycing and gladneſſe of heart is a thing common to all Gods children, when the knowledge of Chriſt is reuealed, and is alſo a farre more excellent ioy, then the fading and deceitfull ioyes of the ſons of men, ſo the reaſon and cauſe of it is expreſſed.

When as the people of the Iewes in the time of their captiuity liued vnder Ahaſueroſh, one Haman an enemy to God, and to them for their Religion ſake, mooued the King, and wrought him to make a bloody decree againſt them, for the rooting out of the whole nation: hereupon (ſaith the text) the people were in great perplexity: but afterwards, when as by the mediation of Queene Heſter, the cruell ſentence was reuerſed, and newes thereof ſent by poſtes into euery quarter of the Countrey, then was ioy and gladneſſe to the Iewes, a feaſt, and a good day [q]. There was once a bloody hand writing ſtood in force againſt vs in the high Court of heauen: the tenour whereof was this, That ſeeing wee were vnable to continue in the things required by the Law of God, wee ſhould bee condemned euerlaſtingly: neither was their any creature to bee found either in or heauen in earth able to alter it, or to pacifie the diſpleaſure of God againſt vs. But now, by the mediation of the Sonne of God, Chriſt Ieſus, this bill is cancelled, hee faſtened it to his Croſſe (ſaith Saint Paul [r],) and the newes heereof is the very ſumme and ſubſtance of all our preaching, to proclaime this peace, and to worke our hearts to a willingneſſe to entertaine it. Why then ſhould there not bee a farre greater ioy in our hearts, to heare of this, then there was among the Iewes to vnderſtand of a bodily deliuerance? If wee were as ſenſible of the miſeries of the ſoule, as wee are of the calamities of the body, wee could not chooſe but ſhew a greater meaſure of reioycing. When the Lord brought againe the captiuity of Sion (ſaith Dauid) then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with ioy [s]. See what ioy was here after the freedome from an earthly bondage: what then muſt it bee, to heare, but eſpecially to feele a mans ſelfe ſet at liberty, from the tyranny of the Diuell, and brought into the glorious liberty of the ſonnes of God? Wee reade in the ſtory of the Goſpell, that as Chriſt was going out of Iericho, there was a poore blinde man that was very earneſt with him, to take pity on him, and to heale him; within a while our Sauiour hauing a little tryed his patience, commanded him to bee called: ſome came to him, and ſaid to him: Be of good comfort, ariſe, he calleth thee: they were not ſo forward to bring him this newes, but hee was as full of ioy to receiue it: He threw away his cloake (ſaith the text) and aroſe and came to him[t]. I warrant you, it did euen reuiue his ſpirits to heare the tydings. After the ſame manner, when as a poore diſtreſſed ſinner, that feeleth the wofull blindneſſe and darkneſſe of his owne ſoule, ſhall be told out of the Word that Chriſt Ieſus calleth him: nay, when as hee ſhall euen heare himſelfe calling, Come to mee thou that art laden, I will refreſh thee[u]: muſt it not needes put ſpirit into him, and euen enliue his heart to be partaker of ſo gracious a calling? Yes verily, all that are the Lords finde it, and know it to be ſo: and they are as yet none of Gods, that haue no feeling of this ioy. Thus much for the opening of this point, touching the ioy of thoſe that finde this treaſure. Let vs come now to apply it.

As it was ſaid of Niniveh, in her pride, that ſhee was a reioycing Citie[x]: ſo may it be ſaid of this our age, it is a reioycing age, euery man hath ſomething or other wherein hee reioyceth. There is the Epicures ioy, who thinkes there is no goodneſſe vnder the Sunne, but to eate and drinke, and ſo to reioyce[y]. There is the malicious mans ioy, he reioyceth at the deſtruction of him whom he hates[z]. There is the worldlings ioy, becauſe his ſubſtance is great, and his hand hath gotten much[a]: he ſaith to his ſoule; Oh ſoule, now thou haſt much laid vp for many yeeres, liue at eaſe, eate, drinke, and take thy paſtime[b]. There is the young mans ioy, Hee lets his heart cheare him, in the dayes of his youth, he walkes in the wayes of his heart, and in the ſight of his eyes[c]. There is the prophane mans ioy, who reioyceth to doe euill[d], it is a paſtime to him to doe wickedly[e]. There is the ioy of the ſcorners of religion, which reioyce at the troubles and infirmities of Gods children, In my aduerſitie they reioyced (ſaith Dauid) yea the very abiects aſſembled themſelues againſt mee[f]. There is the adulterers ioy, his eye waiteth for the twilight[g] (ſaith Iob) he is glad of an oportunity to commit filthineſſe. There is the drunkards ioy, the practiſe of his ſenſuall beaſtlineſſe is ſo pleaſing to him, that hee cannot ſleepe for it: Hee riſeth early (ſaith the Prophet) to follow drunkenneſſe, and hee can ſit euen till night, till hee be inflamed[h]. There is the deceiuers ioy, The bread of deceit is ſweet in his mouth (ſaith Salomon[i].) Thus I ſay in this ſecure age, mens mindes doe finde ſomething or other wherein to reioyce: but now where are they that can ſay with Ieremie, O Lord, thy Word is vnto me the ioy and reioycing of my heart[k]: that cry and pray with Dauid, O reſtore vnto me the ioy of thy ſaluation, make my heart within me to heare of this ioy and gladneſſe[l]? This kinde of ioy is rightly called the ioy of Gods people[m]. And therefore as the people of God are but a ſmall portion in compariſon, ſo their number is but ſmal, whoſe hearts are poſſeſſed with this ioy; no doubt if inquirie were made, many would be found to pretend that they are merry in God, that they reioyce in Chriſt, and take comfort in his Word: but yet, not to ſtand vpon many particulars, there be two things which do prooue it to vs to be cleane contrary.

Firſt, our ſlender ioy in the exerciſes of religion, our ſmall delight in the holy duties of the Sabbath day,: you haue heard alleadged many teſtimonies touching Dauid, reioycing in the knowledge and vnderſtanding of Gods word. There are as many of his reioycing in the publike duties of Gods ſeruice: O Lord, I haue loued the habitation of thy houſe[n]: I led the multitude into the houſe of God, with the voyces of ſinging and prayer[o]: I reioyced when they ſaid vnto mee, wee will goe into the houſe of the Lord[p]. the other. Sith then the common duties of the Sabbath day, are ſuch a burthen vnto vs, the hearing of the Word doth euen tire vs out, and make vs ſo dull, that we ſhew our ſelues to haue no life in receiuing it, but (euen like trewantly ſchollers) to bee glad when the houre is come, that wee may bee diſmiſſed: ſeeing wee hold that there is no comfort on the Sunday, vnleſſe we may ſpend it more or leſſe in our own fooliſh pleaſures; we cannot be ſaid to ioy in this hidden treaſure, ſeeing when the Sabbath comes, which is the market day of our ſoules, we preferre any buſineſſe, any idle vanity, any odde occaſion before the meanes to gaine this ſpirituall commodity. Till wee call the Sabbath a delight to conſecrate it as glorious to the Lord [q], till the exerciſes of the Word and Sacraments be precious vnto vs, and that we thinke the time comfortably ſpent, which is beſtowed either in fitting vs to them, or in labouring to receiue profit by them: let vs neuer open our mouthes to ſay, that the treaſures of ſaluation is our ioy, and the knowledge of God is a matter we delight in. q Iſa.58.13.

A ſecond thing thing which prooueth vs to be farre from the ioy mentioned in my text, is our eager following of vaine and earthly pleaſures. This is a ſure rule, that the more a man taſts of heauenly things, the leſſe is his ioy in earthly things: and ſo on the other ſide, the more a man feeleth earthly things pleaſant, the leſſe ioy can he haue in heauenly. When Cain had loſt his title and intereſt vnto heauen, then he fell to building of Cities [r], and to make himſelfe a ſeat on earth: and when he had loſt the harmony of a good conſcience, his Nephew Tuball inuented Organs, that hee might haue at the leaſt ſome ſolace in outward things. So that when men ſet their affections vpon the fading and tranſitory pleaſures, and there is their iollitie: it is an euill ſigne, it ſhewes that the heart is not ſeaſoned with the true reioycing. It is true there may bee a time for theſe inferiour and baſer things: neither was it vntruely ſayd of the Heathen: Without ioy, the life is no life: but when men ſhall once take pleaſure in pleaſure, when (as Salomon for ſeauen yeeres ſpent in building Gods houſe, ſpent thirteene in his owne) men beſtowe more time, double and treble in vaine ioyes, then they employ either in their honeſt callings, or in the ſeruice of God; It cannot bee good, nay Iudas himſelfe, if hee ſhould ſee it, would ſay; To what ende is this waſte [s]? I muſt needes ſay of ſuch mirth, as Salomon did, thou art mad [t]: and of ſuch ioy, What is it that thou doeſt? It is good for men to bee afraid of themſelues in theſe caſes; the Diuels rules neuer haue exception; but the ſeruants of God muſt euer learne reſtraint, and not goe ſo farre as they may: hee that auoydeth not ſomething that is not euill, muſt needes fall into euill. In ryding, wee will not ride ſo neare the edge of the ditch, as a man may poſſible ride, and yet eſcape; but wee will leaue a good deale betweene. It is no Chriſtian wiſedome to goe as neere euill as wee can: ſinne is very reaſonable at the beginning: but before men bee aware, they may bee ſoone drawne into exceſſe. It was not ſimply a ſinne in Eſau to goe a hunting: but yet the more hee vſed it, the more prophane hee waxed, and at laſt came to contemne his birth-right. So then, this is the iſſue of my ſpeech: Our ſlender ioying in the duties of the Sabbath, and our large reioycing in the pleaſures of vanitie, ſhew, that though there bee in the world much carnall ioy, yet there is but little ſpirituall ioy. r Gen.4. ἀνεὺ χάρας βίος οὐχ ἑστὶ βίος. s Mat.26.8. t Eccl.2.2. Indeede ſome haue ſeemed to take comfort in the beſt things: it may bee ſo ſaide to them, as Chriſt ſaid to the Iewes, Iohn was a burning and a ſhining candle, and for a ſeaſon yee reioyced in his light [u]. And our Sauiour in this very Chapter ſpeaketh of ſome, who receiue the Word with ioy, but they are but for a ſeaſon. Such I haue knowne: the time was, when as the Apoſtle ſaith of the Galathians, They would haue pluckt out their owne eyes [x]; they would (as they made ſhew) haue done any thing to enioy the benefit of the word: but now they are ful, u Ioh.5.35. x Gal.4.15.

profit hath bewitched them, pleaſure hath beſotted them, and there is little left but a forme of godlineſſe. I pray God they make not their end worſe then their beginning.

So much of this ſecond token of eſteeming this treaſure, Ioy.

ἀπάγει. The third followeth, and that is a conſultation, in theſe words, And for ioy thereof departeth: or as it is properly out of the Greeke, Hee withdrew himſelfe. When a man hath found a treaſure, and hath well examined it, and by examination found the worth of it: as hee reioyceth in his owne good fortune (as we ſay) that contrary to his expectation he ſhould light vpon ſo great a commodity, ſo he goeth aſide, and layeth all other buſineſſe apart, to aduiſe with himſelfe of his owne ſufficiency; what the field in which this treaſure is, may coſt him: whether if he ſhould lay out all his ſubſtance vpon the purchaſe of it, it might counteruaile his charge. This is the withdrawing of a mans ſelfe, or the going aſide, which being vſed as a preparatiue in earthly purchaſes, is applied to Doctrine 3. the manner of ſeeking this heauenly commodity: to ſignifie vnto vs, that a true Chriſtian, whoſe heart the Lord hath truely touched, when he heares out of the Word, what happineſſe is prepared for thoſe that beleeue, what an exceeding gracious God the Lord is: as his heart is inwardly affected with the ioy thereof, ſo that he gladly ſuffers the holy doctrine thereof to enter in into his heart: ſo likewiſe he falleth into an earneſt, ſerious, and deliberate conſultation with himſelfe, what it muſt coſt him, if he will be religious indeed: how many vaine pleaſures he muſt forgo, what diſgraces he muſt endure, what iniuries in the world he muſt put vp, what conflicts he muſt haue with Satan, through how many afflictions he muſt enter into the kingdome of God [y]; what temptations he ſhall be aſſaulted with, ſometimes with wealth to choake him, ſometimes loſſes to diſcourage him, ſometimes the applauſe of the world to puffe him vp, ſometimes reproaches to make him droupe; after this, hee enters into himſelfe, to ſee whether hee can finde himſelfe content to put himſelfe to all this charge, for the gaining of this treaſure; and whether if hee doe, he ſhall not loſe his coſt, but ſhall haue a better treaſure in lieu of his expenſe. This preconſideration is that which is meant here in this place; and it is the ſame which our Sauiour commends vnto vs in two

[y] Act. 4, 22. [z] Luke 14. parables; the one of a Builder: the other of a King going out to warre [z]. The wiſe builder ſits downe firſt (ſaith he) and counts the coſt, whether he haue ſufficient to performe it: the prouident Captaine firſt takes counſell, whether he be able to goe through with that ſeruice he vndertakes; ſo ſhould euery man that would be religious, grow to a demurre, and to an aduiſed queſtioning with himſelf, touching the value of this offered treaſure; whether hee can finde in his heart to hazzard and aduenture all to obtaine it. You ſhall reade of a fellow in Luke, that was very haſty to tender his ſeruice vnto Chriſt, I will follow thee Lord, whither ſoeuer thou goeſt [a]: our Sauiour had his humor ſtraight, and ſaw his drift, and whereat he aymed; he imagined ſome great outward reward, for being one of Chriſts retinew; or at leaſt thought vpon no great hardſhip that might follow it: therfore Chriſt gaue him this leſſon; The Foxes haue holes, and the birds of the heauen haue neſts, but the Sonne of man hath not whereon to lay his head [b]. It is like hee was ſoone full of it, and was weary of his ſeruice before he began it. Therefore the Scripture deales plainely with vs at our firſt calling; Heere is the crowne, and here is the croſſe: if we will raigne with him, we muſt ſuffer with him [c]. Chriſt himſelfe (as a man) went not into glory, but by ſuffering [d]. If we will be his Diſciples, we muſt follow him: wee may not thinke to finde a fairer way, then that through which he is gone before vs.

The Vſe. The vſe of this is, to ſhew vs the cauſe why there are ſo few religious. There are to bee found two ſorts of people. The firſt looke onely on the charge, but neuer examine the worth of the commodity: therefore when they finde that there there muſt be ſo much adoe, ſo much hearing, praying, meditating, ſuch labouring for knowledge, ſuch ſtraitneſſe of life, ſuch watching ouer a mans owne heart; they neuer goe further, come what wil, they will none of it: whereas if they did compare the good of the thing, with the charge of getting it, and did remember or know what Chriſt ſaide, they would neuer grudge at that coſt, which is rewarded with ſuch a commodity. The ſecond ſort of people looke vpon the worth of the treaſure, (though yet not ſo throughly as they ſhould) and gladly they would haue it, but yet they conſider not, as they ought, of the things that do accompany it: ſome generall conceit perhaps they haue of ſome ſuch thing, but yet they did neuer ſeriouſly conſult with themſelues about it: and therefore after they haue made ſome little entry into religion, and meet with ſome incombrances they were not ware of, or for which they were not ſo well prouided, they fall backe, loſe their firſt loue, ſuffer their zeale to decay, and grow into an vtter neglect of that treaſure, which they ſometime ſeemed to eſteeme. It is good for euery man therefore that would bee religious, and beginnes by hearing to haue ſome good liking to bee bred in him, to withdraw himſelfe, and to caſt vp his accounts, to ſee what hee muſt put himſelfe vnto, if he will be a Chriſtian, leſt hee doe after fall away, and doe thereby make himſelfe ſubiect to a greater iudgement.

Mark. 10. 30.

The third Sermon.

And ſelleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field.

WEe are now come to the fourth argument or teſtimony of high eſteeming the treaſure of ſaluation, the meanes of life eternall, namely, the reſolution, to ſell all that a man hath. To finde out the meaning hereof, wee are firſt to ſee what a man hath: ſecondly, what it is to ſell it.

The Expoſition.

Touching the former, it may perhaps at the firſt ſeeme to be ſpoken of the wealth and riches of the world, or to inſinuate ſome ſuch voluntary pouerty; into which vnder a ſhew of holineſſe, and of forſaking the world, Monkes and ſuch like do caſt themſelues: but indeed there is no ſuch meaning in the words. For firſt, the things which appertaine to the kingdome of God, canot be purchaſed by money. Secondly, there bee many poore ſoules in the world that ſhall be ſaued; that yet haue little wealth to part with, to obtaine heauen by. Thirdly, the riches of the world are not our owne, neither can they properly be ſo called, for they are but lent vnto vs, and the Lord doth giue them, and take them at his pleaſure. The like may be ſaid of health, beauty, fauour, reputation and credit in the world; which though many men by the goodneſſe of God doe enioy, yet they cannot be called theirs: ſo that wee muſt enquire out ſomething which may truely and properly be tearmed a mans owne; and that is no other thing but onely ſinne: which as it comes to euery man by inheritance, (ſo that though hee be borne with a naked body, yet his ſoule is full of it;) ſo likewiſe there is nothing dearer or of greater price vnto a naturall man, then it, nothing that he is lother and more vnwilling to forgoe; and this is that which is meant by the Spirit of God in this place. Now to ſell this, is (as the nature of ſelling wee know requires) to part with the right and title, and intereſt that a man hath into it, the ſecret and inward loue to it, and the outward and common practice of it. Thus much briefly and plainly to open the meaning of this clauſe: you ſee, that by that a man hath, is meant ſinne; and by ſelling it, the renouncing and diſclaiming of ſinne. Let vs now come to the more particular examination, for our inſtruction.

The 1. doct.

There be ſundry points ariſing out of this clauſe, as in the further ſcanning of it (God willing) ſhall appeare. The firſt which is the ground of all the reſt, is this; That in all thoſe which thinke and hope to bee ſaued, there muſt bee a diſclaiming, a renouncing, an vtter forſaking of thoſe ſinnes, which heretofore in the dayes of their ignorance and childehood, and vanitie they delighted in. This is the very ſubſtance of ſelling that which a man hath, here ſpoken of. A man cannot keepe ſtill his ancient poſſeſſion in ſinne, and in the luſts and wayes of his owne heart, and yet get heauen too. It is good to ſearch for this rich treaſure into the very heart and bowels of the Scripture; it is goed when a man hath found it, to hide it, and to lay it vp in the ſtore-houſe of a mans memory; it is good to bee glad of it, and to reioyce in it; it is good to grow into a conſultation with a mans ſelf, what is to be done for the obtaining it; all theſe things in themſelues are good: but yet they are all in vaine, except a man doe ioyne vnto them this ſame ſelling of his olde and accuſtomed ſinnes, and the entring into a new courſe of holineſſe. To manifeſt this point, wee may conſider the examples of

ſome whoſe conuerſation is recorded in the Scripture, in whom there is noted a plaine forſaking of former euils, and an vtter diſliking and abhorring of the things which before they tooke pleaſure in. Thoſe Iewes of whom 3000. were conuerted at one Sermon of Saint Peter [f]: indeede at the firſt they were hardned and ſenſleſſe, they reproached the Apoſtles, and called them drunkards, they ſcoffed at the Word, and cared not for the hearing of it: but we do not finde they continued ſo afterwards, but the contrary rather; their hearts were pricked, they honoured the Apoſtles as Gods Miniſters, they trembled at the Word, their eares were open to heare, and their hearts prepared to learne any thing. So Paul once breathed out threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the Diſciples of the Lord [g], once he was a blaſphemer, and an oppreſſour [h]; but was hee ſuch a one ſtill after God had called him? No, nay hee preached that ſame faith which before hee deſtroyed [i], and ſacrificed his life for the religion which hee ſometimes perſecuted. Thoſe of Epheſus before they had the true and ſound knowledge of religion, vſed curious Arts, and were giuen to witchcraft, and ſorcery: but after their hearts were touched, there was a change, they came and confeſſed (ſaith the text) and ſhewed their workes, and burnt their bookes before all men [k]. I heard Ephraim (ſaith Ieremie) lamenting and ſaying; Surely after that I was inſtructed, I ſmote vpon my thigh, I was aſhamed and confounded, becauſe I did beare the reproach of my youth [l]. Behold heere, in ſtead of a delight in former ſinnes, a bluſhing at the very remembrance of them. Paul writing to the Corinthians, and making mention of ſundry kindes of euill doers, fornicators, idolators, adulterers, wantons, couetous, drunkards, raylers, extortioners, and ſuch like, ſaith indeed, that ſuch ſome of them were ſometimes: but now you are waſhed, now you are ſanctified [m]. The like teſtimony he giues of the Epheſians, Ye were once darkeneſſe, but now ye are light in the Lord [n]. of the Coloſſians, In theſe things (ſaith he) you walked once, but now you haue put off the olde man [o]. That woman that waſhed Chriſts feet, of whom mention is made in Saint Luke [p], had beene a woman of a notorious euill life: but when ſhee once had a feeling of the grace of God, and that many and great ſinnes were forgiuen her, had her vnchaſt life in ſuch deepe deteſtation, that in token thereof, ſhee made her eyes which had allured others to vncleanes, as veſſels of water, in which to waſh the feet of Chriſt: and the haire of her head, which no doubt had beene platted and laid abroad for the ſame purpoſe, as towels to wipe them cleane. By this plenty of examples, to which others might be added, it appeareth, that there is a ſelling and a forſaking of former ſinnes, a diſliking them, a growing weary of them, in all that are truely conuerted vnto God. A man that liueth in priſon, and is there hardly dieted, feedeth with very great appetite and greedineſſe vpon ſcraps, and parings, and the refuſe of other mens tables, and thinkes himſelfe very well, if hee may fill his belly therewith: but when hee is ſet at liberty, and commeth among his wealthy friends, where hee findes variety and plenty, after he hath once taſted of it, he knoweth not how to fall to his old diet againe; but wonders rather with himſelfe how he could finde any ſauour in thoſe courſe and homely leauings: after the ſame manner, a man being held captiue by Satan at his pleaſure, taketh great contentment and delight in the practiſes of vile and filthy ſinnes, and thinkes himſelfe happy if hee may euen fill himſelfe therewith; but beginning once to be ſet at liberty, by the power of God, and taſting of the ſweet priuiledges of a Chriſtian, hee groweth euen to a loathing of his former iniquities, and doth maruaile how it was poſſible for him to reioyce, and pleaſe himſelfe in ſuch groſſe and abominable courſes. Thus you may ſee the truth of this firſt point touching the relinquiſhing the intereſt and poſſeſſion of old ſinnes, for the obtaining of this eternall inheritance. Let vs make vſe of it.

If we doe thinke that there is a God in heauen true of his word, and iuſt and vpright in all his courſes, and that this verſe which wee haue in hand, is a part of The Vſe.

that

that holy truth by which wee ſhall be iudged at the laſt day if wee be not able to deny, that by ſelling that which is ours, is meant the renouncing and forſaking of our old and accuſtomed ſinnes, which haue beene as deare vnto vs as any mans land or inheritance is vnto him, how then (if we will deale as we ought, ſeriouſly & faithfully with our own ſoules) how then I ſay can we with any colour or ſhew of likelihood, or appearance of reaſon make our ſelues beleeue that wee are truly turned vnto God, and that we are well onward in the way that leadeth vnto life? Seeing that our owne hearts doe know it, and the world may ſee it, that looke what ſinfull courſes heretofore we liued and delighted in, in the ſame wee go on and continue to this day. It is true now which Ieremy the Prophet ſpake of in his time, I hearkened (ſaith he) and heard[q]: hee was carefull to ſee what reformation was wrought among the people, and full glad hee would haue beene to haue ſeene ſome fruits of amendment: but in what ſtate thinke wee did hee finde them? none (ſaith hee) ſpake aright, no man repented him of his wickedneſſe, ſaying, what haue I done? There was no deſiſting from former courſes, no breaking off of olde ſinnes: But what then? Euery man turnes to his race, as the horſe ruſheth into the battell: there was as great boldneſſe and reſolution in naughtineſſe, as was wont to be. It is the very true proportion of our times: no man entreth into examination of himſelfe, no man ſaith to his owne ſoule, What haue I done? how is it with mee? how can my courſe be iuſtified which I haue held hitherto? how ſhall I anſwer God at the day of reckoning? am I in a good way wherein I may bee bold to goe on, or haue I beene hitherto miſled, and is it now time for me to returne? Where is the man that thus communeth with himſelfe? Euery man holdes on in his wonted faſhion, vaine pleaſures, greedy and violent catchings after the things of this world, (without any charitable reſpect had to others) mercileſneſſe, cruelty, want of compaſſion to the miſeries of the needy, wantonneſſe, exceſſe, abuſe of Gods creatures, ignorance of religion, contempt of the Word and Sacraments; no conſcience of the holy vſe of the Sabbath, no care to worſhip God in our families: theſe and the like were our ſinnes in times paſt, and the very ſame bee our ſinnes to this day. If there bee any change, it is rather in the ſhameleſſe encreaſe, and hardned boldneſſe in euill, then in the dying and decaying of iniquity. And that I may ſpeake to euery mans ſoule, let euery one of vs aske of our owne hearts, what one euill there is, what one vngodly courſe which wee were ſometimes giuen vnto, and now (ſince it pleaſed God to reueale his will more plentifully vnto vs) wee haue for conſcience ſake reformed, vowing with our ſelues neuer hereafter to imbrace it. How ſhall we haue any courage to looke Chriſt in the face, when hee comes to be our Iudge? how ſhall wee ſay to him with his Apoſtles, Maſter, we haue forſaken all for thy ſake[r], when as that witneſſe in our boſome cannot teſtifie for vs, that we haue (out of a ſettled deſire not to offend God) reformed one corruption? How happy a thing were it if wee might ſee but one Zacheus, that had heretofore beene an extortioner, and a liuer vpon the vndoing and ſpoyle of others, now to breake of his ſinnes by reſtitution for wrongs done, and by mercy to the poore: but one Dauid that hath beene an adulterer, now to grone for the griefe of this fact, and to giue publike teſtimony of his repentance: but one Rahab that hath beene an harlot, to manifeſt the truth of her conuerſion: but one Salomon, that hath giuen himſelfe ouer to take pleaſure in pleaſant things, now to cry out, Vanity of vanities: I haue ſaid of laughter, thou art mad[s]: but one Manaſſe that hath beene an idolater, and a falſe worſhipper of God, now to be humbled before the Lord: but one prodigall youth, that hath waſted his goods with riotous liuing, now at laſt to come to himſelfe,[t] with Lord I haue ſinned againſt heauen and againſt thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy ſonne: but one Lydia that had once a dull heart, now to haue a heart opened to attend: but one Corinthian that had beene a drunkard, a rayler, a couetous perſon,

now to bee waſhed and ſanctified by the Spirit of our God: I ſay how happy and comfortable were it, to ſee as it were but one of a kinde, thus to haue renounced his former vngodlineſſe; the very Angels in heauen, as Chriſt ſaith [u], would reioyce in it: but when there ſhall bee a generall reſiſtance of the truth, and (as the Prophet Iſay ſaith) men ſhall fall away more and more [x]; and they will not, as Chriſt ſaid to Ieruſalem, vnderſtand the things that belong vnto their peace [y]; what ſhall wee then ſay, but pray with Dauid; It is time for thee Lord to worke, for men haue deſtroyed thy Law [z]: And to cry with the ſoules vnder the Altar, How long O Lord, holy and true, when wilt thou iudge and auenge them that dwell on the earth [a]? Well to end this point, this is the ſumme, know this whoſoeuer thou be, if thou dwell ſtill in the houſe of thy old ſinnes, this pearle of ſaluation and life eternall, can neuer be thine; he muſt be a new creature [b], that will come into the new Ieruſalem; there ſtands an Angell with the blade of a ſword ſhaken to keepe the olde Adam, a man liuing in his olde corruption, out of Paradiſe [c]. And this is the firſt point.

The next point that I obſerue hence, is, that alteration from the former manner of behauiour which is required to ſaluation, is no exchange of one ſinne for another, but a ſale: for this cauſe it is, that repentance (without which wee ſhall all periſh [d], as Chriſt ſaith) is defined to be a turning from ſinne vnto God. O Iſrael, if thou returne, returne vnto me, ſaith the Lord [e]; and for default hereof the people are blamed, They returne (ſaith the Prophet) but not to the moſt high [f]. If a man ſhould turne from one ſinne to another; as for example, leaue prodigality, and fall to couetouſneſſe, this were no repentance. Therfore I ſay, Chriſt mentioneth here a plaine, and direct, and ſimple ſale of a mans ſinnes, and not an exchange. Doctrine 2.

f Hoſ. 7.16.

It is a point worth the noting; for many of vs that profeſſe religion now adayes, ſhall bee found rather to haue changed away ſome of our olde ſinnes, then truely to haue ſolde, and ſimply to haue forſaken them. As for example, if wee conſider their eſtate which liued in the dayes of Popery and blindneſſe, wee ſhall ſee how they haue exchanged thoſe ſinnes which then they were giuen to. Then they had the Pope in eſtimation, and the religion of Antichriſt; now, hauing left them, they are become contemners and deſpiſers of the Goſpell: then they were afraid of the fained paines of a ſuppoſed Purgatory; now the torments of hell (then the which nothing are more certaine) cannot feare them: then they prayed in an vnknowne tongue, not vnderſtanding what they did ſay; now they care not to pray in a knowne language, though they may eaſily learne what they deliuer: then there were many Sacraments which indeed were no Sacraments, and they were much accounted of, now there are but two, and the ſame which Chriſt onely did ordaine, yet are they not eſteemed: then men obſerued many ſuperſtitious holy-daies; now the Sabbath of the Lord is not eſteemed: then they gaue more then they needed to the maintenance of a ſort of ſlow-bellies, whoſe ſeruice to Gods Church was altogether vnprofitable; now they are ſlacke to giue a needfull allowance to the poore: then they would goe bare-footed on pilgrimages, many a weary ſteppe; now they are ſlothfull to goe a mile or two to ſerue a God. In a word, then men were altogether ſuperſtitious; but now they are wholly prophane: then in many things they did more then the Lord required; now it is a burden to doe the one halfe of that that they ought to doe. Here is a kinde of alteration; yet it is not ſuch a ſelling as is here mentioned, but a plaine exchange: falſe worſhippe turned into a contempt of a true worſhip: a delight in falſhood, turned into the hatred of the truth; a multitude of many ceremonies in the Church, changed into a rude and vnciuill kinde of behauiour: mens caſes were then miſerable, yet it might ſeeme pardonable, becauſe they were no better taught; but now it is damnable, becauſe they haue ſo many meanes of inſtruction. So alſo to come neerer, ſome amongſt vs through The Vſe.

a kind of importunity, hath left their negligent comming to Church: but what haue they changed it into, but a diſſolute, careleſſe, ſleepy, and vnreuerent carriage when they are here? Some haue forborne their Sunday ſports, but they will be ſure to take their fill vpon other dayes: they ſeeme to ſay as the drunkard in Iſay, To morrow ſhall be as to day, and much more abounda[nt] [g]. Some that (it may bee) heretofore cared not to reade in the Bible, or in any other booke, now becauſe of their reading, deſpiſe hearing, and thinke they haue no neede of inſtruction: heere bee miſerable exchanges, but this is not the ſelling which Chriſt meanes here in this place. And therefore let vs learne this leſſon; that it is not enough by the preaching of the Goſpell, to bee brought from ſome euils, to which before we haue been accuſtomed, and withall to entertaine ſome others as bad as they were: but wee muſt reſolue vpon a ſimple and plaine forſaking; intending as we forbeare one ſin, ſo likewiſe to ſet our ſelues againſt all. This is the ſecond point.

g Iſa.56.12.

Doctrine 3. The third point is, that the ſale here required, is an vniuerſall ſale; He ſelleth (ſaith the text) all that he hath; not ſome peece of this ſinfull poſſeſſion, but euery parcell of it, euen the very whole and entire inheritance. This point I ſpake of not long ſince, in the opening of that text, Matth. 3. where I ſhewed that that is good fruit, which proceedes out of a ioynt reſpect vnto all Gods Commandements: it muſt not be grieuous vntovs to haue the ſame point againe inſiſted vpon. Alwayes when one and the ſame doctrine comes often, wee are to account it ſo to fall out by the ſpeciall prouidence of God, and that it is ſo in his great wiſedome, either becauſe when we heard it before, we heeded it not as we ought to haue done, or vnderſtood it not throughly, or elſe did not ſo carefully ſet our ſelues to the practice of it: ſo that now the Lord doth againe call vpon vs, to lay as it were better hold vpon it, and from henceforth to looke better to the performance of it. Well then, for the point it ſelfe, thus it ariſeth from this place; that hee which would enioy this heauenly treaſure, which the Lord doth ſo freely and graciouſly tender vnto vs by the preaching of the Goſpell, muſt reſolue to make a through-ſale, and to forſake not ſome, but euery ſinne, euery corruption, euery breach of the will of God whatſoeuer. For the better vnderſtanding of this point, to auoyd all miſtakings, and to direct vs the better in the practiſe and performance of it (it being indeed the very life of all religion, and that which the Scripture calleth the power of godlineſſe [h],) I will thus diſtinguiſh the poſſeſſion of ſin. It is held and poſſeſſed by vs, either in our hearts and inward affections, or elſe in our liues and outward practice. In the heart it is harboured, loued, delighted in, ſtudied vpon, cared for. In the life it is exerciſed, and by often practiſes receiueth ſtrength and increaſe, and is brought by degrees vnto a kinde of ripeneſſe and perfection. The intereſt that we haue either of theſe wayes into ſinne, muſt neceſſarily be forſaken. Cleanſe your ſelues (ſaith the Apoſtle) from all filthineſſe both of the fleſh, and of the Spirit [i]: firſt of all, we muſt labour to let goe the holde that the heart hath in it: for all godlineſſe is but a fancie, vntill the heart be reformed. Though the branches and boughes of a tree be cut, yet ſo long as the roote lieth faſt in the earth, there will alwayes ſome buds ſpring forth. A riuer may be dried vp, euen to the very head and fountaine; but if that be not emptied and choaked vp, in time it will encreaſe againe: & ſo long as corruption raignes [k] within the heart, ſome offences or other muſt breake out. You ſhall reade in the Pſalmes, that the Iſraelites many times turned vnto God when they felt his hand heauy vpon them [l]: but yet becauſe their heart was not vpright, they ſinned ſtill, when the ſtorme was ouer, and prouoked him afreſh as they were wont to do. The Prince of this world, the diuell, dwelt in euery one of vs by nature, and the ſcepter of his kingdome is corruption: till by the weakning of the ſin, Satan begin to be diſplaced, the Spirit of God can haue no dwelling in vs. You will ſay perhaps vnto mee; how is it poſſible to caſt all corruption out of our hearts, ſeeing the Scripture ſaith; No man can ſay my heart is cleane[m]? And that as long as wee doe liue here in this world, wee ſhall haue cauſe to acknowledge with Saint Paul, that in our fleſh dwelleth no goodneſſe[n]: I anſwer, that though it be true, that as long as wee abide in this world, corruption and ſinne will finde a place within vs, yet the intereſt and poſſeſſion that we haue into it, is ſolde and diſclaimed by doing two things: The firſt is by mourning for it and daily bewailing it: The other by labouring to grow continually into a deeper deteſtation of it.

n Rom.7.18.

Touching the former, we haue the charge of the Spirit of God by Saint Iames, Purge your hearts you ſinners[o]: there is the very thing wee haue now in hand: but how ſhall they purge their hearts,? It followeth, Suffer afflictions, and ſorrow, and weepe, let your laughter be turned into mourning, and your ioy into heauineſſe. This is that which the Scripture calleth ſometime the renting[p], ſometime the breaking of the heart[q]: and to ſhew the earneſtneſſe of this ſorrow, the Prophet Zacharie[r] compareth it to a mans mourning for his onely ſonne, or his firſt borne; and to that ſolemne and publike lamentation which was for the religious King Ioſiah; of which it is ſaid, that all Iudah and Ieruſalem mourned, Ieremiah the Prophet mourned, all ſinging men and ſinging women mourned[s]. We reade often of Dauids teares[t], of the ſorrowes of his heart, of the groanings of his ſpirit: of Peters bitter weeping[u]: of the Corinthians mourning,[x] that Paul was faine to write vnto them to comfort them. The father of the poſſeſſed childe that was brought to Chriſt, when our Sauiour told him of the power of faith; ſtraight-way (ſaith the text) hee cryed with teares, Lord I beleeue, helpe my vnbeliefe[y]. His heart was euen woe within him to thinke vpon his owne hardneſſe, and the blindneſſe that hee had liued in. And Saint Paul commendeth Timothy for his teares[z]. The more a man encreaſeth in this bewailing, and priuy bemoning of the hidden corruption of his owne ſoule, the better he hath proceeded in this ſame ſelling of ſinne. The way to ſell ſinne out of the heart, is to ſtriue to grow into a deteſtation and loathing of it. Was not Dauid thinke wee wearie of his ſinnes, when hee ſaid, they were like a waighty burthen, too heauy for him to beare[a], and were like to rotten and feſtered wounds? Did not Paul euen abhorre his owne corruption, when hee cryed out, O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliuer mee from this body of death[b]? The ſame Apoſtle ſpeaking of the repentance of the Corinthians, among other fruits that it brought forth, names Indignation[c]: what Indignation (ſaith hee) hath it wrought? What meaneth hee by this Indignation: ſurely nothing but a kinde of diſcontentednеſſe that they were growne into, chafing as it were and vexing with theſelues that they ſhould ſo foulely offend God. This is the crucifying of our affections[d], which the Scripture ſpeaketh of, when as that naturall hatred which is in vs againſt God and all goodnes, is turned into a hatred of ſin in all, but eſpecially in our ſelues. Thus then you ſee the firſt degree of making this through ſale of ſinne, to let goe that hold and intereſt that the heart hath into it: which is done by ſorrowing for ſinne, and by labouring more and more to abhorre and to deteſt ſinne.

The next intereſt and hold that wee haue of ſinne, is in our outward practice, and this muſt be ſold and forſaken alſo. For, as to make ſome outward ſhew of reformation without purging the heart, is but hypocriſie: ſo to pretend (as the manner is) a good heart without fruites of amendment, is but vanity. This is a thing which the Scripture ſtill requireth of all that profeſſe religion; Let your light ſhine before men[e]: Let your conuerſation be ſuch as becommeth the Goſpell[f]: Let them that beleeue in God, be carefull alſo to ſhew forth good workes[g]. Theſe and the like are common exhortations in the Scripture. Now this outward reformation muſt be vniuerſall, of all knowne ſinnes: the wordes of my text are plaine; He ſelleth all that he hath: if he willingly keepe the leaſt peece behinde, the bleſſing it ſelfe cannot be obtained. It is plaine by the Scripture, that true turning vnto

God, and the aduiſed and willing remaining in the practice of any one euill, which is diſcouered to a mans conſcience by the light of Gods Word to bee a ſinne, cannot ſtand together. It is (as we would thinke) but a ſmall ſinne that Saint Iames ſpeakes of, the ſinne of the tongue; and yet he ſaith, That if any man profeſſe religion, and yet refraineth not his tongue [h], all his religion is idle, all his profeſſion is vtterly in vaine. And indeed, if a man refraine the practice of one ſin, and doe it therefore becauſe it is a ſinne, an offence againſt God, and a breach of his will; the ſame reaſon muſt needs draw him to refraine others alſo, it being the generall nature of euery ſinne to be diſpleaſing vnto God. Herod reformed ſomething [i]: the young man that came to Chriſt had ſold many ſinnes, and had many good thoughts in him, and therefore the text ſaith; Chriſt loued him [k]: yet when it came to one particular about riches, he fell off and marred all. Yea, no doubt, Iudas had many good things in him, otherwiſe Chriſt would neuer haue choſen him to be an Apoſtle: yet there was left a certaine leauen behinde, a ſecret poyſon that braſt out in the end, and diſcouered his hypocriſie. So then, as all inward corruption muſt be ſorrowed for, and laboured againſt; ſo all outward knowne iniquitie muſt be renounced, and no manifeſt euill willingly continued in. He that keepes ſinne in part, ſhall loſe grace in whole. To loath ſome ſinne, and to loue and liue in ſome other, is but halting: and with God it is no ſafe diſſembling. He that is godly indeed, muſt needs be out of loue with the whole courſe of iniquity.

[k] Mar. 10.21.

This is the doctrine. Let vs make vſe of it to our ſelues.

Vſe. 1. Firſt, let it bee a motiue to vs to gage the very depth and bottome of our hearts, to ſee how we haue carried our ſelues in this ſelling and forſaking of that we haue, for the gaining of heauen, and for the profitable embracing the meanes of ſaluation and life eternall: how haue wee mourned for the hidden corruption of our hearts? where be our groanes and ſighes? vvhere be our teares that wee haue ſhed to conſider the vntowardnes, and crookednes, and obſtinacie that is in vs againſt God? Where is our loathing and deteſtation of our owne ſecret enormities, and of thoſe inordinate and rebellious luſts, which are ſtill fighting againſt the ſoule? Where are our vowes with our ſelues, to ſet our ſelues againſt ſinne, and to giue vp our whole ſpirits, ſoules, and bodies, to pleaſe him in all things? Are theſe ſtrange queſtions vnto vs, or doe wee not know out of our owne experience, what theſe things meane? Are the luſts of the fleſh ſtill pleaſing vnto vs? Did it neuer grieue vs at the heart, that the Maieſty of God hath been offended by vs? Did the conſideration of our owne wretchedneſſe neuer make vs to mourne ſecretly? or to cry vnto the Lord to weaken in vs the power of iniquitie? Or did wee neuer yet thinke vvith our ſelues hovv happy wee ſhould be, if the Lord would giue vs the victory ouer our owne vnbridled affections? If this be our caſe, we haue not yet ſold our ſinnes, we poſſeſſe them, and they poſſeſſe vs, wee can neuer (if we ſo continue) come to the fruition of this heauenly and ſpirituall inheritance. Thus for the making the firſt vſe of this doctrine, we muſt be put ouer to this priuate communing with our ſelues, to ſee how wee haue begun this ſale, by reforming our hearts, and renouncing the ſecret harbouring of priuy corruptions.

Vſe. 2. Now for a ſecond vſe touching outward reformation: our pinching dealing with the Lord, ſheweth how loath we are to ſell all. We deale in this caſe as Ananias did [l]: when in the beginnings of the Church, becauſe of the neceſſity of the times, many ſold their lands, and brought the price and laid it in at the Apoſtles feet, to be diſtributed by them, as euery one had need: Ananias would needes ſeeme to be as forward in this courſe as any other; hee ſold his lands alſo, hee brought in the money, and tendered it (as the faſhion was) at the Apoſtles feet; but yet diſtruſting the prouidence of God, and fearing leſt hee himſelfe ſhould want alſo, he kept backe one part, pretending notwithſtanding to haue brought in all. But the hand of God was vpon him for his diſſembling; Hee fell downe (ſaith the text) and gaue vp the ghoſt. A fearfull example, and worthy to bee laid to the hearts of a great many of vs. Some would ſeeme to be as forward in the reformation and amendment of their liues as any other; but yet there is ſomething or other ſtill behinde, either for that their worldly profit, or vaine delight, or ſuppoſed credit: there is ſome one euill courſe which they themſelues (their conſciences being well ſifted) know to be naught; which yet they continue in: whoſoeuer thou art that findeſt this to be thy caſe, I muſt ſay to thee as Peter ſaid to Ananias; Why doeſt thou thus let Satan fill thy heart? thou haſt not lyed vnto man, but vnto God. And he whoſe vengeance ouertooke Ananias, will not let thy hypocriſie eſcape away vnpuniſhed.

Therefore let vs be mindefull of this point, either to reſolue vpon a through-reformation, or no reformation. Now that is called a through-reformation, which is vndertaken with a purpoſe not to hold on in the willing practice of any one knowne iniquity.

There is yet a fourth thing behinde, and that is this, that this ſale is not for a ſeaſon, but perpetuall and for euer; for ſo it is implyed here in this parable; The man that hath found this pearle, for ioy of it, ſelleth all: but yet hee keepes not his money by him, as though he had a purpoſe in time, to buy the ſame thing againe which hee had once ſold; but forthwith he layeth out all his ſtocke vpon that field, in which his treaſure lyeth hid.

So that by the proportion of the Parable it is plaine, that this ſale, that is, this renouncing, this leauing of old ſinnes, is not for a time, for a fit onely, and then to returne backe to a mans old faſhion; but it is a finall, without euer embracing that euill again, which a man hath once diſclaimed. This is a point plaine enough in Scripture. Doctrine 4.

Chriſt giueth vs a ſpeciall charge, to remember Lots wife[m]: now wee know what is ſaid of her, That when God had deliuered her and her husband out of Sodome, and had commanded them not to looke behinde them, ſhe notwithſtanding thinking vpon the pleaſantnes of the place, and the eaſe and proſperity ſhe there liued in, looked behinde her, as it were repenting ſhe was come thence: hereupon the ſtory ſaith; The hand of God was vpon her, and ſhee was turned into a pillar of ſalt[n]: now remember her (ſaith Chriſt) take heede of her ſinne, if you feare her puniſhment. Beware of longing after thoſe ſinnes which we haue begun in ſome meaſure to reforme like the Iſraelites, that luſted after the fleſh-pots of Egypt[o], and priſed not their deliuery from bondage as it did deſerue: our Sauiour ſath; That if Satan, hauing begun to be caſt out of a man by ſome degrees of reformation, haue leaue and liberty to returne againe, he brings with him ſeauen Diuels worſe then himſelfe, and makes that mans end worſe then the beginning[p]. It is better for men (ſaith Saint Peter) neuer to haue knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, and to haue eſcaped the filthineſſe of the world, if after againe they be intangled therein[q]. If a man haue once beene enlightened, and then fall away, it is impoſſible to be renewed by repentance[r]: a fearfull ſaying. Let vs all make this vſe of it, To take good heed to our ſelues of going backe from good purpoſes, and good motions, if we haue had any, and from good beginnings. It is a dangerous thing to continue in any hardned courſe without remorſe: but, to haue ſet a ſtep or two forward in a good way, and then to fly backe, is infinitely more dangerous: for it is a hard matter to returne againe to amendment. There is no ſicknes more dangerous then a relapſe, and no ſtate of the ſoule more fearfull, then his that hath begun well, and now ſtarts aſide, like a broken bow[s], to his old wont. There be that haue giuen ſome hopes, and made ſome offers as it were to come out of Sodome, and this and that good courſe they haue begun, but it is much to be doubted it was but a fit; their righteouſnes is (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) like a morning cloud[t], that with one blaſt is ſoone vaniſhed, or as a deaw, which the heat of the Sunne drieth drieth vp quickly. Others I haue ſeene and heard, who when they haue beene ſicke, and their conſcience hath beene waked, and death hath beene looked for, haue ſeemed very penſiue and ſorrowfull for their life paſt, and haue promiſed (if the Lord ſpare them life and health) great amendment. Well, the Lord hath reſtored them, they haue health, they haue ſtrength; But where is their amendment? They are fallen back, like the dog to his vomit, and like the ſow to the myre [u]; A wofull caſe. Thou whoſe conſcience telleth thee, that this is thy caſe; that thou didſt, when the Croſſe was vpon thee, fall away thy ſinnes, but now thou haſt bought them againe, Remember what Dauid did [x]: And what Salomon ſaid, When thou haſt vowed a vow to God, deferre not to pay it [y]. It is better that thou ſhouldeſt not vow, then that thou ſhouldeſt vow, and not pay it. It is no dallying with God to renounce ſinne for a fit, to let it goe for a ſeaſon, and then to fall to it againe, is but mockery. This is a repentance that God delights not in.

[y] Eccl. 5. 4.

One word more touching the laſt point, which is the vpſhot of all: He buyeth that field, ſaith my text. This is the thing to which all the former tend. Wee know what it is to buy, euen to make a thing a mans owne, that it may be free to him for his vſe, and that he may take comfort of enioying it: ſo, to buy this ſpirituall treaſure, is to endeauour by all meanes to become the owners of it, to feele and know it to be ours; not onely to poſſeſſe the knowledge of it in the minde, but to enioy the comfort and ſweetneſſe of it in the heart. This is the true good of all religion; not onely to know there is a Sauiour, but to know him to be my Sauiour; not ſimply that there is eternall life; but that eternall life is ordained for me; not barely that my ſinnes are pardonable, but that they are pardoned.

Doctrine 5.

The former knowledge is neceſſary, but yet the treaſure is not bought, till this latter be attained. A man may ſee a peece of land and like it, and know the worth of it, and be willing to giue the price; but yet the matter is not at an end till the writings be made, and the ſeales enterchangeably ſet to, and the thing ſolemnely paſſed ouer to him that deſires it. So this is the full period and full ſhutting vp of this ſpiritual purchaſe, when as the Lord giueth (as Paul ſpeaketh) his ſpirit to be an earneſt penny [z], and a pledge, that it ſhall certainly be ours, and the aſſurance thereof is ſealed vp ſecretly to our ſoules. And the making vp of this aſſurance, is that which euery Chriſtian muſt daily labour in, and carefully vſe all good meanes appointed of God for that purpoſe: as, often hearing, by which the promiſe may be applyed; diligent and prepared comming to the Lords table, which is a ſeale to ſtrengthen his faith; earneſt prayer, that ſo by often comming before God, he may feele himſelfe to haue daily more and more intereſt into his loue. This is the buying of the field, theſe two things, the ſelling away of all mans ſinnes, by wreſtling with inward corruption, and labouring againſt outward euils; and the ſeeking to finde Chriſt to be a mans owne, that he may be able to ſay with the comfort of a good conſcience, with the Spouſe in the Canticles, I am my beloued's, and my my beloued is mine [a]: theſe two things I ſay will finde a Chriſtians man worke while he liues; neither can hee haue any true comfort in his owne ſoule, that doth not ſpend ſome part of euery day in one of theſe two.

TO MY VERY WOR-SHIPFVL GOOD FRIEND,

GEORGE CHVDLEIGH of Strachley in Deuon. Eſquire.

SIR, I haue much deſired to preſent you with ſome teſtimony of my loue. Being therefore mooued to the publication of theſe Sermons touching the initiating of the Eunuch by Baptiſme, into the number of profeſſed Chriſtians, I thought fit to commend them by this more ſpeciall inſcription to your reading: I preached vpon the whole Hiſtory, touching what paſſed betwixt Philip, and this noble Conuert: but leſt I ſhould be thought to oppreſſe the times with ſo many of my publiſhings in one kinde, therefore I ſelected that which God gaue me to deliuer out of this paſſage; and that principally for the furtherance of their vnderſtanding into whoſe hands this ſhal come, in the point of ſauing faith, and in the manner of applying Chriſt vnto the ſoule. My hope is (through Gods mercy) it may doe ſome good that way. Your ſelfe are one to whoſe ſoule I wiſh the beſt; as an vndiſſembled argument whereof, I beſeech you to accept theſe ſheetes. Your reſpect to me in my Miniſtery (out of which, what am I?) doth I confeſſe deſerue more: but where power is defectiue, I muſt pray you that ſincerity of affection, may make the ſupply: the truth is, I am paid before hand, for this, and for more then I now make offer of; but yet I will craue this recompence of you, that if either by this or any other my endeauour, you receiue comfort, you would deſire God to make mee faithfull and profitable in my function to the end: In aſſured hope that you will doe ſo, my ſelfe doth here promiſe vnder my hand, to remaine (Modbury.)

THE BAPTIZING OF THE EVNVCH.

Acts 8. 36, 37, 38.

And as they went on their way they came vnto a certaine water, and the Eunuch said, See, here is water, what should let me to be baptized?

And Philip said vnto him, If thou beleeuest with all thy heart, thou mayest. Then he answered, I beleeue that Iesus Christ is the Sonne of God.

Then he commanded the Chariot to stand still, and they went downe into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptized him.

IN this report here made of the baptizing of the Eunuch, there are two things considerable: 1. The Eunuch his motion for Baptisme. 2. Philip his condescending to the motion. Touching the former, this is to bee conceiued, that Philip among other things deliuered in the opening the doctrine of Christ Iesus out of Isay, spake also concerning Baptisme: by which those that professe Christ, are admitted into the society and fellowship of beleeuers, and haue also their owne personall interest into Christ sealed vp vnto their soules. Hereupon these two, Philip and the Eunuch trauelling together, and in their iourney comming to a riuer, the Eunuch made this motion, to a like effect as if he had thus said, Thou speakest of Baptisme as a necessary badge of Christian profession, see here is a place conuenient, here is matter for the purpose, let mee I pray thee receiue this Sacrament, for what should hinder? Now the points of doctrine to bee gathered out of this motion, are these. First that to an obedient and cheerfull hearer, the Word of God is neuer preached without successe. The generall purpose of this verse is to shew vs how Philips doctrine wrought vpon the Eunuchs heart, and we see here how powerfull it was: For this one discourse preuailed through Gods mercy, to the enlightening of his minde, making him to conceiue the hope of his calling, and the riches of that glorious inheritance which God hath in his Saints[a]; it wrought also vpon his affections in such a measure, that nothing was more desired by him then to shew himself a Christian, and to haue some pledge of the fauour of God in Christ gaged to his soule. An admirable issue of one Sermon, and a notable instance of the blessing of God, vpon such a hearer as the Eunuch was, one who came to heare with desire, and submitted himselfe to the authority of the Word with an obedient heart. The Word neuer is vnprofitable where it meetes with such an auditor. It is sayd of those three thousand which were added to the Church by one Sermon of Saint Peters (when the Spirit of God beginneth to relate their obedience) that they were such as gladly heard the Word[b]. This was an excellent preparatiue to obedience, when their hearts longed for the Word, when it was a ioy to them to be taught: Dauid saith his heart stood in awe of the Word[c]; so did theirs, for it is said before before, they were pricked in their hearts. So I note, that as it is ſaid in one place of Antioch, that by reaſon of the number of beleeuers, the Diſciples there were firſt called Chriſtians [d], ſo in another place, the forwardnes to heare is reported in the inhabitants there, as, that they beſought Paul to preach the ſame words vnto them, and accordingly at the time, came almoſt all the whole Citie together to heare [e]: ſo againe in the ſame Chapter, it is ſaid, that when the Gentiles heard, they were glad [f]: and then ſtraight it followeth, Thus the Word of the Lord was publiſhed throughout the whole country [g]. See what wings were giuen to the Goſpell, by the deſire and gladneſſe of thoſe to whom it was deliuered. The Word of God by this meanes grew mightily and preuailed. The Apoſtle to the Hebrewes, inſiſts vpon the want of this readineſſe and yeeldingneſſe of the inward man, as the cauſe of the vnprofitable hearing of the ancient Iewes; The Goſpell was preached alſo vnto them, but it profited not, becauſe it was not receiued with faith in thoſe that heard it [h]. I may apply to this purpoſe as very fitting to that of Salomon, He that reproueth the wiſe and the obedient eare, is as a golden earing and an ornament of fine gold [i]. His meaning is, that if a man haue to doe with men of obedient and yeelding hearts, it will be a credit to his paines and labour in perſwading; the ſucceſſe with which his endeauours ſhall be crowned, will make his ſpeech as beautifull as an ornament of gold. Now beſides theſe proofes, it is eaſie to make it manifeſt, that ſucceſſe cannot be wanting, where there is ſuch a diſpoſition to heare, as the Eunuch had: For God hath promiſed to fulfill the deſires of thoſe that feare him [k], and that the hearkening eare, which doth (as it were) thirſt for knowledge, ſhall lodge among the wiſe [l]. He will guide the meeke in iudgement [m], He will reueale his ſecret vnto ſuch [n], Euen that which is called, the hid wiſedome of God [o], and the minde of Chriſt [p]. The vſe is, to ſhew vnto vs the true cauſe, why there is no ſuch profiting of the Word preached, as there ſhould be, and as there was of old in the firſt and purer times. Then one Sermon wonne many, now many Sermons ſcarce preuaile with one. Surely the cauſe is, men want that ready, that cheerfull, that forward, that inclinable, that humble diſpoſition, which the good people in thoſe times had; then they ſued to be taught, as the Eunuch here, and thoſe (*Act.*2.) and the Antiochians, and the Iayler: now it is well, if wee will heare when we be entreated; then they had learned to ſubmit themſelues to the power and authority of the Word, now euery man is wiſe and able enough to inſtruct himſelfe; then their hearts trembled at the Maieſty of God ſpeaking in his ordinance; now they haue a kind of baſe eſtimation of the meanes, neither is it generally apprehended to be the arme and power of God vnto ſaluation. Heere is the very cauſe, that ſo much is ſpoken to the men of this generation without ſucceſſe, and that ſo many Sermons, be (as the woman of Tekoah ſpake in another caſe) as water ſpilt vpon the ground, which cannot be taken vp againe [q], and that ſo many of the Lords Meſſengers may lament with the Prophet, and ſay, I haue laboured in vaine, I haue ſpent my ſtrength in vaine, and for nothing [r]. It is a hard matter to meet with ſuch an one as this Eunuch in a pariſh, that will intreat to be furthered: one that will yeeld himſelfe as a Diſciple to him who watcheth for his ſoule. We haue to doe with gaine ſaying people [s], with men of vncircumciſed hearts and eares [t], ſuch whoſe necks are iron ſinewes [u], not eaſily bent, they leane too much to their owne wiſedome [x], to be wiſe in God: If then our deſire be to be profitable hearers, let vs labour to be deſirous and humble hearers, ſuch as account it no diſparagement to ſit in the Schoole of Chriſt vpon the learners forme. In the times of Popery men were taught to be too ſeruile, the Prieſts tooke on them to haue dominion ouer the peoples faith [y], there might be no asking why ſo? if they deliuered it. Now, on the other ſide, our people are as much on the other hand too much out of rule, and it is not knowne what it is to depend vpon the ordinance of God, and to ſubmit to the meanes, with that meeke and quiet ſpirit, which is a thing in the ſight of God much ſet by [z].

The Vſe.

A ſecond Doctrine out of this Motion made by the Eunuch, is, That where the heart is truely touched, and the ſoule indeed turned vnto God, there is a deſire to be partaker of the Sacraments. This Eunuch beeing now through Philips preaching ſeaſoned with the ſauing knowledge of Chriſt Ieſus, doth euen long to bee partaker of the Sacrament, which might bee a pledge of his new-birth, and an earneſt of his ingrafting into the myſticall body of his Sauiour. Oh Philip, as thou haſt taught me, ſo I pray thee alſo to baptize mee, let me not want the comfort of the Sacrament, now that I haue receiued benefit by thy doctrine. This very thing may bee gathered out of this, that the Apoſtles ſtill vrged the vſe of the Sacrament preſently vpon the peoples yeelding to receiue the Doctrine, as though that ſhould be a tryall of them, whether they heard in ſincerity or no. If they had refuſed the Sacrament, their hypocriſie had been eftſoones diſcouered; if they embraced it in ſuch manner as became them, it was an euidence that their hearts were ſeaſoned as was meet. Thus Iohn Baptiſt bound his hearers to the Sacrament [a], and Peter, Amend your liues and bee baptized [b], and after that order did the reſt proceede. I remember how the neglect of the Sacrament is made to bee a marke of a deſpiſer. The Phariſees are ſayd to haue deſpiſed the counſell of God in Iohns miniſtery: and how doth that appeare? They were not baptized of him [c]. In the olde Lawe, hee who profeſſed himſelfe to bee one of Gods people, and made a ſhew of religion, and yet neglected the Sacrament, was called, a breaker of the couenant, and was threatned to be cut off [d]. There bee iuſt cauſes of deſiring the Sacrament, in him that is enlightened: 1. Hee knoweth the vſe of the Sacraments to be Gods ordinance, and therefore in obedience to his will, hee will make conſcience thereof. 2. Hee conceiueth them to be ſeales of the righteouſnes which is by faith [e], aſſurances of ſociety with Chriſt, for which cauſe they muſt needes bee ſweet vnto his ſoule. 3. He apprehends them to be badges of his profeſſion, and of his ſeruice vnto Chriſt, and therefore he cannot but deſire them. 4. He beleeueth them to be bands of the communion of Saints, and in that reſpect he muſt needs affect them.

Doctrine 2.

b Act. 2. 38.
c Luk. 7. 30.
e Rom. 4. 11.

This is a very behouefull point to bee ſpoken of in theſe dayes, becauſe among men profeſſing godlineſſe, there is not that reſpect to the Sacraments that there ſhould bee. The Sacrament of Baptiſme, the truth is, wee haue receiued it in our childehood, but what man of many, laboureth to make the right vſe of his Baptiſme, or ſeeketh to know what it meanes, and why it was? It ſeemeth men are led with an ignorant conceit, that the good of Baptiſme is limited to the time of receiuing it, and was onely then as a doore of entrance into the outward ſociety of Gods people, whereas indeede there is good vſe to be made of that Sacrament, at a mans laſt breathing, and not at the firſt inſtant of partaking it onely. So that I ſay ſtill, men giuing good hopes of ſome religion to be in them, are exceeding careleſſe in this point of ioyning the vſe of the Sacraments to their cuſtomary hearing, and ſo by that meanes they depriue themſelues of an vnknowne and vnthought of help, both to prouoke to obedience, and to ſtrengthen faith, and to increaſe the comfort of the inward man. And as for the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, generally it is made no more reckoning of, then ſome three-halfepenny ordinary, ſaue onely at ſome ſeaſon of the yeere, or at ſome (ſuppoſed) good times, as though ſeaſons and moones and the influences of the skie, gaue vertue to Gods ordinances. Certainely this is an argument of ſcantneſſe of grace amongſt men. There cannot but bee a ſtomacke to the Sacrament, where there is felt ſweetneſſe in the Word. And it is well knowne that in thoſe prime dayes, when zeale was feruent, the beleeuers met not together to heare, but withall they did communicate; and this vſe continued many yeeres. It was Popery that firſt brought in the ſeldomneſſe of this ſeruice, and at laſt drew it to once a yeere, making the people beleeue, that in reſpect of the difficulty to be wel prepared, it was better for them to cõmunicate in heart with the Prieſt, then to doe it in act. Theſe dregges yet remaine among men, and it is an vniuſtifiable errour that they commit, to paſſe ouer the Sacrament of the Supper, to ſome old people or women with childe, who muſt take it Pro viatico. (as was ſaid in the dayes of Superſtition) for their viands, being neerer (in opinion and poſſibility) to their laſt paſſage; and themſelues either to turne their backes, or to ſit by, proclaiming to the world their want of appetite to ſuch an heauenly banquet. I ſay the ſame reaſon is in both the Sacraments, in regard of deſiring comfort. And therefore the doctrine is good hence, that where grace is, there is a deſire of the Sacraments, and a willingneſſe to vſe them according to the order of him that ordained them, and where there is little reſpect to the ſeales, ſurely there the couenant it ſelfe is not much eſteemed.

Doct. 3. A third doctrine out of this motion is, That in whom there is any truth of Chriſtianity, in him there is alſo a deſire to diſcouer and to make it knowne to the world that hee is a Chriſtian. I gather this out of the Eunuch his requeſt to bee baptized, which Sacrament his deſire was to be partaker of, not onely for the eſtabliſhing of his heart, and the confirming of his faith, but withall that hee might haue vpon him the badge and cognizance of his new profeſſion, and might ſhew himſelfe not to be aſhamed of the name and title of a Chriſtian. And indeede it was an euidence of great reſolution in this conuert, that whereas it could not but breede him ſome queſtion and trouble at his returne into his owne Countrey, to be fallen from the religion wherein he was borne and brought vp, and to become one of that new Sect which was euery where ſpoken againſt [f]: Yet hee, fearing no f Act. 28. 22. hazard of his honour, no loſſe of his office and dignity, no incurring the hatred and cenſure of his countrey-men, would needs be baptized, and as it were enrouled and booked among Chriſtians. This is the nature of true conuerſion, albeit, it may ſtirre but weakely at the firſt, and ſeeme almoſt, not to dare to ſhew it ſelfe (as we ſee in the caſe of Nocodemus and ſome other in our Sauiours time, whom the oppoſition of the world made ſomewhat ſlowe in the diſcouery of themſelues) yet when it is come to a fuller growth, ſo that a man is more then in the way to conuerſion, and is indeed renued in the inner man, then there will be a deſire to make it knowne, that hee marcheth vnder the colours of the Lord Ieſus, and hath renounced all other wayes of ſaluation to reſt onely vpon him. So euen the ſame Nicodemus, albeit in the beginning, when he was but a beginner, hee came to Ieſus by night [g]. And after ſpake on his ſide at a Conuocation of g Ioh. 3. 2. the Phariſees, but couertly and a farre off, ſo that it could ſcarcely bee ſmelt, h Ioh. 7. 50. which way hee did encline [h]. Yet in time hee grew to more openneſſe, as in ioyning with Ioſeph in the honourable interring of our Sauiour [i]. And ſo much it i Ioh. 19. 31. ſeemeth to haue beene the purpoſe of the holy Ghoſt to inſinuate, in the manner of reporting it. Then came Nicodemus alſo, which firſt came to Ieſus by night, &c. As if hee had ſaid, how ſoeuer hee was ſomething timerous at the firſt, yet now the fire was kindled, and the light thereof brake forth apparantly. The ſame may bee ſaid of Ioſeph of Arimathea himſelfe, there is no ſpeech of him at all during our Sauiours life, and the text ſaith too, hee was a ſecret Diſciple [k]. But then (ſaith Saint k Verſe 38. Marke) hee went in boldly vnto Pilate, [l] &c. So that although there bee much l Mar. 15. 43. weakeneſſe and faintneſſe at the firſt taſting of religion, whiles a man is but yet (as it were) in the throwes of his new birth, yet when the worke is accompliſht, and one is become a Chriſtian indeed, there is a willingneſſe to make it to appeare, and a kinde of neglect of all other things, in reſpect of this one, that a man may bee knowne to haue giuen his name vnto Chriſt. Not that the children of God doe ſeeke applauſe, but that it may be ſeene they are not aſhamed, and doe therefore ſhew themſelues in their kinde, yea though ſome outward inconuenience doe befall them. It is ſaid of Paul, that aſſoone as hee had receiued direction from Ananias, hee ſtraight-way preached Chriſt in the Synagogue, &c [m]. As who would ſay, hee did euen long vntill hee had giuen ſome euidence m Act. 9. 20.

to the world what he was, and what change God had wrought in his heart. Thus in the first times of the Apostles preachings, notwithstanding the sharp persecutions raised vp against the Truth, yet the beleeuers trouped together, and drew themselues into societies, and ioyned themselues to the assemblies, and had fellowship with those that were in Christ before them, in these things by which it could not but bee discryed what they were. The text speaking of the conuersion of these three thousand, saith, they were added to the Church[n], which argueth that they not onely in heart embraced the Truth, but withall disposed of themselues so, that it was manifest to all, to what number they belonged. And the number of them that beleeued (saith Luke) grew more and more[o]: which sheweth a visible adhering to the fellowship of Professors. The like is intended in that speaking, Barnabas was a good man, &c. and much people ioyned themselues vnto the Lord[p]; so it is said of the Conuerts at Ephesus, they came and confessed, and shewed their workes[q]. When Christ commended mutuall loue vnto his Disciples, By this (said he) shall all men know you are my Disciples[r], as if he had said, If you be such as you should be, you will desire to manifest your selues to be my Disciples, you will be willing to haue it knowne what you are: Now then behold a marke whereby the world shall discerne you. What should I say more in this? It is certaine, hee that rightly apprehends the good to be gotten by Christ, and is sensible of some interest in it, for his owne particular, will desire nothing more then that he may shew himself to be his, and to be reputed one of his followers and dependants: yea though it be with some preiudice in the world, yet he will account it to be the greatest honor can befall him. To returne home with the badge of a Christian, out of all doubt the Eunuch valued it more then his office of Treasurer in the kingdome, and he chose rather to hazard both that and all other dignities, then to go into his countrey as a secret Christian.

This deserues to bee commended to the care of all that feare God, that howsoeuer the vaine applause of men, bee not to be hunted after, and it be hypocriticall and pharisaicall to practice the duties of godlinesse to be seene[s], yet it is necessary that we should make it appeare what we are, and that we be not ashamed of that sincerity & godly care which becommeth those that would be saued. Wil some men say vnto me, this is a needlesse exhortation vnto vs. For (behold) we haue done as much for the shewing of our selues to be Christians, as this Eunuch did. He was baptized in the name of the Lord Iesus, so haue we been euery one, and therfore you may spare the labour of perswading that which we haue already done. I answer; To receiue the Sacrament of Baptisme was to this man sufficient for the declaring of himselfe a Christian in his owne countrey, where the name of Christ was either not heard of, or not liked of, and where the Sacrament of Baptisme was a thing strange and vtterly vnknowne, but the case is not so with vs. For with vs neither the bearing the name of a Christian, nor an admittance by the Sacrament of Baptisme into the socity of Gods people, is enough to proue a man to bee a Christian indeede; because these things are common to many hypocrites with the best Professors. So that albeit Baptisme might bee a witnesse of this mans Christianity, among a people either hating it, or not esteeming it: yet it cannot be so with vs, but some further thing is necessarie to the end our sincerity of religion and Christianity may appeare. There be some things as hatefull, among the men of this generation, as the name of a Christian, was or could be among the Æthiopians, as namely, for a man to make conscience of his wayes, to binde himselfe to a kinde of circumspect walking, to shew himselfe fearfull to offend, and loath to doe any thing displeasing to the maiesty of God, to follow after holinesse with a kinde of striuing, to be strait in those things, wherein men generally take a kind of liberty to themselues, and to seeme not to dare to doe diuerse things, which the world makes no question of: these and the like (I say) are as strange, as harsh, as displeasing, as much subiect to cenſure and hate, in theſe our daies, as euer was the name of Chriſtianity among the Heathen which knew not God. And therefore if wee that profeſſe godlineſſe can frame our ſelues heereunto, not regarding what wee loſe in credit, in eſtimation, in riſing to preferment in the world thereby, not reckoning of the reproaches, and euill ſpeeches, and ſcorne, that may be caſt vpon vs; this will teſtifie, that wee be Chriſtians indeed. When we be not backward in thoſe things, which are like to bring vs vpon the ſtage, and to make vs a matter of note, and ſpectacle vnto others. It was a notable euidence of the Eunuch his faith & piety, that albeit he knew well, that after his returne, the kingdome would be filled with the newes of his conuerſion, and he was like to come to an account to his Queen, and the reſt of the State, for his religion: yet baptized hee would needes bee, it ſhould bee his glory to bee knowne to be a dependant vpon Chriſt crucified. It vtterly condemneth that ſpirit of cowardize which poſſeſſeth many, who are loath to doe ought appertaining to religion, that might ſingle them out from the multitude, or make them to be noted amongſt men. Thinke not, I would giue countenance to that vaine ſingularity which leadeth ſome, who take a kinde of pride if they can once bring themſelues to be talked of, and to runne themſelues out of breath, in a kinde of violent and head-ſtrong zeale, hauing too much of that Phariſaicall diſeaſe of of deſpiſing others[t], and beeing as Salomon ſaith, pure in their owne conceit, though they be not waſhed from their filthineſſe[u], I ſay my purpoſe is not to giue allowance to any of any ſuch ſpirit, but I labour againſt that faint-heartedneſſe of men, reaſonably well affected (it may be) and yet loath to be too forward for feare of eſpying, and forbearing to doe thoſe things which are meet to bee done, leſt they ſhould incurre ſome diſgrace, or hazard ſomewhat which they are loath to loſe. For a man to caſt himſelfe into perill is raſhnes and folly, and more then there is any warrant for: ſo, for a man to deſire to be noted, and to affect a name of ſomewhat more then ordinary, that is vanity: but, for a man to conſider, what his profeſſion binds him to, and to giue euidence to the world, that hee reſpects the doing thereof, more then any worldly circumſtance, and would faine ſhew himſelfe not to be aſhamed of his Sauiour and of his words before men, that is true Chriſtianity, and the thing which I labour out of the Eunuch his practiſe here in this place. The Law of gouerning the ancient Roman army was drawne to two heads: 1. Not to make any raſh purſuit againſt the enemy whereby to run into needleſſe danger. 2. Not to flie before the enemie, whereby to betray the common cauſe into his hands. So it muſt be in this: Neither is trouble to bee ſought, neither yet to be declined when it commeth. The Eunuch was willing the world might know he had renounced Idolatry and had giuen his name to Chriſt, as the Prince of his ſaluation. Hee thought it not fit, though it might be for the ſafety of his outward honor, to ſmoother his profeſſion, and to frame to the time, keeping his beleefe in ſecret to himſelfe. So farre of the Eunuch his motion. A true Conuert hath euer a loue and a deſire to the Sacrament, and a care to giue euidence to the world, that hee hath learned better things then he ſometimes knew.

The 2. part of the whole text, The particulars of it.

Now followeth Philips condeſcending to the Eunuchs motion: where we haue three things to treat of. 1. A condition propounded by Philip, to the Eunuch, vpon which it might be lawfull for him to receiue Baptiſme: If thou beleeueſt with all thy heart, &c. 2. The Eunuchs entertaining the condition: I beleeue, &c. 3. The baptiſme it ſelfe with the circumſtances. Then he commanded the chariot, &c. In the firſt of theſe, two particulars deſerue note: 1. Philips care to informe the Eunuch to the Sacrament. 2. The thing propounded as a neceſſary condition to the partaking of the Sacrament. Out of Philips care, this doctrine ſprings.

Doct. 4. That he that adminiſtreth the Sacrament ought to bee carefull to inſtruct the people in things neceſſary to the comfortable partaking of the Sacrament, Philips courſe here

heere is exmplary: By his carriage herein euery one that is entrusted with the dispensing of the Sacrament may see what he is bound vnto, namely, to acquaint the people carefully vpon what conditions onely, they may receiue the Sacraments to their comfort. Philip (no doubt) had taught the Eunuch, that Baptisme is a necessary badge to be put on, by euery one, that would be taken to be a Christian, and now, that the Eunuch sheweth a willingnesse to receiue that badge, he seeketh to binde him, to a due enquiry into himselfe, whether hee haue that in him, without which hee can receiue no benefit by the Sacrament. And that thus much ought to be done by euery one that medleth with the giuing of the Sacrament, it is easie to prooue. 1. The doctrine appertaining to the right vse of the Sacrament is a part of the counsell of God, and therefore not to bee secreted by him, that desireth to be pure from the peoples blood[x]. 2. The Minister is appointed by office to watch for the peoples soules[y], and such a watch-man hee is, that if he see a sword comming, he must giue notice of it, that if the people doe die for their iniquity, yet he may deliuer his owne soule[z]. Sith then it is a matter of such hazard, and hath such a penalty annexed to it, to presse into the vse of holy things not being so fitted and so furnished as is necessary, it is the Ministers part to giue warning of the danger, that so if any man notwithstanding will giue the aduenture, it may appeare that he is a wilfull trespasser, and his owne heart may be able to testifie, that he was aduised otherwise. 3. It is one part of the Pastors dutie, to take away (as much as in him lyeth) the precious from the vile[a], and to put a difference betwixt the one and the other, the prepared and the vnworthy, that (as farre as possible may be) Holy things may not bee giuen vnto dogs[b]. 4. It is a matter of charity, to which euery man is bound, not to suffer his brother to sin[c], but by all the meanes hee can to stop him from it. It is a Ministers duty much more, as much as he may, to stay the people from committing so great an euill, as is the entermedling with the seales of Gods Couenant, the due conditions not obserued. 5. There is a particular iniunction, by which those that serue the Lord in the administration of holy things, are commanded together with the sanctifying of themselues to prepare their brethren[d]. Now how shall they prepare their brethren but by teaching them with all diligence, what things are necessary to the right vsing of Gods ordinances, and by charging them as from the Lord, not to dare to prouoke him to anger[e], by their irreuerence, and by carlesse and profane dealing with those things which are of so high and holy nature as the Sacraments.

Vse.1. This must first needes make against those who want either ableneſse or conscience, or both, in this particular, that is, which either know not how to direct the people depending on them, to the right vse of the Sacrament, or else, knowing somewhat appertaining to it, want compassion ouer the peoples soules, and so suffer them to defile Gods ordinances, by comming to them, after a kinde of presumptuous manner, and euen kick against the offering of the Lord[f]. The matter which God laid to Elies charge about his sonnes was, His sonnes ran into a slander, and he stayed them not[g]. The same is our sinne, if we labour not with the vtmost of our might to stop the rudeneſse and rashneſse of the people, in thrusting themselues into the vse of those visible pledges of his grace, without due prouision. God giue vs all that we may consider it, because as the irreuerent and prophane dealing with the Sacraments, is none of the least sinnes of this generation, so much of the guilt thereof, it is to be feared will fall vpon vs, who doe not deale herein so faithfully as we should, in vrging (as is fit) the conditions necessary, and in enquiring into our people how they be furnished.

Vse.2. This is secondly to be vrged against those of the people, who are apt (as the most are) to set at naught the care of their Minister, seeking to further them in this businesse. It is a common saying, What need he trouble himselfe about vs, let him looke to himselfe, he shall not answer for vs, I hope we are of age to consider what we haue to doe, neither are we ſo ſimple, as not to know, what belongs to theſe matters, &c. Thus it is ordinary with men to ſet light by that care which is taken in duty to God and to their ſoules, to ſtay them from running in (as it were) vpon the pikes of Gods diſpleaſure: Men ought to account it a bleſſing to be ſo watched for, and be it that they were neuer ſo cunning in reſpect of knowledge in the nature of thoſe holy ſeruices, yet who is there, that doth not need an admoniſher? But the truth is, whatſoeuer our knowledge is, which yet (among the greateſt number is but raw) yet certainely our care in thoſe buſineſſes is but ſlender, and happy is he (if he know his owne happineſſe) that hath a faithfull admoniſher, to make him heare a word behinde him [h], when he is reaching out his hand to the vſe of holy things.

Doctrine 5. The next is, the thing propounded as a condition, &c. wherein we haue two things to handle. 1. The requiſiteneſſe of faith to the partaking of the Sacrament. 2. The quality of the faith which is requiſite. Touching the former, this is the doctrine, That there is a neceſſity of faith, to the end a man may be ſuch a partaker of the Sacrament as is meet. The words are plaine, If thou beleeueſt, &c. as if he had ſaid, Thou deſireſt Baptiſme, but doeſt thou beleeue? if thou doeſt, thou maieſt with comfort, if not, it will but increaſe to greater iudgement. In the opening of this doctrine, I will thus proceed. 1. I will ſhew the generall truth of it. 2. I will teach with what limitation and reſtraint it muſt bee vnderſtood. The generall truth I will declare touching both Sacraments. For of both in regard of generall circumſtances there is the ſame reaſon: Neither can there bee any cauſe alleaged why there ſhould be a neceſſity of faith, in the right vſe of Baptiſme, and not alſo in the right vſe of the Lords Supper. Here for proofe, I might produce thoſe generall ſpeeches, Whatſoeuer is not of faith is ſinne [i], and, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God [k]: But the maine reaſon is this, the Sacraments are in their nature ſeales of righteouſneſſe [l], and therefore it is abſurd for a man to offer himſelfe to receiue a confirmation of that thing which hee hath not, to haue a ſeale ſet as it were to a blanke, to come to haue faith ſtrengthened, when (perhaps) there is ſcarce a right vnderſtanding either of what is to be beleeued, or of what it is to beleeue. And then, the ancient order of the Church herein is not to be neglected. For, as touching the Sacrament of Baptiſme, the courſe taken with thoſe whom the Apoſtles and their aſſociates drew out of Iudaiſme and Gentiliſme into Chriſtianity, is apparant. They vrged them to giue euidence and teſtimonie of their faith, and of their purpoſe to walke with God in newneſſe of life. So Iohn Baptiſt began [m], ſo the reſt followed: and the order of asking queſtions of the baptized, Doeſt thou beleeue? doeſt thou renounce? is very probable to haue beene in vſe euen in the Apoſtles time, whereunto that ſaying of Saint Peter giueth a very good colour, where ſpeaking of Baptiſme, hee mentioneth, the Anſwer of a good conſcience [n], The ſtipulation or engagement of the conſcience; the baptized giuing his word, that thus and thus hee beleeueth, and this and this he vndertaketh. And in the primitiue Church there was in in the congregation a certaine forme or ranke, called Catechumeni, which were firſt trained vp in the knowledge of the grounds of Faith, before they were baptized, (they beeing Conuerts out of gentiliſme) which grounds what the chiefe of them were, the Apoſtle relates (Heb.6.) which points are there tearmed, The doctrine of Baptiſmes, becauſe they were the particulars in which they which deſired to bee numbered amongſt Chriſtians, were inſtructed before they were baptized. To this alſo agreeth that which is generally held, that the Creede was digeſted into ſuch a forme, as ſeemeth to bee an anſwer to a queſtion. The baptized was demanded what doſt thou beleeue? his anſwer was, I beleeue in God the Father, &c. Thus for the Sacrament of Baptiſme. Now for the other Sacrament, the rule of the Apoſtle is perpetuall, and alwaies bindes, that who ſo commeth to it, muſt examine himſelfe [o], and ſeeing all ſearch and examination aimeth at the finding out of ſome thing, what ſhould a Chriſtian tending to partake that holy myſtery examine himſelfe about rather, then about this, whether he be in the faith or no? How is it poſſible hee ſhould be a meet and a worthy receiuer if he want this grace. And thus I haue cleered the generall ground of this doctrine. Now I come to the limitation thereof. Touching which this I ſay, that in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper it holds ſtill that none ought to be admitted to it, but ſuch as are able to giue euidence for themſelues, that they are beleeuers, but in the Sacrament of Baptiſme the caſe is not like. For we muſt not hold that the Sacrament of Baptiſme can lawfully be giuen to none, but to ſuch as are able (being vrged) to giue teſtimony of their Faith: becauſe euen the infants of beleeuing parents haue a right to that Sacrament, albeit as yet, becauſe of their preſent eſtate, they cannot (in ſtrait ſpeaking) be ſaid to beleeue, not yet are able to anſwer a demand concerning Faith; ſo that the point touching Faith neceſſary to the Sacrament of Baptiſme is to be vnderſtood onely of thoſe, which are admitted to it being of yeeres. As for example, if a Turk, or Iew, or Pagan, ſhould come amongſt vs, and ſhould deſire Baptiſme, it were neceſſary he ſhould be firſt inſtructed in the doctrine of Faith, yea and examined, and dealt with, and cauſed to giue publike teſtimony of his beleeuing; but wee muſt not ſtretch this rule ſo, as that we ſhould exclude from the Sacrament the children of beleeuers. Indeed the Anabaptiſts, who diſpute with the vtmoſt of their skill againſt the Baptiſme of infants, doe much vrge the practice of the Apoſtles, and this our text among others, namely, that they are not read to haue baptized any, but ſuch who by age, were able to be countable for their faith; and from thence they would draw a generall concluſion, that where there is no capableneſſe of faith, there ought to be no Baptiſme. Hereunto diuerſe things might be replied, but theſe briefly. That it is not ſimply an improper ſpeech to call the infant of beleeuing parents, a beleeuer, becauſe although he do not now actually beleeue, yet partly, becauſe for his parents ſake, he is within the compaſſe of the couenant, partly becauſe of that which may well be hoped for hereafter, as it were hard to terme him an infidell, ſo it were not harſh to call him a beleeuer: And why not a beleeuer, as well as a reaſonable creature? though yet there is in him no vſe of reaſon, nor any certainty of ability hereafter to enioy it: And beſides, by the ancient and moſt receiued doctrine of the Church, the infants of beleeuers, are reputed to haue a kind of intereſt into their parents faith, who by faith apprehend the promiſe of eternall life as appertaining to their children, as far forth as to themſelues. And what more inconuenience to terme ſuch, beleeuers, in reſpect of their parents, then to terme them holy through them, as Paul doth[q]? 2. The argument is naught from the Apoſtles practice; for that courſe which they tooke with one certaine age of perſons, cannot be ſtretched out to all without exception. As when the Apoſtle deliuereth a law, that he which doth not labour ſhall not eate, were it not a notorious abſurdity, yea & a wickednes, to keep meat from infants vnder a pretence that they do not work? And why? becauſe euery man cõceiueth that the law belongeth onely to thoſe which are of age and ability to labour, and yet neglect it. The ſame may be ſaid of the Apoſtles proceeding in baptizing, that it extends onely to thoſe that be of yeeres: to ſubiect infants to the ſame condition with them were vnreaſonable. In Abrahams perſon, the knowledge of the nature of the Sacrament, and a yeelding himſelfe to liue vnder the Lords obedience, went before the receiuing of circumciſion, yet in Iſaac it was not ſo, he was circumciſed firſt, & inſtructed after. It was neceſſary in Abraham that a profeſſion of faith ſhould go before circumciſion, it was not neceſſary in Iſaac, the difference in their ages altered the caſe of the neceſſity. 3. As concerning the Apoſtles practice it ſelfe, there is no certainty for it, that they baptized none but ſuch as were able to make acknowledgement of their Faith. There is more probability on the contrary, that they baptized euen ſome infants, as (namely) when they baptized whole families, as Lydia and her houſhold[r], the Iaylour with all that be- longed to him [t], Crispus with all his houshold [u], the houshold of Stephanus [x]. Albeit a man cannot make a certaine demonstration, that in these generall Baptismes administred to whole families there were some infants baptized with the rest, yet it were very strange if there should bee none, in none of these households: and to say that there is in such speeches a figuratiue speaking, al the family being put for the greatest part of the family, and so vnder that colour to exclude infants, is but an indifferent euasion, it being a rule, that wee are not to account any thing as figuratiuely, where there is no necessity, for the auoyding of some manifest inconuenience like to follow, if the words of the sentence should be taken properly. Be it that none of all these things will serue to iustifie the Baptisme of infants (yet vnable to make confession of their faith) yet their interest into the promise of God is a sufficient plea: that promise is made to them that beleeue, and to their children [y]. If then the promise belong to infants, why not also the seale of the promise. It may be, some may make doubt of this reason, because it may seem by the like argument, that vnto infants also ought to be giuen the Sacrament of of the Lords Supper: They haue a right to the promise, and why not also to the seale of the promise? so may some dispute. Answer, Indeed this mooued some among the ancients to giue this other Sacrament euen vnto infants, as Cyprian [z], and Augustine [a], the latter of which two, was the rather strengthened therein by mistaking of Christs words, Except ye eate the flesh of the Son of man, and drinke his blood, ye haue no life in you [b], supposing those words to be meant of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, hee accounted the vse thereof of necessity to saluation. But the truth is, that the reason fetched from the interest into Gods promise, which doth proue infants to haue a right vnto Baptisme, is not of like force, to proue them to haue a right into this Sacrament. For besides the difference betwixt the two Sacraments in respect that the one is the Sacrament of entrance into the Church, and therefore agreeing to infants; the other the Sacrament of proceeding, and therefore fit only for those which are of grouth in Christ; besides this, I say, there be certaine expresse restraints to be collected out of the rules set down for the manner of the Lords Supper, as namely, that in vsing it, there must bee an examining of ones selfe [c], there must be a discerning the Lords body [d], there must be a remembrance [e] of Christ, which be things which infants cannot reach to. Thus I haue endeauoured to cleere this point, touching the limitation of the doctrine, of the necessity of faith to the right pertaking of the Sacraments, prouing it to be vnderstood onely (in the point of Baptisme) of those that are of yeeres: and that this course taken by the Apostles in baptizing those of yeeres, is no preiudice at all to the baptisme of infants, but that still it remaineth firme and sure, that children borne in the Church ought to be admitted to the Sacrament which may bee a pledge of their admission into the Church, and whereby also much comfort may returne vnto their parents, God being pleased hereby to giue euidence of the truth of his promise, that he is not ashamed [f] to bee called both our God, and the God of our seed also.

The Vse. The maine and speciall vse of this doctrine, is to be a direction to vs, how we may learne to make the right vse of that Sacrament of Baptisme, which in our infancy we receiued. The best vse of Baptisme is to vse it as a store-house of comfort, as indeed it is, being applyed aright. Now as no man, not baptized till he is of yeeres can be comfortably and effectually baptized vnlesse he beleeue: so no man baptized in his infancy, can when he commeth to yeeres, comfortably make vse of his baptisme vnlesse he beleeue. There is an old popish opinion which is firmely held by ignorant men & women, and it is this, that baptisme doth confer grace of and by it selfe, howsoeuer the party be disposed that receiue it. And so people generally hold a conceit, that there is a kinde of vertue and Christendom (as they call it) infused into them, by the hauing of this Sacrament, howsoeuer they be affected. But this is a meere fiction and fancy, without truth. It is a kinde of lifting vp the Sacrament aboue the naturall condition thereof, and Miniſters of the Sacrament, are thereby made workers of miracles, as if their act did regenerate of it ſelfe. Peter ſaith, that the waſhing of the fleſh doth not ſaue [g]. Simon Magus was baptized, and yet after that remained in the gall of bitterneſſe and bond of iniquity [h]: and many of the old Iſraelites were baptized vnder Moſes, with whom God was not pleaſed [i]. Paul ſaith, Chriſt ſanctified his Church, by the waſhing of water, through the Word [k]. So that it is the beleeuing and receiuing of the Word that maketh the Sacrament to be effectuall. Let no man therefore glory in his Baptiſme, vnleſſe he haue Faith. If thou who haſt beene baptized, ſhalt ſay vnto me in ſome ſuch manner as the Eunuch ſpake to Philip, See I haue beene baptized, what ſhould let mee to aſſure my ſelfe that I am a Chriſtian? I cannot but anſwer thee as Philip did, If thou beleeueſt, &c. thou mayſt. Let vs looke to this one thing therefore, euen to our faith. Faith is our tenure by which we hold heauen, Baptiſme is but the ſeale to confirme it. Faith, if wee haue it, will appeare by this, It worketh by loue [l], and what loue? a loue to three things: To the Author of Faith, and that will appeare by obedience [m]. 2. To the word of Faith [n]. For hee which is of God heareth Gods word [o], and Faith cannot but loue that whereby it is begotten and built vp further. 3. To the houſhold of Faith [p], He that loueth him which begat, loueth him alſo which is begotten of him [q], ſuch an one, will loue euen the name of a Diſciple [r]. Try then your Baptiſme by your Faith, and your Faith by the ffruits, otherwiſe the water of your Baptiſme ſhall not be able to quench the fire of that burning lake which is the ſecond death. The ſame muſt be ſaid of the other Sacrament; thou ſaiſt to me againe: Loe here are Bread and Wine, what ſhould let mee to communicate? I anſwer ſtill as I am taught here, If thou beleeueſt with all thy heart thou maiſt: If thou come without Faith, thou art no welcome gueſt to this banquet; without it thou maieſt eat the Lords bread, but not that bread which is the Lord, and thy receiuing ſhall bee but a pledge of iudgement and vengeance to thy ſoule. This point will bee quickened by that which followeth touching the quality of Faith.

Panem domini, non panem dominũ: vt Auguſt. de Iuda.

The ſecond Sermon.

The ſenſe of the words here handled.

NExt to the requiſiteneſſe of Faith to the well partaking of the Sacrament, followeth the quality of that Faith which is required: If thou beleeueſt with all thy heart, &c. as if it had beene ſaid, Thou deſireſt to be baptized, if thou doſt beleeue, and that not formally alone and in ſhew, but in ſincerity and in truth of thy heart, thou mayſt, this Sacrament ſhall returne to thy comfort, and be a pledge of grace vnto thy ſoule. This thus opened doth affoord two doctrines.

Doct.1. This is the firſt, That there is a kinde of Faith out of which there commeth no good vnto the ſoule of him that hath it. This is inſinuated in Philips ſpeech, For ſo much manifeſtly is intended, that it was poſſible for the Eunuch to beleeue after a ſort, and yet to remaine vncapable of the comfort, and ſweetneſſe of the Sacrament; Suppoſe thou beleeueſt, yet if it be not with all thy heart, by ſuch a Faith thou art not one haires breadth neerer to ſaluation; ſo that the very nature of the ſpeech preſuppoſeth an vnprofitable Faith, a Faith which is of no vſe, vnleſſe it be to the encreaſing of his damnation that profeſſeth it. This is alſo eaſily prooued by the Scripture. Our Sauiour in the parable of the Seed, ſpeaketh of Faith, and the ſame gotten by hearing, which is alſo accompanied with a kinde of flaſhing, ſudden ioy, but yet it is but like ſeed among ſtones, withering away for lacke of moyſture [a]. This is that Faith which is called a temporall Faith, or a Faith whoſe continuance is onely for ſome little time. Some ſuch Faith may ſeeme to haue beene in thoſe of whom it is ſaid, Many beleeued, &c, when they ſaw his miracles, But Ieſus did not commit himſelfe vnto them [b]. There was a certaine yeelding wrought in their hearts by the power of Chriſts miracles, that ſurely hee was that Meſſias, yet Chriſt did not hold them worth the truſting to. In this preſent Chapter it is ſaid, Simon Magus beleeued. [c]. Wee cannot thinke his faith was that which for diſtinctions ſake wee terme Sauing faith: Hee had as a learned man ſaith of him, the viſible Baptiſme, but hee wanted the inuiſible ſanctifying. Saint Paul, mentioneth a Faith which a man may haue and yet be nothing [d]. Iames giueth a kinde of Faith euen to Diuels [e], and ſpeaketh of a Faith, which he calleth a dead Faith [f]. Theſe few teſtimonies are very pregnant. Satan knoweth how to transforme himſelfe into an Angell of light [g], ſo that there is no good thing but he can counterfeit it, and doth, and by that meanes maketh many hypocrites to make a wonderfull ſhew; ſeeming to be as ſincere & forward in Religion as the beſt. There is no grace which accompanieth ſaluation, wherewith God is pleaſed to enrich and furniſh his Elect, but he can frame ſome one or other of his limmes to a ſhadow of it, yea and teach them to come ſo neer it, as that for the preſent it ſhal be a very hard matter to diſcerne it. There may be ſomewhat like prayer, which yet is not prayer, but lip-deuotion; Something like repentance, which yet is not repentance, but worldly ſorrow cauſing death [h]; ſomething like obedience, which yet is not obedience, but groſſe hypocriſie, and ſo in other particulars. Felix trembled [i], Ahab was humbled [k], Saul confeſſed his fault [l], Eſau wept [m], Iudas had a kinde of repenting [n], Herod heard gladly [o], Balaam deſired to die the death of the righteous [p]. The Apoſtle ſeemeth to acknowledge a taſte of the good gift of God, &c, in ſome reuolters, that yet fall away beyond all poſſibility of repentance [q]. Thus ſtill it appeares how neere a man may come to true religion, and yet ſtill be in the ſnare of the Diuel, carried vp and downe as a Captiue at his will [r]. He may carry the name of a beleeuer, and yet miſſe the end of Faith, the ſaluation of his ſoule [s].

The

The vſe is, to exhort vs all, who thinke we haue Faith, and boaſt of Faith, and profeſſe our ſelues to bee beleeuers, to giue all diligence [f], and to proue our ſelues with our beſt endeauour, whether the faith which wee thinke we haue be ſuch as will not deceiue vs in the end. Wee ſee by that which hath beene ſaid, that there is a thing which for the time is as like vnto Faith, as one thing can be to another. The wit of man for the preſent can diſcerne no difference, and yet the hauers of it ſhal not be ſaued. How behoouefull then is it for vs to follow the counſell of Paul (to proue our ſelues whether we are in the Faith or no [g]?) The life of a Chriſtian is a continuall warfare, wee haue a ſtrong and a dangerous enemy to grapple with, and there are many particulars of ſpirituall armour neceſſarie for our defence: among the reſt, there is a ſhield of Faith [h]. A carefull ſouldier will try his buckler whether it will keepe out ſhot, or otherwiſe bee free from beeing pierced by that kinde of weapon, againſt which it muſt be vſed. Now if faith be a ſhield, it muſt be tried that it may be a ſhield of proofe againſt the day of battell. Faith is (as before ſaid) the Tenure of our Free-hold (for by it we ſtand [i].) All the euidence wee haue to ſhew for our inheritance in the kingdome of heauen is our Faith. Now we know the care that men haue about their deeds and tenures: they examine them, to ſee whether they be ſound, they aske the counſell of this and the other Lawyer, touching them: Such yea and farre greater care ought we to haue about our Faith. If that be not good, what becommeth of all our hope for life eternall? And think what a wofull thing it is herein to be miſtaken. I ſaid Faith is the Tenure we hold heauen by. Now put caſe a man hath continued a ſute at law a great while, truſting to a certaine peece of writing which he hath in a box, if at the day of hearing, that writing proue inſufficient, what becommeth of him? wee know he loſeth all his former coſt, hee is caſt out of doores, and miſſeth that which hee thought hee ſhould haue enioyed all his dayes. So in this: A man maketh account, hee hath Faith ſufficient to ſaluation; heereupon he goeth on, without feare of future euill, at the day of reckoning his faith proueth counterfeit; thinke then in what a wofull caſe is that man. Wee may gueſſe ſomewhat heerein by a ſpeech of Chriſt. Many ſhall ſay to mee, in that day, Lord haue we not in thy name prophecied? &c. and yet ſhall it bee ſaid to them, Depart from mee [k], &c. It ſeemeth theſe will bee very confident, and make full account to be ſaued. But now when for all this, it ſhall be ſaid, Depart, we may well tremble to thinke vpon their miſery. For the more ſure a man is in his owne opinion, the greater confuſion and vexation it will be to him to be diſappointed of his hope. How neceſſary a matter is this to be vrged in theſe ſecure times. It would make a mans heart woe to thinke how exceeding carefull men be in other things, but how deſperate in this point concerning Faith; Is this leaſe good, is this bond good, is this cloath for my garment good, is this beaſt good, is this ground good, is this husbandry good, is this corne which I haue choſen for my ſeed good? We abound in theſe inquiries, and are ſcarcely euer ſatisfied, we are ſtill iealous and afraid, leſt it ſhould not be as we deſire. But who amongſt many makes a queſtion touching his Faith? who ſaith to himſelfe, Here is much ſpeaking of Faith, and it is taught that without it there can be no ſaluation, what, is my faith which I promiſe my ſelfe I haue, ſuch as it ought to be? ſure if it be not, I can neuer be ſaued. Who is it that thus communeth with his owne ſoule? Who keepeth this priuy audite within himſelfe? I hearkened and heard, and no man ſpake aright, ſaid Ieremy of old [l]. Hee would euen deliuer vp the like verdit of the men of this generation, if hee were now liuing. It is the great policy of the Diuell, to lead men on, and to lull them aſleepe in their careleſneſſe, it filleth his barnes, and helps to encreaſe his kingdome. A debating with a mans ſelfe touching this hope of a better life, is a very firſt ſtep towards heauen. Sathan knoweth that if men ſhould once put it to the queſtion how their Faith is, they ſhould ſee ſuch ſcantneſſe in themſelues that way, that the very ſight thereof would make them looke about and begin a better course, whereas now presuming all is well, they runne on headlong, and will surely bee in the pit, before they bee ware. When thou art perswaded and called vpon to examine thy selfe, whether thy faith bee right and sound, why man (saith the diuell by and by vnto thee) wherefore shouldest thou doubt it, Hast not thou beleeued in God euer since thou couldest remember? Hast thou done thus well hitherto, and shouldest thou beginne to make question of thy Faith? Feare not, doe not doubt, but thou art euen as good a beleeuer as the best. Thus with these and the like charmes, this subtill enemy rockes men asleepe, and encourageth them to feede themselues with vaine perswasions, and to trust in lying words which cannot profit [m]. Let therefore the doctrine taught, worke to the reformation of this common euill, from which scarce one of many, is able well to cleere himselfe. We hope to bee saued, we say we haue faith, we would take it for a wrong, if any man should call vs vnbeleeuers: Oh let vs remember that there is a faith which will deceiue, a kinde of beleeuing which is but counterfeit. Let vs not content our selues with suppossals, with idle imaginations which haue no ground, but let vs bring our faith to the touch-stone, and let it be tryed throughly, whether it will hold in the day of account or no. There is nothing more contrary to Christianity then presumption, nor any in worse case then they which are most secure, and make themselues beleeue, that all is with them as it should. We reade that Iacob in his dreame saw a Ladder vpon the earth, of which the top reached to heauen [n]. The Ladder betokened Christ, as Christ himselfe hath reference to it, in his speech to Nathaniel, touching Angels ascending and descending vpon the sonne of man [o]. Now (to apply this to my present purpose) we know that he which climbeth vp a ladder, is especially carefull of his footing and hold, and looketh diligently and aduisedly to euery step. So doth he which is in Christ, and is by him, and through him getting vp to heauen; he is alwaies trying whether his standing be sure, and whether his hold that he hath caught, be such as will not deceiue him. Thus he worketh out his saluation with feare and trembling [p], and happy is hee who is so busied: And so I haue laboured to presse the vse of this necessary point. In the matter of faith it is a dangerous thing to be deceiued: If a mans faith be vnsound, all his hope is ouerthrowne, it is easie to be mistaken, our heart is deceitfull [q], and in our owne cases wee are partiall iudges; Sathan is cunning and will beguile vs with a shadow of faith, and there is a faith, which is very like to true faith, but yet will deceiue vs; what then can be more behouefull then to proue our faith, that we may be sure it will not faile vs most, when we shall need it most? This is the summe. And to the end wee may be the better prepared for this dutie of Triall, I come now to the next doctrine, as the Text giueth occasion, to shew what kinde of faith it is which is availeable to life eternall, and which is therefore called, the Faith of Gods Elect [r], because it streameth from Election and is a pledge thereof.

Doct.2. The next doctrine then is, That onely that Faith maketh a man capable of saluation and giueth him an interest into life eternall which is with all the heart. This is direct out of the words, If thou beleeue with all thy heart thou maist: that is, If thy beleeuing bee sincere, and thy faith vnfained, thou maist finde comfort in this Sacrament, otherwise it will be to thee but an idle signe. In all matters betwixt God and vs, this is a chiefe thing which hee requireth, that wee giue him our heart [s], and that, that which we professe to doe, be done in singlenesse. He himselfe is a God of truth [t], and therefore can delight in none but such in whose spirit there is no guile [u]. His chosen are called the Israel of God [x], and it is a badge of a true Israelite to be without Deceit [y]: A double heart is the marke of the vngodly [z], and God commands vs to purge out this leauen if wee would draw neere vnto his Maiesty [a]. The true worshippers shall worship him in Truth, for the Father requireth euen such [b]. It remaineth as a blemish in the name of the old Israelites, that albeit they made a shew of seeking God, yet their heart was not vpright with him, neither were they faith- full in his Couenant [c]. Thus much to ſhew the neceſſity of vnfainedneſſe, and of doing that with the heart, which wee doe in all things which concerne God, and ſo by conſequence in the matter of Faith. God is Truth, Chriſt is Truth, the holy Ghoſt is the Spirit of Truth. How can Faith make vnion betwixt God and vs vnleſſe it be Faith of truth [d]? This point will not be ſo profitable in the application, vnleſſe we looke a little more neerely into it, to finde out, what that ſpeciall point is, in reſpect whereof Faith is ſaid to be with all the heart. The heart is the ſeat and fountaine of all the affections. A man therefore beleeueth with all the heart, when that which is beleeued is become (as it were) the center of all his affections, the maine marke and matter of his loue, delight, ioy, &c. ſo that whatſoeuer elſe is loued or delighted in, is ſo reſpected onely for the ſake of that principall ſcope, and ſo farre forth as it leadeth and draweth towards it. As for example: The maine obiect of Faith is Chriſt: now then to beleeue in Chriſt with all the heart, is to faſten a mans whole affiance, his whole ioy, his whole contentment only vpon him; So that Chriſt beareth the whole ſway and principality in his affections: and the maine end, why his faith worketh and ſtriueth towards him, and why he deſireth to be vnited to him, is not ſo much the good & ſaluation of his owne ſoule, as the enioying of him, in whom all fulneſſe dwelleth [e], and in whom the treaſures of all goodneſſe are layd vp. There may bee a relying and a beleeuing vpon Chriſt, which may be ſaid to be true, and vndiſſembled, in this reſpect, becauſe the party in whom it is, doth indeed doe that which he profeſſeth to doe, neither doth ſpeake contrary to his ſecret thoughts, when hee ſaith hee beleeueth in Chriſt, and yet is not this the Faith with all the heart here ſpoken of: As for example; I doubt not but a Papiſt ſpeaketh truly and as hee meaneth, when hee ſaith he beleeueth to be ſaued by Ieſus Chriſt, yet notwithſtanding, there wanteth in him this quality of beleeuing with all the heart, becauſe hee hath alſo a ſecret dependance vpon the helpe of Saints, vpon the interceſſion of the Virgin Mary, vpon the merit of ſome worke, or action of his owne. Heere Chriſt hath not all his heart, becauſe hee hath diuided it betwixt him and ſome other obiects. So againe among our ſelues, I doubt not but many profeſſe ſoothly, and without fraud in auouching that they haue caſt all their hope of ſaluation onely vpon Ieſus Chriſt, and yet there is a defect in their Faith, and that in this particular, that it is not with all the heart, becauſe their heart draweth not towards Chriſt, ſeeketh not to bee knit to Chriſt onely for Chriſts ſake, and becauſe of that worth and excellency which is conceiued to be in him, but for ſome other by-reſpect, and for their owne ſakes. For let me make this knowne vnto you, (which is not generally conſidered,) it is poſſible for a reprobate to goe thus farre; namely, to acknowledge there is no ſaluation in any other but in Chriſt, to diſclaime all hope ſaue onely by him, to deſire truely and with his ſoule to haue a part in him, and to account himſelfe happy if hee might haue fauour with God through him; thus farre he may come, and yet ſtil Chriſt hath not all his heart, becauſe the principall drift and aime of his reſpecting Chriſt, is, his owne ſaluation by Chriſt. Why (will ſome man ſay) what ſhall a man elſe aime at in beleeuing vpon Chriſt, but onely ſaluation by Chriſt? Anſwer: I deny not but that it is lawfull to loue Chriſt, and to reſt vpon Chriſt for ſaluations ſake, but I ſay withall, that hee which eſteemeth Chriſt for nothing elſe but to bee ſaued by him, ſhall neuer bee ſaued by him. My heart is to my ſelfe, it is not to Chriſt if I make account of him and ſeeke to him onely for my benefit. So then, Chriſt is beleeued with all the heart, when the enioying of Chriſt is the ſcope of our beleeuing. I deſire not to enioy Chriſt ſo much becauſe I would bee ſaued, as thus, I deſire to bee ſaued that I might enioy Chriſt. My heart is to Chriſt as to the maine, to mine owne ſaluation as to the inferiour, and as to a matter therefore onely worthy the deſiring, becauſe it leadeth vnto Chriſt. Thus I hope we now ſee, that that Faith which is effectual to ſaluation is onely that which is a beleeuing with all the heart; and then 2. that that is a beleeuing with all the heart, when Christ who is the obiect of Faith, and is acknowledged to be a sole and compleat Sauiour, is laboured after principally for himselfe, my heart is towards him for his owne sake, more then for mine owne saluation sake. I know I cannot depend vpon him, and be made one with him, but it will be for my profit, yet I looke not so much vpon that, as I doe vpon him, yea and I striue to be affected as Iob, to continue my Faith, and my trusting to him, though he should slay me [f], though I should not onely get good by him, but receiue some sharpnesse from him.

[f] Iob. 13 15.

The Vse. We must couple this point with the former, and I wish we may well digest it, and that wee could bee perswaded to bestow some part of our thoughts vpon it euery day. It is no easie thing rightly to beleeue. Not euery one that taketh the name of Iesus into his mouth shall by and by be saued, no nor yet euery one which goeth further then a superficiall naming him. It is possible to vnderstand the mystery of Christ; to professe truely and vndissemblingly, a dependance onely vpon Christ, and (as it were) to set vp a mans rest on this, that no man can come vnto God the Father, but by Christ, and yet in the end to come short. Let vs remember that the very life and glory of Faith, is to beleeue with all thy heart, that is, in our beleeuing to let Christ haue the preeminence, the full and the very all of our affections. If wee can bring our soules once to this, to value Christ more for his owne proper works sake, then for our owne saluations sake, then are we beleeuers with all our heart. This is indeede singlenesse and sincerity of affection, this is vprightnes of mind: when my faith reacheth after Christ for Christ, I account my own saluation but the By, the fruition of Christ the Maine. Ardua res est fides, Hierony.

These be two things I know which cannot be sundered in inioying Christ and saluation; but yet it is possible to giue the one the precedence aboue the other in desiring. Let not this seeme strange vnto vs. Who amongst vs, accounts him a friend worth the hauing, whose chiefe end in seeking to be linked in with him in society, is more his owne commodity, or some credit like to accrew to him, then the fruition of him to whom he professeth loue? When we can say of a man professing friendship, I know he respecteth me for this, or for that, were it not for such a hope, or the expectation of such a benefit, I am sure he would regard mee as little as another man, will we iudge such an one an vnfained friend? How then shall that be called an vnfained faith, which aimeth at Christ onely for this, because there is hope of a kingdome by beleeuing? This is a mercinary respect, neither is that a true sauing faith which hath no higher scope. Would I not drawe towardes Christ in my desire and affection, if there were no saluation by his meanes? is it onely to make a benefit of him, that I doe cast my selfe vpon him? and shall this be called faith? No, I doubt not but such respects as these may be found in many which yet shall bee called the least in the Kingdome of God. And thus we may see how one thing followeth vpon another: the maine matter of preaching must be Christ, the supreme purpose of hearing must be to finde Christ*; and so the principall intendment of faith must bee to enioy Christ. To be saued, may lawfully be an inducement, but sure wee shall misse, if it bee the chiefest motiue. If we will beleeue in Christ, he will haue all the heart or nothing. And so much touching the quality of Faith, which I commend to our best obseruation, and wish it may be well considered, that we may not beguile our selues with an opinion of faith. Let it be remembred how neere counterfait faith commeth vnto true faith, and wherein the maine difference doth consist. Christ hath but halfe the heart, if we respect him onely for this, that vpon his shoulders wee may be carryed vpwards into heauen. If we could thinke heauen it selfe not worthy the hauing but onely for his sake, that were excellent. So farre of the condition propounded by Philip, now next of the Eunuches vndertaking it: Then he answered, I beleeue that, &c.

* This was taught out of the 35. vers.

We

Wee haue here three things to note. 1. That the Eunuch was able to giue an account of his Faith. 2. That he was ready so to doe. 3. What the account was. The first of these is very apparant: for what is this speech but an account giuen by the Eunuch what hee beleeued? and it was so sufficient, that vpon it hee was admitted to the Sacrament. So that the doctrine hence is, That it is necessary for euery good Christian to be able to expresse for himselfe what he beleeues. This sufficiencie of the Eunuch to returne a answer to the inquiry made into his faith, is not to bee passed ouer without noting; out of all question it was written for our learning, that we might labour not to be to seeke in the things which doe concerne our soules. This is that which Peter calleth, a giuing a reason of that hope which a man hath [g]: Paul tearmeth it a confession with the mouth [h], and maketh it a necessary companion of that Faith which brings to saluation; and Let euery man be fully perswaded in his owne minde [i], that is, let him that is a beleeuer, labour to conceiue distinctly what that is, whereupon it is necessary for him to rest, that hee may be saued: let him not satisfie himselfe with a kinde of refirment to the faith of others, but let him see that hee himselfe doe apprehend that which is necessarie: The iust must liue by his Faith [k], by that which he conceiueth in his owne heart, not by subiecting himselfe to the opinion of another. This is life euerlasting to know thee, the onely God [l]. It is not imagination, or suppofall, or some loose and vncertaine fancy, some roving coniecture, that can guide a man to life: it is vnderstanding, it is knowledge, such which the haver, is both able (if need be) to set downe determinately what it is, and to giue a reason also thereof: Thus it is written, and this I beleeue; this is my Faith, and this is the foundation thereof; Why else is it, that the Scripture teacheth grounds of the Christian faith so exactly? Why is it, that there is any such necessity laid vpon vs, which are called to the seruice of the Church, to lay open the mystery of Christ? Why (I say) should this be, if it were not the duty of beleeuers, to be able in heart to comprehend, and with mouth also (if occasion be) to declare whereupon they rest, for the saluation of their soules. Indeed what comfort can there be, or what sweetnes in vncertainty? or what possibility to put Satan to flight, with some confused notion, which a man hath catched vp hee knoweth not how? It is the glory of Christians to be fulfilled with knowledge and spirituall vnderstanding [m], to haue the spirit of wisedome and reuelation, and to know what is the hope of their calling, &c. [n] A shame to them to be children in vnderstanding [o], to be dull of hearing [p], to be euer learning and yet neuer able to come to the knowledge of the truth [q]. These things may serue to prooue this doctrine.

In the vse it giueth full occasion to accuse the ignorance of these times, in which so many of all sorts, and of all degrees, are vtterly vnable to giue a comfortable account of that which is necessary to be knowne vnto saluation. Euery parish, euery assembly, euery congregation swarmes with such. There is no Minister that laboureth to know the state of his flock, but can be a witnes with me touching this. Men speake of I know not what, hoping well, and of being of that which they call Gods beleefe, but (alas) how farre bee they from that which Peter calleth a reason of their hope? The Apostle calleth Faith an euidence [r]. Now, suppose a man should be called before a Iudge, in a matter betwixt party & party, and could there be able to speak as little to the point in question, as the most are able to say in the case of Faith; would the Iudge account their answer a competent euidence, or would he not think himselfe wronged to haue his eares troubled with such headlesse tales? Surely he that had no better to shew for his outward estate, then many haue for their future inheritance into the kingdome of glory, would and well might feare euery houre to bee displaced. This is wofull in the cleere light of the Gospell, and it is one of the sinnes for which the Lord hath a speciall controuersie [s] with the times. And it is a sinne so much the more dangerous, because it is scarcely taken notice of to be a sinne. To bee a swearer, a whoremaster, a drunkard, an oppressor, a greedy worldling, a lyer, a cursed speaker, and theſe and the like, partly by the light of nature, partly by ſome generall rules gotten by continuall hearing, are of the moſt, yeelded vnto to be ſins. But ignorance in religion, yea euen in thoſe points, which are (as it were) the very life and ſoule of religion, is hardly taken to be ſinne. Who thinketh himſelfe euer the leſſe honeſt, becauſe hee is ignorant? Thus (I ſay) is this euill, the more dangerous, becauſe it paſſeth away vnobſerued, vntaxed, vnblamed, and yet it is a principall ſin, againſt which the Lord will proceed at his iudging day, [t] and the people that doe not vnderſtand ſhall fall [u]. It is true there is much dulneſſe, much hardneſſe of conceit, much weakneſſe of apprehenſion euen in the very beſt, but yet certainely if that be not in vs, which in one place is called a Mind to know [x], in another an endeauour to know [y], we can neuer be ſaued. Remember we how the Eunuch profited by one Sermon, and conſider how many we haue heard, who yet (many of vs) cannot giue ſo good an account as the Eunuch did. For let no man thinke, that this was all, namely, that the Eunuch was able to deliuer thus many words, as are here, and no more; it were an iniury to the memory of that holy man, if we ſhould ſo imagine, and it were a wrong to the wiſdome of Philip if we ſhould thinke he would let him paſſe with a kind of verball acknowledgement of a matter which hee did not vnderſtand. Can we thinke with any probability, that either the Eunuch ſaid no more then is here deliuered, or that Philip did not feele him againe and againe, to ſee how hee was ſetled? yes vndoubtedly: The Eunuch knew the perſon of Chriſt, the office of Chriſt, knew how the ancient Propheſies of the old Teſtament were fulfilled in Chriſt, & was able to ſhew cauſe why hee for his particular part ſhould thinke to be ſaued by Chriſt, knew how faith coupleth vnto Chriſt, how it doth procure to a man an intereſt into the obedience and righteouſneſſe of Chriſt. Theſe and the like materiall points, out of all doubt the Eunuch knew. Philip would neuer haue admitted him to the Sacrament of Baptiſme, vpon the vttering onely of a few words, or haue left him in ſuch a raw meaſure of knowledge, before he had brought him to conceiue aright the grounds of godlineſſe, and that doctrine which is called the doctrine of the beginning of Chriſt [z]. I adde this leſt any man ſhould beguile his owne ſoule, becauſe of his ableneſſe to ſay ſo much as is heere reported to haue beene ſpoken by the Eunuch. I wiſh the words in euery mans heart and mouth, but take heede wee make not a charme of the Scripture, to imagine a vertue in words of which we know not what to make. Let vs labour to ſpeake the Eunuchs words, with the like knowledge that the Eunuch had, otherwiſe to ſay, we beleeue that Ieſus Chriſt, &c, ſhall not auaile vs. So much of this, that the Eunuch was able to expreſſe his Faith, and to ſhew for himſelfe what he beleeued.

Doct. 4. The next thing is his readineſſe to giue an account, which affoordeth vs this doctrine, That where the power of godlineſſe beareth any ſway, there is no frowardneſſe of diſpoſition, when one is dealt with in the matter of Faith. This I obſerue out of the modeſt and yeelding diſpoſition of this Eunuch, who was thus content (as it were) to be catechized by Philip, and to ſubmit himſelfe to giue an account of his beleeuing. No doubt hee held it meete, that hee which now tooke care of his ſoule, ſhould by him be made acquainted with the ſtate of his ſoule. If a man ſpeake in the eares of a foole, he will deſpiſe the wiſdome of his words [a], and ſuch an one being queſtioned, with about religion, anſwereth roughly [b], but gentlenes, goodnes, meeknes, are the fruits of the ſpirit [c]. It was the humor of the Phariſees, in the pride of heart to diſdaine to ſubmit themſelues to Iohns Miniſtery, they deſpiſed the councell of God [d], and they tooke it in foule ſcorne when the blinde man asked them, whether they would bee Chriſts Diſciples [e], their ſtomacks could not frame to be treated with as men ignorant in ought, or as liable to an account to any what they beleeued. It is the commandement of God that euery man in ſuch a caſe as this betwixt Philip and the Eunuch, would be ready to giue an anſwer [f]: and religion where it is, doth teach men ſo to bee. For as it abateth theſe high ſpirits which are in man by nature, so it maketh a man to consider the good that may ensue, by submitting himselfe with meekenesse, to be communed with by him that is able to instruct him; If his knowledge be right, this is a meanes to confirme it; if it be mistaken, this is the way to better it.

This reproueth that sturdy and contemptuous humour which is in many now, who hold it for a very great disparagement, to be vrged to tell how they beleeue. It is thought to bee a courte not vnfit to be practiced vpon children, but to vrge those to it that are elder, yea though they need neuer so much instruction, is deemed insolency in him that vndertaketh it, and simplicity and baseneſſe of disposition in those that submit to it. The greatest part therefore are so affected, that if they should be so dealt with, they would haue much adoe with themselues to beare it well, or not to returne the crooked answer of a froward mouth. By this meanes their spirituall wounds putrifie, because of their owne foolishnesse [g]. They became vaine in their imaginations [h]. They will not bee knowne of their secret ignorance, and by that meanes they doe depriue themselues of many an opportunity, by which they might be builded vp in the sauing knowledge of Gods truth. A froward heart neuer findeth good [i]. This then let vs learne hence; Thou whom God hath blessed with a faithfull Pastor, furnished with the tongue of the learned [k], and able to minister a word in time to him that is weary, be not vnwilling to lay open to him the state of thy soule, nor think it a wrong to be so communed with, as may make way to thy further edifying in the mystery of Christ. Our dayes are in as bad an extremity, as were the dayes of Popery. Then the Priests had gotten such a tie vpon men, by the (so called) Sacrament of confession, that they diued further into mens secrets then was fit. But now men are growne to as much strangenesse, and standing aloofe from their spirituall ouerseers, so that he which attempts, though in neuer so humble and respectiue manner, to mooue a question to them, or to feele their knowledge, shall be requited as Lot, when he gaue good counsell to the Sodomites, Away hence [l], or taken vp as Moses, who made thee a man of authority [m]? This is the curriſh disposition of vnregenerate men. They are as thornes that cannot be taken with hands, the man that would touch them, must be defenced with iron, or with the shaft of a speare [n]. This maketh religion to grow so slowly as it doth, either Philip doth not aske, or the Eunuch will not answer. Thus farre of the Eunuchs readinesse to giue account; here was no disdaine, no haughtinesse, no stomacking of the matter, to bee thus inquired into, no shaking off the demander with a crosse reply; here is meekenesse and calmenesse of spirit, heere is a plaine and direct acknowledement of what hee conceiues. Happy was Philip to haue such a tractable scholler, and happy the Æthiopian to haue such a searching teacher. God encrease the number of such Philips, and make vs all such as the Eunuch was in this particular.

The third Sermon.

WE are now come to the account it ſelfe, and to the matter of the Eunuchs confeſſion: I beleeue that Ieſus Chriſt is the Son of God. The plaine doctrine here is, That the beleeuing of Ieſus Chriſt to be the Son of God, is the very ſubſtance of that faith which is required to ſaluation. This is plainely to bee gathered hence. The Eunuch deſired Baptiſme, (the badge of a Chriſtian:) Philip enquireth of him, whether he haue that faith, which maketh a Chriſtian; hee anſwereth, I beleeue ſo: This anſwer is approued and taken for ſufficient; ſo that to beleeue that which this Eunuch here acknowledgeth, is the very life of ſauing faith, it is the ſumme of all that is required to ſaluation, and without it there is no ſaluation. And this collection is iuſtifiable from hence, ſo much the rather, becauſe the chiefe confeſſions and abridgements of the Chriſtian Faith, which are in the new Teſtament, conſiſt vpon this point chiefly: as, that memorable one made by Peter in the name of the reſt of the Apoſtles, [a] Thou art the Chriſt the Son of the liuing God: then that in Iohn, (which it may be is the ſame with the former, in effect I am ſure it differeth not) We beleeue and know that thou art the Chriſt the Son of the liuing God [b]: Thirdly, that of the blinde man, Doſt thou beleeue in the Son of God? Lord I beleeue [c]: Fourthly, that of Martha, I beleeue that thou art the Chriſt the Son of God, that ſhould come into the world [d]. Theſe ſolemn declarations of the Faith required to ſaluation, do all concurre in this one generall point, Ieſus Chriſt is the Son of God. The doctrine of Scripture is called, the word of faith [e]; it is therefore committed to record that men might beleeue [f]. Now the pith of the whole Scripture is, Ieſus Chriſt; Hee is the end of the Law [g], to him giue all the Prophets witneſſe [h], and the ſumme of the Goſpell is, that whoſoeuer beleeueth in him ſhould not periſh, but haue life euerlaſting [i]. If then Chriſt bee the ſubſtance of the Scripture, needs muſt the building vpon him be the ſumme of Faith. Faith goeth no further then the Word, and the Word hath no more to teach but this, that God hath giuen vnto vs eternall life, and this life is in his Son [k]. Thus for a generall opening of this doctrine. To the end it may be the more profitable, we muſt conſider ſomewhat more exactly, what it is, to beleeue that Ieſus Chriſt is the Son of God: Firſt in generall to beleeue, betokeneth two things. 1 To hold a matter to be a truth, and ſo it is an action of the vnderſtanding power. 2. To truſt to a thing, or to rely vpon it, and ſo it is an act of the will, and iſſueth out of the former. Secondly, (according to this) to beleeue that Ieſus Chriſt is the Son of God, comprehendeth two things. 1. To apprehend this as a ſound and vndeniable truth, that Ieſus Chriſt is the Son of God. 2. To conceiue it as a doctrine into wch a mans ſelf hath ſome intereſt, and ſo to rely and reſt thereupon for future benefit. Firſt, that this propoſition, Ieſus is the Son of God, is an abſolute and vndeniable truth, it muſt bee reſolued: It is the ground-worke of Faith, and the foundation without which it cannot ſtand. It was the errand vpon which Iohn Baptiſt ſent his diſciples vnto Chriſt, that they from his owne mouth might bee made ſure, that it was Hee that ſhould come, and no other to be looked for [l]. The certainty herein is gotten by the Scripture: and indeed (to beleeue) as it is an act of the vnderſtanding, is properly to aſſent vnto a matter, and to take it as a truth, vpon the report and credit of another. So then, a man muſt bee poſſeſſed with with this truth, by the authority and testimony of the Scripture, that he who is called Iesus Christ, is the very Sonne of God, whom God of old promised to send, being made of a woman, to bee the Prince of our saluation, and to make peace betwixt God and man, by his blood. This is one necessary principle to be apprehended vnto saluation, neither can any report settle a mans knowledge in this, but only the report of God himselfe speaking to vs in his Word. Secondly, this must also bee laid hold on, as a matter more particularly concerning the beleeuer. For a bare assent vnto this proposition, (Iesus Christ is the Son of God) cannot saue. I know who thou art, (said the euil spirit, therin he spake as he thought, and was perswaded,) euen the holy one of God [m]. And shall we think that this was all, was intended in the Eunuchs acknowledgement, that hee gaue credit vnto the Scripture touching Iesus Christ to be the Son of God? God forbid. He might haue done so & yet neuer haue bin saued. He had not beleeued with all his heart, if he had done no more; It was necessary there should be also a relying, a resting, a casting himselfe vpon Christ, a trusting to him, an expecting saluation by his meanes, a fitting of this generall truth touching Christ, to his owne particular for the discharge of his soule in the sight of God. And indeed this is so necessary a part of faith, that as it cannot be without the former, (for a man cannot rely vpon Christ, vnlesse he be certaine, he is the person to be relyed vpon;) so the former is not rightly and truely apprehended vnlesse this latter bee attained to, or at the least endeauoured for. For, first generally, it is true that the points and articles of faith, are so contriued, that the failing in one, ouerthroweth all. Then, secondly, a man cannot properly bee said to beleeue the report of the Scripture touching Christ, vnlesse he doe apply it to himselfe. For how doth a man giue credit to this, that Christ is the Sonne of God, and a Sauiour, if he himselfe do not rely and hang vpon him for his owne saluation. So that indeed it is no full and compleate assent, where there wants an application of that truth which is assented vnto, to a mans owne particular. How can I beleeue Christ to be my Sauiour, except I know him to be the promised Sauiour? and how doe I beleeue him to bee the promised Sauiour, if I dare not trust him with my owne soule, and am backward to depend vpon him for my selfe. And therefore in this, truely saith the Apostle, that he maketh God a lyer, that doth not proceede from the generall doctrine of the point of particular application, that God hath giuen (vs) eternall life [n]. If then wee yeeld (as wee needs must) that the Eunuch did more then assent to this generall truth, as it is reuealed in the Scripture, and did lay hold vpon it as a matter into which himselfe had interest, it cannot but follow thence, that the faith required to saluation, hath in it beside the acknowledgement of the truth in the vnderstanding, an embracing it also in the will, and a dependance thereon, for the personall good of him in whom it is. And thus of this doctrine touching the matter and obiect of Faith, Iesus Christ the Sonne of God, apprehended by the authority of the Scripture to be so, and laid hold vpon as a Sauiour.

The vse is, principally to moone vs to a due and diligent enquirie, whether we who speake of Faith, and doe also make full account of being saued by Christ, doe so beleeue, as hath beene described, and as out of all doubt this Eunuch did; namely, how we may be grounded and setled in this by the teaching of the Scripture, that Iesus Christ is the Sonne of God, in whom only God is pacified; and then next, how we doe depend vpon him in particular for our selues, with what warrant, and vpon what tearmes. This is a matter that deserueth scanning in the closet of euery heart that would bee saued. Certainely it will appeare vpon enquiry made, that if this bee to beleeue, surely then the number of beleeuers is exceeding small. For first, how rawe, how confused, how vncertaine (generally) is mens knowledge in this fundamentall point, touching the person, and office of Christ Iesus? How few are able to prooue vnto their Verily I am perswaded, that it is not the tenth in our ordinary hearers and professours that can tell how to make this point good against Sathans cauils, with which hee will vndermine and batter it in the euill day, that, Iesus Christ is that person, vpon whom hee that desires saluation must rely. For shame let vs not bee more remisse and carelesse for our soules, then wee would be for our outward estate. What wise man will take the word or bond of another, vnlesse hee bee sure of his sufficiency to make that good for which hee offereth himselfe, either by word or writing, to be engaged? wherein is a man the neerer to haue his bond for many pounds, who (it may be) is not worth so many groats? Here therfore let vs first beginne in the matter of faith, let vs labour to see this point well proued out of the testimony of Gods Word, that Iesus Christ is the chiefe stone elect

t Tit. 1.13. the Faith t, and rooted in Christ, let vs looke to this. It is abundantly cleered in u Ioh. 5.39. the Scripture: Search the Scriptures, they are they that testifie of Christ u. Well, now as I haue discouered the scarcitie of faith, by the common defect in this maine ground of Christianity, so may I easily doe it in vrging the other part touching the particular application of the generall doctrine of Christ Iesus. For in it there is as great an errour as in the other. I know there is an ordinary making account to bee saued by Iesus Christ; but yet, though therein there is a kinde of fitting the doctrine of Christ to particulars, yet it is not that application which is the life of Faith, and which (out of all doubt) this Eunuch had attained to. For to the application of Christ there is more belongs then this, to say, Christ died for sinners, and I hope by him to escape damnation: Many shall goe into hell, with as much as that commeth to, in their mouthes. Application of Christ is a matter of greater consequence, and hath more going to it then so. There must be first a particular conceiuing of a mans owne neede of Christ: Secondly, an vnderstanding how that fulnesse which is in Christ may supply the particular wants of him that desireth to apply him, that so the soule may see how the turne thereof may abundantly bee serued by resting vpon him: Thirdly, a diligent noting how the preaching of the Word fitteth the particulars of Christs fulnesse, to the soules particular wants, that so a man may not bee (as it were) his owne caruer herein, but may feele how the hand of the Lord worketh in the businesse: Fourthly, a carefull marking how the soule is acheered and inwardly refreshed by that warmth, which it feeles it selfe to receiue by comming still neerer vnto Christ; how it hath more boldnesse to come to the throne of grace, how it findes more sweetnesse in the doctrine of saluation, how it hath more life in holy seruices, how it is furnished with more alacrity, and greater desire to walke with God in new obedience? Thus the application of Christ is another manner of thing then a sudden conceit, that I and I shall bee saued by his death: so much is common; but to apply Christ is a thing which few attaine vnto. Thou saiest, thou art perswaded that Christ Iesus, the Sonne of God is thy Sauiour; I demand of thee, Who did tell thee so? What is thy warrant so to thinke?

Art

Art thou come to this perſwaſion by due courſe, by being firſt nurtured in the ſchoole of humiliation, to bring thee to ſee what neede thy ſoule hath of the leaſt drop of the blood of Ieſus Chriſt? hath this apprehenſion beene begotten in thee by the preaching of the Word, in which thou haſt beene taught to whom onely ſaluation doth belong? hath it been long in getting, and haſt thou made much adoe to attaine to this meaſure? or is it ſome ſudden and raſh conceit, vpon which thou haſt aduentured? Take heed, and be well aduiſed; To apply Chriſt, is excellent, but it is not ordinary, neither is it eaſie, and he that neuer taſted the difficulty that is in it, neuer yet knew what it meant. Thus I muſt deale with thee, thus I muſt aduiſe thee, that profeſſeth an application of Chriſt vnto thy ſelf. And now (for a further opening of the matter) mee thinkes that title of a Rocke giuen vnto Chriſt[x], is worthy the conſidering: to make this plaine; Chriſt his being a Rocke of ſafety, argueth, that a man in himſelfe is plunged into a Sea of hazard, with which he is euer ready to be ſwallowed vp. Now, ſuppoſe we a man ſuffering ſhip-wracke vpon our Coaſt, and at the laſt, after much driuing to and fro, eſpying a Rocke, which if hee could recouer, there were ſome hope of eſcape. To this hee beginneth to direct his courſe, thither he beares with the vtmoſt of his might: the waues hinder him, the winde and weather are againſt him, yea oft-times when hee is come euen cloſe to, and is ready to touch it, and to lay hold vpon it, a guſt commeth, or ſome ſtronger waue, and carrieth him into the maine in deſpite: Nay, it may be, when againe hee is come yet neerer, and is euen in a manner gotten vp, yet there is ſuch an heauineſſe in his garments oppreſſed with water, ſuch benummednеſſe and weakneſſe in his ioynts, through the extremity of cold, that hee cannot keepe that which hee hath gotten, but againe loſeth his hold, and is euen about to giue ouer his hope, and to reſolue with himſelfe, that there is no remedy but hee muſt needes periſh in the Sea. Well, yet at the laſt he renueth his courage, purpoſing now to make his laſt attempt, hee recouereth the rocke, to the top hee is gotten, where he may looke about and ſee where hee was toſſed: But behold, before hee can throughly collect his thoughts, here begins a new feare: the water ſwelleth, and threatneth to couer euen the higheſt part of the rocke, the winde helpeth it forward, and aduanceth the pride thereof, and it begins to encounter as with an open mouth ready to deſtroy: What is now to be done? Surely nothing but this: Hee reſolues to keepe his ſtanding with his vtmoſt might, his hold hee determines not to forſake, here (thinketh he) I will abide, and if I periſh, I periſh. Here is the true eſtate of a man labouring in this painefull buſineſſe of applying Chriſt. Firſt he is toſſed long on the waues of much inward perplexity, and cryeth out with Dauid, I ſticke faſt in the deepe mire where no ſtay is, I am come into deep waters, and the ſtreames run ouer me[y]. O God, all thy waues and thy flouds are vpon me[z]. The ſnares of death compaſſe me, and the griefes of the graue haue caught me[a]. At the laſt, by the pointing of the finger of the Goſpell preached, the Rock is eſpied: Ieſus Chriſt the righteous[b], that Rocke, which Dauid calleth, The Rocke that is higher then I[c], that rocke which was reſembled by that, into the cleft whereof Moſes was put, that hee might ſee the Lord as hee paſſed by[d]. For as Moſes could not haue ſeene the Lord without death, vnleſſe he had beene hidden in that Rocke: ſo can no man ſee the face of God and liue, vnleſſe he be put into the cleft of this Rocke, that vnder the ſhelter thereof hee may behold him. Well, this Rocke being once deſcried, the ſoule longeth greatly after it[e], and thinkes it ſelfe ſhould be moſt happy, if it might arriue at the ſmalleſt hole[f] thereof. To this therefore it aymeth and laboureth with the vtmoſt endeauours: (I endeauour my ſelfe and follow hard[g].) But (alas) much adoe there is to get neere it, there be many ſwelling ſurges of much doubting, many bluſtering ſtormes of great diſcouragements. Oft times is the ſoule ready euen to claſpe vpon the Rocke, but ſomething or other puts it backe, and then there followeth euen a wofull drooping, and a kinde of deſpaire, euer againe to be in ſo faire a poſſibility: Oh, then commeth in, I am caſt out of thy ſight [h], thoſe that told me of ſaluation by Chriſt, and of his readineſſe to receiue thoſe that ſeeke him, are all lyers [i]: yet at the laſt, this agony is ouercome, and the ſinner beginneth to rebuke his ſoule for his faintneſſe. Why art thou caſt downe oh my ſoule, and vnquiet within mee [k]? try yet againe, ſurely there is an end, and thy hope ſhall not bee cut off [l]. So with much ſtriuing, euen (as it were) to the loſſe of breath, I opened my mouth and panted [m]) the former feeling is regained, and the ſoule is come once more vnder the ſhadow of this great Rocke [n], yea and the feet are ſet vpon it [o], and the ſoule beginneth to triumph in ſafety, (Returne vnto thy reſt oh my ſoule [p], I know nothing ſhall bee able to ſeparate from the loue of God which is in Chriſt Ieſus [q],) yea it falleth to a diſcourſing vpon the ſtrange manner of her eſcape, Come I will tell you what God hath done for mee [r]. Thus I haue giuen you a taſte of the trauell of the ſoule in the application of Chriſt. Chriſt being (as hee is called) a Rocke of ſafety, there is no fitter thing to deſcribe it, then this caſe that I haue named. Hee that hath not had ſome experience of this in himſelfe, or at the leaſt ſhall not now vpon the hearing thereof, make conſcience to finde it true by his owne particular, name faith hee may, but haue faith he cannot; preſume he may, but beleeue he cannot. Hee that thinketh it an eaſie thing to reſt vpon Chriſt, and to ſettle vpon him, and to apply the ſaluation offered in him to a mans owne particular, I may boldly ſay, hee doth vtterly deceiue his owne ſoule, hee is yet farre from the Kingdome of God. Thou art vpon the Rocke, before euer thou knoweſt what it is to bee toſſed on the maine; thou art in the hauen, before euer thou waſt in hazard in the deepe: verily thou art miſtaken in the coaſt, beare out againe with ſpeed, this Rocke will caſt thee away into a gulfe of ſecurity, this is not the Cape of Good hope, Gods good Spirit neuer led any man this way into the land of Righteouſneſſe [y]. I wiſh all you that heare this, the ſweet and comfort of this point. An aſſent to the report of the Scripture touching Chriſt, is neceſſary to ſaluation, but not ſufficient; neither was it all that the Eunuch had. Application of Chriſt is neceſſary, My wel-beloued is mine, and I am his [z], that is the life of all: But in this the Diuell counterfeiteth as well as in other things, and hee can be content men ſhould apply, yea hee himſelfe will helpe ſo to doe; but his application is a little too quicke, like the Heritage that is haſtily gotten, but the end not bleſſed [a]. When Chriſt is much valued, but not by and by feelingly enioyed, when he is much deſired, but very hardly reached vnto, where the ſoule longeth for him, and ſometimes commeth to ſee him, and againe loſeth the ſight of him, and is oft times almoſt out of all hope of recouering him, there is application of Chriſt. This is not the worke of a day or two [b], When I tell thee of labouring to beleeue that Ieſus Chriſt is thy ſaluation, if thou ſay vnto mee as Peter ſaid to Chriſt about forgiuing his brother: How oft ſhall I ſet about it, vntill ſeauen times? I muſt anſwer thee as there, yea vntill ſeauenty times ſeauen times [c]. Why ſhould I beguile thee or my ſelfe? If thou bee not euen euery day more or leſſe at this buſineſſe, that thou mighteſt winne Chriſt [d], ſtill conſidering how thou art faſtened on him, and what hould thou haſt, ſtill labouring that thou mayſt not loſe him, ſtill looking for a new ſtorme that may put the from him, ſtill graſping cloſer about him, ſtill crying with Peter, Maſter ſaue mee [e], ſtill hearkening to this come of the Lord, the preaching of the Goſpell, by which hee puls thee to him, neither, I nor any Miniſter of God will dare to promiſe thee any hope of ſaluation. If wee take a leaſe, or buy a purchaſe, wee will haue the matter firſt drawne vp into articles, then digeſted into a forme, then peruſed and enterlined, and

and aduiſed vpon with the beſt counſell we can get, euery word ſhall be weighed, as in a paire of ballances, and wee will not ſuddenly engroſſe it as it muſt bee. Why will we that be ſo prouident for our earthly things, be ſo ſimple & ſo careleſſe about heauenly? If we haue got but a kinde of looſe and generall apprehenſion of Chriſt that he is ours, there we reſt. Oh let vs looke into it againe, let vs beware while we liue of a falſe title, aske a little more counſell, if we let it alone vntill the Hearing day, a writ of errour will not helpe it. Me thinkes, I cannot ſpeak too much againſt our great ſecurity. Euery man ſeemeth to be ſure of heauen, and yet few men euer knew, what it was to be in hazard of heauen. Worke out your ſaluation with feare and trembling [f]. Thus much of the Eunuchs confeſſion. Euery man muſt be able (as he) to giue account of his Faith: Euery man muſt be willing (as he) to giue a reaſon of his hope. Euery man muſt beleeue (as he) that Ieſus Chriſt is the Son of God. How he beleeued this, and how we muſt beleeue it, hath beene ſhewed: God make it profitable. f Phil.2.12.

Now followeth the Baptiſme it ſelfe, Then commanded hee the chariot to ſtand ſtill, &c. The words are plaine, and the ſenſe is euident to be this; The Eunuch being found meet for the Sacrament of Baptiſme, there was a commandement for the ſtaying of the Chariot, in which the Eunuch rode and Philip with him, whereupon they both went into the Riuer, and there by the miniſtery of Philip the Eunuch was baptized. The principall things conſiderable heere, are theſe two. 1. The place where the Sacrament was adminiſtred. 2. The action it ſelfe. Out of the former this doctrine ſprings, That ſince the comming of Chriſt in the fleſh there is no better neſſe or precedence of one place aboue another for the adminiſtration of holy things. Loe ſee, here is Baptiſme adminiſtred by the high-way ſide, and that in an ordinary Riuer: the Sacrament had bin no whit better to the Eunuch, if hee had receiued it in ſome hallowed place, or in ſome conſecrated veſſell. In the former times that publike worſhip of God was limited to a certaine place, There ſhall be a place which the Lord your God ſhall chuſe, thither ſhall you bring all that I command [g], &c. neither was there any lawfulnes (ordinarily) for any altar but at Ieruſalem. There was the Paſſeouer onely to be ſolemnized, there onely the firſt borne to be preſented to the Lord. But Chriſt being manifeſted in the fleſh who was the body of all former ſhadowes [h], the diſtinction of places is aboliſhed, and neither is Gods worſhip tyed to the Iews Ieruſalem, nor to the Mount Garizim of the Samaritans [i], but now, in euery place incenſe ſhall be offered to my Name ſaith the Lord [k], Therefore Chriſts fore-runner exercited his Miniſtery openly in the wilderneſſe, and baptized in the Riuer of Iordan [l]: and our Sauiour preached in Mountaines [m], by the Sea ſide, & out of Boats [n], any where, where the audience was acccording. So the Apoſtles, after, preached in houſes, in fields, and baptized in any vſuall Riuer which came next to hand. For which cauſe by all of any ſound iudgement, that of Conſtantine the Great, that famous Chriſtian Emperour, worthily renowned for many things, is notwithſtanding taxed, as ſomething ſuperſtitious, that after hee was conuerted from the Paganiſme to the Chriſtian Faith, yet hee deferred his Baptiſme, looking ſtill for an opportunity to goe to Iordan it ſelfe, where our Sauiour was baptized, as if there had been ſome more vertue in that place then in another. Whereſoeuer two or three are gathered together in my name [o], &c. there is no exception of place, ſo that in other things the due forme be obſerued. This might be vrged againſt the ſuperſtition of Popery, which is much deuoted to hallowed places, as if ſome worth were added thereby to the ſeruices there performed; and beſides, that ſimplicity which was in the firſt adminiſtration of Baptiſme; they haue adulterated & corrupted, with intermixing ſalt, oyle, ſpittle, creame, &c. with the ſacramentall water; and then (forſooth) the people muſt imagine there is more in this confection, and in this compounded ſtuffe, for the benefit of the baptized, then if the matter were performed with the naked element as it comes frō the brook. This ſuperſtition is not yet throughly purged out of many hearts. It is well knowne what a vertue many think to be in places, and in vessels, &c. The Diuel knowing that it is a thing which cannot be rooted or razed out of a mans minde, that when he hath to do with God, there must be somewhat done to grace and sanctifie the action, leadeth him away with false surmises, and by perswading him that places, and times, and such like complements and circumstances doe giue worth to the businesse, maketh him to neglect that which indeed should make him acceptable. As for example, if a childe be brought to the Church and babtized in a Font, all is well in opinion, and there is Christendome enough; but the maine thing, as to learne what that Sacrament is, and wherefore it serueth, and vpon what tearmes it may be a meanes of comfort to the soule, the people (generally) desire not to know, it is a trouble to them to be taught; and to instruct children, when they come to be of yeeres, wherefore they were baptized, and what the receiuing of the Sacrament bindeth them to, who (almost) maketh any conscience? Thus we are all for forme, and lose the substance, we esteeme the gift (as Christ said of the blind Pharisees) but set at naught the altar which must sanctifie the gift [p]. This is not spoken to draw men to a contempt of these outward conueniences: For albeit I know, that the place it selfe bettereth not the businesse, neither is Baptisme (simply) better administred out of the Font, in a Church, then out of a Riuer by the high-way side; yet it were a wickednesse for any now vnder that pretext to forsake the places put apart for holy vses, or to goe out (in a humor) to preach and to pray, and vse the Sacraments in the fields: that were to auoid one extremity by running into another as bad; and indeed it is true which is said, that if a man haue not good discretion, in running from a mischiefe hee may fall into an inconuenience. In auoyding superstition, a man may soone become either schismaticall or prophane. Well are they that can finde and keepe the meane. I will not imagine any infusion of vertue into my prayers, or vpon my other deuotions, by the frame and building where they are performed, because I will not be superstitious, and yet I will repaire to the places deputed to such sacred actions: I will not run to Riuers to baptize, I will not fly into corners to communicate, because I must not forsake the fellowship, which wee ought to haue among our selues [q], and all things must bee done in order [r], neither is God the author of confusion [s]. So much touching the place: This water was as good as Iordan, or as if it had bin one of the riuers which issued out of Paradise, and as well, here vpon the way, as in the Temple at Ierusalem.

The action it selfe in these words, Hee baptized him: that is, hee washed him with water in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost: So must we conceiue it, although so much be not heere expresly said. Wee may not thinke Philip would or did transgresse the order set downe by our Sauiour, to be obserued in the administration of the Sacrament [t]. Here this doctrine: That in the Christian Church the Sacrament of Baptisme must accompany the preaching of the Word. Vnderstand me aright. I meane not by this, that whensoeuer the Word is preached, the Sacrament of Baptisme must bee ministred, (for there is not alwayes occasion of both at the same instant,) but this I intend, that in the Church of Christ there must bee a vsing of this Sacrament, as well as a deliuery of the doctrine of saluation. And so much I gather hence: For we may not thinke this an arbitrary seruice, that Philip baptized the Eunuch when hee had taught him, but we must thinke it a matter he was bound to, that hee whom he had by teaching conuerted to Christianity, should from him also receiue the badge of Christianity. This is confirmed by our Sauiours owne edict, Goe teach, and baptize, &c. [u]; and the Apostles kept that order [x]. Baptisme was still an attendant vpon the doctrine, their commission was equall to both; and this course must continue so long as God hath a people vpon earth; so much is prooued by the promise, Loe I am with you alwayes to the end of the world [y], which as it argueth a bleſſing to bee beſtowed vpon others beſides the Apoſtles (to whom the words were perſonally ſpoken,) euen to ſuch as ſhould be imployed in that ſeruice to the end, ſo it declareth what courſe is to bee held to the end, Preaching, and Baptizing. And whereas Paul ſaith he was not ſent to baptize but to preach [z], we muſt not take it as ſpoken ſimply, as if Paul had no commiſſion at all to baptize; for how then did he baptize Criſpus and Gaius, and the houſhold of Stephanus [a]? but it is ſpoken comparatiuely, namely, that his maine errand on which he was ſent was to preach, and thereupon hee was chiefly to attend, leauing the adminiſtration of Baptiſme vnto others. Such a kinde of ſpeaking wee ſhall finde in the Prophet, I ſpake not vnto your fathers, nor commanded, &c. concerning ſacrifices [b]; did not God ſpeake at all touching thoſe things? yes, but that was not all hee ſpake, or the chiefe thing hee gaue charge of. So is this place of Paul to be expounded. Let vs a little conſider why this Sacrament and ceremonie of Baptiſme was ordained by Chriſt to accompany the preaching of his Word. There are two maine ends of it. 1. To ſtrengthen faith. 2. To be a teſtimony of profeſſion. Baptiſme ſerueth to ſtrengthen faith two wayes. 1. By repreſentation. 2. By aſſurance. Firſt, the thing it repreſenteth, and the thing it aſſureth are all one, namely, a waſhing away of the guilt of ſinne by the blood of Chriſt. Baptiſme ſhadoweth out this faith. Water fitly reſembling the purging power of Chriſts blood. It cleanſeth from all vnrighteouſnes [c]. Againe, the outward waſhing of the body repreſenteth the inward purging of the ſoule by the ſpirit, which ſtandeth in iuſtification before God, and ſanctification before men. Hence the Scripture ſpeaking of thoſe things, vſeth the terme of waſhing [d], and regeneration is called the Waſhing of the new birth [e]. Further, that manner of baptizing, which was in vſe in hotter countries, and in baptizing men of yeeres, and which was here vſed in baptizing the Eunuch, was a rite of worthy ſignification. The going downe into the water ſignified mortification or fellowſhip with Chriſts death: the ſtaying vnder the water, the buriall of ſinne; the comming out, the riſing from ſinne to newneſſe of life. There were excellent ſignifications, and to theſe Paul hath a reference, in thoſe words, Know yee not, that all we which haue beene baptized into Ieſus Chriſt, haue beene baptized into his death? We are buried then with him by baptiſme into his death, that like as Chriſt was raiſed vp from the dead by the glory of the Father, ſo we alſo ſhould walke in newneſſe of life [f]: And we may conceiue a reſemblance of theſe three, in our ordinary baptizings: in the putting on of the water, in the leting it to remaine a time, and in the wiping it off. Thus Baptiſme ſetteth before our eyes the benefit by the blood of Chriſt, and the good that commeth by being ingraffed into him. Now as Baptiſme repreſents, ſo it allureth. For the Sacraments are not naked ſignes and bare ſhadowes of ſpirituall things, but they are appointed of God to be pledges vnto vs of heauenly grace: and ſo is Baptiſme, a pledge to a beleeuing ſinner, that as hee doth ſee the waſhing of water to purifie the body, ſo certainly is his ſoule cleanſed from the guilt of ſinne by the blood of Chriſt. Thus is the firſt end of Baptiſme to ſtrengthen faith. It is alſo a witnes of profeſſion. Firſt, the common nature of a Sacrament, is to be as a ſolemne oath vndertaken for the performance of ſome important matter. Secondly, the being baptized, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghoſt; ſignifieth an admittance into the houſhould of Faith, & the addicting of a mans ſelfe to the ſeruice of him, whoſe name is called vpon, ouer him in Baptiſme, and ſo teſtifieth his couenanting with the Lord, to deny vngodlineſſe and fleſhly luſts [g], and to beware of returning after this waſhing to a wallowing againe in the mire of old vncleannelſe [h]. Therfore is it that Baptiſme is called the Baptiſme of repentance [i], becauſe it remaineth as a witneſſe of a promiſe of repentance, with which the baptized hath bound himſelfe to God. This is plaine. Baptiſme is of perpetuall vſe in the Church of Chriſt, and that for good ends, namely, to ſtrengthen our faith, and to be a continuall remembrancer vnto vs what wee profeſſe.

Now

Vse. 1. Now for the vse, first this may further those that are ignorant in this matter, how to behaue themselues in the vse of Baptisme as men of knowledge. A generall vse there is of Baptisme amongst vs, but the warrant of vsing it, is not so well knowne, as the thing it selfe ordinarily is receiued: and the most, in offering their infants vnto Baptisme, are more ledde by custome, and carried with the streame of common practice, then guided by any certaine rule from him, who is the lawmaker of his Church. This maketh this Sacrament to be vsed so ignorantly, so superstitiously, so vnprofitably. It shall not bee amisse therefore for those that be to seeke herein, to learne hence, whence it commeth, that such a matter is in vse. That which is not done in obedience, though it be done neuer so formally in the eye and outward appearance, is of no account with God. Se-

Vse. 2. condly, this may teach vs all, or at least put vs all in minde what vse to make of our Baptisme. 1. To euery one of vs so often as we thinke vpon our baptisme, it ought to be a spurre to holinesse. A seruant to a great man, when hee looketh vpon his liuery, cannot for shame if he haue any common honesty, be an enemy to him, of whom he hath receiued it; the sight of it is rather a common caller vpon him to be faithfull to him, into whose seruice he is entred. So Baptisme is the cognizance of a Christian, and by it wee haue taken on vs to weare (as it were) the colours of our grand Captaine Iesus Christ; the very thought thereof should restraine vs from doing the businesse of Satan, and worke vs by all meanes to the willing obeying of the Lord, to the studying, learning, and practising of his will. How excellent were it, if in doing of many things, which wee rush vpon without any scruple, we would say to our selues, Is this according to promise, is this agreeing to the vow of Baptisme? 2. To those that thus make vse of Baptisme as a motiue to obedience, it is a store-house of much comfort. When mens titles to land be in question, they fall to perusing their sealed euidences; and so a Christian must often look to the will and deed of his heauenly Father sealed vp in Baptisme, and by it we shall haue comfort. We seldome looke backe so farre as Baptisme, and we limit it onely to the present vse, conceiuing it as an entry into Christianity: but as a spurre, to walke worthy our profession, and a meanes to build vs vp in Christ, wee doe not vse it, and so wee depriue our selues of worthy comfort.

SAM. HIERON.

The first Sermon.

1. Ioh. 3. 10.

In this are the children of God knowne and the children of the Diuell: Whosoeuer doth not righteousnes is not of God, neither he that loueth not his brother.

THE maine scope and principall drift of this place, is, to giue vs a full and certaine direction, how we may bee resolued touching our owne particular estate, whether wee bee the children of God, or the children of the Diuell. A matter for the finding whereof, wee are exhorted to giue diligence[a]; and it is also a point of that nature, that so long as a man is ignorant therein, howsoeuer he may flatter his own soule, and bee secure, yet it is vnpossible for him to haue any true or sound comfort. Not to vse any long preamble, the points to be handled in the opening of this verse, are in order these. 1. That there are in the world men of two sorts, Children of God, and Children of the Diuell. 2. That there is an expresse difference betwixt these two. 3. Wherein this difference stands, namely, in the doing or not doing of righteousnesse, in the louing or not louing the brethren. Of these in order. The scope of the place. a 2 Pet. 1. 10. The order of the points in it.

The first point, that there are in the world two sorts of people it is plaine in the words of the Text, and euident by the whole course of holy Scripture. In the beginning God made a diuision betwixt the two seedes, the seed of the woman (Christ and his members) and the seed of the Serpent (Satan and his off spring[b].) The same diuision held in all the ensuing times. In Adams family there were, Abel and Cain[c], the one righteous[d], the other a murtherer[e]. Before the floud, the whole world was (as it were) marshalled into two ranks; The Sonnes of God, (a people professing true Religion, and the worship of God) and, The sonnes of men, (prophane and godlesse persons[f].) After the flood, in that small handfull saued in the Arke, there was Shem and Cham: the one blessed, the other cursed[g]. As there was a distinction betwixt Abrahams family, and all the world beside (the Church being then as it were confined to his household) so euen in his house there was a separation: Ismael the son of the bondwoman, and Isaac the sonne of promise[h]. Nay, which is more, euen in the wombe of Rebecca, at the same time there was Esau the hated[i], and Iacob, the Lords beloued[k]. In processe of time, when the line and posterity of Abraham grew greater, and spread it selfe into a nation, as there was a difference betwixt them and all other nations, the one being called Gods people[l], the other being reputed strangers[m]; so euen among them there was a partition, some were Iewes outward, some Iewes within[n]; some the seed of Abraham after the flesh, some by promise[o]. As it was of old, so it is now, there be children of wrath[p], and there be heires of grace[q]; there bee vessels of mercy, and there bee also vessels of wrath[r]; beleeuers, and infidels; hypocrites and true professors. In one word, as there is a God, and a Diuell, a Heauen, and a Hell, a Kingdome of glory, and a Kingdome of darknesse; so there are seuerall sorts appertaining to both: and at the day of iudgement there shall be a finall separation made betwixt both: to the one shall be said, Come ye blessed, to the other, Goe ye cursed[s]: the one shall goe into euerlasting paine, and the other into life eternall[t]. Now the one of these two sorts are in the very text called the children of God: the other, the children of the Diuell. Touching the first, one is called the child of God two wayes. By gene- Doctrine 1.

ration, and so Christ onely is the childe of God[u]. 2. By adoption, and so are the Elect Gods children, it being the good pleasure of God, to admit them into his family, and to make them heires annexed with Christ[*]. As the godly are not the sons of God by generation, so neither are the wicked the children of the Diuell, by any such reall descent or propagation, but they are children by imitation[x], because they are (as it were) transformed into his image, and are like to him, and doe his lusts. Thus you see briefly the meaning and truth of the first point.

The Vse.

Wee should apply this doctrine, as the Disciples did a speech of Christs[y], Verily I say to you, (saith he) that one of you shall betray me. Hereupon they began euery one to say vnto him, is it I? The like care is to be pressed vpon vs in regard of this point, when we heare that all are not the children of God, but some the children of the Diuell, wee should thereupon become inquisitiue touching our owne estate, that we may not only haue a generall conceit, but some good ground and firme assurance, that we are in the number of Gods children. In the time of a generall rebellion against a Prince, when as, after the conspirators are defeated, and their power suppressed, it is knowne, that it is determined that some of the company shall be put to death, and others receiued to mercy; euery man will long to know what is decreed touching him, hee will neuer be merry at his heart till hee know whether his name bee vpon the bill of those that shall bee pardoned: And if any man be so dissolute as not to care to know this, but shall say perhaps, Let it goe which way it will, if I shalbe pardoned, I shalbe pardoned, if not, what remedy? I wil neuer trouble my selfe about it till it comes: surely euery man will account him exceeding desperate, & say it were great pity if he should haue mercy. So is it in this case: we are all rebels against God, and enemies to him[z], the estate of one man by nature is no better then anothers: well it hath pleased God, out of this rebellious troupe to cull out some, vpon whom to shew mercy in Christ Iesus. How now is it possible that we knowing our owne desert, can frame our selues to any ioy, vntill we vnderstand what shall become of our soules? what thing can giue vs any true contentment, so long as in the maine point we are vncertaine? If any man be of that profane humor to say, if I am one of Gods elect, then I shall be saued, if I am not I cannot helpe it &c. it is a fearfull signe, it is a token of a reprobate sense, and of a heart giuen ouer to vngodlinesse. I pray therefore, let vs learne this first out of this text: that seeing there are in the world two companies, the children of God, and the children of the Diuell, we would euen be iealous of our selues, and labour to know to our comfort, that we are in the number of the people of God.

z Rom. 5. 10.

And to remoue all doubts herein, as that it is a matter impossible, &c. let vs prepare to consider that which followeth.

Doctrine 2.

The second point is, that there is an expresse difference betwixt these two, by which they may be knowne. So saith my text, In this are the children of god knowne, and the children of the Diuell. This knowing the children of God, and the children of the Diuell, each from other, is meant especially, in respect of a mans own priuate and personall knowledge, which concernes his owne particular: For otherwise no man is able to say precisely and determinately, touching another, that he is the childe of the Diuell, or that hee is the childe of God. Wee are bound by the lawe of charity, to hope the best of all[a]; though withall thus farre a man may lawfully proceede, as to say, that such, or such a man, is in the state of condemnation. As for example: If I see a man to bee a common drunkard, an ordinary swearer, a scorner of Gods word, a knowne adulterer, a grosly ignorant person: it is no breach of charity to say of him, that hee is as yet in the state of perdition, and the very child of destruction. It is a true rule giuen by our Sauiour, It is not a good tree which bringeth forth euill fruit[b]: If then I behold a man to bring forth diuellish fruits, I may be bolde to say, that Sathan worketh in him, although touching his future estate, I may not take vpon me to determine. To follow Christs similitude: If I taste the fruit of a tree, and finde

finde it ſowre and vnpleaſant. I may truely ſay for the preſent, that the tree is naught, but what it may bee hereafter, I know not, becauſe the owner thereof (perhaps) may husband it, and by grafting alter and change and better the nature of it. So, though for the time I may ſay of ſome man, He is now a barren and vnfruitfull tree, becauſe I behold in him nothing but the vnfruitfull works of darkneſſe [c], yet I can ſay nothing abſolutely for the time to come, becauſe it may be, the Lord may engraffe him into the myſticall body of Chriſt Ieſus. Againe, if I behold a man trauelling downe a hill, at the foot whereof, there is an vnrecouerable downefall, I may freely ſay, that his courſe is dangerous: but that he ſhall fall into the gulfe, I cannot ſay, becauſe for ought I know, hee may be recalled. After the ſame manner, if I looke vpon a man, and ſee him iourneying in the broad way that leadeth to deſtruction [d], I may bee bold to tell him, that his caſe is fearfull: but to ſay, that hee ſhall be damned, is more then I haue warrant for, becauſe (for any thing I know to the contrary) the Lord may pleaſe to reclaime him. The Apoſtles ſaw more in mens eſtate then we can, yet we reade that Peter when he had to doe with Simon the ſorcerer, and had ſaid of him, that he was in the bond of iniquity [e], and yet did not cut him cleane off, but counſelled him by prayer and repentance to labour for forgiuenes [f]. So then this is the thing that I aime at: The Apoſtle ſpeaking here of knowing the children of God from the children of the Diuell, ſpeaketh not ſo directly of the knowledge which one man may haue of anothers eſtate, as of that which euery man may attaine vnto for his own particular: and his chiefe intent in this chapter, is to teach thoſe which feare God how they may bee aſſured of their owne adoption: And therefore this is the plaine doctrine of the place drawne out of this ſecond point, that it is poſſible for a Chriſtian man to know touching himſelfe, whether he be the child of God, yea or no. Conſider the words of my text, Heereby (ſaith the Apoſtle) the children of God are knowne, hereby are they made manifeſt, this is the ſigne and badge by which they are diſcerned. This kinde of ſpeech were to no purpoſe, if the attainement of this knowledge were vnpoſſible. And to my ſeeming, the Scripture is as plaine in this point, as in any whatſoeuer. Giue diligence (ſaith S. Peter) to make your calling and election ſure [g]. What is this to make our calling and election ſure? To make it ſure to or with God, is needleſſe, for the foundation of God remaineth ſure, and hath this ſeale, The Lord knoweth who are his [h]: ſo that with him the ſtate of thoſe which belong to the election of grace, is ſure enough already: therfore the Apoſtles meaning is, that wee ſhould make it ſure to our owne vnderſtanding, that from knowledge that our calling is effectuall, we may ariſe to the aſſurance of election. Now wherefore is this aduice giuen, if the attainement of the thing commended to our care bee impoſſible? Reioyce (ſaith our Sauiour) that your names are written in heauen [i].

How can a man reioyce in a matter of vncertainety? Imagination and fancy may breed a certaine flaſhing ioy, but there is no perpetuity, no ſetlednes of reioycing, where there is doubt of hauing that which is made the matter of the ioy. In this Chapter [k], Iohn ſpeakes very confidently: Now are wee the ſonnes of God, and we know that wee are tranſlated from death to life. Theſe are no ſpeeches of coniecture, they are phraſes of reſolution: and in them Iohn ioyneth others with himſelfe, and deliuereth theſe markes as common directions for all beleeuers. The words of the Creede, I beleeue, &c. if they haue nothing in them but an aſſent to the Doctrine and generall truth of the Articles, wherein is the faith of a Chriſtian, more excellent then the faith of Diuels? for euen they alſo doe beleeue the generalities [l]. If we conſider the properties of ſauing faith, deſcribed in the Scriptures, it muſt needs follow, that faith doth apprehend a mans owne perſonall intereſt into Chriſt. It is ſaid to be our victory [m], and to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked [n]. Who ſo hath experience of Satans bickerings, knoweth that hee will not, nor cannot, be put to flight with meere ſuppoſals.

o Rom.5.3. Againe, faith is said to make to reioyce in tribulation o, to cause the godly to loue the Lords appearing p, and euen to sigh in themselues, for that time q. Who can desire these things, that hath not receiued the earnest of that inheritance r which God hath prepared for his chosen? Lastly, two speeches of Pauls are worthy the noting: one, in that he saith, that iustification by Faith makes vs to reioyce, and euen to boast vnder the hope of the glory of God s. Now what an idle thing is it, to boast of that, whereof a man hath no assurance? Salomons reason, why a man should not boast of to morrow, is, because he cannot tell what a day may bring forth t: shewing therein, what a folly it is to boast of vncertainties. Pauls other remarkeable speech is, that he calleth the hope of a Christian, a hope which doth not make ashamed u: now it must needs make ashamed, if it should breed in a man the expectation of that, which in the end he faileth to obtaine. A man hath great cause to be confounded in himselfe, and to hang downe his head for shame, if he shall professe to expect such or such a mans inheritance, and giue out, that he lookes for it, and yet at last when it commeth to the point of enioying, shall be put beside it. Therefore I conclude this point as I began it, that for a Christian to know himselfe to bee a Christian, and the childe of God by grace, and an heire with Iesus Christ, is no matter of impossibility, but a thing rather, which the elect of God all of them in some degrees may come vnto.

Now this Doctrine touching assurance of a mans owne saluation, is to be deliuered and receiued not without some caution. For we doe not teach such a resolued certainty, as is neuer intermixed with any doubting. Nay, wee say, that there is no man so assured of his election, but that at sometimes he doubts thereof, especially in the time of temptation: according as wee may see in Dauids example, I said in my heart (said he) I am cast out of thy sight x: and what a combate he felt within himselfe, betwixt faith and doubting, appeares by these his speeches. Will the Lord absent himselfe for euer? Is his mercy cleane gone? hath hee shut vp his tender mercies in displeasure y? Why art thou cast downe my soule, and vnquiet within me z? But this wee teach and maintaine, that in the children of God, sooner or later, faith gets the victory against doubting, and assurance preuailes against staggering. And albeit perhaps euen the very last conflict which some one Christian hath, bee so exceeding sharpe and violent, (Sathan hauing then alwaies the greatest wrath, when he hath the shortest time a) that the issue may seem to others by reason of some passionate and perplexed speeches, and sad gestures, to be rather against, then with him: yet certaine it is, (the continued goodnesse of God considered, who is alwaies wont to performe good things where hee doth begin b them) that in the very vpshot of all, there is sweetly felt, a certaine secret pledge of Gods vnchangeable fauour (as it were an arme reached out to a man ready to bee drowned) which getteth the hand against all discouragements, making a man say to himselfe as Dauid did, when the gulfe was euen now ready to ouerwhelme him, I will yet giue him thanks, he is my present help, and my God c: and with Iob, Loe, though he slay me, yet will I trust in him d. Thus much for the cleering of this doctrine, let vs now come to the vse.

The Vse. This Doctrine discouereth vnto vs first, the errour of the pretended Catholike Church of Rome, which teacheth, that no man can knowe by the certainty of faith, such as cannot bee mistaken, that hee hath attained the fauour of God e, that he is of the number of the predestinate f, and shall certainly persever to the end g. This Doctrine is directly against the Scripture, as appeareth by that which hath beene said, and is indeed a most desperate and comfortlesse doctrine, holding the soule continually in suspence, and affording no certainetie for a perplexed conscience to rest vpon. And therefore I am of his mind h, who said, that if there were no other errour in the Popes Doctrine, besides this, by which it teacheth, that wee must bee wauering and doubtfull of the remission of our sinnes, of the grace of God, and of our owne saluation: yet this one were

2. This point makes to the reproofe of two euils in the common ſort: the one is blindnes & miſconceit, who (being as euery naturall man will ſoone be, Papiſts euen without a teacher) doe vnder a colour of ennity to preſumption, count it a matter impoſſible, for a man to be ſo far of Gods counſell, as to know what ſhall be the future eſtate of his owne ſoule. Truth is, that for a man to enquire ſo far, without warrant, were preſumption, but not to take notice of that which God vouchſafeth to reueale, were vnthankfulnes. It is true alſo, that there is no means in man (as from himſelfe) to grow to a reſolution herein. For true is the ſaying of the Apoſtle, that as no man knowes the things of a man, ſaue the ſpirit of a man which is in him: euen ſo knoweth no man the things of God, but the Spirit of God[h]. But if that Spirit which ſearcheth all things yea the deepe things of God, bee giuen vnto vs, that we might know the things that are giuen to vs of God[i], ſo that wee haue the very minde of Chriſt[k], What impoſſibility is there for vs, to know that our ſinnes are forgiuen vs, and that nothing ſhall be able to ſeparate vs from the loue of God, which is in Ieſus Chriſt our Lord[l]? Now if any doubt be made, whether the children of God be thus endued with his Spirit, there can be no fuller proofe of it, then that ſaying of S. Paul, If any man hath not the ſpirit of Chriſt, the ſame is not his[m]. So that all that are the Lords haue his Spirit, and it is impoſſible, that this Spirit knowing (as was ſaid) the deepe things of God, and being by office a Comforter[n], ſhould vterly be ſilent in a matter of that comfortable importance. The ſecond euill reprooued by this doctrine, is negligence. Maruelous is mens care in the matters of this preſent life. Their aſſurances for lands, and the things of that nature, are very diligently looked into: This Lawyer and the other muſt peruſe them: euery word and euery clauſe muſt be throughly ſcanned: ſomewhat is too ambiguous, and muſt be cleered: ſomewhat too obſcure, and hath need to be explained: in this there is too much reſtriction, in the other too much liberty. This and farre greater then this, is mens care, for the aſſuring of that, of which, when they haue done all, they can haue no aſſurance but this, that they are ſure to forgoe it. But as for for the good part, which ſhall not be taken from[o] thoſe which haue it: I am woe to conſider mens careleſneſſe, how therein, any groundleſſe ſurmiſes, any idle ſuppoſals, any flaſhing imaginations can content them, neuer communing with their owne hearts[p], neuer prooning themſelues[q], neuer ſearching nor trying their wayes[r]: to ſee whether their repentance be ſincere, and their faith vnfained[ſ], and their hope ſuch as will not make them aſhamed[t], in the end. This ſecurity is the very bane of mens ſoules, and it is one of Satans principall buſineſſes, to rocke men aſleepe in it, becauſe he knowes that ſo long as they are in this ſnare, he may take them, and diſpoſe of them at his will[u]. To cure both theſe euils, as well as to diſcouer them, this doctrine (God ſo bleſſing it) may be very effectuall. Wee ſee by it, that the grace of adoption may be knowne, and that there is a certaine means and courſe to diſcerne it: why ſhould we then either be ſo corrupt in iudgement, as to deeme it vnpoſſible, or ſo careleſſe in our courſe, as to account it a matter not worthy to be laboured in?

Now followeth to ſpeake of the difference which is betwixt the children of God and the children of the Diuell. This difference is twofold, either generall, or particular. The generall is, the doing or not doing of righteouſneſſe: the negatiue is here only named, but in it as in all negatiue rules the affirmatiue is included: For if he who doth not righteouſnes is not of God, then he who doth righteouſnes is of God: and indeede this is a ſure argument, euen as the pronouncing of Shibboleth to know an Ephramite from a Gileadite *. Doctrine 3.

* Iudg. 12. 5, 6.

By righteouſneſſe, is vnderſtood that holy and religious courſe, which God requireth of vs, whether in generall, as wee be Chriſtians: or in particular according to our places and callings allotted vnto vs by God. The rule of righteouſ-

neſſe is the Scripture: in it the Lord hath ſhewed what is good[x], that onely deſerues to bee entertained as our Spirituall Counſellor[y], that alone is able to make a wiſe man vnto ſaluation[z]. The doing of righteouſneſſe, is twofold. 1. Legall, and 2. Euangelicall. The Legall doing, is the perfection of all duties, both in manner and forme, both for the number and meaſure of them: which kinde of Doing was neuer found in any meere man, ſince the fall of Adam. The Euangelicall doing, is mingled with much weakeneſſe, and is good onely in acceptation with God by Ieſus Chriſt[a], hee being pleaſed for his take, to ſpare them which feare him, and thinke vpon his name, as a man ſpareth his owne ſonne that ſerueth him[b], and to meaſure their obedience, rather by the ſincerity of their affection, then by the fulneſſe of performance[c]. Of this Doing the Spirit of God ſpeaketh here: and (that we may the better conceiue it) it conſiſts vpon the concurrence of theſe following particulars. 1. A caring and ſtudying to preoue what is the good will of God[d], how hee will be ſerued, and wherewith hee will be pleaſed. Dauid calleth this a ſeeking the Lord, with the whole heart[e], a hiding[f] of Gods word: therfore he prayeth, O Lord teach mee thy ſtatutes[g], teach mee good iudgement and knowledge[h]. 2. An vnfained loue and affection to that righteouſneſſe which is pleaſing vnto God. Paul tearmeth this, a delighting in the law of God, concerning the inner man[i]: and Dauid intends it in thoſe ſpeeches, I haue had as great delight in the way of thy Teſtimonies, as in all Riches[k], I will delight in thy ſtatutes[l], Oh how I loue thy Law[m]. 3. A deſire, that if it were poſſible the whole courſe of the life and conuerſation might be ſutable thereunto. Oh (ſaith Dauid) that my wayes were directed to keepe thy ſtatutes, Then ſhould I not bee aſhamed when I haue reſpect to all thy commandements[n]. This was the writer to the Hebrewes his Deſire, in all things to liue honeſtly[o]. 4. A firmeneſſe of reſolution, to frame and ſet the whole and continuall endeauour to the performance of it: I haue ſworne (ſaith the Prophet) and will performe it, that I will keepe thy righteous iudgements[p]. This was meant by the ſure couenant which Nehemiah and the reſt made[q]. 5. A ſpeedy applying of ones ſelfe therein: I made haſte and delayed not to keepe thy commandements[r]. 6. A carefull catching of all opportunities to helpe forward this good purpoſe: Walke circumſpectly (ſaith the Apoſtle) not as fooles, but as wiſe, redeeming the time[s]. 7. A diligent ſuruey of ones owne courſes: Let vs ſearch and try our wayes (ſaith Ieremy[t]) and, I haue conſidered my waies (ſaith Dauid[u].) 8. A bitter bewailing of ſlips and infirmities, together with a kinde of holy indignation at ones ſelf, that he ſhould ſo groſly and ordinarily ſinne againſt the Lord[*]. Thus Dauid groaned out many accuſations againſt himſelfe, Againſt thee, againſt thee haue I ſinned, &c[x]. Enter not into iudgement with thy ſeruant[y]. Thus Hezekiah chattered like a Crane, and mourned like a Doue[z]. Thus Peter went out and wept bitterly[a]. 9. An encreaſe of care (after a foile receiued) and of watchfulnes, together with a feare of running afreſh into the ſame or like offence. This is that care and feare, which Paul commends in the Corinths as badges and ſignes of their true repentance[b]. This doing of righteouſneſſe, ſpoken of here by Iohn, diſcouereth it ſelfe by theſe ſpecialties; and indeed they are ſuch, as being duly conſidered, muſt needs be ſignes and teſtimonies of adoption. For the nature of man conſidered, how he deſpiſeth all Gods counſell[c], and hates to be reformed[d]: how hee flattereth himſelfe in his owne eyes, not abhorring euill[e]: how he drinketh iniquity like water[f]: how ſweet wickednes is in his mouth, how he hides it vnder his tongue, and fauoureth it, and will not forſake it, but keepes it cloſe in his mouth[g]: hee is euen reprobate to euery good worke[h]: theſe things conſidered, it is vnpoſſible that any of the forenamed qualities ſhould bee found in any that is not borne againe by the ſecret working of Gods Spirit. And as theſe things cannot bee in an vnregenerate perſon, ſo they cannot but bee in thoſe whom the Lord hath choſen to be his. For if it bee true which Paul hath ſaid, that he which hath not ſpared his owne Son, cannot but with him giue vs all things alſo[i]: How can the beloued of God be vtterly empty of theſe graces, they being indeed

The vse must needs be this, to presse vpon vs the triall of our selues, by this doctrine, if our desire be (as it ought) to vnderstand the truth touching our owne estate. Let vs thinke well vpon these necessary parts of this great worke of righteousnesse: If we can finde certaine euidence of any one of them, we cannot prize it at too high a rate, it being a pledge of so glorious an estate, as is the state of adoption, and the earnest of such a royall inheritance as is the kingdome of heauen. They are so linked one within another, that where any one of them is, there they all are, in certainetie of being, although not alwaies at one and the same instant in the like cleerenesse of perceiuing: And as they are each twined in other, so they are all so vndiuidedly tyed to that sure foundation [m] of Gods election, (being indeed no other but dependances vpon it) that there can bee no surer kinde of reasoning, then from these to conclude adoption, from adoption to inferre the certainty of election, and from all to grow to an vndoubtednesse of eternall glorification in heauen. Who would not esteeme such vndeceiuing engagements of Gods vnchanging loue? whose heart would not euen leap within him for ioy, to feele in himselfe such gracious beames, issuing from that Sunne of righteousnes [n] the Lord Iesus? We reade how iocund that wretch Haman was, when he told his wife and friends all the things wherein the King had promoted him [o], and yet it was not long before he was stript of all his fauours, and hanged on a tree which he had prepared for another [p]: what ioy (think we then) should we be euen rauished with, if we can perceiue in our selues any of these euidences of Gods loue? which are not only not taken away after the first bestowing, (For the gifts of God are without repentance [q]) but encreased daily, grace for grace [r]: For vnto euery man that hath, it shall be giuen, and he shall haue abundance [s]. Let this then be our care, so many as desire comfort in our owne soules, euen busily and curiously to examine our selues vpon these points, that so what graces tending to the doing of righteousnes, we perceiue in our selues, these wee may cherish, and labour to encreate: those which we perceiue not, we may desire to feele, and out of the truth of our desire and feeling, may grow by little and little, to bee able to say, Behold what loue the Father hath shewed on vs, that we should be called the Sonnes of God [t].

The

The second Sermon.

In this are the children of God knowne, &c.

HAuing, in handling the generall difference betwixt the children of God, and the children of the Diuell, shewed what it is to doe righteousnes, it is necessary (for the discouery of the craftinesse of the times) that it be taught what it is, not to doe righteousnes. The former doctrine being remembred, cannot but giue some light vnto it, yet it shall be profitable to speak of it somewhat more expressly. In one word then, hee is said not to doe righteousnes, who maketh no conscience of the practice of those holy duties which God requireth of all his seruants in his Word. That this generall speech may be the better vnderstood, we may deuide those who are guilty of the neglect of holy duties, into two companies: the one are such, who know not what these duties are: the other are such as know them in some measure, yet haue no care to yeeld obedience to them: both sorts are as yet the children of the Diuell, and in the estate of perdition: my text doth plainely affirme it. Of the former sort there are also two degrees: some are ignorant for want of teaching: others are ignorant for want of will to bee taught: they haue (as Salomon saith) a price in their hand, they cannot complaine that they want the meanes, but they haue no heart to get wisedome [u]. And these also are of two sorts: for some are careless and neglect knowledge, they consider not the worth of it, and so passe by it as a matter not to be esteemed; others are obstinate, scorners, men either wedded to their owne blindnesse, or wise in their owne conceit, and they doe despise Knowledge and hate it, and will none of it [*], they cast it [x] at their heeles. The second company are (as I said) such, who knowing good duties, yet care not to practice them: these are likewise of two sorts: some haue gotten some knowledge by occasion, euen against their wils, according as many who come to heare for fashion sake, yet whether they will or no, doe now and then learne something; like vnto a man thrust violently into an apothecaries shop, who cannot chuse but smell the Spices there, and carry away some of the sauour with him in his cloaths. Some againe, because knowledge is a pleasing thing, and they be also loath to be accounted ignorant, are therefore careful to know, but yet goe no further, being like to many rich mizers, who hauing much, fare as hard, and goe as neere the winde as the meanest; so they knowing much what ought to be done, yet liue as vilely and loosely as the most ignorant. Now as it is true of both these sorts, that they doe not righteousnes, so it is true of them also, that they are not of God, they are as yet in the very Bond of iniquity [y], and in the state of condemnation, which as my text auoucheth in expresse termes, so the Scripture doth sufficiently confirme it, as shall appeare in particulars.

y Act. 8. 23.

First, touching those who are ignorant through want of the meanes, howsoeuer, their case is more tollerable, and their punishment shall be lesse, yet they are inexcusable. He that knew not his masters will, and yet did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten, &c [z]. Paul saith of his persecuting the Saints, that albeit hee did it ignorantly, yet it was Gods Mercy [a] that hee escaped condemnation. It is one of the same Apostles rules, That as many as haue sinned without the Law, that is, not inioying, as the Iewes did, the benefit of the written Law and of Moses his his teaching, shall perish also without the Law [b]. Secondly, for those which are wilfully ignorant, their offence is doubled by their wilfulnesse, and they heape vp wrath vnto themselues against the day of wrath [c], by their contempt: If I had not come and spoken to them, they should not haue had sinne, that is, they had beene free from this high sinne of contempt, but now they haue no cloake for their sinne [d]. The vse of that speech, they shall know that there hath beene a Prophet among them [e], what doth it argue, but the encrease of vengeance, where the Lord hath richly vouchsafed the meanes of knowledge? What a heauy chalenge is that to Ierusalem? How often would I haue gathered thy children together, &c. and ye would not [f]. Thirdly, they which know and yet make no account to practice, that falleth on them which Christ spake, That seruant which knew his masters will, and did not according, shall be beaten with many stripes [g]: to which agreeth that of Peter, It had beene better not to haue knowne the way of righteousnes, then after they haue knowne it, to turne from the holy commandement giuen vnto them [h]: so that if the Scripture bee true, both the one sort and the other, those which know not righteousnes, and which knowing it, doe for all that neglect to practice it, are not of God, but in the very high way to destruction. It is true of them both, that they make no conscience of righteousnes, the one in ignorance cannot, the other in froward dissolutenesse, will not. To make the matter yet more apparent, that the Doctrine well prooued, may be the surer ground for the vse and exhortation following, let me yet further prooue to you, that men ignorantly or wilfully neglecting righteousnesse, cannot bee of God, but in the state of condemnation. Touching those which are of God, and are in his eternall counsell ordained vnto life [i], thus much the Scripture hath reuealed. First, that at one time or other, sooner or later, God calleth them: For whom hee hath predestinate, them also hee calleth [k].) It is said of Corinth, that God had much people in it [l]; and therefore in his prouidence he sent Paul to preach there. So that where there are any soules belonging to God, there the Lord doth finde some meanes or other, to bring them out of darknes to the knowledge of the truth. Secondly, as the Lord more or lesse affoords the means of sauing knowledge to all that are his, so hee doth also open their hearts and make them willing to receiue it: he enlighteneth their minds, that they may vnderstand it. So God opened Lydia her heart [m], so he shined vnto the Corinthians hearts [n]. And therefore it is a true and vndoubted principle of our Sauiour, Hee that is of God, heareth Gods word [o]: euer in the children of God there is a desire of instruction. Thirdly, those which are the Lords, looke how God affoords them the meanes, and furnisheth them with inward graces to profit by the meanes, so he doth also frame their hearts to yeeld obedience vnto the forme of doctrine [p], wherein they haue beene instructed; so that their desire is, to haue their conuersation such as becommeth the Gospel [q], and to walke with God [r] in newnesse of life [s]. This is that which God speaketh by the Prophet, I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walke in my statutes, and yee shall keep my iudgements, and doe them [t]. These things the Scripture reports to bee fulfilled in all those which belong to God: and therefore it must be a truth, that they which doe not doe righteousnes, either because they are blinde, and know it not, or because they are wilfull and dissolute, and desire it not, the same are not of God; they are (as yet) the children of Satan, aliens and strangers from Gods kingdome. Thus farre I haue proceeded in this point: I haue shewed you in generall, what it is, not to doe righteousnes: I haue opened to you how many sorts of men are guilty of not doing righteousnesse: I haue giuen you two sufficient reasons to prooue it to bee true which Iohn here saith, that they which doe not righteousnes, are none of Gods. It followeth next, to make vse of all vnto our selues.

reprobate, it is more then wee haue warrant for: yet to say of some, that for the present, they are in a wretched condition, and shall, except they repent, perish vndoubtedly, is not vnlawfull. Nay, so much the Ministers of Gods word ought to say. The words of the text are plaine, He that doth not righteousnes is not of God. If it be found vpon enquiry made, that it is true of many of vs that wee doe not righteousnesse, surely hee that shall forbeare to speake the truth as it is, shall but dissemble with vs, and thereby both sinne against God, and by his flateries hurt vs also. There be (as hath beene said) two sorts guilty of not doing righteousnes: First, those which know not the duties of righteousnesse: Secondly, those which knowing them, seeke not to performe them. Let vs looke to our selues, how wee can shift our selues out of one of these two companies: sure I am, that for persons vnskilfull in the waies of righteousnesse, it shall not be hard to draw forth a great troupe, men and women, wofully ignorant in those very things, without the knowledge whereof they cannot be saued, without any conceit euen in the very first principles [a], and in the beginning of Christ [b]. Alas, how can wee doe righteousnesse, if we doe not know it? Ignorance and obedience cannot dwell together. Thinke vpon it you whom it toucheth; it concernes you neerly: and that so much the rather, because our ignorance is inexcusable; God is not wanting to vs for the means, only this, we are wanting to our selues. The knowledge of righteousnes offereth it selfe daily vnto vs, and is an earnest suter to bee entertained: if it were not for our owne vnwillingnesse, we could not possibly be ignorant. I pray God open our eyes to see the danger of it, and stir vp our hearts to labour quickly to come out of it. As the number is great of people ignorant in the holy duties of righteousnes, which God hath reuealed in his Word, so there are as many, who knowing somewhat, yet doe vtterly neglect the carefull and conscionable practice of that which they doe know. Those that are the greatest enemies to the exercises of the Word, and speake worst both of the Preacher and Doctrine, and when they are here, sometime sleepe, sometime scorne, sometime busie their mindes about other things; yet whether they will or no, something they heare, yea they so heare it, so conceiue it, and so see the expresse truth of it, that although they faine would, yet they are not able to deny it. The swearer heareth swearing reprooued, and cannot deny the iustnesse of the reproofe. The contemner of the Word, heareth the necessity of the ministery of it vrged, and cannot tell how to say against it. The vsurer full sore against his wil, heareth plain reproofes against vsury, and goeth away with a conuicted conscience. The Sabbath-breaker, and he who curtalleth the worship of God, & serues him by halfes, he also heareth the expresse doctrine of the Sabbath, and hath not in the world, wherewith to reproue it. So the superstitious person, the adulterer, the drunkard, the disordered and riotous liuer, all these comming to heare, what face soeuer they set vpon it, yet that which they are taught sticks by them, & they know they should do otherwise: So that (I say) how sleepily, or scornfully, or carelesly soeuer men heare, without any purpose to learne, yet at vnwares something droppeth in, and some generall taste they haue of the duties of righteousnes. Yet for all this, though men are brought to know, that such and such holy duties God requireth, such and such grosse sins he disaloweth, few notwithstanding make any conscience either of framing themselues to the performance of the one, or of striuing to keepe themselues vnspotted of the other: but as though it were nothing to sinne against knowledge, to sinne against conscience, they rush on in their accustomed manner of behauiour; the scorner in contemning, the swearer in blaspheming, the Sabbath-breaker in neglect of Gods worship, the adulterer in viciousnesse, the drunkard in excesse, the lyer in falshood, the vsurer in oppressing, the malicious in vncharitablenesse. Is this to doe righteousnesse? can these things raigne in those that are of God? No, it is vnpossible. Wee shall but deceiue our owne ſoules, if wee thinke we may doe theſe things, and yet be the Lords. Many haue their priuate and perſonall exceptions againſt their teachers, but wee ſtand not in the Pulpit to perſwade you to beleeue vs, but to entreate you to giue credit to the Lord. It is his Word which wee handle, it is his ſaying, it is not ours, that he which doth not righteouſnes is the childe of the Diuell: whatſoeuer we be in your opinions, yet this is the truth, and this you ſhall finde true, when as all your pleading againſt vs ſhall not profit you; the word which is ſpoken now and at other times, ſhall iudge both you and vs at the laſt day: and therefore laying aſide all by-reſpects, which Sathan rayſeth vp in his policie, that we may not regard the truth, let vs heare and beleeue him who hath ſaid, Hee that doth not righteouſneſſe is not mine: and let vs aſſure our ſelues, that theſe common courſes of ignorance, of hatred of the Word, of neglect of Gods worſhip, of taking Gods name in vaine, of miſ-ſpending his holy day, of cruelty, of oppreſſion, of falſhood, of vncleaneſſe, of drunkenneſſe, of riot and ſuch other, which are the common diſeaſes of the times, are not the doing of righteouſneſſe, are not fruits beſeeming the Saints of God: the doers whereof, if they hold on as they begin, cannot inherit the Kingdome of God[x]. It will bee thought of ſome perhaps, that I am alwaies in one matter. To thoſe that ſo thinke, I make this anſwer: I haue but two things to teach; faith toward God, and a holy life: in one of theſe two I muſt ſtill inſiſt, and ſo long as ſinne ſheweth it ſelfe ſo apparantly, and the times are ſo full of ſuch fooles as Salomon ſpeakes of, [y] which make a mocke of ſinne, and to whom it is but a paſtime to doe wickedly [z], woe ſhall be to mee if I keepe ſilence; if euill will not bee reformed, yet it muſt be reproued, that the committers of it may bee left without excuſe. Thus much for this generall difference betwixt the elect and the reprobate, the children of God, and the children of the Diuell, Hee which doth not righteouſneſſe, is no of God. He that maketh no conſcience of thoſe holy duties which God requires, whether hee doe it ignorantly, or wilfully, he is in the ſtate of deſtruction, and hell ſhall be his portion, except he repent.

z Prou. 10. 23.

Wee come now next to ſpeake of the ſpeciall and more particular difference, out of theſe words, (neither hee that loueth not his brother.) To make it vp a whole ſentence, it muſt bee taken thus, He that loueth not his brother is not of God. Let vs vs firſt looke out the meaning. The name of brother is diuerſly taken in the Scripture. Firſt, for one that is borne of the ſame parents; thus Cain was Habels brother [a]. Secondly, for one of the ſame kinne: thus Abraham and Lot were tearmed brethren [b], Abraham beeing indeede Lots owne vncle [c]: ſo Iames is called the Lords brother [d], becauſe hee was of his alliance in the fleſh. Thirdly, for one of the ſame nation and countrey, So Moſes ſaid to the Iſraelites which were ſtriuing together, Sirs, yee are brethren [e], you are of one nation, why doe yee wrong? &c. Fourthly, for any man whomſoeuer: Let no man (ſaith Paul) oppreſſe or defraud his brother [f]: that is, Let him oppreſſe or defraud no man. Laſtly, for one that maketh one and the ſame ſincere profeſſion of Religion. If any that is called a brother, that is, who hath taken on him the profeſſion of the ſame holy truth with you, bee a fornicator [g], &c. In this ſenſe the word brother is often taken in Pauls Epiſtles, and in this of Saint Iohn. Now out of all theſe ſenſes of this word brother, we muſt examine which is meant in this place. It cannot bee ſo properly meant of the two former, for to loue thoſe which are of our owne blood, it is a naturall thing, doe not the Publicans euen the ſame [h]? and a man may doe ſo, that hath no ſparke of grace within him: the like I may ſay of louing thoſe to whom ciuill reſpects hath linked vs. But now the intent of the Apoſtle heere, beeing to note out a maine difference betwixt the children of God, and the children of the Diuell, there muſt bee ſome further matter in it; therefore the word muſt be taken in the latter ſenſes, partly of a brother by creation, in as much as wee haue all one Father[i], partly a Brother by Religion, in that we profeſſe one Faith[k]: and then the word being ſo taken, affoordeth this firſt Doctrine: That hee who is an vncharitable perſon, the ſame is none of Gods children: the wordes bee plaine, Hee that loueth not his brother is not of God. By an vncharitable man, I vnderſtand ſuch an one whoſe heart is poſſeſſed with a ſetled malice: for otherwiſe, euen the beſt, as they are ſubiect to other infirmities, ſo ſometime they fall into thoſe euills which are breaches of Charitie: ſo that he is to be termed an vncharitable perſon, not who is ſometime ouer-carried by paſſion apprehending an iniury ouer-quickly, (though that alſo bee a ſinne and to bee repented of) but hee which hath euen reſolued with himſelfe to hate there where hee hath once conceiued a diſlike, rather taking pleaſure in maliciouſneſſe, then ſtriuing with himſelfe to ouercome it. This humor diſcouereth it ſelfe by two things chiefly: Firſt, deſire of reuenge: Secondly, an vnwillingneſſe to bee reconciled. For the vncharitable perſon deſireth nothing more then the hurt of him whom hee hates, and can away with nothing leſſe, then to heare of meanes tending to true Chriſtian agreement. Now who ſo is of this diſpoſition, giueth this teſtimony of himſelfe, that hee is none of Gods. And for that cauſe Paul reckoning vp the workes of the Fleſh the doers whereof cannot inherite the Kingdome of God, and the fruits of the Spirit, which are arguments of grace: among the former reckoneth vp Hatred: among the latter, Loue[l]. By this ſhall all men know (ſaith Chriſt) that yee are my Diſciples, if yee haue loue one to another[m]. Loue then is the badge of Gods children, and vncharitableneſſe the marke of the reprobate. This Epiſtle hath ſundry ſpeeches tending to the confirmation of this point[n]. All which being put together, prooue this to bee a truth, That the vncharitable perſon, whatſoeuer hee may bee hereafter, if God giue him repentance, yet for the preſent he is not of God, but in the ſtate of condemnation. Let this aduiſe vs to looke to our ſelues.

The Vſe. The number of hating and vncharitable perſons is not ſmall. Who is there (almoſt) who beſides petty diſlikes and priuy grudges, doth not maintaine euen wars, and ſome deadly feud againſt ſome one or moe? Some houſes there bee, and ſtockes and kinreds, who are at a kinde of profeſſed enmity; neuer haue agreed, doe not now accord, neither yet deſire to liue at vnity. Many there bee whoſe ordinary pretence for their not comming to the Lords table, is the malice and rancour which is grounded in their hearts againſt others. A common thing for men to reioyce at the harmes, loſſes, and diſgraces of others, to be glad when they haue an opportunity, cloſely to doe that miſchiefe which they haue plotted, and to exerciſe to the full, that malice which they haue a long time conceiued in their hearts. What a ioy is it to many to ſeeke to obſcure the good name and credit of thoſe whom they hate, nay though ſometime their hatred bee without a cauſe? how many bee there who being at variance, doe ſo much pleaſe themſelues therein, that either it would be a griefe to them for any man to goe about to worke a reconcilement, or elſe, if they doe by perſwaſion, or vpon ſome other reſpects hearken to articles of agreement, it ſhall bee done ſo deceitfully, ſo ſuperficially, ſo from the teeth outward, that the leaſt occaſion which may happen, ſhall bee the fuell of as much miſlike, and the beginning of as great a contention, as before? If any who heareth this ſpoken, be therein guilty, let this preſent ſpeech of the holy Ghoſt make him afraid, and bee a warning to him to take heed how he goes on. The words are plaine, and the ſpeech is terrible, He that loueth not his brother, is not of God. A heart full of venome, a mouth full of euill ſpeaking, a tongue dipped in bitterneſſe, a courſe tending to reuenge, be the pretence what it will, theſe things cannot be in thoſe whom the Lord hath choſen to himſelfe. Sathan indeed was a Murtherer from the beginning[o], and hee is euen

uen made of malice: So that where he rules, there is a rancourous heart, and a rayling tongue, there malicious and virulent courſes cannot be wanting. If this will not perſwade vs, nothing can mooue vs; If it be a fearfull thing to haue as it were this marke ſet vpon any of vs, This man is none of Gods: then let vs take heed of vncharitableneſſe. The Lord hath ſpoken it, hee hath witneſſed it with his owne mouth, that he hath no intereſt in a malicious perſon.

Secondly, by Brother in this place is meant alſo (yea and indeed principally) a man that feareth God, and maketh conſcience of his wayes. So it will appeare by the tenth verſe of this Chapter: There, the Apoſtle proſecuting this note, touching Loue and Hatred, bringeth in Cain for an example: of him it is ſaid, that he hated and ſlew his brother Habel, becauſe his owne works were euill, and his brothers good: his brother was more reſpectiuely carefull in the worſhip of God then he. The text ſaith, Cain brought an oblation to the Lord of the fruit of the ground. It is well noted, that he brought of the fruit, not of the fruits, meaning that hee brought ſparingly, hee thought (no doubt) any thing might ſerue the turne well enough: but Habel brought of the firſt fruits of his ſheepe, and of the fat of them [p], and is therefore ſaid by the Apoſtle [q], to haue offered a plentifull ſacrifice. So that the bringing in of Cain for an example, whoſe malice againſt his brother was for religion ſake, doth make it plaine, that a Brother profeſſing religion, is chiefly intended in this place: and thereto accords that in 14. verſe, Wee know that we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we loue the brethren. So that then the ſecond inſtruction which this laſt clauſe affoords, is this: That he which doth not loue a man, though hee haue no other outward cauſe or reſpect to mooue him to it; yet for his religion, and for his honeſt care to know God, and to liue in his feare, that man is not the childe of God. I remember what is ſaid of our Sauiour, that conferring with one, in whom he ſaw ſome good things, he beheld him and loued him [r]. And ſo indeed euery true Chriſtian hath the ſame affection. The probabilities of ſincerity and of the feare of God doe draw him to loue, there where there is no other outward occaſion to allure him. It is with the children of God in this caſe, as it is with men borne in one nation, when they meet by chance in a farre and ſtrange countrey, though they neuer knew each other before, yet their being countrimen is a ſufficient cauſe of acquaintance, and it vſually breeds a readineſſe to doe any kindneſſe each for other: So the ſonnes and daughters of God are ſtrangers and pilgrims here in the earth [t], and whiles they are at home in the body, they are abſent from the Lord [u]; ſo that it is a great comfort to them to conuerſe together: and albeit they be ſtrangers each to other, in reſpect of ciuill bonds, yet they cannot chuſe but loue one another euen for profeſſion ſake, that one thing will be a ſufficient motiue, though there bee no other. And to ſhew how acceptable a thing it is to God, to loue a man for his profeſſion ſake, appeareth by that of our Sauiour [*], He that receiueth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, ſhall receiue the reward of a righteous man: and whoſoeuer ſhall giue vnto one of theſe little ones to drinke a cup of cold water onely, in the name of a diſciple, verily I ſay to you, hee ſhall not loſe his reward. The Lord will not forget, no not the ſmalleſt worke of loue, which is ſhewed toward his name [x]. Now then this being the diſpoſition of the children of God to loue each other in the truth [y], it muſt needs be, that who ſo is otherwiſe affected, is not of God.

The Vſe.

There is a very good vſe to bee made of this point. They are none of Gods which loue not a man for his profeſſion ſake, becauſe he ſeemeth to be one that would faine pleaſe God in a holy conuerſation. What ſhall then become of them, and in what number bee they, who hate a man for his profeſſion, which deſpiſe him for his zeale and forwardneſſe in good things, according as the world is full of ſuch? A Preacher is hated of many, euen becauſe hee is a Preacher: a man who is carefull to heare, willing to learne, and ſeemeth to bee a- z Pſ.119.120. afraid of Gods iudgement [z], and to make conſcience of ſinne, let him liue as peaceably and quietly as hee can, yet for his very courſe ſake, hee ſhall not want enemies; he ſhall haue reproaches, mocks, and ſlanders, and indignities, the world will not endure him. Hee that did neuer hurt vs more or leſſe, yet hee is hated, becauſe it ſeemeth that hee hath more religion then wee. Indeed it is no maruell: The world (ſaith Chriſt) will loue his owne [a], and there will bee enmitie betwixt the Serpents ſeede and Chriſts [b]. Onely let this bee added; Whoſoeuer thou bee whoſe conſcience telleth thee, that thou ſetteſt leſſe by ſuch or ſuch a man, thou loueſt not his company, thou regardeſt not his acquaintance, becauſe hee is one who maketh conſcience of many things which thou regardeſt not, pleaſe not thy ſelfe in this humour, thou art none of Gods, if thou loue not thoſe which deſire to know God, and to approoue their courſe and conuerſation vnto God.

Rom. 6. 12, 13.

Let not ſinne reigne therefore in your mortall bodie, that yee ſhould obey it in the luſts thereof. Neither giue yee your members as weapons of vnrighteouſnes vnto ſinne, but giue your ſelues vnto God, as they that are aliue from the dead, and giue your members as weapons of righteouſnes vnto God.

WE haue heard out of Saint Iohn, that hee which doth not righteouſnes, is not of God, but is as yet in the ſtate of condemnation, and in the broad path which leadeth to deſtruction. This being ſo, I know not what fitter matter now next to commend vnto you, then this counſell of S. Paul, which to mee ſeemeth, to follow very directly vpon the former doctrine. For ſeeing the neglect of righteouſnes is ſo full of danger, what can bee more behouefull for vs, then by all meanes to ſtriue and to ſet our ſelues againſt Sinne? Thus it appeareth briefly, how the laſt text and this doe well agree: the former was as it were the ground of this, & this may ſerue to ſet an edge vpon the former.

Now for the place it ſelfe, you may briefly vnderſtand thus much. The Apoſtle hath prooued in the foregoing verſes of this Chapter, That it is vnpoſſible for thoſe which are Chriſts, and are by Baptiſme engraffed into him, to be giuen ouer to the obedience and ſeruice of ſinne. The point being laid as a ſure foundation, he proceedeth to take that courſe, which muſt be held in all good teaching; namely, with the truth of Doctrine to ioyne the power and force of exhortation. Therein (I ſay) hee keepeth that courſe, which by all diſcreet teachers muſt be obſerued. For whereas we haue two things to doe; one to plant knowledge, another to beget conſcience in our hearers: ſoundnes of doctrine ſerueth to inſtruct, and vehemency of exhortation is profitable to reforme, and to worke men vnto godlineſſe. He which exhorteth, without good ground before laid, may (perhaps) for the preſent mooue the affections, but it ſoone vaniſheth, being without knowledge to guide it; and hee againe which deliuereth matters of Doctrine, albeit he doth well, yet his paines not beeing preſſed by exhorting, commeth not to ſo good perfection. Therefore the Apoſtle, according to the wiſdome giuen vnto him[a], coupleth both together in this Chapter.

For the order in handling this Scripture, you may take it thus; that there is in theſe verſes a double exhortation, the one inhibiting, Let not ſinne therefore, &c. Neither giue ye your members, &c. the other perſwading, But giue your ſelues vnto God, &c. Touching the former, the inhibiting or forbidding part, the ſubſtance of it is contained in this clauſe, Let not ſinne reigne in your mortall body: the two clauſes following ſerue onely as an expoſition to it; for if any man demand, what it is, not to let ſinne reigne, the anſwer is, not to obey it in the luſts thereof. If it be asked further, what it is not to obey it; the anſwer is alſo further, not to giue the members as weapons, &c. This is the order of the firſt part. Let vs examine the

b 1 Ioh.3.4. In generall, by Sinne is vnderſtood the Tranſgreſſion of Gods Law [b]. But here it hath a more ſpeciall meaning: For whereas Sin is twofold, the one called Originall ſin, the other Actuall; the one the Sin of Nature, in which we are all conceiued [c], the other the Sin of Practice, which is the fruit (as it were) of that bitter root: in this place the Apoſtle meaneth that in-bred corruption of our Nature, which we all brought with vs into the world. It is in the Scripture ſometime called the Old man [d], ſometimes the Fleſh [e], ſometimes the Law of the members [f], and it is nothing elſe but that hereditary euill and ſtaine of Nature ſpread ouer all the parts and powers of the ſoule, which firſt maketh vs guilty of the wrath of God, and then alſo bringeth forth in vs thoſe fruits which the Scripture calleth, The worke of the Fleſh [g]. For this is a ſure thing, that from Adam was conuayed ouer vnto vs both the guilt of that his ſin, (ſo that it is as much accounted ours as if we had in act and in our owne perſons committed it) and alſo the puniſhment of it, which is that ſame Corruption with which the whole Man is infected: ſo that the very Wiſedome (that is, the very beſt that is in him) is Death [h], and the very Minde, (the moſt diuine part) is become Fleſh [i]; nay the very Spirit of the mind needs renuing [k]. Hence it is ſaid, that Adam begat a childe in his owne likenes [l], that is, a ſinner like himſelfe, and ſo we all ſucceſſiuely from Adam, are of the ſame condition, and muſt confeſſe with Dauid, that we were borne in iniquity, and that in ſinne our mothers haue conceiued vs [m]. So then by ſinne is meant here, that which S. Iames calleth Concupiſcence [n], the corruption and defiledneſſe of nature, which man brings with him into the world, which is in him the begetter and perſwader, and ſetter forward of all other ſinnes in act whatſoeuer.

Doctrine 1. The interpretation of this word may teach vs thus much, that Concupiſcence is a ſinne properly in the regenerate, and in it owne nature, making them lyable to eternall death. See how this is here prooued. The Apoſtle we ſee writeth to the Romans, and what were they? Beloued of God, called to bee Saints [o], ſuch whoſe Faith was publiſhed throughout the world [p], & yet he exhorteth euen theſe ſo highly commended by him, holy and faithfull perſons, to take heed that ſinne reigne not in them: hee confeſſeth it will remaine, but he would not haue it to beare rule: But what ſinne? It is plaine that he meaneth Originall ſinne, our naturall corruption: For of ſinne in act he ſpeaketh afterwards. Neither giue vp your members, &c. So that here hee meaneth that ſpring and fountaine of ſinne, which is in euery one by nature, and this in expreſſe tearmes he calleth ſinne. In like manner ſpeaking of himſelfe elſe where [q], he ſaith thus: It is no more I, but the ſinne that dwelleth in me: where, by ſinne dwelling in him, he meaneth the ſtaine and corruption of his nature. And that this is a ſinne properly, thus appeareth: That which maketh a man miſerable, is ſinne: but we ſee Paul in reſpect hereof, calleth himſelfe a wretched man [r], and one entangled in Death. Beſides, we ſee infants to die the bodily death, which God could not in iuſtice inflict vpon them, if they had no ſinne; and what ſinne can they haue beſides Originall ſinne? withall, it is flatly againſt the laſt Commandement, Thou ſhalt not luſt or couet; the meaning whereof is, to condemne euen thoſe motions of the heart, vnto which the will giueth no conſent: for thoſe motions which are yeelded to in the will, are condemned in the other Commandements: So that either this tenth Commandement is ſuperfluous, or elſe the bare diſpoſition and proneneſſe of the heart to euill is forbidden by it, and is therefore truely ſinne. Thou ſhalt loue the Lord with all thy thought (ſaith the Law [f]:) the failing euen in a thought, yea albeit that Thought bee not approoued of, is in it owne nature Sinne, and a breach of Gods Commandement.

Vſe 1. The firſt vſe hereof is, to let vs ſee the groſſeneſſe and abomination of Popery, that thoſe which doe diſlike it, may more and more grow into deteſtation

of it: thoſe which loue it (if it be poſſible) may be reclaimed, or elſe convicted: they which are indifferent and in ſuſpence betwixt both, may bee ſetled. Vnderſtand therefore that the Papiſts to vphold ſome groſſe opinions of theirs, as namely, that a man may in this life, fulfill the law of God, and doe good works voyd of all ſinne, and by them bee iuſtified before God, doe teach that in the Regenerate, that which we call Concupiſcence, is not a ſinne properly, but only a certaine defect and weakeneſſe, making the heart fit and ready to conceiue ſinne; and therefore they haue in ther ſolemne Councell, decreed that hee ſhall be accurſed, whoſoeuer ſhall hold that it a ſinne truely and properly in the Regenerate [t]. And the Rhemiſts vpon this place, ſay that it is called a ſinne, becauſe it is the effect, occaſion and matter of ſinne, otherwiſe it is not properly a ſinne, nor forbidden by Commandement. How ſound this opinion is, I referre it to the iudgement of any indifferent man, that ſhall compare with it, that which hath beene ſaid: and how that can bee excuſed to bee no ſinne, which Paul ſo often calleth ſinne? fiue times at the leaſt in this Chapter, ſixe times in the ſeauenth, and thriſe in the eight, and of which it is ſaid ſo directly, that it is not Good [u], that it is the ſinne which hangeth ſo faſt on [*], that for it, a man cannot doe the good which he would [x], that it luſteth againſt the ſpirit [y], and fighteth againſt the ſoule [z], and muſt bee mortified [a]; how this I ſay can be freed from the nature of ſinne, let them looke, which will ſpeake good of euill, and euill of good [b]. True it is, that in the Regenerate, Concupiſcence is aboliſhed, but how? not in regard of beeing, but in regard of imputation [c]. And that iuſtification by Chriſt, whereof Baptiſme is both a figure and a pledge, ſtandeth not in perfection of vertues, but in remiſſion of ſinnes. So that this is the firſt vſe, to lay open to vs the vileneſſe of Popery, which dareth open the mouth, to ſay that it is no ſinne, which the Spirit of God both heere and elſewhere ſo expreſly calleth ſinne.

Vſe. 2.

The ſecond vſe is, to further vs in the practice of Repentance. The firſt ſtep to repentance is Humiliation, and the ſpeciall meanes to worke humiliation, is the ſight of our owne miſery. Now if wee ſhall well remember, that beſides many, yea innumerable ſinnes, which wee haue in Act committed againſt God, ſome in thought, ſome in word, ſome in deed, we haue ouer and aboue the corruption and ſeed of all ſinne within vs, and a naturall proneneſſe and diſpoſition to commit any euill, which of it ſelfe is (in the Iuſtice of God) ſufficient to condemne vs: this muſt needs, if we haue any ſparke of grace, beate vs downe and humble vs, and make vs with griefe of heart, caſt downe our ſelues before the Maieſtie of God, earneſtly and importunately ſuing to bee receiued into his fauour and mercy in Chriſt Ieſus.

The 2. thing to be examined, is, what is meant by mortall body. By body in this place the Apoſtle doth not vnderſtand that commonly wee ſo call, this our outward and viſible feature, made of fleſh, and bones, and skinne; but thereby hee meaneth the whole Man, the Soule as well as the Bodie: and therefore it is all one, as if he had ſaid, Let not ſinne reigne in you. If the reaſon be asked why the Apoſtle ſtileth euen the ſoule by ſo groſſe a name, conſidering that it is a more diuine and excellent ſubſtance; the anſwer is, that he ſo tearmeth it, becauſe though the ſoule were in it owne nature a moſt pure and ſpirituall ſubſtance, yet now by ſinne it is become nothing but groſſeneſſe, and corruption; and for this cauſe God himſelfe calleth Man by this name, Fleſh [d], becauſe through the corruption of ſinne hee is altogether earthly and ſenſuall, a very maſſe and lumpe of vncleaneſſe. So Chriſt ſpeaketh alſo, That which is borne of Fleſh, is fleſh [e]: there the word Fleſh is vſed in the ſame ſenſe: And indeed there is no kinde of ſpeaking more common in the Scripture. For man hauing by his diſobedience, clean ſtript himſelfe of that diuine Nature which God gaue him in the beginning, and made himſelfe euen a Beaſt [f], before him, hee doth not deſerue any other name, but of carnall, and earthly, and bodily, and fleſhly, he hauing left in him no ſpirituall g Rom.7.18. The 2. Doct. with the vse of it.

Goodnesse[g], in the world. Now to this word Body, the Apostle addeth mortall, to shew thus much, that the nature of man is nothing but euen a compound, a thing made of these two, Corruption and Death: there is nothing in it but euill, and there is nothing due vnto it but destruction. Out of which (by the way) wee may learne thus much, what is the state and condition of the best of vs all by nature. For though the greatest part bee secure, hauing no conceit of their owne naturall wretchednesse; and others, popishly affected, thinking themselues to haue free-will, and a naturall disposition to good, yet the truth is, that wee are of our selues no better, but euen a grosse Body of Death, a confused masse of corruption, our vnderstanding nothing but ignorance and dulnesse, our will nothing but obstinacy, our affections nothing but misorder, our members weapons of vnrighteousnesse, our selues nothing but the base vassals of sinne. This is the state of the greatest Monarches in the world, no man or woman is exempted, but the same hath a share in this common misery, and happy were wee, if we did truely feele this, and woe will be vnto vs, vntill wee doe vnfainedly and throughly acknowledge it: then will Gods mercy be sweet vnto vs; then will the Doctrine of saluation in Christ be hearkened after by vs. Therefore let vs remember this short Lesson; sowre indeed at the first, but yet full of sweetnesse in the vse, and let vs often thinke vpon it; that we are in nature, as wee come out of the loynes of our parents, no better then a very lumpe of rottennesse and corruption. If thou shouldest see a man, that from the sole of his foot to the crowne of his head, had nothing whole in him: but wounds and swellings, and sores full of corruption[h], he could not but seeme a very loathsome creature vnto thee: yet know this whosoeuer thou art, be thou neuer so well descended, neuer so rich, wise, beautifull, &c. thy soule is through sin a thousand times more odious and abominable before God. Thinke well on this, commune with thine owne heart[i] about it, it will make thee abhorre thy selfe in dust and ashes[k], and count all things, to be dung, that thou mightest win Iesus Christ[l].

k Iob 42.6.
l Phil.3.8.

The third thing to be enquired into, is, what is meant by Reigne. I told you before that the following clauses are an exposition to the first, and so it is true. For sinne doth then reigne, when wee giue our members as weapons of vnrighteousnesse vnto it: yet for their sakes who are not so well acquainted with the language of the Scripture, this will require some better opening. Know this then (to take all the three clauses together, reigne, obey in the lusts, &c. giue vp your members, &c.) that the Apostle doth in this place compare the sinne and corruption which dwelleth in vs, to some Emperour or great Commander, who laboureth by all means to establish his owne soueraignty, and to bring all into obedience vnder him. This great man to try the obedience of those whom hee desires to command, sendeth foorth his Edicts, maketh Lawes, publisheth Proclamations, enioyneth such and such things to be put in practice. Now they which are his vassals, and doe feare him, presently apply themselues by all meanes to put those things in execution which hee commands. Such a tyrant is sinne: being within vs, it striueth by all meanes to haue dominion ouer vs: Euill motions, lusts and prouocations to iniquity, they are (as it were) the lawes of sinne, whereby sinne trieth our obedience, and seeketh to keepe vs within bondage. Now the wicked and vngodly, who are the seruants of sinne, they be like souldiers vnder pay, who be alwaies in armes, and as soone as the watch-word is giuen, presently set themselues to the doing of that which their leader commands; so they giue vp their members, and employ all the powers and faculties both of their soules and bodies, for the outward practice of that euill, whereunto their secret sinne doth perswade. Sinne then it said to reigne, when as it hath that interest into a man, that hee doth both study with his minde, and labour with his body to set forward that whereto the in-borne corruption of his nature doth encline. This beeing well obserued, the meaning of Paul in his first exhortation, will soone bee discouered, uered, and it will be found to be all one, as if the Apoſtle had ſaid thus: Beloued, I know that ſo long as we liue here in this world, ſinne and corruption will continue in vs, and in many things, doe we what wee can, wee ſhall be ouertaken; yet it becommeth vs to ſtriue, and to giue all diligence, that ſinne may not haue the maſtery ouer vs: we ſhall feele many ſecret allurements, and inticements, and prouocations vnto euill; yet let vs not ſo enthrall and enbondage our ſelues vnder our owne luſts, that we ſhould giue vp our ſelues to the fulfilling of them. Let it not be ſaid, that our wits, and minds, and ſtrength, and ſuch other outward meanes, as we are able to make, are nothing elſe but the Inſtruments and weapons of vnrighteouſnes. This is the true ſenſe of Saint Paul in this place. Let vs ſee what profit we may make of this perſwaſion.

It doth teach vs this Leſſon, That a Chriſtian man ought by all meanes to oppoſe and to ſet himſelfe againſt ſinne, to fight and to ſtriue againſt the ſecret corruption of his owne heart. This is the ſubſtance of the preſent exhortation; this is the Leſſon which it teacheth vs: and it is a point which requireth no great proofe, although a man might collect eaſily many reaſons to confirme it. Firſt, ſinne is the breach of Gods will, diſhonourable to him, an impeachment of his glory, a meanes to enlarge Sathans kingdome: and in that reſpect, euery good Chriſtian muſt hold himſelfe bound in duty by all meanes to endeauour to ſuppreſſe it. Secondly, ſinne is the bane of the ſoule, the way to hell, the gate which openeth to deſtruction, the wages of it is eternall Death[m], therefore in wiſdome euery man who tendereth the good of his owne ſoule, muſt ſtriue to weaken it: the ſtronger ſinne is, the faſter hold Sathan hath of him: the weaker ſinne is, the neerer is the ſoule vnto ſaluation. So that it is a plaine caſe, that whether wee conſider what we owe in duty to God, or what we are to do in wiſedome for our owne good, ſinne muſt be laboured againſt, the yoke thereof muſt bee ſhaken off, the dominion and tyranny thereof muſt not be endured. Seruilitie and thraldome is a thing which the nature of man abhorreth; euery man deſireth freedome: now no man can imagine a ſeruitude more baſe & ignominious then the thraldome of ſinne; nothing more vile then ſinne: nothing therfore more odious then the ſeruice of ſin. So that if it be but for our owne credits ſake, that a man would not be ſaid to be a ſlaue to a vile thing, euen in that very reſpect it is meet to ſtriue againſt Sinne. Doct. 3.

m Rom. 6. 23.

Well, becauſe the duty thus treated of, is a little too generall, and ſomething more is requiſite both for the well vnderſtanding, and for the good performance of it: therefore for the benefit of thoſe which are deſirous to be freed from the tyrannie of Sinne, the Apoſtle teacheth them the meanes to ſhake off this yoke, and to ſet themſelues at liberty: and that is this; to withdraw their obedience from the luſts and enticements of ſinne, and not to ſet themſelues to ſtudy about the practice and committing of iniquity. The Scepter (as it were) of the kingdome of ſinne is Concupiſcence; the ſtrength of his authority ſtands in the ſecret allurements and prouocations to euill in the luſts of the fleſh: If they bee entertained and hearkened vnto, his kngdome is promoted, his glory is aduanced: if they be withſtood, his power decaieth, & his authority is ouerthrowne. Therefore the onely way to be deliuered from the tyrannie of ſinne, is to ſet ones ſelfe againſt the beginnings of ſin, againſt the luſts and motions vnto ſin. Paul calleth the luſts of the fleſh by this name, The meſſenger of Satan[n], or the harbinger of Satan: if that be harboured, made much of, and delighted in, Satan himſelfe hopes alſo to haue entrance: if that be withſtood, Satans hope is cut off; Sin cannot preuaile where the luſts of the fleſh are not obeyed. And indeed this is the maine difference betwixt the children of God and the reprobate: Sin is in both, they are both corrupt, both haue in them the root & ſeed, and (as it were) the ſpawne and beginning of euery euill, though it be neuer ſo groſſe, neuer ſo notorious. But in this ſtands the difference: Sin reigneth in the one, it is weakened in the other; it is obeyed by the one, it is withſtood by the other; it is yeelded vnto by the one,

it is striuen against by the other: it is delighted in by the one, it is lamented by the other; it is a pastime to the one, it is a burthen to the other; it is a pleasure to the one, it is a sting to the other. Paul complaineth, bewaileth, and crieth out of it in the bitternesse of his soule, That he is led captiue vnto the law of sinne[o]. It may seeme, that there can be no more said of the most vngodly, and yet there is this difference. Suppose two men taken prisoners & bound with chaines, & carried away into a strange country: the one, he yeelds himselfe, and is contented, & goeth as quietly as it is possible: the other, he striues and laboures, and sweates, and puls a contrary way to those which lead him, yet it may bee, that doe what hee can, he is carried too. Here you see, that howbeit they are both carried captiue yet it is not all after one fashion: so the godly and the reprobate are both carried captiue to the Law of sinne: but the one he is as forward to goe, as sinne is to draw him: he is as ready to obey sinne, as sinne is to command him: the other laboureth and strugleth against sinne, it vexeth his soule, that hee cannot haue the maistry. Here is now sinne in both, but not after the same fashion; the one is a slaue to it, the other an enemy to it; the one fights for it, the other fights against it: So that this maketh the difference: God measureth sinne, not by the outward act, but by the inward obedience. As for example, that I may vse another similitude. In the Time of a ciuill Rebellion or Tumult, a Drum is strucken vp, a Trumpet is blowne to gather men together: well, some are glad of it, and are eftsoones in armes, ready to doe any mischiefe: another, hee would helpe it, but cannot; whether he will or no, by the violence and of the vnruly multitude he is carried away, and made to ioyne with the rest, and to draw sword in an vnlawfull quarrell. At last, when the battell is ended, to the eye, he which was drawne in by violence, seemeth to bee in as bad a case, as far in, and in as great danger as the rest: yet a mercifull Prince, duely vnderstanding the truth of the matter, will vouchsafe to pardon him. So in this case, sinne prouoketh vs to rebell against God: it vseth the lusts of the Flesh, to set vs on: one man forthwith sets himselfe to that, whereto sinne secretly doth solicite him; another he fights and labours to withstand it: yet it may be infirmity preuaileth, and some grosse sinne is committed. The Lord (I know) might in iustice punish him with the former; but in this case, it pleaseth him to measure the matter by the intent, and to pardon him whose heart he (which seeth the heart) knoweth to be free from the obedience and willing yeelding vnto sinne. This is an excellent and a comfortable point to all those which duely consider it, and can tell how rightly to apply it. Thus farre then I haue proceeded: Euery Christian, albeit he cannot whilest he liueth in the world, be freed from sinne, yet his duty is to set himselfe by all meanes against sinne: He which would shake off the yoake of sinne, must labour to withhold his obedience from the lusts & motions of sin: he must remember the rule, of not taking thought for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof[p]. Now the benefit of withstanding the lusts of the flesh, is this; it is the badge of a Christian, and a pledge to our consciences, that we are the Lords free-men.

Vse 1. The first vse of this point, is to shew the folly and vanity of many mens hearts, when the word of God is preached and many good & holy duties there perswaded, many wordlings begin by & by to snuffe, & to say to the Preacher, as Korah and his complices did to Moses and Aaron[q]: You take too much vpon you: and say of his Sermon as was said of Amos his[r], We be not able to beare them: and as they of whom the Psalmist speaketh[s], counteth obedience to Christ, bands and cords, so they hold it a slauery and bondage to be kept within compasse. Thus vnder a pretence of enioying their owne liberty and freedome they breake the bonds, and scorne the rules of all true Christian obedience. Now their folly appeareth by this place, because howsoeuer they seem desirous of freedome and make shew to disdaine it (as the Iewes did) to be bound to any[t]: yet in the meane time they forget to pluck their necks out of the yoke of sinne, but suffer that to reigne in them, and are altogether in bondage thereunto. They account themselues iolly fellowes, because they can talke presumptuously, and set their mouth against Heauen [u], and can say, Who is Lord ouer vs? Setting all instruction at naught, and making a iest of euery good thing. But for all that, the matter being well looked into, they will proue themselues the veriest slaues, and the baseſt vassals vnder heauen. For what baser thing then sinne? And how base then are they, which giue themselues ouer thereunto, who as soone as they feele their corrupt hearts prouoke them to any thing, doe presently set themselues to performe the same? Many such slaues euery place is full of. The Adulterer is a slaue to his sin, he is wholly at the command thereof, he is many times studying and musing how to compasse it, how closely to carry it, and to satisfie his vncleane and beastly desires. The Drunkard is a vassall to his sin, because it is his life and businesse to set himselfe to the committing of it, to get money to bestow on it, to gather company, that he may haue fellowes in it, to rise early to follow it [x], to make his body strong and mighty [y] to beare it. The couetous person is a drudge to his money, he is such a seruant to it, as the Centurions seruants were to him [z]. If money say to him, Goe, he trudgeth strait: if it say Come, it hath him at a becke: if it bid him, Doe this, be it neuer so vile, vniust, or vnlawfull, he doth it by and by. So the scorner and scoffer at the Word, is euen a villen to his own profanenes, he cannot secret his contempt, his heart is full, if the Diuell bid him speake, hee cannot be silent, he must needs shoote the arrowes of bitter and disgracefull words [a], against Gods truth. So the malicious man, the vncharitable person, his poyson raigneth in his mortall body, all his members are weapons of vnrighteousnesse, his tongue to raile, and all that euer he can do to worke reuenge. Many such particulars might be insisted vpon [b], but the briefe of all is this, that albeit men think themselues at liberty when they can liue licentiously, yet if we wil iudge righteous iudgement, there is no gally-slaue in the world liueth in greater seruility then he which liues in bondage to his owne corruptions. If men therefore doe desire liberty and affect freedome, let them then labour for this chiefly, to bee freed from the bondage of sinne: and let vs all learne this; to take heed of secret taking pleasure, and of delighting in the lusts and allurements of sinne, of studying and deuising with our selues, for the accomplishment of Sin. It is the Lords request, that we should giue him our Hearts [c]: though we may sometime be ouercaried by infirmity, and fall into euill, yet beware of suffering our hearts to be ensnared with the pleasures [d] and deceitfulnesse of sinne [e]. Woe vnto them (saith the Prophet) that imagine iniquity vpon their Beds [f], such doe make sinne their very Trade, and are called the seruants of sinne [g].

Secondly, out of that which hath bin spoken, there may be a good vse made in regard of the trial of euery mans estate. He which would know for his comfort, how it fareth with him in respect of his soule, let him sift and examin himself, how he stands affected towards sin. The chiefe seate of the kingdom of sin, is the heart; if he hath lost that, the strength of his kingdome is taken from him: If thou seest thy secret corruption in some good measure, & loatheſt it, & laboreſt against it, and desireſt to be deliuered from it, & art woe with thy selfe for the power and preuailing of it: oh, it is a good signe; these fruits are to be found in none but in Gods children. If when thou heareſt so much spoken of the abundant corruption that is in mans heart, thou maruelleſt what it meaneth, hauing in thy selfe no feeling of any such thing: or if seeing some things amisse in thy self thou lamenteſt them not, thou groaneſt not vnder the burden of them, thou laboureſt not to reforme them, thou haſt no reason to be glad of this, or to take contentmēt in it; it is so with none, but only with the slaues of sin, & the bondmen of iniquity: and to thee which art thus enthralled, I say as Salomon doth to him, that hath snared himselfe with rash suretishipe [h], Giue no sleep to thine eyes, nor slumber to thine eye-lids: get thee out of this bondage as soone as it is possible.

a Pſal. 34. 14. Iſa. 1. 16, 17. Rom. 12. 9.

The diuiſion of the words.

For order in handling this latter Exhortation, wee are to take it thus: That the drift and ſcope of it being to preſſe holy obedience, there are in it ſet down two degrees of obedience: the firſt is, to giue our ſelues to God; the ſecond is, to giue our members: Betwixt both theſe are inſerted a reaſon to enforce them both (As they that are aliue from the dead.) Of theſe in order. The great degree of holy Obedience, is to giue our ſelues vnto God. Out of the Greeke[b] it ſignifieth properly thus much, to preſent our ſelues vnto God, or, to tender our ſeruice and duty vnto him. It is a ſpeech borrowed from the manner of faithfull and dutifull diſpoſed ſeruants, who are wont to offer themſelues into the preſence of thoſe whom they follow, thereby making ſhew, that they are preſt and ready to vndergoe what ſeruice ſhall bee enioyned them. For this cauſe, in the Scripture ſeruants are deſcribed by ſuch a kind of ſpeaking; as in the ſpeech of the Queene of Sheba to Salomon, Happy are theſe thy ſeruants which ſtand euer before thee[c]: that is, which are euer at hand to doe thee ſeruice. So of Gehazi it is ſaid, Hee went in and ſtood before his Maſter[d]: that is, he went to ſee whether his maſter had ought whereabout to employ him. So alſo in the Pſalme, The eyes of ſeruants are ſaid to looke vnto the hand of their maſters[e], which kindes of geſtures are teſtimonies and ſignes of great attendance. To this kind of faſhion, the Apoſtle alludeth here in this place, and his meaning is, That as true and wel-affected ſeruants are wont to offer themſelues to the ſight and preſence of their maſters, therein making ſhew of forwardneſſe to doe their beſt ſeruice, according as they ſhall be employed; ſo we ſhould alſo ſet our ſelues before God (as it were) ſeeming deſirous to haue ſome occaſion giuen vs, to performe ſome part of that duty, which we perſwade our ſelues we owe vnto him. This is the true meaning of this firſt branch: Giue our ſelues vnto God.

e Pſal. 123. 2.

Being thus expounded, it preſſeth vpon euery good Chriſtian, who would be thought Gods ſeruant, two duties: firſt, willingneſſe to be employed in the matters of duty and ſeruice to God: ſecondly, contentedneſſe to bee directed in the ſame. For ſo hee that yeeldes himſelfe to the ſeruice and command of another (if he be as he ought) is ſo diſpoſed, that hee is both glad to doe ſeruice, and content alſo to frame himſelfe to ſuch directions as are giuen him for the order and manner of his ſeruice. Euery maſter which hath others vnder him, wiſheth theſe two qualities in his ſeruant: firſt, that hee ſhould be willing to doe him ſeruice: we are wont to ſay many times, that we would as liefe not haue a thing done, as not to haue it done willingly: ſecondly, that hee ſhould bee content to bee ordered: for each man in authority claymeth it as a priui-

ledge, to haue matters done according to his owne minde. So that in common reason, this Giuing vp our selues vnto God, doth require of vs these two fore-named duties: of which I will speake apart.

The first thing is, that there must be willingnesse to bee employed in any part of obedience and seruice vnto God. It is the chiefe thing which the Lord requireth: My sonne giue me thy heart[f]. It is the first thing he looketh for, that our secret and inward parts doe take a kind of delight and pleasure in obedience. Wee heard before, that whereas the children of God in many things are trespassers aswell as the vngodly, the difference is, that the one sinneth willingly, the other with striuing: and this difference in the secret disposition maketh a difference in the sinne: so also it is in this case: In many things to the eye and opinion of man, the wicked goe as far as the most religious: all the difference is, in the intent and affection of the heart: the one doth it affectionately, the other formally; the one for loue of the duty, the other for some by-respects. Like to that which the Apostle speaketh of the Preachers of his time, some preach Christ through enuie and strife, and some of good will[g] The outward action was in both kindes alike, they both preached Christ, but in the affection of the heart, they were most vnlike. That which is said of giuing Almes, The Lord loueth a cheerefull giuer[h], may bee well applied to all other parts of Christian obedience: The Lord loueth a cheerefull hearer, one who is swift to heare[i]: hee loueth a cheerfull keeper of the Sabbath, one that calleth that day a delight to consecrate it[k]: Hee loueth a cheerefull commer to the Sacrament, that is euen glad within himselfe of such an opportunity: he loueth a cheerefull Suter, who out of the abundance of his heart powreth out his soule before him[l]: he loueth a Magistrate that hath courage for the Truth[m], that hath a kind of felicity in vsing his authority to the maintenance of Gods glory: he loueth a Minister, who feedeth the flocke which dependeth on him, caring for it not by constraint, but willingly, and of a ready mind[n]. This willing mind is a thing so pleasing vnto God, that it supplieth a great many of other defects: If there be first a willing mind (saith the Apostle) it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not[o]. We pray daily, that Gods will may be done by vs here in Earth, as it is in Heauen[p]. Now the Angels in heauen doe the will of God, willingly, speedily, and faithfully[q]. I remember what Dauid saith of the Sunne, that being placed in the heauens, and hauing his going appointed him from the one end to the other, hee hath as it were, a kind of alacrity and cheerefulnesse in him, to run the course, and to doe the office which is appointed him, He reioyceth like a mighty man to runne his race[r]. Now as Salomon would haue vs learne somewhat euen of the Pismire[s], and Christ of the Foules of the aire[t], and of the Lillies of the field[u], so we may not vnfitly bee bidden, to goe to the Sunne, to behold him in the firmament, and thereby to learne this lesson, that there should be a gladnesse and a reioycing in vs, to do the will of God in any thing whatsoeuer hee shall bee pleased to enioyne. These things may serue for the proofe of this doctrine.

The chiefe vse of this point is, to reproue our heauinesse and lumpishnesse, our want of quickenesse and of spirit in the performance of those duties which God requireth of vs. Some things (good in themselues) we doe, but it is as in a kind of necessity, and (as it were) by constraint, to satisfie law, or to keepe custome, but the life which ought to be in the seruice of God, that is wanting. Many heare the word, but they take no pleasure in hearing. Many apply themselues to the outward duties of the Sabbath, but it is not their delight, it is not the ioy of their soules to keepe it holy. In prayer, many come neere vnto the Lord with their mouth, and honour him with their lips, but remoue their hearts far from him[*]. There be which giue somewhat to those which want, but they doe it grudgingly[x], they be not (as the Apostle saith) ready to distribute[y]: there be men in office, who sometime looke to some mis-orders, but it is a burthen to them to bee so employed they cannot abide to be ſo encombred. There be miniſters that preach, but they doe it not of a ready mind; it is not their good will to deale vnto their people the [z] 1 Theſſ. 2. 8. Goſpell of God[z]. Thus I ſay, though ſome outward duties required, are done by ſome, yet the heart is not poſſeſſed with the loue of that which is done; which is indeed the chiefe grace and beauty of the action. Let this then bee the firſt thing which we learne hence: the firſt part of Chriſtian obedience is, for a man to giue vp himſelf vnto the Lord, to tender and make proffer of his ſeruice to him: againe, the firſt thing required in giuing our ſelues to God, is a certaine inward reioycing, that there is occaſion and opportunity offered vnto vs, to teſtifie and make knowne the good affection of our hearts by outward obedience.

The 2. Doct. The ſecond thing comprehended vnder this duty of giuing our ſelues vnto the Lord, is (as hath been ſaid) contentednesse to bee ordered and directed by him in all things. So much the very maner of ſpeaking neceſſarily doth imploy: for it doth inſinuate this, namely, that we are to reſigne ouer all the right which wee may ſeeme to haue in our ſelues, vnto the Lord, and to reſt wholly at his diſpoſing, taking no courſe but only ſuch as he ſhall be pleaſed to allow vs. This is to giue our ſelues to [a] Luke 9. 23. the Lord. If any man (ſaith Chriſt) will be my Diſciple, let him deny himſelfe[a]. The firſt Leſſon to be learned by him, which will be one of Chriſts followers, is the deniall of himſelfe: he muſt learne to diſclaime his owne will, to renounce his owne affections, to leaue off to be led by his owne priuate diſpoſition, and to yeeld vp himſelfe to bee guided and ordered by the Lord. How often did Da- [b] Pſal. 119. 10. uid make that prayer: Let me not wander from thy commandement[b], O Lord teach [c] Verſe 12. me thy ſtatutes[c], Make me to vnderſtand the way of thy Precepts[d], Teach me the way [d] Verſe 27. of thy ſtatutes[e]. Direct me in the path of thy Commandements[f], Incline my heart to thy [e] Verſe 33. teſtimonies[g], Direct my ſteps in thy word[h]? They who are acquainted with Dauids [f] Verſe 35. Pſalmes, cannot but bee priuy to Dauids deſires herein: namely, that hee was [g] Verſe 36. growne to this reſolution, both in the matters of Gods worſhip, and in the [h] Verſe 133. things which did concerne his ordinary conuerſation, to ſubmit him wholly to the Lords diſpoſing. Paul ſaith of the children of God, that they are not their [i] 1 Cor. 6. 19. owne[i]: the Lord hath an intereſt in them by creation, but more eſpecially by Redemption: and hereby they are bound to ſubiect all that is in them, euen from the firſt and more ſecret thought of the heart, to the laſt act of outward performance, to that courſe which he (in whoſe ſole & abſolute power we are) ſhall be pleaſed in his wiſedome to preſcribe. The ſame Apoſtle ſaith of himſelfe; That when it pleaſed God to reueale Chriſt vnto him, hee communicated [k] Gal. 1. 16. not with Fleſh and Blood[k], he ſtood neither to the aduice of his owne heart, nor to the direction of others, but preſently conformed himſelfe to that which was appointed him. When God firſt called Abraham, and bad him to get him out of [l] Gen. 12. 1. his country, and from his kindred and from his fathers houſe[l], if Abraham had then communed with his owne heart concerning this point, hee ſhould haue found many fleſhly reaſons to haue kept him from obedience. It would haue come into his mind, that he was now in yeers, and therefore vnfit for trauaile: that here he had been borne and bred, and brought vp; here he had ſome thing to liue vpon: and therefore it could bee no wiſdome for him to leaue a certainty for an vncertainty, to goe hee knew not whither, among a ſtarnge people: yet it is recorded of him, and left as a commendable example to all poſterities, that hee neuer ſtood to debate the matter, but euen at the firſt forſooke all and departed. Thus did Abraham giue himſelfe vnto God: agreeable to this was [m] Math. 4. 20. the obedience of Simon and Andrew[m]: They ſtraightway (ſaith the Text) leauing [n] Math. 9. 9. their nets, followed Chriſt. The ſame is ſaid of Matthew[n], Ieſus ſaid to him, Follow me; and he aroſe and followed him. Theſe are very fit examples of this doctrine, and confirme this point; that it is a maine and ſpeciall part of Chriſtian obedience, for a man to giue ouer himſelfe wholly to the Lords diſpoſing, to remember, that beeing now become a Chriſtian, hee is in the ſtate of a ſouldier, who hauing receiued preſt mony, is no more his owne man, but is alone at the ordering of his Captaine, and ſo is he likewiſe in the Lords power, and muſt ſtriue to frame himſelfe only to his will.

The vſe of this point is, to let vs ſee how farre we deceiue our ſelues in our imagination. We will needs be thought to be the Lords ſeruants, and to haue giuen our ſelues ouer wholly vnto him: but yet when we are looked into, wee ſhall be found to faile in a principall part of ſeruice. For why? We will be ſaid to be his ſeruants, yet we will be led by our owne diſcretion: we would be indeed but as it were Gods retayners. Retayners (wee know) are willing to belong to a Gentleman, but yet it is but for their owne priuate aduantage, for their countenance, or for the auoyding of ſome other charges; in the meane time they would haue their owne liberty, to follow their owne buſineſſes, to liue at their own houſes, to come and goe at their owne pleaſure: ſuch ſeruants men generally would be to the Lord; willing they be to ſhroud themſelues vnder that name, becauſe they thinke, that in the end it will goe well with ſuch; and it may be alſo, they thinke it a diſgrace to be ſaid to be of no Religion: yet for all that, they are loth to be tied, they deſire to be free ſtill, and to be (as it were) at their owne diſpoſing. Thus (I ſay) there be many, that will needs bee reputed to be the Lords, yet are but as in the nature of Retayners: when the Lord lookes for ſeruice, then are they to ſeeke, and are employed in the doing of themſelues ſeruice. Hence it is, that in the matters of Gods worſhip, men (termed Gods ſeruants) will by no meanes bee perſwaded to enquire after what faſhion Gods pleaſure is to be ſerued: but looke how they thinke good, how the cuſtome hath been, and how the moſt doe, ſo he ſhall be ſerued; if that ſeruice like him not, hee is like to haue no other at their hands. So in other things, tell them; thus it is written, thus hath God commanded, this is his holy pleaſure, this is that which hee requireth, this hath he reuealed, this is his will; they make no reckoning of it, they looke no further then their owne priuate, either profit, or delight, or credit amongſt men. Now iudge in indifferency, how the Lord ſhall account vs to be his, when, albeit wee profeſſe ſo much, yet wee liue as if wee were our owne, and did owe neither homage nor duty, nor any manner of obedience vnto him. Let any man meaſure it by his owne caſe. Imagine thou hadſt a ſeruant that liued in thy houſe, and did eate at thy Table, and receiued wages from thee: if thou command this, or that, he notwithſtanding makes light of it; if it be fitting to his owne humour, perhaps he will not ſticke to do it, otherwiſe he will altogether neglect it: what wilt thou ſay or thinke in ſuch a caſe? If a neighbour aske thee, and ſay; what? is this your man? thou wilt ſay; Truly I know not well, whether I may ſay he is my man, or no: here he liueth with me, and hath meat, and drinke, and wages of me, but nothing is there which I can get him to doe for mee further then himſelfe liſteth, he taketh himſelfe for a wiſer man then I, and refuſeth to doe that which I command him; and therefore I meane to rid my hands of him as ſoone as it is poſſible: This is true in mens affaires. It is true alſo in the matters of God; for if I be a maſter, where is my feare, ſaith the Lord of Hoaſts °. So that if thou calleſt thy ſelfe Gods ſeruant, and ſayeſt, thou hopeſt that God hath a part in thee, be ſure he doth not ſo account of thee, ſo long as thou refuſeſt to be ruled by him: If thou wilt follow thine owne wayes, and be led by the luſtes of thine owne heart, doing nothing which he calleth for at thy hands, but only ſo farre forth as it ſorts with thine owne humour; well thou mayeſt ſay, thou art his, but certenly the Lord diſclaymeth thee: thou mayeſt preſumptuouſly terme thy ſelfe one of his ſeruants, but be ſure in the day of triall he will neuer owne thee. Remember we then this Inſtruction, that as we muſt be willing and glad to doe God ſeruice, ſo wee muſt alſo yeeld our ſelues to follow ſuch directions for his ſeruice, as hee in his Word ſhall bee pleaſed to preſcribe: this is to giue our ſelues vnto him. Let vs conſider what the Apoſtle ſaith, As many as are p Rom.8.14. led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſonnes of God p. Onely they are the Lords, who ſubmit themſelues to his guidance: He who maketh either cuſtome, or Law, or Time, or his owne profit, or his vaine delight, or his idle and ſuppoſed eſtimation, to be the rule of his courſe, the ſame is none of Gods. It is ſaid by the q Iſa.30.21. Prophet q, that the Eares of Gods people ſhall heare a word behind them, ſaying; This is the way, walke in it, &c. All who are the Lords, heare this direction, and make conſcience to follow it to the vtmoſt. And thus much for the firſt part of Chriſtian obedience, Giue your ſelues vnto God: which (as wee haue ſeen) diuideth it ſelfe into two branches; the one, willingneſſe to be employed in the Lords buſineſſes: the other, contentedneſſe to be ordered by him in the following of his buſineſſes.

I come to the ſecond degree of obedience, which is, to giue our members as Weapons of Righteouſneſſe vnto God. This degree doth eſpecially concerne the practiſe of holy duties. The former is but (as it were) a teſtification of a mans purpoſe to doe God ſeruice; this is the very act and perfection of Obedience. The manner of ſpeaking here vſed by the Apoſtle, is quickly vnderſtood, if wee remember what hath been ſaid before, in the opening of the former part; For as hee is ſaid to giue his members as Weapons of Vnrighteouſneſſe vnto ſinne, who employeth all his powers and faculties in the furtherance and execution of that euill, whereunto the corruption of his owne heart ſecretly doth encline; ſo hee is ſaid to giue his members as Weapons of Righteouſneſſe vnto God, who ſets himſelfe by all meanes to bee a practiſer of that good, to which the Spirit of God dwelling in him, priuily doth perſwade. This is the true meaning.

The 3. Doct. The Inſtruction which the place affords, is this: That it is the duty of euery obedient Chriſtian to turne his whole ſtrength, to employ all that euer is in him, either in ſoule, or body, in the performance of that righteouſneſſe which the Lord hath reuealed and made knowne vnto vs in his Word. This is the ſumme of that which wee are taught hence: How good reaſon there is for it, it is no hard thing to diſcouer.
r 1 Cor.4.7. The Apoſtle ſaith r; That whatſoeuer wee haue, wee haue receiued it. It is the Lord who hath furniſhed vs with Vnderſtanding, Will, Memory, and Affections. It is hee who hath giuen vs bodies adorned with ſundry faculties, of Seeing, Hearing, Going, ſpeaking, &c. It is hee which continueth the ſtrength and wel-being of all theſe for our vſe and benefit. Now in reaſon, that which is receiued from him, ought to bee employed for him: Our conceit and vnderſtanding to know his will; our memory, to hold faſt the matters which doe concerne his Kingdome; our affections to embrace that which he commands, and to abhorre that which hee forbids; our eyes to behold his creatures, thereby to be ſtirred vp to glorifie him; our eares to liſten to his Word: our tongues to ſound out the praiſes of his Name, to pray to him, to giue thankes for his bleſſings: our hands to reach out to the neceſſities of our brethren; our feete to carry vs to the places of Gods ſeruice: ſo that (I ſay) euen in common reaſon, ſeeing all our powers and parts are from him, they are to be giuen vp to him, and to be thought then beſt employed, when any thing is vndertaken by them, which may tend to the aduancement and furtherance of his glory. Wee know the tenor of the commandement; Thou ſhalt loue the Lord thy God with all ſ Luk.10.27. thine heart, and with all thy ſoule, and with all thy ſtrength, &c ſ. The Lord hath giuen all, he hath reaſon to require all: and looke what treachery it were for a ſouldier in the field, hauing regiſtred his name, and taken wages, and furniſhed himſelfe with weapons, to flie to the aduerſe part, and to vſe thoſe very weapons againſt him, from whom he firſt receiued them; the ſame is it in him, who hauing giuen his name vnto Chriſt in Baptiſme, and there promiſed to fight manfully vnder his banner againſt ſinne, yet after falleth backe, and diuerteth teth all his ſtrength and skill to the aduancement of Sathans kingdome, and to the promoting and furtherance of iniquity.

The vſe of this doctrine, is, as to vrge vpon vs that duty which we of right owe vnto the Lord; namely, of giuing the ſtrength and power of all that is in vs vnto him, ſo to condemne our generall defect herein. For marke how vnwilling and backward men for the moſt part are in this duty. How hard a matter it is to perſwade them to imploy their iudgements and conceits, and that power of vnderſtanding which God hath giuen them, to the ſearching out of Gods Truth, and to the getting of ſound knowledge and good iudgement in matters of religion? What a death is it to the moſt to beate their heads, or to trouble themſelues with the matters of that quality? How loath are they to labour to make their memories ſtore-houſes of good things? You ſhall haue many that will take a great deale of paines to learn Ballads and idle Songs, who would grudge to learne a few Queſtions and Anſwers of a Catechiſme. How liuely and quicke are mens affections in matters of vanity, matters of profit, matters of no moment in compariſon: and yet how dead, and vterly without life in the beſt occaſions, how dul and without Spirit in matters of Religion? How apt are mens tongues to talke of the things of this world? How euen eloquent is euery man in matters of that nature; you ſhall ſee few who want words to expreſſe that which they haue conceiued: but (alas) how mute, how barren, how harſh, when they come to ſpeake of Gods matters? How able are mens feete to trauell, and their bodies to endure iourneyes, for their profit, or delight? how little reckoning they make of wayes or weathers vpon theſe occaſions? But how ſoone bee they weary, and how quickly doth weather and way diſcourage them, when their bodies and legs are to be imployed in repairing to the publike places of Gods ſeruice? How eaſie is it with ſome to keepe their eyes open, euen whole nights ſometimes, at idle gaming; and how hard for the ſame perſons to hold vp their head one poore houre at the hearing of a Sermon? How quickly doe men liſten when any matter of profit is related to them? how dull of hearing[t], when the holy Word of God is preached vnto them? How open are mens hands, in taking whatſoeuer they can lay hold of? one for bribery, another for vſury, another for falſe gaine in buying and ſelling; another in pilfering, euery man for his aduantage: but (alas) how faſt fingered and cloſe handed are they, when any thing ſhould come from them to a good purpoſe? How ready are many to be at charges, not caring what they ſpend; ſome in hawking, ſome in reuelling, ſome in brauery for their backs, and yet murmure at a penny to be beſtowed to a charitable vſe? This is not to giue our members as Weapons of Righteouſneſſe vnto God, but rather as Weapons of Iniquity againſt God? Let vs then end this point, and let this bee the concluſion: You ſee what wee are all here commanded, euen to imploy all to the ſeruice and honour of him, from whom wee haue receiued all. God hath giuen vs power to conceiue, let vs giue that power to the learning of his will: he hath enabled vs to remember, let vs imploy that faculty to the hoording vp of good things. He hath giuen vs hearing, let our eares be open to receiue Inſtruction, and to hearken what the Lord God will ſay[u]: Hee hath vouchſafed vs many good parts both of body and minde, let vs conſecrate them all to the carefull and religious practiſe of holy duties. Thou who haſt been a ſwearer, let not thy tongue be any more a Weapon of ſinne, to blaſpheme God, and to abuſe his glorious and fearefull name[*], but let it be an Inſtrument of honouring God. Thou who haſt been an Adulterer, let not thy body bee any more a ſinke of vncleanneſſe, but labour to poſſeſſe thy Veſſell in holineſſe and in honour[x]. Thou who haſt been a Drunkard, make not thy ſtomacke a receit of riotous ſuperfluity, and a waſter of Gods good creatures, but vſe Gods bleſſings ſo, that thou mayeſt bee the fitter for Gods ſeruice. Thou who art a Sabbath-breaker, whose feete are wont to carry thee from the house of God, sometime to the Ale-house, sometimes to viewing thy grounds, sometimes to places of misorder, and sometimes through thine owne backwardnesse, haue vtterly denied to do their office, and haue stayed thee loytering at home, let them hereafter bring thee cheerefully to the worship of thy God.

In a word, let euery man enter secretly betwixt God and his own soule into a vow, that hereafter hee will deuote all the intention of his minde, all the strength and power of his body, first to the vnderstanding, and then next to the practise and execution of those holy duties, which God hath ordained, that we should walke in them [y]. This is, to giue our selues to God, this is, to giue vp our members as weapons of holinesse to the Lord.

[y] Ephes. 2. 10.

Now followeth the reason inserted by the Apostle, to presse and perswade those two degrees of Obedience: As they that are aliue from the dead. By Dead, the Apostle vnderstands, the death of sinne, in which we are all by nature dead [z]. For albeit to speake properly, in regard of our forwardnesse by nature to commit Sinne, wee may be truly said to liue in sinne: yet inasmuch as the wages of sinne is death [a], and we so long as we are vnconuerted, are nought else but a very body of death [b]: Therefore the scripture speaking of our naturall estate, saith, we are dead in sinne: So that by men aliue from the dead, the Apostle meaneth, men quickened by the spirit of grace, men begotten againe into a new life by the Gospell, and (as himselfe also speaketh) aliue to God in Iesus Christ our Lord [c].

This new life is in all who are the Lords, inasmuch as his power towards those that beleeue, is according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead [d]. The fountaine hereof vnto the faithfull, is Iesus Christ. For as God the Father hath sealed him [e], to saue his people from their sins [f]; so he is the life [g], and he quickeneth whom he will [h]. The inward and secret agent in enliuing the dead soule of man, is the Spirit of God, who is therefore called the Spirit of Life, freeing those which shall be saued from the Law of Sinne and of Death [i].

The 4. Doct. The doctrine then rising from hence, is this; That their very conuersion it selfe from the state of condemnation into the state of grace, doth vrge the practise of new obedience vpon those which thinke themselues to be Gods seruants. This is cleere by the course and carriage of this place: It is Pauls reason, why sinne is to bee withstood, and obedience with the fullest intention of our endeauour to bee giuen vnto God, because if wee be Christians indeed, wee bee freed from the bondage and death of Sinne, and by the power of the resurrection of Iesus Christ are raised vp to the life of Righteousnesse: It is the same with that in the beginning of this Chapter [m], Shall wee continue still in sinne? God forbid: How shall we that are dead to sinne, liue yet therein? That is; If the power of Christs death hath killed sinne in vs, and euen deaded the strength and vigour of our naturall corruption, how shall we then, nay, how can we yeeld vp our selues to the practise of it, and take delight in committing it? This point, namely, that a different manner of conuersation from their former, is expected of those which professe Religion, and will be reputed Christians, is as plaine and as expresse in the Scripture as any can bee. It is the principall Argument of this present Chapter, and Paul in all his Epistles aymeth at it. Iustification and Sancti-sanctification, freedome from the guilt of sinne, and freedome from the filth of sinne, deliuerance from the damnation of sinne, and deliuerance from the dominion of sinne, are still by him brought in, and taught as companions vndiuided. And it is worth the nothing, how all the particulars belonging to saluation, are vsed in the Scripture as inducements to holinesse and obedience. What is the scope of our election? that we should be holy, and without blame before God in loue [n]: why were we redeemed? that wheras heretofore our minds were set on euill works, we might now be made holy [o]; & renouncing our former vaine conuersation [p], might both in our bodies, and in our spirits glorifie God [q]. To what hath the Lord called vs? not to vncleanesse, but vnto holinesse [r]. As he which hath called you (saith Saint Peter) is holy, so be yee holy in all manner of conuersation [s]. What is the drift of all preaching? that they which are asleepe in sinne should awake, and stand vp from the dead [t], and bring forth fruites worthy amendment of life [u], liuing not after the lusts of men, but after the will of God [x]. Whereof is Baptisme a pledge and symbole vnto vs? that being grafted with Christ, to the similitude both of his death, and of his resurrection also, we should henceforth not serue sin, but walke in newnesse of life [x]. And why is the Lords Supper? Euen (as the Passeouer of old to the Israelites) to bee a signe vnto vs, and a remembrance betwixt our eyes, that the Law of the Lord may be in our mouth [y]. What doth our adoption vrge vpon vs? That we should be followers of God as deare children [z], and passe the time of our dwelling here in feare [a]. Our vnion with Christ, by which we are become euen of his flesh, and of his bones [b]: What doth it require? That we should seek those things which are aboue, and mortifie our members which are on earth [c], not taking the members of Christ [d], to make them instruments of vngodlines. Whereas the Spirit of God dwelleth [e] in those which are the Lords, what are wee thereby put in mind of? That our bodies as the Temples of the holy Ghost [f], and that therefore wee must mortifie the deeds of the body [g], and not fulfill the lusts of the flesh [h]. What worke hath faith in those that beleeue? It purifieth their hearts [i], and it worketh by loue [k]; making them in whom it is, to bee neither idle nor vnfruitfull in the knowledge of Iesus Christ [l]. The loue which wee professe to beare to God, what doth it bind vs to? To hate euill [m], and to keepe that which God commandeth [n]. That hope which ariseth out of true faith, what doth it teach? Euery man that hath it in him, to purge himselfe [o]: and in as much as hee lookes for a Sauiour from heauen, to haue his conuersation in heauen [p], and to liue soberly, righteously, and godly in the present world [q]. In one word: the profession which wee make, what doth it presse vs to? euen this in briefe, that wee should depart from iniquity [r]. Thus you see how euery specialty in the course and order of our saluation, confirmeth this doctrine of the Apostles: namely, that being now become Christians, and in our own perswasion deliuered from sin, we should liue in righteousnesse [s]. And indeed (vnlesse all the Scripture shall bee made vntrue) who so is careless of this duty, of manifesting the purgation of his conscience from dead workes, by a liuely seruice of the liuing God [t], hath no assurance of Election, no certainty of redemption by Christ, no testimony of an effectuall calling, hath not profited by preaching; his Baptisme is to him but a naked signe, he is an vnworthy commer to the Lords board, a bastard, and no true child of grace, an alient from Christ, a man void of Gods Spirit, without faith, without loue, without hope, and in briefe, a meere dissembler, one whose portion shall be among Hypocrites [u], in as much as hauing a shew of godlines, he hath vtterly denied the power thereof [x].

This point of Doctrine, meeteth full with the common euill of these times. Men take vpon them to professe religion, and to be called Christians [y], but yet are not in their conuersations, as men aliue from the dead, as new creatures [z], as persons free from sinne, and made the seruants of righteousnes [a], there is no testimony that their affections are dead to the pleasures of sinne [b], or that they are led by the Spirit

Spirit of God [a]. Looke how they were wont to liue in the seruice of lusts and diuers pleasures [b], in the vanity of their mind [c], bringing forth no fruits but the vnfruitfull workes of darkenesse [d], so they liue still, they turne euery one to their race, as the horse rusheth to the battell [e], as though Christianity were nothing but a title, and it were enough to saluation, to bee able to name Christ Iesus. Whereunto may I liken this generation? They are like vnto certaine galley-pots, and painted boxes, standing vpon the outside of Apothecaries shops, on which (to draw customers) are written the names of such and such spices and confections: but if you looke into them, you shall find nothing in them, but dust, or cob-webs, or waste and vnprofitable papers; such are they, by their profession they haue (as it were) written vpon them, holines to the Lord: but look further into them, behold and marke them in their callings and conuersation, what truth, what faithfulnes, what mercy, what bowels of compassion, what meeknesse, what humility, what peaceablenes, what withdrawing their desires from the world, may bee found amongst them; alas, you shal see little that is answerable to the outward shew. It may be truly said of them, as it was of the Church of Sardi; They haue a name that they liue, but they are dead [f], they are said to be Christians, but to speake of any true goodnesse, of any life of grace, of any quickenesse of Religion, they are euen starke dead, vtterly quailed; and euen now ready to bee cast off as a branch [g], and to bee left as fuell for that vnquencheable fier [h]. Let all hollow and fruitlesse professours thinke vpon this: In the day of Christ it is not a name and a profession that shall excuse vs; if we haue not broken off our old sinnes [i], but lye still dead and groueling in them, bee our opinion now and conceit what it will, God will plucke vs out of his Tabernacle, and root vs out of the land of the liuing [k]; and wee shall neuer see the felicity of his chosen [l]. Learne a similitude from outward things. An husbandman or master of an orchard, howbeit hee may beare with the nakednesse of a tree, in the winter season, hoping that yet there remaineth some life in the roote, which in conuenient time will shew it selfe; yet when the Spring is come, and the Sunne breaketh forth in his strength, cherishing the creatures on earth, and drawing out the heate which is hid in the rootes, into euery branch, if yet then it remaineth barren, shewing no buds, nor giuing no hope of fruit, hee beginneth to bee cleane out of conceit with it, and resolueth, that it shall trouble the ground no longer, but shall make wood for the fier: Euen so the Lord, who (as Christ saith) is the grand-Husbandman [m] of his Church, though hee might seeme in a sort to beare with vs in the daies of our former ignorance, when we had little or no meanes to draw vs on, but were euen like trees in a hungry soyle, hauing neither Sunne to warme vs, nor showers to refresh vs, yet now, the Spring being come, the light of knowledge shining cleerely vnto vs, and the Lord watering vs from heauen with the sweet deawes of his most blessed Word, if yet wee continue in our wonted barrennesse, without any buds of grace, without any fruits of holinesse, how can wee thinke that the Lord should possibly forbeare vs, how should wee escape the Axe of his Iustice to bee hewen downe, and prepared for the fier? Againe, to vrge it yet further: If the husbandman come the first yeere looking for fruite, and finde nothing but leaues, hee may perhaps impute it to the vnseasonablenesse of the yeere, or to the want of dressing; and so, bestowing more cost, may liue in hope for the next yeere, or the third yeere: but if still his expectation bee answered with leaues onely; or, if there bee some poore fruit, it bee, when it is tasted, soure and vnsauorie, hee is soo much the more discontented with himselfe, that hee hath so long forborne it, neither shall any man perswade him any longer to endure it. So the Lord our God, viewing and beholding vs here, which come to this place, although yet hitherto the greatest part of vs haue brought foorth nothing

SIR, be pleased I beseech you, to accept from me this small present; small in respect of the matter of it, for no man can treate of a more worthy subiect,) but in regard of my manner of handling it, who liuing here by Gods prouidence, in a Country Congregation, haue bound my selfe to study so to speake, as that I may not exceede the conceit of common hearers. It may be, notwithstanding, that this my plainnesse (through Gods mercy, who doth make his power perfect through weaknesse[a]) may something further your vnderstanding, and enkindle your affection in and towards that great grace of Adoption, the conueiance whereof vnto vs, was the very end for which the Sonne of God did debase himselfe to become a man[b]. If my endeauour herein, shall be blessed of God, (according to the desire of my soule) to the edifying of you in that honourable Faith[c], which dwelt sometimes in your worthy Father, and which I am verily perswaded dwelleth in you also[d], I shall much reioyce, and glorifie God in that behalfe. If it fall out otherwaies, that some defect in my workmanship, doe make this heauenly matter to be lesse effectuall, yet giue leaue I pray you, to these papers to lie by you, as a testimony of my desire, to shew my selfe (for your vndeserued respect vnto me) not vnthankeful. So forbearing, to interrupt you further, I againe intreate you to receiue this messenger of my duty, and to keepe him with you, as a pledge of my setled purpose, both to labour to deserue your loue, and to be a continuall petitioner to the throne of grace, that you may bee kept by the power of God through faith vnto saluation[e].

Behold what loue the Father hath shewed vnto vs, that we should be called the Sonnes of God.

I Remember the holy policy vsed by Paul being at Athens [a], seeing among them an altar inscribed, To the vnknowne God: and finding their humor of hearing newes, hee tooke aduantage thereby to further his purpose of preaching to them the true Iehouah: Whom ye then ignorantly worship (saith he) him shew I vnto you [b]: You pretend worship to an vnknowne God: behold, here a God, whom you haue not knowne: you listen for newes; see here that which before this time you haue not heard of. My desire is in this to bee a follower of Paul at this time. Great is mens readines (chiefly in these vnsetled and giddy times) to gaze vpon strange and vncouth sights, to run to see things that are either rare, as hauing been seldome seen, or else exquisite, as abounding with Art, and full of inuention: I haue thought it fitting therefore, to quicken your attention vnto me this day; by promising some kind of satisfaction vnto this seeing humour; and haue therefore chosen out this text; by the very first word whereof, as by some solemne proclamation, we are called to the viewing of a matter, which is without all president; the worth also whereof is such, that we may well with a kind of astonishment and amazednesse admire it, but the eloquence of no man aliue, is able fully and effectually to expresse it. Behold what loue the Father hath shewed vnto vs, that we should be called the Sonnes of God. I beseech you afford me your heedfullest obseruation, while I shall point my finger vnto those particulars which are most remarkable in this sentence.

[b] Verse 23.

And first I will open the words, and then secondly the Doctrines and iustructions rising out of the words. In the words there are two things chiefly: first, what this meanes, sonnes of God; secondly, what this, To be called the sonnes of God. First, sonnes of God, is a title vsed diuers waies; the Sonne of God is either by nature, or by creation, or by participation, or by a general profession, or by adoption. The Son of God by nature, is Iesus Christ alone, who is therefore termed Gods only begotten Sonne [c], and his proper Sonne [d]. The regenerate also are said to be borne of God [e]; but that is a borrowed speech, spiritually to be vnderstood of a new creation, but not of any naturall descent. Sonnes by creation, are all both Angels and men: so the Angels are termed the children of God [f]. And, that God is the Father of vs all by creation, is proued by that of the Prophet, Haue wee not all one Father, hath not one God made vs? Sonnes of God by participation, are all Magistrates and men intrusted with the sword of ciuill authority [h], because God dealeth with them as Princes with their children, to whom they communicate some part of their owne Maiesties. Sonnes by generall profession, are all which liue in the visible Church, and haue a shew of Godlines, and professe to worship God in Christ; so the people professing true Religion before the flood are called the Sonnes of God [i]. Sonnes by adoption, are sonnes chosen thereunto, not being so by nature: thus Moses may be said to haue been the adopted child of Pharaohs daughter: he was as her sonne [k]: and he refused to be called the son of Pharaohs daughter [l]. And so Hester was Mordecai his adopted child; Hee tooke her for his own daughter [m]. Now, when this Sonne-ship by adoption, is applied to those whom God chooseth, there are two kinds of it mentioned in Scripture: The former of which is but a resemblance and figure of the latter. Of it is that

o Rom. 9.4. other thing meant, but Gods choosing that people out of all nations vnder heauen, to be his peculiar people: which albeit it were an high fauour (the glory whereof did euen dazle the eies of all the world), yet, it was not properly a spirituall blessing, but a type & a shadow of that Adoption which Paul calleth p Gal. 4.5. the Adoption of sonnes p, which is that grace of God, by which he is pleased to take vs for his children in Christ, and to make vs heires together with him of eternall glory: and this is that which Saint Iohn speaketh of in this place: not of the first kind, for such we cannot be; not of the second, nor third, nor fourth; for, so are many the sonnes of God, which shall not be saued.

The second thing is, what it is, to be called the sonnes of God. It must not be so taken as though this, of being the sons of God, were a matter of title onely without substance, as when a man hath a word of respect cast vpon him, only for complements sake: but, to be called the sons of God, and to be the sons of God, are here all one: so the Scripture speaketh otherwhere; That holy thing

The points to be handeled. which are first, as lines to be drawne forth, and then after to be set out euery one with his proper filling, are these: First, that the state of Gods adoption is a glorious estate. Secondly, that it is an estate, of which it is possible for him that is inuested into it, to be assured in his own soule. Thirdly, that it is an estate vnalterable. Fourthly, that the alone spring and beginning of it is Gods loue: My text is the stocke, branching it selfe into these foure: how the life of each is deriued thence, and what fruit groweth vpon euery one, for the refreshing of our spirituall man, I shall (by Gods assistance) let you see by course.

The 1. Doct. How the first point is grounded vpon this Scripture, appeares by the admiration, which the Apostle breakes out into, wondring at the infiniteness of Gods mercy, who should vouchsafe vnto the sons of men such a prerogatiue, and prouoking other to ioyne with him therein, as though it were a matter singular from all example, that we should be aduanced to so great an honour to be the Sonnes of God. See (saith he) what an euidence God hath giuen of his loue, and consider we well, whether any of our thoughts be able to comprehend the hight, and length, and depth, and breadth thereof, that wee, euen we, the children of wrath, the heires of Hell, and sons of the diuell, should now be stiled and entituled the children of God. Thus the manner of the Apostles speaking, who is like a man rauisht in spirit, and strucke with astonishment; at the beholding of this fauor, doth iustifie my first collection touching the glory and dignity of adoption. Vpon this point my meaning is now a little to insist, not out of any hope I haue to set out at the full a benefit so inestimable (for the tongue s 1 Cor. 13. 1. *of men & angels*s cannot reach it) but out of a desire somwhat to help your conceit, and to let you see (as God said to Moses of himselfe) as it were the Back- t Exod. 33.23. *parts*t of that, the perfect glory wherof, the dimnesse of our minds, who (as the u 1 Cor. 13.12. Apostle saith)u doe see but in a glasse darkely, be not able to behold. For which cause I will first assure you, that when I shall haue said all that possibly I can deuise touching it, I shall be as farre from the infiniteness of the benefit it selfe, as when I began first to declare it.

x Heb. 12.1. I could easily collect euen a cloud x of circumstances for the enlarging the glory and worth of this estate; I will reduce all to three heads, lest by multiplying of points, I should confound your memories. The first is the excellency of the meanes to procure it to vs. The ſecond is the maieſty of the perſon, by whoſe name (through our adoption) we are entitled. The third is, the prerogatiues and priuiledges that are belonging to it. Theſe three rightly weighed in the ballance of the ſanctuary, will bring vs to ſome vnderſtanding of the ſurpaſſing and exceeding weight of glory [y] that we are called vnto, when we are called the ſons of God. Firſt, if the worth of a thing be to be meaſured by the price giuen for it, wel then may the Son-ſhip of Gods elect be valued at the higheſt rate, for which there was paid ſuch a matchleſſe price. It was not obtained like the Romane Burgeſhip, for a great ſum [z]: nor for an hundred fore-skins of ſome vncircumciſed Philiſtims, which was Dauids dowry for his wife to king Saul [a]: nor for 30 ſheets and 30 change of garments [a], the appointed reward for him that could vnfold Sampſons riddle [b], no nor yet for ſuch a Crown as was taken from the king of Rabbah, which weighed a talent of gold with precious ſtones [c] (the redemptiõ of ſoules was much more precious [d]): but the price was this, the Sonne of God muſt debaſe himſelf to become the Son of man: God ſent his Son made of a woman, that we might receiue the adoption of ſons [e]: neuer, a perſon of greater ſtate (he is one that thinkes it no robery to be equal with God [f], nay he is very God [g]: Neuer, a debaſement of lower pitch; in this, he made himſelfe of no reputation [h], a worme, and not a man, a ſhame of men: who is then able ſufficiẽtly to admire the dignity of this eſtate (to be the Son of God) which was vnprocurable, ſaue only by this infinit price, the making of him to become nothing, by whom God in the beginning made euery thing?

Secondly, touching the Maieſty of him whoſe name we beare being adopted, it is God (the ſons of God). Seemeth it (ſaith Dauid, being vrged by the Courtiers to entertaine the offer of Sauls daughter), a light thing to you to be a kings ſon in law [k]? and it is regiſtred as an euident proofe of Moſes faith, that he ſhould preferre the rebuke of Chriſt, before the title of the Sonne of Pharaohs daughter [l]. Between God and Saul, what compariſon? betweene the Lord of heauen, and the daughter of Pharaoh what proportion? Is it no light thing to bee the ſonne of Saul? is it no petty honour to be called the ſon of Pharaohs daughter? and ſhall we thinke it a ſmall prerogatiue to be the ſon of God? Dauid might be the ſonne in law of Saul, and yet not thereby entitled to the Crowne. Moſes might be the reputed ſon of Pharaohs daughter, and yet be ſtill but in the ſtate of a ſubiect: All the ſons of God, though they be as the ſeed of Abraham, like the ſtarres whom none can number [m], yet they be heires euery one: If we be ſonnes, wee are alſo heires [n]: It is your Fathers pleaſure to giue you the kingdome [o]. Dauid might haue been a King by the donation of Saul. Moſes a peere of Egypt, by the procurement of Pharaohs daughter: yet both of their eſtates had been lyable to hazard, for God looſeth the cellar of Kings, and powreth contempt vpon Princes [p]; and the houſes of the greateſt are but as the houſe of the ſpider, ſuddenly ſwept away with a broome [q]: but this kingdome is a kingdome that cannot be ſhaken [r]: he that is once ſeized of it, cannot be remoued.

Thirdly, the priuiledges annexed to it. Priuiledges, and immunities, & charters for the confirmation of them, are things amongſt men much gloried in; In townes incorporate, & ſocieties of that nature, they be not a little ſtood vpon: but farre more honourable things are ſpoken of thee thou child of God. Iacob made Ioſeph a coate of many colours, becauſe he loued him [s]: and God hath cloathed thee with many beautifull prerogatiues, becauſe he had a fauour vnto thee. To number them all; I may ſay with the Apoſtle [t], the time would be too ſhort, it is hard for a mans memory diſtinctly to comprize them. I will as out of a garden ſtored with beautifull flowers, gather vp two or three of the faireſt and preſent them vnto you. Only before hand let me this admoniſh you, not to looke to heare of any ſuch prerogatiues as carry with them a worldly pompe (for the kings daughter, though all to be glorious, yet it is within [u]) and it is that which Saint Peter calles the hid man of the heart [x]; which I muſt ſpeake of. x 1 Pet. 3.4.

theſe prerogatiues are to be diſtinguiſhed thus: to be either in this life, or hereafter. Touching this life, I will name you onely two: The firſt is an intereſt into Gods particular and ſpeciall prouidence. God hath a generall prouidence ouer all things: Thou openeſt thy hand, & filleſt all things liuing of thy good pleaſure[y]: Yea, ouer the beaſts, Thou Lord doeſt ſaue man and beaſt[z]: Yea, ouer the wicked, [a]The eyes of the Lord in euery place behold the euill and the good: Yea, ouer the diuels themſelues[b]; Hell and deſtruction are before the Lord Now there is in him a ſpeciall prouidence ouer his adopted ſonnes: They are moſt precious vnto him[c]. His chiefe treaſure[d]. He that toucheth them, toucheth the apple of his eye[e]. He dwelleth with them[f]. He followeth them whither ſoeuer they goe[g]. He ſtands at their right hand[h]. He holds them vp by it[i]. Hee keepes their feet[k]. He counteth their wandrings[l]. Hee numbreth their haires[m]. If they doe but ſigh, he obſerues it[n]. He giues his Angels charge ouer them[o]. They are all miniſtring ſpirits, ſent forth to miniſter for their ſakes, which ſhall be heires of ſalnation[p]. If we haue any fauour of the things of the ſpirit[q], we muſt needs adiudge this to be a great prerogatiue: For what can he want that hath ſuch a keeper? The Lord is my Shepheard, I ſhall not want[r]. All comforts, whether inward or outward, for body or ſoule, this is that liuing ſpring from which they proceed. If my wants be outward, here is my heauenly Father ſtanding by me, he knoweth what I need[ſ], and he cannot forget me[t]. If my defects be from within, he is that God of all grace[u], and ſhall fulfill all my neceſſities[x]. Need I comfort? he is the Father of mercies, and God of all conſolation[y]. Want I direction in matter of godlineſſe? he will teach me the way that I ſhall chooſe[z]. Am I ſcant in holy duties, and would faine be furthered? Hee will make me perfect in all good workes[a]. Am I falling backe, and would be confirmed? He will ſtabliſh me in euery word and good worke[b]. Am I almoſt ouertaken with ſome great offence? He will keepe me from preſumptuous ſinnes[c]. Haue I fallen by occaſion into a fault? I ſhall not be caſt off, he will put vnder his hand[d]. Am I full of infirmities, and feare the rigour of his Law? He will ſpare me, as a father ſpareth his own ſonne that ſerueth him[e]. Am I caſt downe with ſickneſſe? He will turne all my bed in my ſickneſſe[f]. Haue I receiued loſſe? He will teach me how to haue want[g]. Is my eſtate but low? He will make a little to be better vnto me, then great riches vnto the mighty[h]. Am I loded with reproches for righteouſneſſe ſake? His ſpirit of glory ſhall reſt vpon me[i]. In a word whatſoeuer may happen, All things ſhall worke together for the beſt vnto me[k]. This priuiledge of Gods eſpeciall prouidence, is that riuer of God[l], out of which flow theſe ſtreames to make glad the adopted of God.

The ſecond prerogatiue in this life, is the free vſe of Gods creatures, both for neceſſity, and for delight: This is a true ſaying, The charter anciently giuen by that great Lord of all at our firſt creation, touching the vſe of his creatures, was forfeited into the hands of the Doner by Adams fall, all our teeth were ſet on edge with that ſower grape of his firſt tranſgreſſion. It is reſtored and renewed by Chriſt, and only to thoſe who are honoured with the adoption of ſonnes, onely the heires of heauen are the right inheritors of the earth, all the reſt are but vſurpers. Be their titles to their eſtates neuer ſo good, and firme by the lawes of men; yet when matters come to ſcanning in the higheſt court of equity and Chancery before God, they ſhall all be condemned for intruders: the ſubſtance which they haue deuoured, they ſhall vomit vp, for God ſhall draw it out of their belly[m]; their very eating and ſleeping, and drinking in the aire, if they had not other ſinne, ſhall be able to condemne them. Thinke then what a priuiledge it is to be a ſonne of God, a man to be aſſured in his ſoule, that that which he hath, be it little, be it much, yet it is that which is his, by a renewed donation from the Lord, and that euery creature of God is good, and not to be refuſed by him, if it be receiued with thankſgiuing[n].

Now for the prerogatiue of the ſonnes of God, appertaining to the life to come, which way ſhall I beginne to expreſſe it, when neither eye hath ſeen, nor eare hath heard, nor hath it come into mans heart, what God hath prepared for those that loue him [o]? I remember what is registred of a certen painter, who being to expresse the sorrow of a weeping father, hauing spent his skill before, in setting out the sad passions of his children, thought it the best to present him vpon his table, to the beholders view, with his face couered, that so he might haue that griefe to be imagined by them, which he found himself vnable to set out at the full. The like must I do in this case; the glory of that glory which the sonnes of God shall hereafter enioy, I must commend it to you with a kind of silent admiration, that so you may with your selues suppose that to be infinit, which you see that I will not aduenture to expresse: yet giue me leaue to set before you, for the furtherance of your priuate meditations, a little shadow thereof, betwixt which and it, there is notwithstanding as much difference as is betwixt a drop of water, and the huge ocean Sea. When Haman was willed to speake by Ahashuerosh, what should be done to the man whom the king would honour, he (supposing that the king had no meaning to honour any but him,) said thus, Let them bring forth for him royall apparell, which the king vseth to weare, and the horse that the king vseth to ride on, and that the Crown-royall may be set vpon his head, and let the horse, and the rayment be deliuered by the hand of one of the kings most noble princes, and let them apparell the man, whom the king will honour, and cause him to ride vpon the horse through the streete of the City, and proclaime before him, Thus shall it be done vnto the man whom the King will honour [p]: So shall it be to the sons of God at the day of iudgement. First, there shall be put vpon them royall apparell, such as the King of glory, Iesus Christ was vsed to weare: Long white robes [q], the garment of saluation, the robe of righteousnesse [r]. Secondly, the horse which the King rideth vpon, I will grant them (saith Christ) to sit with me in my Throne [s]. Thirdly, the Crown-royall shall be set on their heads, Hence forth (saith Paul) is laid vp for me a crowne of righteousnesse [t]. Fourthly, this glory shall bee furthered by the hands of the kings most noble princes: for, His Angels shall gather together the Elect at that day [u], and then shall be verified the prophecy of the Psalme, this honour shall be to all his Saints [x]; so shall it be done to the men whom the Lord will honour. Thus I haue giuen you a glimpse of that future glory, leauing it to be enlarged in your priuate thoughts. And thus also I haue laboured for the iustification of my first point, to proue the glory and the dignity of the estate of Adoption, which is that Mystery which the Angels themselues doe desire to beholdy [y]; touching which, I will now adde no more, only as I haue giuen you a bill, as it were of particulars, so I will now in a word tender vnto you the grand sum of all, as I find it drawne vp by the Apostle Paul, where speaking of the adopted of God, he thus saith, All things are yours, whether it be Paul or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, whether they be things present, or things to come, euen all are yours, and yet Christs, and Christ Gods [z].

What should now be the vse of this Doctrine, or wherefore hath this dignity of adoption been set before vs, but to stirre vs all vp to say in our hearts, as Christs hearers did, when he had spoken to them of the bread of life, Lord (said they) euer more giue vs this bread [a]? So you, I beseech you, say euery one in the strength of your best desires; Is the state of Adoption such an honourable estate? Lord euermore giue vs this dignity. And how happy might I bee, if by my labour this day, I might either enkindle this desire, where hitherto it hath not been, or might enflame it, or adde heate vnto it where it is? Thinke we wel with our selues what there is of most force to sharpen, and to set egge vpon our affections, and see whether it be not here offered to vs in abundance. Is it honor we affect? Why what greater dignity? Is it profit? What commodity is herewith to be compared? All other profits perish with the vse, this, the more it is vsed, the more it encreaseth, and can neuer be wasted. It is pleasure we are in loue with? What pleasure is not vile, in respect of that peace of conscience, that ioy in the

I dare make you iudges of their brutiſhnes, how then ſhall we anſwer for our own fault, who offer the Lord a greater indignity? we are not ſent for by the king to be his geſts, but to be his ſons: we are not ſimply inuited to a dinner, but to an inheritance; yet oxen, & farmes, & ſhips, and vaine pleaſures, nay the duſt in the ſtreet ſhall be more eſteemed: we be ſtill rooting, and digging in the earth like Wants, beating our braines, ſpending our ſpirits, waſting our time, ſhortning our liues, by carking & caring for the traſh of this preſent world; and yet what is all the wealth in the world to the riches in heauen? what are the poſſeſſions of the earth to the inheritance of that kingdom?

what is all the honour the world can heape vpon a man, in comparison of this, to be the Sonne of God? Were thou as beautifull as Absolon, in whose body from the sole of the foot to the top of the head, there was no blemish [z]: As rich as Nabal, who at his sheepe-shearing, made a feast in his house like the feast of a king [a]: As gloriously arraied as Herod [b]: As absolute in gouernment as Ahashuerosh, who commanded 127 prouinces [c]: As stately seated for dwelling as Nebuchadnezzar in his royall pallace of Babel [d]: As politique as Ahitophel, whose counsell was like as one had asked counsell at the oracle of God [e]: As gracious in court as Haman the Lord in a kingdome [f]; yet not being the sonne of God, thou shalt perish as the Beasts [g], thou shalt be kept to the day of destruction, and brought forth to the day of wrath [h]. On the other side, were thou as much afflicted as Iob, who was smitten with sore boils from the sole of his foot vnto his crowne [i]: As hard bested as Lazarus, who lay looking for the reuersion of another mans trencher [k]: As much perplexed as was he who ate ashes as bread, & mingled his drinke with weeping [l]: as much scorned as Dauid [m]; yet, being partaker of the adoption of sonnes, during thy life (as thou hast heard) the Lord shall bee euer with thee, and in thy end thy Death shall be precious in his sight [n], thy soule shall be caried by the Angels into Abrahams bosome [o], where Christ is, there shalt thou be also [p], euen at the right hand of God, where there is fulnesse of ioy, and pleasures for euer more [q]. Now, if this that hath been said hath wrought so deeply, as to discouer vnto vs this our great sin in neglecting (as the Apostle speakes [r]) so great saluation; I beseech you that it may preuaile also to beget in vs a holy resolution of reforming it: let vs as the people did in Nehemias time, vpon the discouery of a generall fault, make a sure couenant, and seale vnto it, euen that henceforth we will account all things but losse and dung in respect of this, that we may be called the sonnes of God.

And now, because to exhort to a duty, and not to shew the meanes of performing it, might haply worke some inclination to good, but could neuer produce any perfect worke, therefore it shall not be vnfitting (very agreeing I am sure it is to the matter, and to the text,) to open that point also a little, touching the meanes by which those that doe affect this prerogatiue of adoption, may attaine vnto it.

There are two places of Scripture especially, by which we may be rightly informed in this matter: The one is deliuered by way of a Doctrine; the other by way of an example. The former is, [t] Yee are all the Sonnes of God by Faith in Christ Iesus. The latter is, [u] He gaue them this prerogatiue or power to be the sonnes of God, euen to them that beleeue in his Name. Both put together doe make this good, that the meanes of adoption, is Faith in Christ Iesus, or (as Saint Iohn expounds it) beleeuing in his Name. Here are all by faith made capable of adoption, euen according to the saying, Iew, Grecian, bond, free, male, female [x]: Faith sets open the doore to all. That which I will speake herein, shall be drawn to these three particulars: First, what kind of faith it is which makes vs capable of adoption. Secondly, how it brings vs to be the sonnes of God. Thirdly, how it is wrought in the harts of the adopted. Touching the first, this I say, that the beleeuing or faith, which maketh a man the sonne of God, is an action of the will, whereby a man knowing certenly out of the Scriptures, that Iesus Christ is the promised Sauiour of mankind, doth for the matter of his soule, settle his heart, and repose himselfe wholly and solely vpon him. This is properly that faith which is called Iustifying or sauing Faith. An assent vnto the truth of God reuealed in Scripture, is necessarily required, as the roote and foundation of faith, but the very life, or (as wee speake in schooles) the forme of faith, is a resting vpon Christ a casting a mans selfe wholly vpon him, for the sauing of his soule: hence are these words of reference in the language of the Scripture touching faith; To beleeue in Christ, to beleeue in the Name of Christ, &c. For the second, that also is necessary to be rightly opened, because some men of corrupt minds, being such as Paul speaketh of,

Beſides, when in our common ſpeech, we ſay of ſome man, his leaſe maintaines him, is there any abſurdity in theſe words? No: for euery man doth conceiue, that it is not a parchment lined with a forme of words, and accompliſhed with a waxed labell, that that man liues vpon; but it is thus apprehended, that by his writing, ſuch or ſuch an eſtate is made ouer vnto him, & by the profits riſing out of that, he is maintained: ſo when I ſay, Faith iuſtifieth, Faith adopteth, I aſcribe not any ſuch power ſimply vnto faith; but this I intend, that Faith coupleth me vnto him, by whoſe righteouſneſſe I am accepted with God, and by whoſe right, I receiue the adoption of a ſonne. Thus then wee muſt vnderſtand this point; that faith, or beleeuing, brings iuſtification and adoption, not by any ſpeciall excellency that it hath in it ſelfe, but meerely and onely by that place and office which the Lord of his owne will and mercy hath aſſigned it, c Acts 16.31. euen to be the condition on our parts: Beleeue, and thou ſhalt bee ſaued [c]. The ordinance of God makes a thing to haue that vertue in it, which of it ſelf it cannot haue. So, how if the Iſraelites being ſtung in the wilderneſſe with fiery ſerpents, had out of ſome priuate motion of their owne, ſet vp a ſerpent of braſſe vpon a pole, and looked on it, ſhould they haue been cured? It were idle to imagine it; but God appointing it, his ordinance gaue a bleſſing vnto it: hee
e Num. 21.9. that looked, liued [e]. I may truly ſay vnto you, that if wee of our ſelues (without a promiſe and warrant from God) ſhould haue caſt our ſelues wholly vpon the merits of Chriſt for ſaluation, it could not haue holpen vs: but the promiſe of the Lord, Beleeue and be adopted, giues ſtrength to the action, and faith by this, not by it ſelfe, vnites to Chriſt, and inueſts vs into the vſe and comfort of all his benefits. And thus is faith the inſtrument of adoption, not as it is a habite in vs, but as it is an act appointed by God, and bleſſed by him to ſuch a gracious purpoſe. The third point I vndertooke, was to ſhew how this faith is wrought in the hearts of the adopted. The ſupreame giuer of Faith is God, Euery good

lift ye your ſelues aboue the congregation of the Lord[n]? and imagine that we rather ſpeake out of a deſire to ſet out our ſelues, that the world may thinke there is ſome vſe of vs, then ſpeake out of the truth of the thing. But, let God be true[o], and let there be no diſputing againſt his ordinance. Touching our ſelues, this we profeſſe freely, that we are but the Miniſters by whom ye beleeue[p]: and as Peter and Iohn ſaid touching the miracle vpon the creeple at the temple gate[q]: we take not vpon vs by our own power and godlineſſe to beget faith in any mans heart: the opening of the heart is in the power of another[r], euen in his who hath the key of Dauid, which openeth and no man ſhutteth, ſhutteth and no man openeth[s]: Woe bee vnto vs if wee ſhall encroach vpon the Lords peculiar: but if it be his pleaſure, who makes his power perfect by weakeneſſe[t], and who chuſeth the weake things of the world to confound the mighty things[u], to tender vnto vs ſuch a treaſure, as is faith in earthen veſſels[x], and by the fooliſhneſſe of preaching, to ſaue them that beleeue[y]; who art thou that thou ſhouldeſt diſpute with God? It is not my purpoſe to enter a diſcourſe of this matter; only this I ſay: when the Iſraelites deſiring a King, God had appointed Saul to be their Head, it is ſaid, Wicked men deſpiſed him, and ſaid, ſhall he ſaue vs? But a Band of men, whoſe heart God touched, they followed him[z]: ſo when God had ordained preachers to gather together his Saints, though ſome deſpiſers writhe the mouth, and ſay in ſcorne, why ſhall theſe ſaue vs? yet thoſe, ſo many as whoſe hearts the Lord hath touched, they will follow, and they to their comforts ſhall find this meanes to be the power of God vnto ſaluation, when the deſpiſers ſhall vaniſh away[a].

So then now I haue euen chalked you out the way to adoption. Is thine heart enflamed with the deſire of this glorious eſtate to be the ſonne of God? thou canſt not atchieue it but by faith: being a beleeuer, thy deſire in this cannot be in vaine. Could we haue deuiſed a more eaſie condition? wouldeſt thou beleeue? looke vp to the Father of lights; faith is his onely to beſtow: but forget not the meanes, the word of faith which we preach[b]. Though rauing dogges ſet open their mouthes, and baike againſt the Moon, yet walke thou in this light, and it ſhall guide thy feete in the way of peace: and when the word preached hath brought thy heart within thee to bee as the thirſty land, ſo that now like the Hart for the riuers of water[c], ſo, it alſo panteth after Chriſt, and thou wouldeſt thinke thy ſelfe happy, if thou mighteſt haue but one crumme of grace; know that then, euen then faith begins to peepe out in thee, and thou art in the direct courſe to be called the ſonne of God. I beſeech you let no odde opinions, or faintneſſe of ſpirit detaine vs from this courſe. When the people were in the wildernеſſe, in the way to the promiſed Canaan, they ſent ſpies to ſee the ſtate of the country[d]: At their returne, they brought of the fruit of the land, and acknowledged the goodneſſe and fertility of the ſoile; but (ſaid they) the people be ſtrong, the cities be walled, the ſonnes of Anak be there; vpon this, the people were out of heart: wel, Caleb ſtood vp and ſtilled them, ſaying, Let vs go vp at once and poſſeſſe it, for vndoubtedly we ſhal ouercome it[e]. It may be ſo in this caſe; we may be brought to confeſſe that it is an admirable thing to be the ſon of God, and we would wiſh to attaine it, but haply we will withall caſt many perils, and think with the ſluggard, there as a lyon without[f]; and ſo many things appertaining to it, that we ſhal neuer accompliſh it. I ſay therefore with Caleb, Let vs vp at once, let vs not be wearied and faint in our minds, it is the Lords work, and he will proſper it. And ſo, leauing the ſucceſſe of this exhortation to his bleſſing, I come to the 2. doctrine.

The ſecond Doctrine is, That it is poſſible for him that is the ſonne of God, to bee aſſured in his owne ſoule that hee is ſo. Doe you all iudge whether this be a forced collection from this place. I aske: ſpake the Apoſtle vpon his knowledge, or vpon ſuppoſals? Behold what loue the Father hath ſhewed vnto vs, that wee ſhould be called the ſonnes of God: and now are wee the ſonnes of God[h]. Wee know that wee are tranſlated from death vnto life, becauſe we loue the brethren. Neither doth the manner of ſpeaking ſauour of ought, but certainty; neither could it agree with the grauity of an Apoſtle to ſpeake ſo indefinitely, ſo determinately of that, of which he had no ſetled ground. Doubtleſſe, the Apoſtle knew himſelfe to bee the ſonne of God. You will ſay, he might know it, but it followes not therefore that ſo may we. Yes verily. For, firſt, both here, and generally throughout the whole Epiſtle, he ſpeaks in the plural number (we) ſhewing that in theſe points he ſingleth not himſelfe out from the common ranke of beleeuers, but treats of matters common to them with himſelfe. Secondly, leſt any ſhould ſuppoſe, that though theſe things were common to other beleeuers with Iohn, yet they were appropriated only to the beleeuers then, & with Iohn, he giues vs a generall rule, that the doctrine of comfort by the mediation of Chriſt, which hee deliuereth, belongs not to him onely, and the beleeuers, to whom he wrote, but to all throughout the world[i]; ſo that, grant me of Iohn, that hee knew his owne adoption, I will inferre, that this knowledge is a priuiledge of all beleeuers, in their meaſure, as well as his. Now for the point it ſelfe, there is nothing for which the word of God doth affoord a more certaine proofe. To know that I am the ſon of God, that my name is written in heauen, that my ſins are forgiuen: theſe things are all one in effect; & therefore what proofe may be alledged for any one of theſe, the ſame pertaineth vnto all. Reioyce (ſaith Chriſt[k]) not that the ſpirits are ſubdued vnto you: but rather reioyce, becauſe your names are written in heauen. I demand, who can reioyce in things vnknowne? Fooles may feed themſelues with idle hopes, and tickle their fancies with imagined contentments, but no man can ſoundly reioyce in that of which he hath no aſſurance. Doe not boaſt of to morrow (ſaith Salomon[l]) & why not of to morrow? becauſe thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth. Wherefore it is vaine boaſting of that whereof there is no certainty. Bleſſed is he whoſe wickednesſe is forgiuen, and whoſe ſin is couered[m]: Can a man be bleſſed, and yet not perceiue it? can he be happy, and yet not know it? One maine part of happineſſe is, inward contentment: Ignorance of that vpon which my contentment is grounded, and contentment it ſelf cannot agree: I beleeue the remiſſion of ſinnes (ſaith the profeſſor of faith) in the Creede: Beleeueſt thou the doctrine of forgiueneſſe in a generality? thou doeſt well; but the diuels doe ſo, and they tremble[n]. I apprehend, and am perſwaded of the pardon of mine owne ſinnes: there is the right meaning of the article. I am charged to giue all diligence to make my calling and election ſure[o]: ſure to God I need not; I cannot: The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure of it ſelfe[p]: ſure to mine owne ſoule I may, or elſe this precept is in vaine. I am commanded by my Sauiour when I pray, to call God Father: how is hee to mee a Father, into whoſe preſence I may dare to come, and into whoſe lap I may be bold to vnfold my griefes, but as I am his adopted ſon in Chriſt? Shall I tearme him Father, and haue no aſſurance that I am his ſon? this were intollerable preſumption. What ſhould I multiply proofes in ſo plaine a caſe? Scripture proofes are not to be receiued by tale, but by weight, one as good as an hundred. To bring vs to the aſſurance of our adoption, is the drift of preaching, the ſcope of praying, and the intent of our adminiſtring and receiuing the Sacraments: all aime and driue at this, that we may learne to apply the generall ſweetnes of the Scriptures to our owne particulars.

But to cut off (as much as is poſſible) all miſtakings: here is a neceſſary queſtion to bee made touching this aſſurance of adoption that I now ſpeake of; whether it be ſuch an aſſurance which is ſo certen, that it is neuer intermixed, nor ouer-clouded, nor diſturbed with doubting? I anſwer: I dare not ſay it is ſuch an aſſurance: I know Dauid knew himſelfe to be the choſen of God: yet I know, that ſometime he thought he was caſt out of Gods ſight[q], and that the Lord would ſhew no more fauour[r]. I know that his tentations this way were long, ſo that his eies failed for waiting for God[ſ], and much adoe he had to maſter his own diſtruſt-diſtruſtfulneſſe. Why art thou caſt downe my ſoule, and vnquiet within mee? waite on God[t], thrice there repeated: nay, I know further, & am aſſured, that they which neuer doubted of their adoption, did neuer beleeue it: For, as ſoone as faith lookes aboue the ground of the heart, Satan ſeekes to blaſt with a ſtorme of doubtings. What aſſurance then (will you ſay) is this you diſcourſe of? I anſwer, an aſſurance aiming & ſtriuing after aſſurance; an aſſurance wreſtling and combating with continuall doubtings; an aſſurance which lookes not to come to perfection, but by wauering. It is the wiſdome of God by this very meanes to ſettle the hearts of his choſen. A man that plants a tree, after that hee hath put it into the ground, and begun to throw earth thereon, euer and anon he is ſhaking it; why? not to ouerthrow it, but to feele it, how it ſtands, to make it ſinke deeper, and the rootes to lie cloſer to the ground: ſo the Lord giues leaue to the aſſurance of his children to be ſhaken, not to weaken it, but to confirme it, and to ſettle it ſo much the ſurer in the heart. Thus is the aſſurance of adoption euer ſtriuing with diſtruſtfulneſſe, ſometimes a little foyled, but ſoone reuiuing it ſelfe, & ſtill in the end crowned with victory: and who ſo ſhall ground his aſſurance vpon the many ſtormes of doubtings, that he hath endured, I am perſwaded he doth build it vpon a rule that ſhall not deceiue him. [t] Pſ. 42. & 43.

Firſt, this diſcouereth one grand error of Popery, which is (according to the Canons of the Councell of Trent), that no man can haue any aſſurance of his adoption in this life, other then coniecturall, vnleſſe it be made knowne vnto him by ſpeciall reuelation. He that will be a Papiſt indeed and compleate, is bound by the Rules of his owne Religion, euen to the very end and period of his daies, to be in ſuſpenſe of that, without the aſſurance wherof, the ſoule of a Chriſtian can haue no ſolid comfort. We ſay, a Chriſtian may doubt: it is poſſible for him to doubt: they ſay, hee muſt doubt, and hee is accurſed if euer he thinke, or endeauour for any grounded certainty. Miſerable comforters they are all (as Iob ſaid of his friends[u]:) and as in all their doctrines they rob God of his glory, which is his deareſt Iewell, ſo they depriue the ſoule of the aſſurance of faith, which is her chiefeſt comfort. But leaue we them, and come to our ſelues. The 1. Vſe. [u] Iob 16. 2.

Secondly, this meets with corruptions among our ſelues; two chiefly: the firſt is theirs, who condemne this doctrine as preſumptuous: what? for men to take vpon them to know ſo much of Gods ſecrets, as whether they ſhall be ſaued or no; whether they bee the ſonnes and daughters of God or no? Anſwer. To preſſe to know what God hath ſecreted, is preſumption, but to refuſe to take notice of that which God hath appointed a meanes to find out, that is vnthankefulneſſe. Truth is, of himſelfe no man can find out this ſecret, for the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God[x]: But now (ſaith he) [y] wee haue receiued the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things which are giuen vs of God, and [z] we haue the mind of Chriſt. Let men beware, leſt vnder a pretence of not preſuming, they make themſelues guilty of contempt. The ſecond is theirs, who neuer labour after any certainty of reſolution in this particular: I haue often wondered at it, to ſee how in other things euery mans deſire is to deale vpon certainties, and yet how in this maine and important point, they can ſatisfie themſelues with meere ſuppoſals. For tenures of lands, for conueyances, for leaſes, for bonds, for indentures, (Lord) what adoe there is among men! how many draughts in paper, what ſcanning of words, what weighing of euery clauſe, as in a ballance, what counſelling with lawyers before engroſſing, then what care to keep them, what boxing them vp to preuent embezeling; and yet, what is all that is held, but euen a lumpe of the earth, for a man of clay? two things, which all the wit and policy of the world, be not able to combine. Come we to the point of our chiefe inheritance, and let mee proceed by poll, from man to man, and vrge him to ſhew his aſſurance: Alas, what wofull vncertainty! I hope well, ſaith one, I truſt, ſaith the other; God The 2. Vſe. [x] 1 Cor. 2. 11. [y] Verſe 12. [z] 16.

is merciſull, ſaith a third; I ſhall doe as well as others, ſaith a fourth: Surely, he that hath no better aſſurance of his houſe where he dwels, then the moſt haue, or care to haue of the promiſed inheritance of their ſoules, would thinke himſelfe in an euill taking. Alas, that wee which are ſo politique for our bodies, ſhould be ſo ſimple and ſilly for our ſoules! that wee which ſeeke to make that ſo ſure, which we are ſure to forgoe, are ſo remiſſe to lay a better foundation for the time to come! I would I were as able to reforme this groſſe fault, as I am to conuince it. Who is there amonſt vs able to pleade not guilty? either we vtterly neglect this duty, or we doe not plie it ſo diligently as we ſhould. I beſeech you ſuffer the words of exhortation, and let my counſell herein be acceptable vnto you. Giue euen al diligence to make this one point ſure, or elſe let mee ſpeake plainely vnto you; you haue nothing ſure but condemnation. You build now vpon I know not what hope, which indeed is no hope, e Iob 13. 28. that is moat-eaten[e]. This may bee enough for the reproofe of this euill. Let me now with your good leaue follow the courſe in this which I held in the former point: I firſt perſwaded you to affect the dignity of adoption. I next directed you how to attaine it: ſo now, I haue mooued you to labour for aſſurance, let me teach you how to be reſolued. And this is indeed the very ſweet and marrow of a Religion, all man is but as an apprentice in Religion, he is neuer Maſter of his Craft, till hee is come to ſome skill and diligence in this particular.

It was one of the old rules of the Law, That in the mouth of two or three wit-
f Deut. 19. 15. neſſes euery word ſhould ſtand[f]. It is therefore the wiſedome of God, that the aſſurance of adoption ſhould be grounded vpon the teſtimony of two very ſufficient witneſſes, The Spirit of God, and our owne ſpirit
g Rom. 8. 16. [g]: The Spirit of God beareth witneſſe with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God. Concerning this teſtimony of the Spirit, it is a myſtery to fleſh & bloud, it is a thing more eaſie to feel, then to expreſſe. There be certaine ſecret inſtincts and impreſſions of nature, which no tongue or pen of any man can define; as who can determine the diſtinction of ſmell, by which the Ewe knoweth her owne Lambe from a ſtranger? or the difference of bleating, by which the one diſcerneth the other in a multitude, which to our eares doe make the ſame ſound? The ſame may be ſaid of theſe ſecret workings in the regenerate: they in whom they are, perceiue them, and make vſe of them; but the diſtinct and proper nature of them, it paſſeth the skill of the moſt exact artiſt to ſet down. This is verified in nothing more then in this teſtimony of adoption, by Gods Spirit: ſome circumſtantiall deſcription I may make of it, but to define it ſtrictly, is more then I can performe. The Spirit of God beares witnes of adoption, by applying to the heart in particular, the promiſes of God touching the remiſſion of ſinnes, and life euerlaſting by Chriſt, which are generally propounded by the publike miniſtry. The word ſpeaketh in large and vnlimited manner vnto all, the Spirit of God appropriates it to my ſoule, and conuerteth that to my perſonal comfort, which was commended in common to the whole aſſembly. Eſay calleth this a word be-
h Eſay 38. 21. hind[h], priuily aſſuring a mans ſoule of a more ſpeciall intereſt into generall fauours. The maine thing to be cared for about this teſtimony of the ſpirit, is how to diſtinguiſh it from an alluſion of Satan, from a diabolicall impoſture: It is truely ſaid that the diuill is Gods ape, and ſeekes to counterfait him almoſt in euery thing. There is a thing like repentance, which is not repentance indeed, indeed, but only a worldly ſorrow, cauſing death: there is a thing like holines, which is not holineſſe, but hypocriſie: there is ſomewhat like prayer, which is not prayer, but lip-deuotion: ſo there is ſomewhat commeth very neere the teſtimony of the Spirit, which is not it, but meere colluſion. You haue ſcarſe a wholeſome herb in the garden, but you haue ſome hurtfull weed in the field which is like it; hee that is not skilfull, may be ſoone deceiued, as was he [i] that gathered Coloquintida for his pottage. Let vs learne a little then, how we may diſcerne betwixt the true teſtimony of the Spirit, and the hiſſing of the Serpent. Two ſpeciall markes there be, by which we may diſtinguiſh them: Firſt, that aſſurance of adoption, which is felt and perceiued in the heart, then when the heart is caſt downe, and is like Dauids heart, My heart is like waxe, it is molten in the midſt of my bowels [k], that ſame is vndoubtedly the voice of Gods Spirit, the teſtimony of the holy Ghoſt. My reaſon is this: In the day of a mans ſecurity, when hee hath little or no apprehenſion of ſinne, further then according to the common ſaying, that we are all ſinners, it is poſſible for his owne vnſanctified nature, to cheriſh him vp, and to feed him with a groundles hope, of I know not what. It is poſſible that Satan ſhould puffe him vp with a preſuming conceit, that no doubt he ſhall bee ſaued. But take me a man confounded in himſelfe with the conſcience of ſinne like Ezra, [l] roaring for the griefe of his heart with Dauid [m], mourning as a doue with Hezekiah [n], hauing in him the arrowes of the Almighty, the venime thereof drinking vp his ſpirit, and the terrors of God fighting againſt him with Iob [o]: Take me (I ſay) a man brought to this exigent, and ſeeming to feele the very ſcorching of hell fier; nature can afford him no refreſhng, but matter rather of more perplexity: the diuell will not then ſeeke to cheare him vp, but rather (if it be poſſible) to thruſt him forward into vtter deſpaire? That hope of fauour with God through Chriſt, then, which then ſprings vp in the heart, (as it were a hand ſuddenly caſt out to ſaue a man at the very point of drowning) muſt needs be the worke of Gods Spirit; becauſe it is contrary to the courſe and reaſon of nature, contrary to the ſpite and policy of the diuell, that a man ſhould then recouer any comfort. Let no Chriſtian ſoule then forget this diſtinction, as ſure a rule to know an illuſion of Satan, from a perſwaſion of the holy Ghoſt, as Shibbolet and Sibboleth was to know an Ephraimite from a Giliadite [p]. The ſecond marke is this: That teſtimony of adoption, which is begotten by the holy Ghoſt, is wrought in, and by the vſe of the meanes, preaching, reading, meditation of Gods word, prayer, the right and reuerent vſe of the Sacraments: For the Lord is euer a preſeruer and maintainer of that courſe which himſelfe hath ſanctified. If he appoint a meanes, he doth not (ordinarily) work, but by that meanes. The diuell laboureth the contempt, or elſe the careleſſe vſe of the meanes. What need (ſaith he) ſo much hearing? to what end is a man ſo much buſying himſelfe about the word? He is the author of cold, ſuperficiall, and ſeldome praying, of negligent reſorting to the Lords board, yet he buzzeth into a mans eare & heart, a confident expectation of life eternall. This then I ſay vnto thee: Art thou a diligent and carefull hearer? doeſt thou giue attendance at the poſts of the Lords doore [q]? Is his word the ioy and reioycing of thy heart [r]? Are the promiſes of God ſweet vnto thy mouth [ſ]? Is it a delight vnto thee to bee an often gueſt with the reſt of Gods people, at the heauenly banquet of his holy Supper? Loueſt thou the poure out thy heart by prayer before him [t]; and hath that hope of adoption which thou haſt, been wrought in thee by theſe helpes? And doeſt thou find it to be cheriſhed, and to be more ſtrong, and effectual, and liuely, by the diligent and conſcionable attending on them? Surely thou haſt Gods Spirit within thee, who hath giuen thee that white ſtone of diſcharge from the guilt of ſinne [u]: He is come to remaine with thee [x], to be the earneſt of thine inheritance [y], and to ſeale thee vnto the day of redemption [z]? But on the other ſide; Art thou like Gallio, one that careſt not for theſe ſpirituall things [a]? Or an Athenian, who when when thou beholdeſt a Preacher, thinkeſt, what will this babler ſay [b]? when God offereth knowledge vnto thee, doſt thou ſay in thy heart, depart from me, I deſire it not [c]? Art thou of opinion that it is in vaine for men to be ſo preciſe about ſeruing of God [d]? Art thou one that prayeſt but ſeldome, other then in ſome formall words without inward feeling? and who careſt for no other communicating at Gods board, then may keepe thee from the danger of a law? and yet, haſt thou a ſecret perſwaſion, that thou art the child of God, and ſhalt bee ſaued? I ſay vnto thee, this is but an illuſion of Satan; this is no teſtimony of the holy Ghoſt. The witneſſe of Gods Spirit, and the contempt of the meanes, doe neuer meete. And thus much for the former of theſe two witneſſes of adoption, the Spirit of God.

d Malac. 3.14.

Now, we haue heard the verdict of the firſt witneſſe, let vs proceede to the examination of the ſecond, and that is, our owne ſpirit. But our owne ſpirit, is not meant our naturall heart: For the imaginations thereof are onely euill [e], it is wicked aboue all things [f]; who can bring a cleane thing out of this filthineſſe [g]? but thereby is meant, that which Dauid calleth a right ſpirit [h]: It is that new ſpirit, which God promiſeth to put within the bowels of his choſen ones [i], a ſpirit purified by the blood of Chriſt, renued and ſanctified by the holy Ghoſt, ſuch a ſpirit it is whoſe teſtimony we muſt hearken to. There is no truth by nature in our inward parts, and our owne ſpirit can teſtifie nothing but vntruth. The euidences of adoption ariſing out of a renued and ſanctified ſpirit, are many. I will name the moſt, and inſiſt vpon thoſe which I hold (conſidering the ſtate of the times) to bee moſt conuenient. They may be referred to two heads. Firſt, inward tokens: ſecondly, outward fruits. Inward tokens are either in reſpect of our owne ſins, or in regard of Gods mercy. Sinne beareth a threefold conſideration: either as it is paſt, or as it is preſent, or as it may come hereafter. The renued ſpirit which muſt be the true witneſſe of adoption, for ſins paſt and committed, is an vnfained lamenter, euen therefore becauſe they bee treſpaſſes againſt Gods Maieſty: This is godly ſorrow [k]. With ſinnes preſent it is an earneſt fighter, there is a continuall combat betwixt it and the fleſh [l]. Touching ſins to come, it is a continuall watcher, keeping it ſelfe with all diligence [m], ſtriuing to bee kept vnſpotted of the world [n], and to fly the corruption which is in the world through luſt [o]. Now for the mercies of God, ſuch as concerne ſaluation; the renewed ſpirit hath a double affection. Firſt, of longing, My ſoule longeth (ſaith Dauid [p]) it thirſteth for thee [q]. Secondly, of baſe eſteeming all things, in reſpect of it: I thinke all things but dung, that I may winne Chriſt [r]. Here is a glaſſe worth our looking in: If we cannot ſee by beholding it, and by prying into our ſelues, theſe euidences in the tables of our owne hearts, what ſhall I ſay? what? as Ahabs Chaplaines, Go and proſper [s], nay, firſt let my tongue cleaue to the roofe of my mouth [t]: I muſt ſay plainly, as Peter to Simon Magus; your hearts be not vpright within you, in the ſight of God [u]. And we haue reaſon to thinke vpon it: For (to touch it as by the way) where is ſorrow for ſinnes paſt, when it is ſuch a delight to many to record old vanities? ſuch a vexation to the moſt, to haue their euils by-paſt, by the word of God ript vp? where is combating with ſinnes preſent, when men giue themſelues as ſeruants to obey them [x]? where is care to preuent future euils, when men ſtudy to offend, and ſay of their ſinnes, as the drunkard of his, wee will ſeeke them yet ſtill [y]? Againe, where is longing for Gods mercy in Chriſt, when there is an vniuerſall flintineſſe in mens hearts, that the greateſt part of men know not what it is to need a Sauiour? where is an accounting all things vile in reſpect of grace, when men are ſo bewitched with the glory of earthly things, and ſo hardened through the deceitfulneſſe of ſinne [z], that nothing is in ſo little grace, as the grace of God? Flatter we not our ſelues, the want of theſe euidences of adoption, ſhall be a ſufficient euidence to prooue vs baſtards, and not ſonnes at the day of Chriſt. Thus of inward tokens: now next of outward fruites, that is, ſuch ſuch fruits as Iohn Baptiſt ſpake of, Fruits worthy amendment of life [a]. You haue two ſpeciall catalogues of them: (the one [b], the other [c]:) theſe cannot be wholly wanting without, where there is a renued ſpirit within. There is a kind of winter ouertakes the holieſt of Gods ſeruants, in which there is ſmall appearance of fruit; but (becauſe there is euer a certaine ſecret ſeede remaining [d]) there can be no perpetuall barrenneſſe. Thinke wee that the Lord will leaue them to bee as vaſſals of Satan, and ſlaues to ſinne, on whom it is his will to beſtow a kingdome? All the veſſels of honour which are meete for the Lord, are prepared to good workes [e], and their fruit is in holineſſe, whoſe end ſhall bee euerlaſting life [f]. That feeling of Gods loue, which is ſhed abroad in the hearts of his children [g], makes them to loue God againe, to loue what he commands, to hate that which is knowne to be diſpleaſing to his maieſty: It will make them reaſon as Ioſeph did; How then can I doe this great wickedneſſe, and ſo ſinne againſt God [h]? He that finds God to be a Father to him, will carry a child-like diſpoſition to God. Theſe things are ſo plaine, that they need no proofe. I ſet this downe therefore for good: Our ſpirit, if it teſtifie aright, touching our adoption, beareth witneſſe by the outward fruits of new obedience: they doe all ſhine as lights among men [i], ſo many as ſhall walke with Chriſt in white, and ſhine as the Sunne in the kingdome of God [k]. Now, what ſhall we doe, and which way ſhall we looke, when we come to be tried by this witneſſe? For (alas) what be the fruits of men profeſſing godlineſſe? what a loathſome ſauour ſhould I ſeeme to raiſe vp, if I ſhould enter into the diſcouery of the filthineſſe of theſe wofull times? which yet notwithſtanding too too ſhamefully, and with a whores forehead that cannot bluſh, layeth open it ſelfe, with an high hand to the diſhonour of God, to the ſhame of the Goſpell, to the ſlander of Religion, and to the opening of the mouth of Papiſts againſt Gods truth. We giue the world occaſion to blaſpheme that worthy name after which we be named [l]. What a controuerſie hath God with the times for thoſe ſinnes which Hoſea ſpeakes of [m], Swearing, Lying, Killing, Stealing, Whoring? How are thoſe ſinnes of Sodome, Pride, Fulneſſe, Idleneſſe [n], growne to a height in this generation? with theſe we haue filled the land from corner to corner [o]: eſpecially and aboue all that ſinne mentioned by Iob [p], The iuſt and the vpright man is laughed to ſcorne. In a land profeſſing Religion, there is nothing in a more vniuerſall diſgrace, then the ſincerity of Religion. Bluſh ô heauens to looke vpon this, and be aſhamed ô thou Sunne to behold this wickednesſe! Are theſe the fruits of Adoption? are theſe likely to bee the actions of thoſe which are kept by the power of God through faith vnto ſalnation [q]? Surely, if the Diuell and his Angels were let looſe to liue in bodily ſhapes among men, they would euen ſo liue, as the moſt men liue. Oppreſſion, cruelty, exactions, pride, inſolency, drunkenneſſe, wantonneſſe, oathes, ſabbath breaking, contempt of godlineſſe, theſe would be their vſuall practiſes. If you demand, how I know it. I anſwer, he is called an vncleane ſpirit, and I am ſure he would be like himſelfe. Now I ſay as Chriſt to the Iewes, If we doe the luſts of the Diuell, we are of our father the Diuell [r]: His wee are whom wee obey [ſ]. You know Chriſts iudgement touching the piece of ſiluer [t]: If it haue Caſars image, it muſt be giuen to Caſar. Surely, when the Lord beholds vs, and ſeeth in vs nothing but the image of Satan, nothing but the vnfruitfull workes of darkneſſe [u], ſuch as the Prince of darknes [x] is author of, hee will adiudge vs to him, whoſe image wee beare: For without holineſſe ſhall no man ſee the Lord [y]. Remember then this marke: I ſay of the adopted, as Chriſt ſaid in another caſe, By their fruits yee ſhall know them [z]. Deſire I in all things to liue honeſtly [a]? care I to know and doe the will of my heauenly Father [b]? Is my conuerſation as it becommeth the Goſpell of Chriſt [c]? Is the credit of Religion deare vnto mee, ſo that I deſire and labour, that by mee it may not bee euill ſpoken of [d]? I haue a witneſſe in my ſelf [e], which ſhall not deceiue

g Heb.10.27. ny of adoption, but a fearefull looking for of iudgement and violent fier[g]. Thus haue I made vſe of this place of Pauls, touching the two witneſſes of our Spirituall Sonne-ſhip; Gods ſpirit, and our owne ſpirit. And this is the true courſe of triall in this poinr of great concernment. To aſcend to the top at the very firſt, to Gods
h Rom.12.3. decree, is dangerous, it is to be wiſe aboue that which is meete[h]: To begin at theſe endeauours in our ſelues, and ſo to aſcend by degrees, is comfortable, it is to bee wiſe according to ſobriety. To the decree of election, God hath ſet two ſeales, one he keepeth to himſelfe, The Lord knoweth who are his; the other hee hath left obtainable by vs, Let euery one that calleth vpon the name of the Lord depart
i 2 Tim.2.19. from iniquity[i]. Find we in our ſelues this latter, we may be ſure of right into the firſt.

Now touching theſe two teſtimonies, one thing is meet to be added for the ſatisfying of humbled ſoules; namely, that, put caſe a man vpon inquiry, cannot find the witneſſe of Gods Spirit in himſelfe, yet if he find the other, it ſufficeth. Fier is known to be fier by the heat, though for the time it haue no flame. Nay, be it (which is poſſible) that the witneſſe of a mans owne ſpirit, in regard of the fruites of ſanctification be vncertaine, yet if there be but one conſtant motion of grace, ſuch as, a longing for a grace, a bewailing of vnbeliefe, a labouring againſt hardneſſe of heart, yet it is comfortable. I ſpeake not this to cheriſh preſumption, or to encourage men to ſatisfie themſelues with ſhewes of goodnes, but that I may be free from that, which my Maſter himſelfe was carefull to k Eſay.42.3. auoide, I meane, quenching the ſmoaking flaxe, and breaking the bruiſed reed[k]. And thus haue I diſcharged the two firſt generall points, The dignity of Adoption, and The poſſibility of knowing it.

The

The ſecond Sermon.

THE third point now preſſeth vpon vs to bee coſidered of, The firſt namely, That the ſtate of Adoption is vnchangeable; that is, Doctrine of that they who are once aduanced to that honour, can neuer this Sermon. after be depriued thereof. Leſt I ſhould ſeeme to make matter, and to force my Text to mine owne purpoſes, I muſt firſt let you ſee, how this doctrine doth fetch his warrant thence. It ſeemeth to mee, and ſo I ſuppoſe it will to you, when you haue once well conſidered it, that Saint Iohn ſpake theſe words in a kind of reioycing and boaſting manner, Behold what loue, &c. as it were triumphing in this, that he with the reſt of the beleeuers were called the ſonnes of God. Now, if there had been any hazard in this eſtate, any poſſibility of loſing it, his reioycing had been idle, his glorying vaine; it might haue been ſaid vnto him; Well mighteſt thou triumph in thine adopted ſtate, if it were freed from caſualty: but why doeſt thou glory in that, which albeit it be thine to day, may yet be forfaited to morrow? Thus might Iohn iuſtly haue been challenged, if this condition had not been vnalterable: ſo that the very manner of ſpeech here ſeemeth to me, to be a ſufficient ground of this doctrine, touching the vnchangeablenes of Adoption. Therfore the Apoſtle alſo in the next verſe, as a man paſt all feare of being diſſeiſined of his expected inheritance, determinately thus ſpeakes, We know that when he ſhall appeare, we ſhall alſo appeare with him in glory. You ſee then how willing my text is to be the patron of this point: Hearken a little whileſt I ſhall enlarge it further. The ſubſtance of the proofe which I will vſe touching this Doctrine, ſhal be this; That if there be any alteration in the ſtate of Adoption, it proceedeth either from God, or from ſome other inferiour cauſe: but not from God, nor from any other inferiour caſe; therfore not at all. Firſt, it proceedeth not from God; which I will thus make manifeſt. In the buſines of our ſaluation, the Scripture ordinarily ſpeaketh of God diſtinctly in the three perſons, each of them hauing his peculiar worke and action therein. The Father the fountaine and beginning, the Son the ground and inſtrumēt; the holy Ghoſt, the applier and accompliſher. Now it ſhall be made plaine to vs, that there is no defect in the workings of either of this three, which may hazard the eſtate of the Adopted. Touching God generally, He is not a man that he ſhould repent[a], his gifts and calling are without Repentance[b], his foundation ſtandeth ſure[c]; the good worke of grace which he begineth he will performe vntill the day of Chriſt[d], The worke of his owne hands he will not forſake[e]. He is not towards his Adopted, as the Oſtrich, who ſheweth himſelf cruell to his young ones, as they were not his, and ſo leaueth his egges in the earth, forgetting that the foot might ſcatter them or the wild beaſt breake them[f]; but he is as the Eagle, who ſteereth vp her neſt, fluttereth ouer her birds, ſtretcheth out her wings, and beareth them vpon her wings[g]; euen ſo, the Lord continueth a perpetuall protector of thoſe whom he hath choſen to be his, vntill hee hath brought them to their appointed perfection. Concerning Ieſus Chriſt, the author and finiſher of our Faith[h], and prince of our ſaluation[i], this is ſaid, that all that the Father giueth him, he receiues[k], and that of thoſe which are giuen, he loſeth none[l], neither ſhall any plucke them out of his hand[m]. Touching the holy Ghoſt, as he is ſaid to be in the ſonnes of God, ſo he is not there as a gueſt, to tarry for a day or two, but as an inhabitant to dwel[n] and to remaine[o]. Thus you ſee, that on Gods part there is no hazard: with him him there is no variablenes, neither ſhadowing by turning [p]. Now if the change proceed from any lower cauſe, it muſt be either from the diuel, or from our ſelues. I will proue it can be from neither. Touching the Diuel, I know he will endeauour it, for he goeth about as a roaring Lyon ſeeking to deuoure [q]; and as he hath bin a murtherer from the beginning [r], ſo now his wrath is encreaſed, becauſe his time is ſhortened [ſ]; but hee ſhall not, he cannot effect it. Firſt, his his head is broken [t], his maine ſtrength is gone, and he cannot recouer it. There is hope of a tree, if it be cut downe, that it will yet ſprout, though the roote waxe old in the earth, yet by the ſent of water, it may bud and bring forth boughes like a plant [u], but if the roote be killed, it cannot reuiue. It is not a limme of Satan, which is wounded, he might then licke himſelfe whole; it is his head which is quelled, and the wound is paſt healing. Secondly, there is a plaine aſſurance, that greater is he that is in vs (namely, Chriſt by his ſpirit) then he which is in the world (to wit) the Prince and God of the world [x], and that though he doe tempt, yet there ſhall be an iſſue giuen to the tentation [y]. This cleereth it to vs, that touching the ſtate of Adoption, the Diuell cannot hazard it. I remember the ſtory mentioning Pharaoh his purſuit of the Iſraelites ſpeaketh thus, Pharaoh king of Egypt, followed after the children of Iſrael, but the children of Iſrael went out with an high hand [z]: ſo in this, Satan marcheth after with all his power, but the choſen of God are carried with an High hand, there is a mightier then he to defend their cauſe againſt him [a]. As Satan cannot hazard this eſtate, ſo neither can we our ſelues, If we could, it muſt be either by the loſſe of Faith, (which is the thing whereby we ſtand [b]), or by ſome great ſin, which may caſt vs out of Gods fauour. Concerning the firſt, indeed Faith is the tye of Adoption, and if there were a poſſibility of loſing it, the ſtate of Adoption were in danger. But (bleſſed be God) there is no ſuch matter. Firſt, it is the Gift of God [c], and his Gifts (as we haue heard) are without repentance. Indeed, if Faith were begotten in vs of our ſelues, and had a dependance vpon any freedome of will in vs, it might well be contingent; but being the entire Gift of God, it muſt needs partake of the vnchangeable nature of God himſelfe. Secondly, it cannot faile, for Chriſt hath prayed to the contrary [d], I pray that thou wouldeſt keep them from euill [e], and what greater euill then the loſſe of Faith? Is it poſſible that his prayer ſhould be in vaine? I know (ſaith he himſelfe, directing his ſpeech to his Father at the raiſing vp of Lazarus) that thou heareſt mee alwaies [f]. His interceſſion euen for this particular bleſſing of the not failing of our Faith, ceaſeth neuer, and ſpeedeth alwaies. Thirdly, it is teſtified of Faith, that it hath a certaine liuing power, which cannot die, Hee that drinketh of the water which I ſhall giue, ſhall neuer be more athirſt, but the water which I ſhall giue him, ſhall be in him a well of water ſpringing vp into euerlaſting life [g]. I confeſſe that which cannot be denied, and is not to be ſecreted, that the Faith of the Adopted may be greatly waſted, and many things appertaining to it may decay: as, boldnes to come into the preſence of God, ſenſe and feeling of ſpirituall ioy, and of that Peace which Paul calleth Peace in beleeuing [h]. It is poſſible for it to be for a time euen buried in the heart, not ſhewing it ſelf by any fruits of profeſſion: in reſpect alſo of the meaſure of it, it may be much leſſened and maimed: but where there is Faith in truth, it can neuer be cleane extinguiſhed. I ſay ſtill of the true beleeuer, euen when, to mans ſeeming, in regard of ſome fal, his eſtate is moſt fearefull, as Paul did of the youth at Epheſus, who fell down from the third loft, and was taken vp dead, His life is whole within him [i]: There is a hidden vertue yet within which will reuiue:

Now concerning Sinne, that that cannot diſpoſſeſſe the ſonnes of God of their hop \dinheritance, I can eaſily ſhew. All things worke together for the beſt vnto them that loue God [k]: If all things worke to their good, then not Sinne to deſtruction. Nay, he who for Sampſons refreſhing brought Meate out of the deuourer [l], and in the creation of the world made Light to come out of Darkneſſe [m], raiſeth much much good to his children, euen out of Sinne: as, much watchfulneſſe, much humility, much thankfulneſſe to God, much charity towards men, &c. Elſe, why ſhould Paul euen gladly reioyce and take pleaſure in infirmities[n]? Secondly it was a promiſe to Salomon (and why not in Salomon to all the ſonnes of God?) I will bee his Father, and he ſhall be my ſonne; If he ſinne, I will chaſten him with the rod, &c. but my mercy ſhall not depart away from him[o]. Peter may ſinne, but his Maſter ſhall looke backe vpon him, and that ſhall melt him into teares [p]. Thirdly, God deſireth the ſaluation of his Adopted ſonnes: Thinke we, that he will not (being able) remoue all impediments to their eternall, and (on his part) intended good? Yes doubtleſſe: yet it is not his pleaſure to take away Sinne: For he ſuffereth it to be yet euen in the holieſt, yea, although they be earneſt with him to be freed from it. I beſought the Lord three times, ſaith Paul[q], and yet he could not be diſcharged. If the deſire of our ſaluation, and the remouer of all hinderances to it, do yet leaue ſinne behind, weakened indeed, but not aboliſhed; ſurely then, Sin cannot ouerthrow the certainty of our future inheritance. Thus haue I perfited this reaſon, to which it were not hard to couple many more: There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt[r]. To ſay, they cannot be condemned, ſo long as they are in Chriſt, is nothing, neither was that the queſtion, the debating whereof the Apoſtle vndertooke. But this was the queſtion, as appeareth by the whole carriage of the former chapter; How it could be, that ſeeing Sin ſeparated betwixt God and the Soule; Man being ſtill a ſinner can bee ſaued? This doubt the Apoſtle thus reſolueth; That being once freed from the Law of Sin and Death[s], he can neuer be againe enthralled: is he once in Chriſt? he can neuer be condemned. And know this for a concluſion of the proofe of this point. If it be poſſible for one of the adopted ſonnes of God, to loſe his eſtate, it is poſſible for all; for one hath no more priuiledge then another. Now if all might bee diſpoſſeſſed, it were poſſible for Chriſt to haue died in vaine, which in common vnderſtanding were a moſt groſſe abſurdity. I ſhut vp this point therefore with the ſaying of the Pſalme, They which truſt in the Lord (that is which beleeue in the name of the Sonne of God, and are the Sonnes and daughters of God by Faith) are as the mount Sion, which ſhall neuer be remooued, but ſtandeth faſt for euer[t]; and thankes be to God for this vnſpeakeable gift[u].

I am not ignorant that this Doctrine is much excepted againſt: It is the anchor of a Chriſtian, and it is Satans chiefe deſire to pull it vp. But as God ſaid to Ieremy, ſo ſay I of this point, The Lord hath made it a defenced city, and an yron pillar; the Diuell and his Hell-hounds ſhall fight againſt it, but they ſhall not preuaile[x]. To enter the liſts againſt all opponents, were a labour not vnworthy, but more fit for a diſputation then a Sermon. I will name you, and cleare to you the moſt common and foule-mouthed obiection, and ſo come to the vſes of this doctrine: Here is a window (ſay ſome) ſet open to all manner of licentiouſneſſe, a very ſchoole of fleſhly liberty: Cannot I loſe my Faith? can no ſinne cut mee off from Chriſt? why then what ſhould I ſet ſuch preciſe limits to my ſelfe? why ſhould I feare to ſatisfie my own luſts, in ſuch and ſuch delightfull ſins? My tenure of heauen I cannot forfeit, the eſtate of my Soule is firme howſoeuer it be. I anſwer: Firſt, Wicked conſequences wrung out of holy principles, doe neither weaken their truth, nor leſſen the conueniency of reuealing them. As Sinne hath abounded, ſo hath grace ouer-abounded, ſaith Paul[y]: Why then, let vs ſinne that grace may abound, ſay ſome[z]. Is the truth of this doctrine ouerthrowne by this heliiſh inference? God forbid. Hony is hony though a Spider turne it into poyſon. Or did Paul vpon this recall himſelfe, as if it had been better to haue kept in this point, then to put ſuch a ſtone of offence before the vngodly? No. It is better that a thouſand reprobates, ordained of old vnto condemnation, ſhould turne the grace of God into wantonneſſe[a], and ſtrengthen their hands to iniquity, by peruerting the doctrine of Saluation, then that one humbled ſoule, for whom Chriſt died, ſhould bee ſent away away with a heauy heart for want of refreshing. Secondly, I say further, that he which hath faith indeed, will not, nay hee cannot so dispute. The beleeuer knoweth himselfe bound to the obedience of the law, though he be freed from the damnation of the Law; and certaine it is, the more assurance of Saluation in a mans soule, the more feare and trembling in a mans course: Hee which is best assured, hath most power of Gods Spirit, and the stronger the Spirit of God is within, the more holinesse and fruits of grace without. It is a comfortable saying, that he which beleeueth truly, cannot be damned; and it is a true saying, that hee which liues and delights, and taketh pleasure in persumptuous sinnes [b], doth not beleeue truly. Thirdly, this is further to be added, that put case some beleeuer should (which is possible) through the delusion of Satan, so farre abuse this holy doctrine, as to take liberty thereby to commit some great sinne, let such a one know, that albeit he may recouer, and be saued; yet it shall cost him deare, he shall haue somewhat to doe, before he shall recouer the feeling of Gods fauour, which must needs bee ouerclouded by his trespasse. It cost Dauid after his adultery many a sigh, and many a groane, many a sad, perplexed, and wofull passion was he cast into, before he could heare of ioy and gladnesse [c]. That speech of his, Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holy Spirit from me [d], argueth that he was euen robbed (in his owne apprehension) of all fauour of God, and of all working of his spirit. This is euen a very hell, into which who so is fallen, would giue a world to bee released. Let no man therefore giue this aduenture, hee shall surely eate the fruit of his owne presuming. And this may serue as a strong North-wind to dispell this light Obiection.

d Verse 11.

The 1. Vse. This doctrine is as cold water to a Christian soule [e], this will satisfie as with marrow and fatnesse [f]. Perceiuest thou thy selfe vpon a true and diligent inquiry made into thine own heart, to haue some beginnings of Faith, some first fruits of Gods spirit [g], some pledges of adoption? Oh, what cause hast thou to reioyce, euen as a man that findeth a great spoile [h]? These things may grow in thee, nay they will encrease, but they can neuer die. These witnesses of adoptiõ cannot deceiue: God is not wont by them, to giue an earnest of inheritance [i], & then to draw backe his word. As he cannot be mocked [k], so he is not wont to dally. This is a difference betwixt the God of truth [l], and the Father of lies [m]; The diuell is large in his proffers, All this will I giue thee [n]; his performance is short when it comes to payment: Gods promises are certaine, neuer lesse, but rather more in accomplishment then in tender. If the earnest be giuen, it is neuer recalled, the seale [o] of the spirit once set on, is neuer razed out. How happy art thou, that art possessed of such a fauour? thou maiest say to thy soule, Return vnto thy rest, O my soule, for the Lord hath been beneficiall vnto thee [p]: or as Deborah to hers, O my soule thou hast marched valiantly, which hast gotten such a bootie [q]. The Lord blessed Obed Edom and all his household, because of the Arke [r]; how shall thy soule be blessed which hath receiued such a guest? That great ramping Lyon [s], the deuourer of soules, while thou passest through this earthly wildernesse, this vale of Baca [t], will seek to teare it from thee; but be of good comfort, there is a stronger then he [u], euen that Lyon of Iudah [x], and he shall establish thee; and, bee sure of this euer, that when he shall multiply reasons against thee, drawne some from the iustice of God, some from the many corruptions of thine owne heart, and all to weaken this assurance: be sure (I say) still to hold the conclusion fast, I know whom I haue beleeued [y]; he hath begun a worke in me, and I am sure he will not now forsake me; and say thou to Satan, as Dauid did to Goliah; Thou commest to mee with a sword and speare, thou hast sharpned thy fiery darts [z] against me: but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of Hostes [a], and in the assurance of his promise, against which all the gates of hell shall neuer be able to preuaile [b]. This is the gracious vse of this doctrine, and well is he which knoweth how to apply it.

Let me begin the ſecond vſe of this point with the challenge of the Prophet, to the peole of old; Wherefore do you lay out ſiluer, and not for bread, and your labour without begin ſatisfied[c]? So why ſeeke you for things which cannot continue, and let thoſe things go which are eternal? Hath not your own experiẽce yet taught vs the vanity of earthly things, that they all vaniſh as a cloud, and paſſe away ſuddenly like the wind? Vnderſtand ye vnwiſe among the people, and ye fooles, when wil ye be wiſe[d]? Let a man ſtand (like Salomon) in the window of his houſe[e], and obſerue mens courſes, here you ſhall ſee one moiling and vexing himſelf like him whom Buldad ſpeaketh of, who teareth his ſoule in his anger[f], and all, that he may ſet his neſt on hie, and be laded with the thicke clay[g]: Another ambitiouſly hunting after ſome honour or office, abiectly and baſely fauning vpon and flattering euery one, who may be any little furtherance to his deſires, kiſſing (like Abſolon) euery one that commeth neere him[h]: a third hanging vpon ſome Lawyers ſleeue, to plot and deuiſe how to perpetuate his eſtate, that he and his poſterity may enioy it by an vnchangeable decree to the end of all, thus thinking that his Habitation ſhall continue euer, from generation to generation[i]. On this faſhion doe men dreame of perpetuities, and euen a kind of eternity vpon earth, & euery mans plotting, aiming at this, how to make things ſure. And yet how ſoone is the houſe of Ieroboam ſwept away, euen as a man ſweepeth away dung till all begone[k]? How ſuddenly is Shebuah the treaſurer, who thought to die and be buried in his own land, Driuen from his ſtation, and rolled and turned like a ball in a large country[l]? How quickly is Nebuchadnezzar driuen from men, and made to dwell with the beaſts of the field[m]? In what ſhort time is Haman, whoſe Excellency mounted vp to heauen, and whoſe Head might ſeeme to reach the clouds[n], thruſt out of life and honor and all, and hanged vpon that tree which he prepared for another[o]? How often haue we ſeen the Riches of the ſinner laid vp for the iuſt[p], great wiſe men dying & leauing their riches for others[q], and ſtrangers eating it vp[r], and ſo all their beauty conſuming when they goe from their houſes to their graue[ſ]? How ordinarily do we behold the Sea deuouring, the fier waſting, the extortioner catching[t], contentions in Law fretting out, whoredomes eating vp, offences againſt the Prince forfeiting, waſtfull humors ſcattering all thoſe large meanes, which men thought to haue entailed to them and theirs: ſo long as the moone endureth[u]. How many a man is ſuddenly taken in a night with that feareful arreſt, Oh foole this night will they fetch away thy ſoule, &c[x]. euen then when he doth begin to enioy his getting? And yet men cannot be wiſe to chuſe the good part[y], yet they cannot learne to ſet their affections vpon the things aboue[z]. Vpon thy belly ſhalt thou goe, and duſt ſhalt thou eat all thy daies[a], you know it was the doome which God gaue vpon the Diuell: how far are we from this puniſhment, who mind none but earthly things[b]. O that (as Chriſt ſaid to Ieruſalem) we might know at the leaſt in this our day, theſe things[c], and that we could learn to ſee, and lament, and to reforme our owne folly. I ſay with the Apoſtle, I will ſhew yow a more excellent way[d]. Do you affect perpetuities, do you deſire a glorious, a comfortable, an honourable, and withall an vnchangeable eſtate? Behold here the ſtate of Adoption: ſee here an inheritance, of which no man that hath it once, can euer after be depriued. A leaſe of an eſtate for liues is much, a tearme of a thouſand yeers is more, a holding for me and mine heires for euer is a great matter, but what is all this for eternity? If this eſtate were in reſpect of the yeerly commodity of it, no better then one of earthly reuenues, yet in reſpect of the endles ſettledneſſe thereof it were better worth: but being (as it is) ſo far beyond them all in worth: & with all, ſo without all expiration of time, betwixt them and it what compariſon? It was an honourable penſion which the King of Babel gaue to Iehoiachin the King of Iudah (his captiue:) His portion was a continuall portion, euery day a certen, all the daies of his life vntill he died[e]. Yet it is nothing to this Iehoiachins portiõ was as much the firſt day, as the laſt, it was neuer improoued: But this is a daily addition to the graces and comforts of the Adopted,

I can ſay no more; If neither the excellency of the eſtate, in regard of the preſent fruition of it (ſpoken of in the former part,) nor the perpetuity of it (diſcouered now) can moue vs, I know not what may perſwade vs. A man may euen pity vs, as Chriſt did his perſecuters, and pray that God would not lay this ſin to our charge[o], becauſe indeed we know not what we do[p]. Only [o] Act. 7. 60. for a concluſion, let me commend one thing vnto you: When old Eli had giuen [p] Luk. 23. 34. holy and wholeſome aduice to his diſordered ſonnes, the holy Ghoſt thus addeth, Notwithſtanding they obeyed not the voice of their Father, becauſe the Lord [q] 1 Sam. 2. 25. would ſlay them[q]: and vpon the ſame ground the Prophet of God ſaid to King Amaziah, I know that God hath determined to deſtroy thee, becauſe thou haſt not obeyed [r] 2 Chr. 25. 16. my counſell[r]. Out of which places it followeth, that mens diſobedience to the counſell of God, when it is graciouſly reuealed to them, is a certen fore-runner of deſtruction. A ſinne is diſcouered, a remedy declared, but the euill is not reformed; where it is ſo, it is, becauſe the Lord will ſlay. But I will hope better things of you, and ſo come to the fourth point.

The 2. Doctrine of this Sermon.

The fourth and laſt Doctrine is, That the ſpring and fountaine of all this excellent eſtate, is Gods loue. Behold what loue, &c. This is ſo plaine and obuious out of the very current of the words, that he may runne that readeth it[s]. Any man may ſee, [s] Hab. 2. 3. that the Apoſtle acknowledgeth no other beginning of this Sonne-ſhip, but the Loue of God. I will (according to my courſe held hitherto in the former points) endeuour to giue further light vnto this Doctrine, by teſtimonies, authorities, and proofes of holy Scripture. This is that therefore, the proofe and explication whereof I vndertake; That our being the adopted ſonnes and daughters of God in Chriſt, can be aſcribed to no other cauſe, but onely to the freedome of Gods grace: For, ſo the Loue of God hath no higher cauſe then it ſelfe: Not that we loued him, but [t] 1 Ioh. 4. 10. that he loued vs firſt[t]. This then by way of a firſt proofe, I may affirme, that the word of God, ſpeaking of the particulars of mans Saluation, deriueth all out of the Loue, Grace, Mercy, Bounty of God, excluding all things whatſoeuer elſe, that might ſeeme to bee any motiues or inducements to him. Touching Election which is the ground of all, it is ſaid that the whole drift of it, is nothing but this, [u] Ephes. 1. 6. The praiſe of the glory of Gods grace[u]: There is nothing to be beheld in it, but only Grace. Touching the ſending of Chriſt, to worke that great worke of our Re- [x] Ioh. 3. 16. demption; So God loued the World, that he gaue his only begotten Sonne, &c[x]. Touching our Calling out of the ſtate of condemnation, vnto the hope of a better life, God hath called vs with an holy calling, not according to our workes, but ac- [y] 2 Tim. 1. 9. cording to his purpoſe and grace[y]. Touching Iuſtification; We are iuſtified freely [z] Rom. 3. 24. by his grace[z]. Touching Saluation, which is the end and accompliſhment of all, When the Bountifulneſſe and Loue of God our Sauiour toward man appeared, not by the worke of Righteouſneſſe which we had done, but according to his Mercy he ſaued [a] Titus 3. 4, 5. vs[a]. It were not hard to multiply teſtimonies of this kind; I do but giue you a taſte taſte rather then a full draught, to auoide tediouſneſſe. It is truly ſaid, that the people of Iſrael were a type of Gods choſen; the Ægyptian bondage a ſhadow of our naturall thraldome vnder Sathan; the promiſed Canaan a reſemblance of our eternall Reſt in heauen: Now looke how the caſe ſtood with their tranſportation out of Ægypt into Canaan, ſo is it in the intereſt which God hath giuen vs vnto life eternall. Touching the former it is ſaid, The Lord did not ſet his loue vpon you, nor chuſe you becauſe you were more in number then any people (for yee were the feweſt of all people) but becauſe the Lord loued you [b]. A ſtrange ſpeech, The Lord ſet his loue vpon you, becauſe he loued you, that is, becauſe it was his free and gracious pleaſure ſo to doe: This is equally true, in the caſe of Adoption. The Lord hath loued his choſen, not becauſe they were more then others, (for they are a little flocke [c], nor becauſe they were better then others, (for they are all by nature the children of wrath as well as others [d].) but becauſe he loued them, (or as our Sauiour ſpeaketh,) becauſe his good pleaſure was ſuch [e]. And what might be the reaſon (thinke we) that in Canaan euery mans dwelling, euery mans ſhare was diuided vnto him by Lot [f], but to teach them, that their portion was Gods admeaſurement, and therefore to be receiued as from him, without gain-ſaying? and to teach vs alſo by that ſhadow, that our place, among thoſe many manſions in Gods houſe [g], is not of our owne chuſing, but caſt vpon vs by the freedome of diuine appointment. Secondly, for the further opening of this excellent point, let mee declare vnto you, 1. That there was no neede on Gods part to Adopt vs: 2. That there was no worth in vs, for which hee ſhould ſo aduance vs: Which two things being cleered, it will bee as manifeſt as the Sun, that there was no other beginning of Adoption but onely Loue. First, that there was no need on Gods part, may thus appeare: He that adopteth a ſon doth it (ordinarily) vpon one of theſe two occaſions, either for default of naturall iſſue, or for want of ſuch iſſue as is fit to inherit his eſtate. Neither of theſe could haue place in God: First God needed no ſucceſſor, it being true in him, which is ſaid, that from euerlaſting to euerlaſting he is God [h], that he is the ſame, and that his yeers doe not faile [i]. Secondly, ſuppoſe we for the preſent (that which cannot bee) a ſucceſſion in God, yet he is not without a Son, who is the brightneſſe of his glory, and the engrauen forme of his perſon [k], in nothing differing from him, but that the one is the Father, the other the Sonne, neither is it poſſible that greater fitneſſe ſhould bee either deſired or imagined, then is in him, who is ſo beloued a Son, and in whom his Father is ſo well pleaſed [l]: Thus we ſee that God was not driuen to any ſuch ſtrait as to adopt ſonnes vnto himſelfe. Or yet put caſe he had, had hee not others to adopt? Hath he not thouſand thouſands, and ten thouſand thouſand Angels [m], among whom he might rather make choice then amongſt vs?

But yet (to come the ſecond point,) it may be that hee intending to adopt, there was ſome worthineſſe in vs to encline him to it: ſurely none at all. For what are we all by nature (the beſt of vs) but the ſonnes and daughters of the Diuell? ye are of your father the Diuell, is no leſſe true of vs, then of the Iewes [n]. If we looke into the rocke, out of which we were hewen, it will appeare that we are all of one brood. Now then being ſonnes of Sathan, was there any worth in vs to become the Sons of God? Saul in his heate and choler againſt Ionathan, vpbraided him with his mother, Thou Son of the rebellious woman [o]: And God himſelfe to abaſe the Iewes, twitteth them with their Parentage, Thy father was an Amorite, thy mother an Hittite [p]. Who viler, who more ignoble then the Diuell? what baſeneſſe then comparable with ours, who by nature are his off-ſpring? or what worthineſſe in vs to become the Sonnes of God? Yea, but it may be, we haue helped and bettered our naturall blindneſſe by ſome better deſert? No, vntill the Lord begin to practiſe his loue vpon vs, we are ſtill enemies [q] to him, altogether vnprofitable [r], we drinke iniquity like water [s], wee bee reprobate to euery good worke [t], and euen without God in the world [u]: Are wee now meete perſons to become come the ſonnes of God? All theſe things well conſidered, well may we wonder at this myſtery, and cry out with our Apoſtle, Behold what loue the Father hath ſhewed vs, that wee ſhould be called the Sonnes of God. When wee reade all itories, and examine and view all examples of men, which haue ſhewed fauor to baſe and wretched and vnworthy perſons; we may in the end conclude after ſome ſuch maner as Salomon doth touching the vertuous woman, Many Daughters haue done faithfully, but thou ſurmounteſt them all[x]: ſo, many men haue dealt compaſſionately with perſons of little deſert, but thou (O God) haſt ſurmounted them all. I am not worthy to be called thy Sonne (ſaid the Prodigall) make me as one of thy hired ſeruants[y]. To become Sonnes then, was more then we could haue hoped for, more then we might haue dared or preſumed to deſire. Well might it haue been for vs to haue had the baſeſt office in Gods houſe: but this loue, to bee Sonnes, who can ſadome it? Well may wee admire it, but ſure we cannot expreſſe it. I remember the ſpeech of Mephiboſheth to King Dauid, All my Fathers houſe were but dead men before my Lord the King, yet didaeſt thou ſet thy ſeruant among them that did eate at thine owne table[z]. This was loue indeed; yet was not Mephiboſheth made a Sonne. God hath done this for vs, which he did for Mephiboſheth. We were all dead[a] before him, yet he hath aduanced vs euen to ſit at table in his Kingdome[b], but now not as gueſts, but as Sonnes, euen as Oliue plants, not to bee remoued. When Dauid ſent Meſſengers to Abigail, Nabals widow, to treate about a marriage betwixt him and her, ſhe aroſe (ſaith the Text) and bowed her ſelfe on her face to the earth, and ſaid, Behold, let thine handmaide be a ſeruant to waſh the feet of the ſeruants of my Lord[c]: as if ſhee had ſaid; what I his wife, make me rather his drudge. Thus ſpake ſhee in humility, comparing her eſtate with Dauids. When the Miniſtry of the Word reports to vs, in the name of God, the purpoſe of God to Adopt vs, and to make vs his Sonnes, well may wee caſt downe our ſelues and ſay, Nay, let vs be honoured ſo much as to be attendants vpon Gods children, vnworthy we are to be Sons and Daughters our ſelues. Thus haue I laboured to cleere this point alſo, that in our adopted eſtate, there is nothing to be ſeen but Loue, yea, ſuch Loue as Chriſt ſpeaketh of, greater then which, no man hath[d].

The 1. Vſe. We doe hence firſt gather a confirmation of the three points, which haue hitherto been ſpoken of: for firſt, Is Adoption a fruit of Gods Loue, how then can it chuſe but be excellent? How can any baſe thing driue it ſelfe from ſo worthy a beginning? Secondly, is it loue in God that hath called me out to be his Son? Surely then I muſt needs perceiue it: how is it poſſible that I ſhould be beloued of God, and yet not know it? Thirdly, is Gods Loue the foundation of this eſtate? Then it muſt needs be vnchangeable: for with him there is no colour of alteration. So that we may briefly make this firſt vſe of this Doctrine, euen to ſtabliſh our ſelues by it in all thoſe Doctrines which we haue heard out of this Text. Adoption, if it be, (as it is) an effect of Gods loue, then it is admirable, then is it perceiueable, then is it alſo vnchangeable. Behold (ſaith S. Iames) how great a matter a little fier kindleth[e]: So ſay I, Behold how ſtrong a proofe for three worthy points, this one little word (loue) affordeth.

The 2. Vſe. Secondly, of this Doctrine I may ſay as Dauid did of Goliahs ſword, There is none to it[f], for the quelling and diſcomfiture of two grand enemies of godlines; 1. Popery: 2. The pride of mans vnreformed and vnconuerted heart. Touching Popery, all the Doctrine therein touching the concurrence of mans free-will, with the offers of Gods grace, concerning workes going before to prepare to grace, concerning merits enſuing to perfit it, and to increaſe it, is by this wholly ouerthrowne. For in a matter ſo wholly expounded of Gods free loue, as is the ſtate of the adopted, it is vnpoſſible there ſhould creepe in any thing, iſſuing out of the nature of Man, (as his owne) to be tempered with it. If we ſpeake of men already adopted, true it is, that to them Gods loue is either reſtrained or

or improued according to the measure of goodnesse which is in them: wherein notwithstanding, God respects not any thing which is properly mans, but only that which is of his owne bestowing. But if we speake of persons to be adopted, there is no cause of Gods loue to one, to adopt him rather then another, but only it selfe: in the party there was no naturall disposition to desire it, no power or ability to deserue it. And indeed this one thing, that the kingdome of heauen is (as it is called by Paul) a reward of inheritance [g], breaketh the necke of all merit, in all ablenesse in man (as of himselfe) to aduance his owne happinesse, because in euery mans vnderstanding, there is nothing more free then a matter of inheritance. If heauen were the hier of seruants, or the booty of purchasers, it were some thing to the purpose; but being the reward of sonnes, and that which we receiue onely, as heires, there is no colour of desert. He that hath it either in possession, or in assured and well grounded expectation, must say as Iacob did of his wealth; God hath had mercy on me, and therefore it is mine [h]. [g] Col. 3. 24. [h] Gen. 33. 11.

The second aduersary which is vnable to stand before the face of this doctrine, is the pride of mans heart. I may say truly to you, that he knoweth nothing touching himselfe as he ought, who knoweth not this, that the debasement of himselfe, is euen as a gall and worm-wood to a natural man. Long was it ere Iob was brought to this dejectednesse of spirit, to abhorre himselfe [i]: And doubtlesse, Dauid had attained to a great measure of grace, when he said; I will be yet more vile in mine owne sight [k]. Which of vs all is able to speake so of himself, without some secret check, that he speakes not as he thinkes? To passe ouer the matter with a certaine slight & superficiall acknowledgement, that we are all sinners, & haue deserued the wrath of God, is nothing. Many a churlish Nabal, many a proud Pharisee confesseth so much; but to confesse sincerely, and from the heart, that whatsoeuer I am in the world, honorable, noble, gentle, wealthy, learned, well reported of; yet I am in mine owne nature the child of Sathan, the heire of hell, the sonne of perdition, an alient from God, an enemy to him, a hater of him, one vnable, so much as by a motion of my mind to aduance mine owne truest good: this is a hard matter, they be but as the summer gatherings [l], which are come so far in godlinesse. Now this doctrine is of great vse to the amating of this humor, which is the very height of pride & may be as well in the maide at the mill, as in him that sitteth on the throne [m]. For seeing (as hath bin proued) the whole body of our saluation depends vpon the sole & onely grace of God, there being nothing in vs, which might incline him towards vs (vnlesse it were perpetually and finally to reiect vs) what haue we wherein to reioyce? what is there left vnto vs, wherof to boast our selues? Nay, what cause haue we not rather euen to blush, and to be ashamed of our selues, in whom there is nothing but matter of Gods deepest indignation, and euen to spue vs out of his mouth [n]? Oh, that our hearts might melt within vs at the consideration hereof, and that we might at last effectually perceiue & feele that (which few imagine) euen the incomprehensible measure of our owne vnworthines. The ignorance, or slight conceiuing hereof, is the cause of all the profane contempt which is at this day cast vpon good things: and vntill our hearts be bruised & broken, and euen plowed vp, and pierced through with the feeling, yea, the more then ordinary feeling of the wofull wretchednesse of our naturall estate; we may (perhaps) make some idle and verball discourses of the mystery of Christ, and of the doctrine of Adoption but that we should find any true sweetnesse therin, it is vtterly impossible. No man taketh that comfort in the beginning of health, as he which hath been most sensible of some wasting and tormenting sickenesse. He which hath yet freshly in his memory, and euen in his very feeling, the misery, the damnable and hellish misery of an vnregenerate estate; oh, at what a rate doth such an one value the loue of the Father, by wich hee is called to bee the Sonne of God! Would wee then truly conceiue the largenesse of [i] Iob. 42. 6. [k] 2 Sam. 6. 22. [l] Mich. 7. 1. [m] Exod. 11. 5. [n] Reu. 3. 16.

of this loue of God, in vouchſafing to vs the meanes of grace, and of Adoption? let vs labour to know and feele (yet more) what we are in our ſelues, euen of all Gods creatures (any way capable of his fauour) the moſt vnworthy; the moſt vnmeet to be ſo aduanced. Deſire wee to be brought to this acknowledgement? let vs exerciſe the very ſtrength of our beſt meditations, vpon this which the Scripture ſaith, that the fountaine of all that eternall good which wee hope to enioy, is Gods loue; yea, and ſuch a loue which had its beginning onely from it ſelfe. And let vs vrge and preſſe vpon our ſelues out of this meditation, that if all be of loue, ſurely then there is nothing of deſert: and then let vs proceede further, to rip vp the vttermoſt of our naturall eſtate, that wee may ſee plainely, that in the children of wrath, and limmes of Sathan, there could not be any ſo much as a preparation to adoption. This duty is ſoone named, and as quickly heard; but a taske it is of no ſlight performance. I may ſay of it, as Ezra ſpake of the peoples repentance for a great ſinne, It is not the worke of one day or two[z]: It is not a matter which can by and by be done, it is worke enough for a Chriſtian while he liues; he which once beginneth it, ſhall find it a matter of the greateſt difficulty that hee euer yet vndertooke, to bring his owne proud rebellious heart to be nothing, yea, worſe then nothing in it owne opinion. See ſtill in common experience, how ready euery man is to make the beſt of his ſpirituall eſtate: who is ready with the abaſed Cananite, to receiue the imputation of a Dogge[a], with a calme and vnreſiſting ſpirit? Who is not rather ready to replie with the ſtoute Iewes, who, being challenged by the Prophet for their apparant ſinnes, yet were not aſhamed to ſay; Wherein haue wee treſpaſſed[b]? Nay, this outbearing humour, (which is the diſeaſe of all our natures) ſticketh ſo cloſe, and is ſo ſtrong in the vnregenerate, that euen when they are condemned, and are going away to Hell, they will yet turne againe, and ſay; When did we ſo, and ſo[c]? I ſpeake this to ſhew how faſt this ſinne of ſenſeleſneſſe hangs on[d], and cleaues as cloſe vnto vs as our skinne; that ſo wee may ſee the neceſſity of ſetting our ſelues with our beſt endeauours to ſhake it off. He that thinkes hee hath made the beſt proceedings in it, yet let him know that hee is bound with Dauid, to ſeeke to be yet more vile[e], to be yet more baſe in his owne opinion.

The 3. Vſe. Thirdly this Doctrine ſerues to quicken in all our hearts the loue of God. Hath God ſo infinitely loued vs? what can we then doe leſſe then requite him with loue againe? Loue is the ground of all good from God to vs, it is the ſubſtance of all that is owing from vs vnto God. It is an honourable thing to be a louer of God; it is one of Abrahams titles of honour, The friend of God[f]. It is a bleſſed thing to loue God: for, they which loue the Lord, ſhall be as the Sunne when it riſeth in his ſtrength[g]. It is a miſerable thing to be voide of this affection: for, if any man loue not the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, let him be anathema maranatha[h]. But (will ſome man ſay) What needs any exhortation to the loue of God? for, who is there that doth not loue God? I know indeed that there is not the verieſt ſcorner of Religion, the verieſt Libertine, there is no monſtrous ſwearer, no horrible adulterer, no vile oppreſſour, but hee will ſay, and proteſt, that hee loueth God with all his heart, euen as well as the holieſt of them all. But by that time I haue briefly ſhewed the nature of the loue of God, and the markes thereof, it will appeare, that albeit the Profeſſours to loue him, be as the ſand by the Sea which cannot be numbred, yet they be but as as the ſhaking of an Olive tree, two or three berries in the vpmoſt boughes[i]; for both the right knowledge of the louing of God, is ſcant, and the markes thereof are not common to be found. Touching the nature of the louing of God, it may be defined to be an holy affection, whereby wee loue God in Chriſt for himſelfe. An affection wee all conceiue it to be: for what is loue but the bent of the affection vnto this or that?

Secondly,

Secondly, it is holy; for a carnall affection is luſt rather then loue, and God eſteemes it not. Thirdly, the ground of it, it is Chriſt; for if God be not known as he hath reuealed himſelfe in Chriſt, he cannot be loued: Men ignorant of this myſtery, may ſpeake of louing God, but that they ſhould truly loue him, it is vnpoſſible. Fourthly, the inducement to this loue, is himſelfe; for, to loue God for profit, or benefit, is a hired loue, and ſuch as reprobates may haue: but the truth of loue, is when he is loued for his owne ſake, ſimply; that is, when a man conſidering the excellency of Gods nature, looketh no further, and laboureth with himſelfe, onely for it to delight in him. This is the nature of loue to God. Now the markes of this loue are theſe. The firſt is a deſire of fellowſhip with God: Loue doth alwayes beget a deſire of ſociety. He that loues God, muſt needs deſire to conuerſe with God, and a ioy it will be to his ſoule, when hee may (as it were) meete with the Lord. Great was the loue betwixt Dauid and Ionathan, their ſoules were knit together[i]. You ſhall ſee in the ſtory what contentment they tooke in each others company, what ſhifts they made to meete, when Dauid durſt not come to the Court for feare of Saul, what weeping there was when they were to part. This ſheweth, that loue doth breed a deſire of ſociety with the party loued. So it is in this loue: Now though God be euery where, ſo that we cannot (though we would) goe from his preſence[k]: yet there is an eſpeciall kind of fellowſhip had with him in the exerciſes of the word and Sacraments, and in prayer. In the Word, God ſpeaketh, and powreth out his mind[l] vnto vs. In prayer we ſpeake to him, and powre out our hearts before him[m]. In the Sacraments he giueth viſible pledges of his fauour, in them we do euen looke vpon, and handle the word of life[n]. And therefore in the louers of God, great loue is noted to theſe things, and to the place where God in theſe things offereth himſelfe vnto his ſeruants: I haue loued the habitation of thy houſe[o], &c. How amiable are thy tabernacles[p], ſaith Dauid; and Oh how I loue thy word[q]: It is the ioy and the reioycing of my heart, ſaith Ieremy[r]: Euening and morning, and at noone will I pray[ſ], &c. Seuen times a day doe I praiſe thee[t]. To apply euery marke by it ſelfe, as we ſet it downe; let this be marked by thoſe that will take it as a great wrong, if they ſhal be ſaid not to loue God, and yet come to the exerciſes of the word, &c. as a beare to a ſtake, an[d] take more ioy in any time then in that which is ſo ſpent. Euery ſermon is to them the very burthen of the Lord: the Lords Supper, as ſome courſe, homely, ſluttiſh, fare, is looked vpon, & refuſed with ſcorne. Such will ſay, they loue God, but when he offereth himſelfe to them, and commeth forth to meet them, they turne away from him, and deſire to haue no ſociety with him. Denie theſe things who can, that loue to God muſt needs breed deſire to draw neere to God, that the exerciſes of the Word & Sacraments, and Prayer, are the meanes by which we come to haue a kind of holy fellowſhip with his Maieſty; and let the baſe eſteemers, and careleſſe reſpecters of theſe ſeruices, ſee how they can iuſtifie themſelues to loue the Lord. The ſecond marke is, loue of obedience to the will of God. Thou ſhalt loue the Lord thy God, and keepe that which hee commandeth thee[u]. If you loue me, keepe my Commandements[x]. He that keepeth his word, in him is the loue of God perfect indeed[y]. Loue begetteth likeneſſe of affection. He which loueth God, will loue that which is pleaſing to God, will hate that which he abhorreth; Ye that loue the Lord, hate euill[z]. Hence is noted in the ſeruants of God, ſuch a deſire of obedience, and ſuch a deteſtation of Sinne: Oh that my wayes were directed, to keepe thy Statutes[a]! I hate all falſe wayes[b]; and ſuch a ſorrow that they cannot doe the good which they would[c]. Trie we our ſelues by this marke, wee, which when we heare of louing God aboue all things, be ready to ſtand foorth, and to ſay with him in the Goſpell; All this I haue done from my youth[d]: Let vs ſee, where is our obedience; nay, where is our care, to proone what is the goodwill of God[e]. Surely hee which hath no care of knowledge, hath no great deſire of obedience. Mens greateſt delight, is in the things which God most hates, swearing, whoredome, oppression, falshood[e], contempt of Gods word, &c. Either the Scripture is a fable, or else the soule of the Lord abhorreth these: yet in the practise of these is the very ioy and businesse of the times, and nothing is lesse respected, then that which God most requires. It is in vaine to say we loue God, when we will do nothing for his sake: who set teth himselfe to reform any thing at his bidding? This is poore loue: Can a woman prostitute her body to a varlet, and yet truly say, shee loueth her husband? It is not possible. No more can any man call himselfe a friend of God, if he see and performe the workes of the Diuell. The third marke is, a griefe of heart, to see and heare the name of God to be dishonoured, the truth, the Religion and the profession of the trueth euill spoken of. A faithfull friend cannot endure the reproach of his friend, he cannot patiently sit by, and heare him whom he loueth to be reuiled. The very blood of him that loues God, will rise to behold that which may be a dishonour to God. Eliakim and Shebnah rent their clothes, when they heard the blasphemy of Rabshakeh[f]. How did Moses, who was otherwise in his owne matters the meekest man[g], vexe himselfe when he beheld the idolatry of the people[h]. Dauids eyes gushed out Riuers of waters, because men kept not the Law[i]: They which are sealed vp vnto saluation, doe mourne and crie for all the abominations that be done in the midst of the places where they liue[k]. What will become of vs, if wee be tried by this Rule? whose hearts haue such a crust drawne ouer them, that neither our owne sinnes, nor the monstrous sinnes of the times can make vs to lament. It neuer troubleth vs, to see to what a height & perfection sinne is come in euery place; to heare euery corner euen ring of swearing, filthines, cruelty, cursing, contempt of goodnesse: whose bowels do yerne in him to consider it? That which would vexe the righteous soule of Lot[l], if he were aliue to behold it, that we can digest and passe ouer without any trouble. There is little loue to God, where the extreme impiety of the times is not taken to hart. The fourth marke, is loue to Gods children: Euery one which loueth him, which begate, loueth him also which is gotten of him[m]. He which loueth God, must needs loue the graces of God which doe appeare in others: this breedeth trueth of affection, euen there where there is no knowledge or acquaintance otherwise: the very name of a Disciple, is a sufficient tye amongst Christians indeed. There is no surer note of saluation. We know that we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren[n]. This may bee turned against them, whose loue to others, is rather lessened then encreased by Religion; in whose eyes some are respected so much the lesse, because of the profession which they make. Surely there is no godlinesse in him, which doth not loue the beginnings of godlinesse in another. The last marke, is a speciall respect to the thriuing and prosperity of Gods Church. Note wee this: the hazard of the Church hath grieued the hearts of Gods seruants, when for outward things they haue had no cause of sorrowing. Nehemiah was in good estate, being the Kings Butler[o], yet hee wept and mourned, when he heard of the distresse of Ierusalem[p]. The people of God did preferre Ierusalem to their chiefe ioy[q]. Vriah would not goe downe to his house, and take his ease when the Arke of the Lord was in hazard[r]: It was no contentment to the wife of Phinehas, to be told that shee had borne a son, when the glory was departed from Israel, the Arke of God being taken[s]. Againe, the proceeding of the Gospell hath refreshed them in their afflictions, and made them euen to forget the sorrowes therof. Paul was in bands, yet, that Christ is preached, I therein ioy, and will ioy (saith he)[t]. This is worthy the thinking on by those, who are of that carnall disposition, and set vpon earthly things, that so they may haue for the backe and the belly, and enioy health, and peace, and plenty, care not which way Religion goeth, and hearken as little how it fareth with the Church, and what is like to become of the state and busines thereof, as they do what is done in America; they prouide themselues to liue in any ayre, and to turne to any Religion: There is no loue of God where the ſtate of his Church is not thought vpon.

Now, I hope you ſee that it was no needleſſe exhortation which I vndertooke, to perſwade to the loue of God. I beleeue that if we which ſtand moſt vpon it were as well vrged as Chriſt vrged the Phariſees, in the caſe of adultery, we would euen ſlinke away one by one, being accuſed by our owne conſciences[u]. Let vs all then make this vſe of this Doctrine of Gods free grace and loue in adopting vs, euen to ſtirre vp our ſelues to the Loue of his Maieſty: There is no motiue to the Louing of God, comparable to this. And if we would be thought to loue God indeed, let our fruits declare it: our loue to his word, our loue of obedience, our loue of his ſeruants, our loue of his glory, our loue of his Church How canſt thou ſay, I loue thee, ſaid Delilah to Sampſon) when thy heart is not with me[x]? To my much Honoured Lady, the Lady MARGARET HELE of Winburie in Deuonſh.

Adam, many things, which I haue obſerued in you, doe aſſure me, that this ſmall preſent ſhall find ſome fauour with you: theſe two eſpecially; your reuerent eſtimation of the ordinance of God (the word preached) and your more particular reſpect vnto my miniſtery: Other things I could name, but that I doe abhorre the very ſmell and ſhadow of flattery. It hath pleaſed you ſometime, to craue of me the notes of ſome things which I haue (in your hearing) taught in publique. Being much deſired by many to commit to printing, that which God enabled me very lately to deliuer, at the funerals of a worthy Gentle-woman of theſe parts, I thought to inſcribe it vnto your Ladyſhips name, as a pledge of my true deſire to further you (all I may) in your iourney towards Heauen. The matter is of a woman, in the Scripture wel reported of, both for her holy profeſſion, and for her gratious fruit, to whom the more like your Ladiſhip ſhall become, the better ſhall your aſſurance bee of entring into reſt: I commend the Sermon to your reading, the perſon treated of to your Imitation, and your body and ſoule to the protection of the Almighty, my ſelfe remaining.

THE LIFE AND DEATH of DORCAS.

ACTS 9. 36. There was also at Ioppa a certaine woman, a Disciple named Tabitha, (which by interpretation is called Dorcas) shee was full of good workes and almes which shee did.

37. And it came to passe in those daies, that shee was sicke and died.

THis which I haue read is the entrance into a very memorable Story, touching a testimony which God gaue to the word of his grace, by enabling Peter to restore a dead woman vnto life. I am now to treate of it, as an entire parcell in it selfe, and being so considered, I may terme it, A compendious or briefe report of the life and death of a certaine worthy Matron, whose dwelling was in Ioppa, whose name in the syricke tongue, Tabitha, as much in effect as that which in Greeke is called Dorcas: a name very honorable now because it was hirs, though in it owne natiue signification not so gracefull, it being as much to say as in English, Roe, or Goat: no more preiudice to her who was a sheepe of Christs, then it was behouefull to traiterous Absolon, that by the purport of his name hee was the father of peace. I will not spend time about the circumstances of her name and dwelling, though both might affoord vs good matter of instruction: the one, to shew how that (as God said to Moses)[a] the religious find that fauour in the sight of God, that he knoweth them by name, and that, although it bee their portion here to haue their names put out as euill[b]: yet still they are written in Heauen[c], in the Booke of life of the Lambe[d], out of which they shall neuer be raced[e]: whereas the wicked though they thinke to get them a name[f], and lay plots to keepe their name in remembrance[g], and to that end doe call their Lands by their names[h]: yet their name shall rot[i], and shall be left by them as a curse vnto Gods chosen[k]: the other, of her dwelling, might be brought to minde vs, that the Lord knoweth our dwelling[l], and so by consequence is accustomed to all our waies[m]. If we walke in obedience before him, no place can hinder our acceptance with him: his eye is as well to Ioppa as to Ierusalem: and if wee walke stubbornely against him[n], no place can shroud vs from his hand. For, Whether shall we flee from his presence[o]? And, The eyes of the Lord in euery place behold the euill and the good[p]. These things I could vrge from these circumstances: but because I am now like to a poore Trauellor, that hath farre to goe and little to spend, much matter before me in my Text, but not much time before me to deliuer it in; I will therefore select such things as may sort with the purpose of our meeting, which as it is to solemnize the Funerall of a deceased Matron, so it should be to take occasion thereby, so to number our daies, that we may apply our hearts to wisedome[q], and so to order our daies by passing the time of our dwelling here in feare[r], that (hee which is the rewarder of godlinesse) God may do vs good in our latter end[s]. those two generall points, the Life and Death of Dorcas; the one, verſ. 36. the other, verſ. 37. Touching her life, there are two things conſidered: 1. Her profeſſion (a Diſciple): 2. The fruits of her profeſſion (full of good workes, &c.) two things which ought to kiſſe each other in the life of a Chriſtian. A profeſſion without fruit, is groſſe hypocriſie. A kind of fruit (for ſo there may be) without a right profeſſion, is boote-leſſe formality: but both together, knowledge to guide obedience, and obedience to teſtifie the truth of knowledge, that is Chriſtianity. In whom I can finde theſe two, of him I may ſay, Behold indeed an Iſraelite in whom is no guile[t]. This is the man of pure heart, and innocent hands, that ſhall aſcend into the mountaine of the Lord[u]. Let me ſpeake of both apart, I may diuide them in my diſcourſe, but in our courſe, neither you nor I may ſunder them.

The 1. thing in the 1 part.

1. Her profeſſion a Diſciple. Diſciple was the cuſtomary name by which thoſe that profeſſed the truth were called in the prime daies of the Goſpell. In the beginning it was a title more peculiar to thoſe that gaue their ordinary attendance vpon our Sauiour: The twelue Apoſtles are called the twelue Diſciples[x]; but yet euen then the name was enlarged, his ordinary hearers are called his Diſciples[y], and Ioſeph of Arimathea, is ſaid to haue been a Diſciple[z]. After Chriſts aſcenſion, as the number of beleeuers was enlarged, ſo the name grew more common: as in this very Chapter, the true profeſſours whom Saul did perſecute, are called the Diſciples of the Lord[a], Ananias is tearmed a Diſciple[b], and thoſe which were afterward at Antioch, called Chriſtians (where that name was firſt taken vp) were before that time called Diſciples[c]. A Diſciple is as much to ſay in Engliſh as a learner, and the beleeuers were ſo ſtiled becauſe they were ſuch, as in a deſire of ſauing knowledge had their dependance vpon the ordinary meanes of inſtruction (the preaching of the word.) So then, Dorcas a Diſciple, that is, Dorcas a ſcholler in the ſchoole of Chriſt, a ſubmitter of her ſelfe to the ordinance of God for the ſauing of her ſoule. Shee was none of thoſe learners whom the Apoſtle blameth, which learne to goe about from houſe to houſe[d], &c. but ſuch a learner as Lydia, which attended to thoſe things which were ſpoken of Paul[e]. Her being a Learner, is (as other Scripture) written for our learning[f]. And the Doctrine which it affordeth to vs, is this: That, to be a learner of Religion by the meanes ordained of God to teach religion, is a part of the very eſſence and being of a Chriſtian. Theſe two words, a Diſciple, and a Chriſtian, are as we are wont to ſay in Schooles, termes conuertible, as thus; If a Diſciple, ſurely a Chriſtian: If a Chriſtian, ſurely a Diſciple: If no Diſciple, no Chriſtian; If no Chriſtian, no Diſciple. I know there be many counterfeit Diſciples, and ſo there be alſo many counterfeit Chriſtians, and many ſeeme to be Diſciples, which yet are no Chriſtians, and many alſo take vpon them to bee Chriſtians, which by no meanes will be Diſciples: yet ſtill doth that which I haue ſaid remaine true, that ſuch as is a mans Diſciple-ſhip, ſuch is his Chriſtianity: If a true Diſciple, a true Chriſtian; if but a formall Diſciple, ſurely but a hollow Chriſtian. I will appeale to any mans iudgement, be it that he be but (as it were) a man of Yeſterdays in Religion, to tell me what other things is meant by this, that Dorcas was a Diſciple, then this, Dorcas was a beleeuer, a woman conuerted by the Goſpell, to the Chriſtian Faith? So that this obſeruation is iuſt from hence, Either a Diſciple, or elſe no Chriſtian. To this for a fuller cõfirmation we may ioyne that ſpeech of Chriſt to the Apoſtles, when he ſent them out to preach: Go, and teach all nations, or word for word from the Greeke, Go make them Diſciples[h]. If you can bring them once to this, to ſubmit themſelues to be taught of God in his owne ordinance, you haue wonne them. When our Sauiour would ſhew what marke his ſheepe haue, hee declareth it to bee an Eare-marke, My ſheepe heare my voice[i], they haue the wiſe and obedient eare[k]. Now a good Hearer and a good Diſciple are all one. Againe, no man can bee a Chriſtian indeed, vnleſſe hee bee a beliuer: for what what is a Christian, but a man in Christ [l]? and how commeth that vnion betwixt a man and Christ but by Faith [m]? and how shall a man haue Faith, but by beeing a Disciple? Faith is by hearing [n], and Hearing is the inseparable quality of a Disciple: Further, what Christian will you call him, that shall not be saued? and what saluation is there for him, that forsaketh the old beaten path, heare and your soule shall liue [o]: Besides, how is he a Christian, that doth not know God, and him whom he hath sent Christ Iesus [p]? and who can know so much vnlesse he be a Disciple? Man of himselfe doth not know it, for, euery man is a beast by his owne knowledge [q]:) Man of himselfe cannot know it, (for it is foolishnesse vnto him [r]:) he must attaine to it by donation from God, or else he can neuer vnderstand it, (for a man can receiue nothing except it be giuen from aboue [s]:) If he must expect it from God, beggers must not chuse, and he must fit himselfe so to receiue it, as God is pleased to bestow it, & he will not bestow it but by the folly of preaching [t]; a man must sit him down in the Disciples forme, or he shall neuer obtaine it. I know the world will account him but a foole who tieth himselfe to this course, but this is that Foolishnesse of God, which is wiser then Men [u]; and he who seemeth to be wise in this world, must be a foole, that he may be wise [x]. Now for vse, if none be Christians but Disciples; and none Disciples, but such as haue chosen Maries part, to sit at Iesus feet to heare his preaching [y]; and what Feet are there now left vnto vs but those beautifull ones, which bring glad tidings of peace [z]? Tell me then (I pray you) what plenty is there of Christians? Sure I am, the number of Disciples is not great I know, Hearers there be many, but not euery Hearer a Disciple. By that time the number of Disciples are shoaled out from the great preasse and multitude of common Hearers, I will tell you how it will be. Israel went out to fight against Aram; Israel pitched on the side, Aram on the other side: The children of Israel were like two little flocks of kids, but the Aramites filled the Country [a]. Here is the very true proportion betwixt the great swarmes of Hearers, & the small handfull of Disciples. There be many things do make men Hearers, as necessity, authority, hypocrisie, formality, affection of nouelty, &c. But there is but one thing makes a man a Disciple; a setled perswasion that that whereto a man submitteth himselfe as a Disciple, is the very Arme of the Lord [b], & the power of God vnto saluation [c]. And if we bring Disciples to this scantling, I beseech you aske the men in your owne coates, where we shall find them. Surely the men of this generation are not yet possessed with the necessity of dependance vpon that Teaching course which the Lord hath sanctified to the gathering together of his Saints [d]. The multitude passeth it ouer in a kind of carelesnesse, not so much as euer putting it to the question, what is to be done that they may be saued? They follow the droue: if it be right, so it is; if not, then God help, if so many shal be damned. But now the wiser sort, they consent and agree, that somewhat must be knowne and beleeued vnto saluation: but to go to Schoole to a Minister, to giue attendance at the posts of the Lords Doors, there to heare instruction [e], that is too submisse a course: Why? cannot we informe our selues? And is there no Christianity, but by so seruile a cõformity as the hanging vpon the mouth of a Preacher? Now (beloued) either shew thy self a Disciple, or neuer thinke thou art a Christian. They which were first called Christians, were Disciples first. Neither is euery one a Disciple, which putteth his foot into the Schoole. He that commeth with a denial of himself, with an heart hungring after knowledge, with the spirit of meeknes, with submissiõ to the ordinance of him who is the only Doctor of his Church; this is the Disciple, he is the Christian indeed: this is he whom the Lord will guide in iudgement, and to whom he will teach his way [f]. And thus for the first flower which I haue plucked from that garland, with which it hath pleased the Spirit of God to adorn this Matrons name (Dorcas a Disciple.) And albeit the world neglect both this title, and the thing intended by it as vnworthy, yet without it we lay all our honour in the duſt. This title muſt be a mans glory to the end, as was ſaid of him, Mnaſon an old Diſciple[g]. As I grow old ſo I learne ſtill, ſaid a wiſe Heathen. A man muſt neuer thinke to be preferred out of this Schoole, vntill he come to be admitted into that great Vniuerſity, where he which is the Doctor of the Chaire, Chriſt Ieſus, will aduance all thoſe that haue been good Proficients in the learners Forme, to ſit with him vpon his owne Throne[h]. So much for her profeſſion.

The 2. thing in the 1. part

Now follow the fruits of her profeſſion: of which the holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh firſt generally (full of good workes;) and then ſome particular good workes are made mention of, (Almes, &c.) I will treate of both ſunderly: and firſt of this (full of good workes.) My order muſt be thus: Firſt, to ſhew the meaning: Secondly, to ſet down the doctrine. In the meaning, firſt what thoſe things are which are called good workes: ſecondly, what it is to be full of good workes.

What bee good workes.

Good workes are of the ſame wideneſſe with Gods commandements. For obedience to any branch of Gods commandements, is a good worke. Papiſts (and from them others) doe ſtraiten the largeneſſe of good workes, of which notwithſtanding they take vpon them to be the chiefeſt Patrons. They go not much further then to Almes deeds, and Faſting, and ſuch like. The rule of good workes is Gods reuealed will[i]: voluntary ſeruices God eſteemeth not[k]: the Feare taught by the precep ſof men, he accounts it but hypocriſie[l]. The particular heads of good workes are ſet down, Tit. 2. 12. 1. Sobriety (in the vſe of outward things, meat, drinke, wealth, apparell, diſports) 2. Righteouſneſſe (in dealings with men, that there be no oppreſſion, no defrauding[m].) 3. Godlineſſe (in matters belonging to God, that we worſhip the true God, after a true manner, with a true heart.) The credit and triall of good workes ſtandeth in theſe particulars: 1. When they are guided by Knowledge[n]: (blind zeale is with God of no eſteeme.) 2. When they are directed to Gods Glory[o]: (to do things to be ſeen of men is Phariſaicall.) 3. When they are carried with a ioint reſpect to all Gods Commandements [p]: (to be preciſe in ſome things, and in other to take liberty, is groſſe hypocriſie.) 4. When there is a care chiefly had to thoſe good offices which concerne a mans perſonall calling [q]: (hee that is not good in a calling, is not good at all) 5. When they are held out with conſtancy[r]: (good is not good, if it be not perpetuall.) This is in few words the true ſtate of good workes.

What to bee full of good workes.

Now to be Full, hath reference firſt to the ſincerity of her heart, without which, be the ſhew to the world-ward neuer ſo glorious, yet a man is but an empty Chriſtian. 2. To the vniuerſality of her practiſe, who like Zachary and Elizabeth, walked in all the Commandements of God[s]: 3. To the forwardneſſe of her diſpoſition, ſhee was ready to good workes[t]. 4. To the vnwearieduneſſe of her courſe, ſhee was like Thyatira, her workes moe at the laſt then at the firſt[u]. This is the fulneſſe of a Chriſtian, without fraud, without halting, without grudgings, and without tiring. Thus for the meaning. This her Fulneſſe, affoords fulnes of matter. But I am forced at this time, in ſtead of a Bill of particulars, which in this caſe would be very comfortable, to preſent all in one groſſe ſumme, thus, That euery Diſciple of Chriſt muſt accompany his holy profeſſion with good workes.

The 2. Doct.

The Spirit of God acquainteth vs here what Dorcas was, that from thence wee might learne what we muſt bee: Fulneſſe of good workes, was not in her a matter of ſupererogation, but of duty. If it were duty in her, it is neceſſity in vs. The Scripture abounds in proofe. It was the common charge giuen by Iohn Baptiſt to his hearers, when they began to make a good profeſſion, Bring forth therefore fruit[x], &c. The like elſewhere, Let your conuerſation be ſuch as becommeth the Goſpell of Chriſt [y]: Walke worthy the calling whereunto you are called[z]. It is that which Paul preached to the Gentiles,

Gentiles [a], and he commanded it to be preſſed by Preachers vpon all profeſſours [b]. This was he ſuter for to God on their behalfe with whom he laboured [c]. Your conuerts and profeſſours of the new Teſtament of ſpeciall note, their good workes are ſpecified; as Mathew: his generall worke is mentioned, he followed Chriſt [d]: his particulars, as of bounty, (he made Ieſus a feaſt [e];) and of charity, hee inuited his fellow Publicans to be gueſts, that they alſo might be ſaued. Zacheus, Behold Lord, the halfe of my goods [f], &c. There were his workes. The three thouſand brought to bee Diſciples by Peters Miniſterie, They continued in the Apoſtles Doctrine, and fellowſhip [g], & c. Theſe were their workes. Cornelius, his prayers and almes came vp into remembrance with God [h]. Such were his works. The beleeuers at Epheſus came and confeſſed, and ſhewed their workes [i]. Paul commended the Romans for their holineſſe [k], the Corinthians for their zeale [l], the Theſſalonians for their diligent loue [m], &c. Behold a cloud of witneſſes: Whatſoeuer things are honeſt, and of good report, &c. thoſe doe [n]. If theſe things were memorable in others, ſurely they are imitable in vs. Why good workes ought to bee coupled with our good profeſſion, there bee (as ſaith the Apoſtle) certaine neceſſary vſes [o], as namely; Firſt, the glory of God [p]. It is an honour to God, when his ſeruants by profeſſion are as zealous of good workes, as God-leſſe people are in wickedneſſe. Secondly, the cõuerſion of others [q]. It is poſſible that they which reſpect not the word, may without the Word be wonne by the pure conuerſation of beleeuers [r]. Thirdly, the ſtopping of the mouthes of gain-ſayers [s]. The credit of the Goſpell muſt be deare vnto vs, and woe to him which maketh that worthy name by which he is named, to be blaſphemed [t]. Fourthly, the declaration of the truth of our Faith [u]. It is no liuing, but a titular Faith, which doth not worke by loue [x]. Fiftly, aſſurance of our owne election to our ſoules [y]. Good workes are the way, which God hath ordained vs to walke in [z]. Thus you ſee the truth of this aſſertion: A true Diſciple muſt not be like the Tree which Chriſt curſed, which had leaues, but no fruit [a]; but like the Tree planted by the Riuers ſide, that will bring forth her fruit in due ſeaſon [b], nay, which bringeth forth her fruit in the age thereof, and is then fat and flouriſhing [c].

This is an excellent Doctrine, and a neceſſary; and if I were as eloquent and mighty in the Scripture, as Apollos [d]; as full of the holy Ghoſt, as Barnabus [e]; as abounding in faith and power, as Stephen [f]; or had the beſt gift in perſwading, that God hath giuen vnto any, I might well employ it in the furthering and promoting of this one point: that we would make conſcience to be fruitfull in good workes [g]. It is an exhortation which many amongſt vs do much need. For albeit the profeſſion of the Goſpell in this kingdome hath not been vnfruitfull, ſo that for publike euidence of charity, and monuments of zeale to piety and learning, we need not feare to conteſt with the greateſt oppoſites to our Religion *, beſides the blameleſſe and honeſt conuerſation of many priuate Chriſtians, whoſe liues no doubt, doe adorne the Doctrine of God our Sauiour [h], which they profeſſe: Yet put caſe we here for our parts, who as the Iewes of old, gloried in God [i], ſo doe alſo boaſt in our profeſſion, and in the ſtile & name of Chriſtianity; put caſe we (I ſay) be dealt with in particular; may we not iuſtly be challenged for our ſcarcity of good work? Whom would it not greeue that hath in him the affections of a Chriſtian, that nothing ſhould bee in ſo generall a diſgrace as this one thing, to bee zealous of good workes? and that the working out of our ſaluation with feare and trembling [r], which is euen the very pith and ſweete marrow of all good workes, ſhould bee a matter by prophane mouthes ſo much ſpoken againſt? I beſeech you, let vs ſuffer the words of exhortation, and let vs be euen emulous of that praiſe which is here giuen vnto Dorcas, to be full of good workes. What an happy & royall exchange were it, if the fulneſſe of theſe times, fulneſſe of ſecurity, fulneſſe of bread[f], might be turned into fulneſſe of good workes? This would be our comfort in death, this would giue vs boldneſſe in the day of iudgement. Death is the worlds ſtrict door-keeper, and will ſee that as wee brought nothing into the world, ſo we carry nothing out[t]: but yet the concomitance of good workes it cannot hinder: Bleſſed are they that dye in the Lord, for their workes follow them[u]. And for the day of iudgement, our triall there ſhall not be by our profeſſion, but by our works; and euery man ſhal be remembred there according to his goodneſſe here. Thinke not I preach good workes, like a Iuſticiary. I confeſſe when wee haue done all, wee muſt ſay, we are vnprofitable ſeruants[y], and acknowledge with that ancient Father, That vnleſſe God did ſpare in mercy, hee ſhould find none whom he might crowne in iuſtice. It is ſaid of Manlius Torquatus, that when his ſonne, contrary to a martiall decree, had exceeded his courſe, and ſlaine an enemy; his father, being the commander of the ſeruice, firſt crowned him for valour, and then executed him for his diſobedience. So may God deale with vs, were it that hee ſhould find any thing in vs worthy to bee rewarded, he ſhould withall find more then ſomething deſeruing to be puniſhed. Now though I thus diſclaime the merit of good workes, and crie with him that ſaid, My merit is the Lords mercy; yet I maintaine the neceſſity of good workes. For them, no man ſhall be ſaued: but without them, there is no entring into reſt. Follow holineſſe, without which, no man ſhall ſee the Lord[z]. The way to heauen is an holy way, and the polluted ſhall not paſſe by it[a]. Let vs therfore caſt away our tranſgreſſions[b], and mortifie our members that are on earth[c], crucifie our fleſh with the affections and luſts[d], make our waies and our workes good[e], if we deſire in our life to be honoured, in our death to be comforted, and at the laſt reſurrection to be crowned. So much touching the generall fruit of Dorcas profeſſion.

What almes is.

One particular of her good workes, was Almes. Before wee come to the doctrine, wee muſt conſider ſomething of the nature of almes. In the generall nature, almes is a giuing vnto thoſe that want; but yet not euery giuing, no not where there is need, is almes, vnleſſe it be a giuing ſo conditioned as the word of God preſcribes. The giuing which the Scripture warrants, to the end it may be called an almes, muſt thus be qualified: firſt, it muſt be with diſcretion. A good man is merciſull, &c. and will meaſure his affaires with iudgement[f]. Many a good duty is marred in the handling. Diſcretion reſpecteth either the quantity which is giuen, or the parties to whom: For the quantity, a due reſpect muſt be had to a mans own ability[g]. The Heathen fitly compareth giuing of almes, or any the like communicating office, vnto the reaching forth of ones candle, that by it another may light his, wherein care muſt bee had, that a mans own go not out. Charity is bountifull[h], but not prodigall: although caſes alſo may be in which this proportion muſt be exceeded: according as the Churches of Macedonia were willing beyond their power[i]. But this cloſe handed age giueth no great cauſe to preſſe this rule, yet it muſt not be omitted. Another branch of diſcretion is concerning the parties to whom. For this giuing to all without diſtinction, is not almes. Bleſſed is the man that iudgeth wiſely of the poore[k]. There is a generation to which a man ought not to giue, vnleſſe in a caſe of manifeſt extremity: He that workes not ſhall not eate[l]. The principal and firſt reſpect muſt bee to the houſhold of faith[m], and that the bowels of the poore Saints may bee comforted[n]. To ſuch a man muſt giue both more affectionately, and more liberally. The honeſt poore, and induſtrious poore, thoſe that fall into pouerty, not thoſe that make a profeſſion of beggerie.

This

This is discretion. Secondly, it must be with iustice. The word which in Matthew 6 verse 1. is translated Almes, signifieth Iustice, because it is not indeed Charity, if it doe not proceede from Equity. Now I call that Iustice in giuing, when a man giueth of his owne. Cast thy bread[x], &c. I the Lord loue iudgement: but I hate robbery for burnt offerings[y]: as when men suppose to make a kinde of satisfaction for a great deale of vniust getting, by some largesse to the poore. Thirdly, it must be with compassion: (as if ye were also afflicted[z], &c.) This is that which is called tender heartednesse[a], and a pouring out of the soule to the hungry[b]. Fourthly, it must bee with cheerefulnesse. God loueth a cheerefull giuer[c]. Well-doing must proceed from wel-willing: Such as is the affection, such is the action. Fiftly, It must bee with simplicity[d]. It is done in simplicity, when the approuing of our selues vnto God is the principall scope. Almes must bee giuen, not put out to vse. The most of that which I haue now said touching this giuing charity, is comprehended in a certaine deuice or representatiue picture which I read of, of late,* wherein charity is pourtraied in the likenes of a naked childe, with a merry countenance, couered in a cloud, with a bloudy heart in the hand, giuing honny to a Bee without wings. First, a childe, because the charitable must be humble as a childe[e]. Secondly, Naked, Charity seeketh not her owne[f]. Thirdly, looking merrily: Charity reioyceth in the truth[g]. Fourthly, couered with a cloude. Charity hunteth not for applause. The right hand must not know what the left hand doth[h]. Fiftly, A heart in the hand: Charity is no dissembler: the heart and hand doe agree. Sixtly, It giueth honay to a Bee without wings. It helpeth not the droane, but the Bee; not the idler, but the labourer, whom God hath disabled to be his owne supply. So then this is the effect of all, touching Dorcas. Shee was zealous of good workes generally; more particularly, she was a discreet, iust, compassionate, cheerefull, simple-hearted Almoner. Whatsoeuer she did, shee did as a Disciple, according to the prescript of that holy doctrine, wherein shee was trained. Other manner of giuing then this, the word of God could neuer teach her.

Now come we to the doctrine, which is this: That giuing to the poore is a speciall practise of true Christianity, which wee may not neglect. Wherefore are wee told of Dorcas Almes, but to bind vs to the like vertue? It is a matter which the Scripture laboureth to fasten vs with a three-fold cord. First, precept: Secondly, example: Thirdly, benefit. The first, to enioyne vs: the second, to direct vs: the third, to encourage vs. First, for precept: Cast thy bread vpon the waters. Giue a portion to seauen, and also to eight[i]. Is not this the fast that I haue chosen, to deale thy bread to the hungry[k]? &c. If one of thy brethren with thee be poore, &c. thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thy hand from thy poore brother: but thou shalt open thine hand vnto him[l], &c. Giue to him that taketh[m], &c. Hee that hath two coates, let him giue to him that hath none; and he that hath meate, let him doe likewise[n]. As you abound in euery thing, in faith, in word, &c. so see that you abound in this grace also[o]. Be ready to distribute[p]. Thus for precept. As for examples, wee haue the hospitality of Abraham[q], and Lot[r]: The Charity of Obadiah, that kept an hundred Prophets vpon his owne charge, in the time of persecution vnder Izabel[s]: the bounty of Iob, I was eyes to the blinde, feete to the lame[t]: I haue not eate my morsels alone, &c. I haue seene none perish for want of cloathing: the loines of the poore haue blessed mee, because hee was warmed with the fleece of my sheepe[u]. The liberality of Zacheus: The halfe of my goods I giue to the poore[x]. The free-hearted-nesse of Cornelius: He gaue much Almes[y]. The compassionate-nesse of Philemon: by thee brother the bowles of the Saints are comforted[z]. The forwardnesse of Paule: which thing (speaking of remembring the poore) I was diligent to do[a]. Aboue all, we haue the example of examples, the practise of Christ Iesus. Generally this is noted of him, that being rich, for our sakes he became poore, that wee through his pouerty might bee made rich[b]. Particularly, though he himselfe

Now for benefit and good that followeth herein: First, wee are assured, that whatsoeuer flesh and blood may imagine, yet that which is giuen is not lost? After many daies thou shalt finde it[d]. Hee that hath mercie vpon the poore, lendeth to the Lord, and the Lord will recompence[e], &c. The liberall person shall haue plenty[f], &c. He that soweth liberally, shall reape liberally[g]. So that here is one good turne, a man is sure this way to be no loser, rather hee prouides a stocke for himselfe against the time of need. Secondly, hereby a man brings vpon himselfe a continuall blessing throughout his whole life. The Lord shall deliuer him in the time of trouble: the Lord will keepe him, and preserue him alive, he shall be blessed vpon earth[h], &c. Hee bringeth a blessing also vpon his posterity; His seede enioyeth the blessing[i]. Thirdly, this is a meanes to bring vs to the right vse of our wealth. Giue almes, and behold all shall bee cleane vnto you[k]. It is like the aduice of a Phisitian to helpe a surfet by forbearance, so (saith Christ) you that haue been giuen to oppression and cruelty, if you shall repent hereof, and make knowne the truth of your repentance by the fruites of charity, this will be a good medicine against greedinesse, and a meanes to bring you to the pure vse of Gods blessings. Fourthly, it is a good pledge to a mans soule of his future inheritance. Paul calleth it a good foundation against the time to come[l]: not that our saluation is built vpon almes, but the bowles of compassion in vs towards others, (is as it were) a print or stampe of the mercy of God set vpon our hearts. Thus wee see how Almes-giuing is recommended to vs in the Scripture. I could adde the penalty annexed to the contrary; Hee that stoppeth his eare at the crie of the poore, he shall likewise crie and not be heard[m]: Iudgement mercilesse to him that sheweth no mercy[n]. The Vse. Bee pleased I pray you to giue entertainement to this point also. It deserueth to bee harboured. It is the glory of a Christian, Hee hath distributed and giuen to the poore, his horne shall bee exalted with honour[o], As it deserueth harbour, so wee doe generally neede to bee perswaded to open our doores to so worthy a Guest. Fruites of mercy in these dayes are exceeding scarce. The contrary euils, oppression, violence, gaping ouer the heads of the poore, deuouring widdowes houses, selling the poore for old shooes, racking, enhaunsings, gripings, vsuries, immoderate taking; these things, depart not from our Streetes[p]. The portion of the poore is spent away in gaming, in reuelling, in contending, in gay cloathing, in smoake, in dogges, in drinking, &c. How much is vented away by such meanes, by which many a poore soule might bee comforted, many a prisoner ransomed, many a decayed labourer and industrious husbandman restored, many a faithfull student in the Vniuersitie maintained, many an impouerished and spoiled Church re-endowed, many an Hospitall for the sicke and aged erected, many a house of correction for the sturdie and incorrigible, builded? I am euen ashamed for our vnfruitfulnesse: but especially I cannot but pittie that pittifull account which men will make, when they shall come at the day of the great Audit, to giue in their billes of expence to the Lord Paramount, to whom for these things wee must bee countable. Alas, alas, how shall men looke the Lord in the face, when there shall bee seene such large summes about vanities, about contentions at law, about buildings, about belly-cheere, about the furtherance of wicked pleasures, nay (perhaps) so much to the maintenance of secret whoredomes, so much to the commuting of punishments, so much to the keeping and shifting of vnlawful issues, & so little, so nothing to holy vses, to the Church of Christ, and to the Saints of Christ? Thinke vpon it I intreat you, and propound this vertuous woman for an example: and as in other particulars so remember to follow her in this: That which you will doe in this kind, put it not off vntill your latter end. Theſe her almes, were fruits of her liues courſe, not of her Legacies at her death, while we haue time, let vs doe good[q], &c. I condemne not funerall beneficence ſimply: onely I preferre the vitall before it. They which doe nothing but by a way of teſtamentary benevolence, are rightly ſaid to be men of good wils, but of euill deeds. Thus farre of the life of Dorcas. Now of her death, Verſe 37. It came to paſſe in thoſe daies, that ſhee was ſicke, and died. [q] Galat. 6. 10. The 2 part.

I cannot ſpeake at large of euery thing. I muſt ſtill (as hitherto) ſelect the principall; and that in this part is this: That euen the holieſt and moſt religious among the ſonnes of men are ſubiect vnto death. Dorcas notwithſtanding ſhee was a Diſciple, notwithſtanding ſhe was zealous of good workes, and full of almes-deeds; yet, here in thoſe daies ſhe ſickened and was dead. This may eaſily be inſtanced by a world of examples. Righteous Noah, faithfull Abraham, zealous Lot, meeke Moſes, religious Dauid, innocent Iob, painfull Paul, penitent Zache, charitable Cornelius, all the worthies of the firſt times, and whomſoeuer elſe the word of God hath well reported of, where are they? Are they not all dead? Doe they not all ſee corruption? are they not all gone downe into the ſlimy valley? Haue they not long ſince made their bed in the darke? None of them all was able to deliuer his life from the power of the graue. How is it then true (will ſome ſay) that Chriſt hath deſtroyed death, ſith death hath ſtill power ouer Gods Saints? I anſwere: Chriſt did not die to take away death (as yet,) but to change death: not to ouerthrow the being of death, but to plucke out the ſting of death[r]: not quite to ſtop vp the graue, but remoue and quell the victory of the graue. The holieſt therefore doe ſtill die, but death cannot ſting them, the graue cannot triumph ouer them. Death in it ſelfe is the way to hell; It is altered to the children of grace, and become a portall, by which the ſoule paſſeth from out of the body into heauen. Death it ſelfe is a Sergeant to arreſt, and to bring to iudgement: but to the elect of God, it is as the Angell which guided Peter[s], and leadeth them from the vale of teares, into the land of righteouſneſſe. Thus the holy die, but not to damnation, for to them which are in Chriſt, there is no damnation[t]. It is a peece of their happineſſe that they die: Except the wheate corne fall into the ground, and die, it bideth alone[u]: and oh foole, that which thou ſoweſt is not quickened except it die.[x] A foole or a child ſeeing a goodly cluſter of grapes, thinketh it pity to put them into the preſſe, and to deface them; but he that is wiſe, knoweth that by this meanes the liquor in them is preſerued, and that this timely gathering is a meanes of keeping from corruption: So we thinke ſometime; Oh, it is pitie ſuch an one ſhould die ſo ſoone; as one might haue ſaid of Dorcas; Alas ſo good a woman, ſo pitifull a creature can ill be ſpared: But God in his wiſedome knoweth it to be good, and if he cut off the life of good Ioſiah, as it were in the middle of the ſtemme, doubtleſſe it is, that his eyes may not ſee the euill to come[y]. [r] 1 Cor. 15. 55. [s] Act. 12. [t] Rom. 8. 1. [u] Ioh. 12. 24. [x] 1 Cor. 15. 35. [y] 2 Kin. 22. 20.

The ſpeciall vſe I will driue this point vnto, is to vrge vpon vs all a due meditation of our end. For ſurely if euen the holieſt die, then all muſt die. If death ſeize euen vpon the houſe of God, where ſhall the vngodly and ſinners appeare[z]? If Dorcas doe die, ſurely Iezabel ſhall not eſcape: if the tender-hearted woman that wept for Chriſt, then the ſtony-hearted men that ſcoffed at Chriſt; if thoſe that embalmed him, then thoſe that buffetted him; If ſhee that poured oyntment on his head, then hee that ſpate in his face: there is no auoidance: It is appointed vnto all men that they ſhall once die[a]. It is heauens decree, and it cannot bee reuoked. And what is that to die, to bee no more? No: happie then were Caine and Iudas, and happie you that now make a mocke of ſinne; but, to bee ſtill for euer either in endleſneſſe of bliſſe, or perpetuity of woe. What ſhall we then doe? ſhall we reaſon as the prophane? Let vs eate and drinke for to morrow we ſhall die[b]? God forbid: that were to be like the The 4. Doct. [z] 1 Pet. 4. 17. 18. [a] Heb. 9. 27. The Vſe. [b] 1 Cor. 15. 32.

the diuell whose manner is to play reakes, and to haue great wrath when he hath but a short time [c]: or shall we gull our owne soules, & put far away the euill day [d], and dreame of many yeeres like the rich foole in the Gospell [e]? Farre be these things from vs; let vs rather endeauour by this to apply our hearts to wisdome [f]: and what wisedome? verily in a word, the skanning of this one point often in our mindes, Hence I must, and whither then? like men that trauell, who being no sooner come to their lodging, but they are talking of their next Inne. The debatement of this question in the mind would bring foorth an excellent fruit, euen, care to be assured of admission into euerlasting habitation [g]. A man would thus reason: I must remoue, and whither then? hell is my desert, how shall I escape it? Heauen is the only place, how shall I come to it? Thus, one good thought would make way for another, and lead vs on by degrees to that which wee doe most neglect, (the prouiding for the future estate.) Oh that we were wise to vnderstand this, and that we would consider our latter end [h], or that we did conceiue the happinesse and sweet comfort of a prepared and long expected end? This premised, the day of death, a godly man may say of it when it commeth, as the people triumphantly sometimes spake of the day of Dauids coronation, This is the day which the Lord hath made [i]. The children of God whose care hath been to keepe themselues vnspotted of the world [k], may call death, as Iacob did the place where hee came, Mahanaim, because there the Angels met him [l]; so there those ministring spirits which are sent forth for their good which bee heires of life [m], shall receiue their soules to beare them into Abrahams bosome [n]. Oh that Religion and godlinesse might be more sweet vnto vs, which will bring a man such peace at the last. As for the wicked, it is not so with them [o]. In their death they be like vnto him, of whom the Prophet speakes, who did flie from a Lyon, and a Beare met him [p], they escape one misery and irrecouerably fall into another. This life hath (it may be) afflicted them with rods, but death shall come vpon them with scorpions. God shall shut them from his tabernacle, and not suffer them to come neere the land of the liuing. Oh that we could make haste to breake off our sinnes [q] by repentance, which will bring so much woe at the last. This is the vse: Dorcas is dead, the holiest must die: if holinesse must yeeld, prophanenes cannot stand out, whether holy or prophane, all must die, and come to iudgement. Let him that is holy be holy still [r], and hold fast that none may take his crowne [s]. Let him that is prophane, I will not say be prophane still, let him cast away his transgressions, for why will yee die, oh house of Israel [t]? Yet there is hope, but if we be once stept ouer the threshold of death, there is no place for repentance, no vse of any satisfaction: If Iob, Noah, Daniel should entreate for vs, God would not heare vs. So an end of this admonition touching our end, which if we suffer it to die in our thoughts, wee shall surely die without comfort.

TO MY VERIE Worshipfull Friend,

Sampson Hele, of Gnaton in Deuon. Esquire.

SIR, I haue read of one Archias, (a man giuen to his pleasure) that when a messenger came vnto him, to treate of a matter of some importance, he gaue him this answer; Let alone these serious businesses till to morrow: so loth was he to interrupt his sports. Not much vnlike to that of Fælix, before whom, when Paul discoursed of Righteousnes, and Temperance, and Iudgment to come, he suddenly brake him off, pretending to referre him to a more conuenient time. If I had any cause of fearing to finde in you this vnwilling disposition, either out of Epicurisme like the former, or out of Atheisme like the latter, I would forbeare to be troublesome to you in this kind. But I haue since my acquaintance with you, both hoped and obserued better things: and I doe heartily wish the continuance and increase of your good care, to diuert some of that precious time, either to hearing, or reading (as occasion serueth,) which too many do waste away in vnprofitable pleasures, and in the prosecution of that mad mirth, the end whereof is heauinesse. I remember that saying euen of a heathen: It is a sweet thing for a man of great meanes, to be also a man of good vnderstanding; and (as it is said in another case) it is both good and comely, when (according to that of Hieron,) They which are first in the world, are foremost also in Christs Family. Let this (I pray you) be your care: The place where you liue expect it, the times need it, and if you be faulty, God will require it: For vnto whom much is giuen, of the same shall much be demanded. Be not displeased that I admonish you, you haue deserued from mee a large measure of respect; and wherein may I better testifie my loue, then in prouoking you to that, which shall bring you an vnspeakeable comfort at the last? I doe here present you with a cluster or two of my slender vintage, not so much to feed your appetite, as to quicken it. I am not ignorant of your disposition, more effecting continued comments, then this manner of handling some speciall Texts apart. My selfe also (as you know) doe in my ordinary

Prou. 11.18.

Hee that ſoweth Righteouſneſſe, ſhall receiue a ſure reward.

THis ſentence is a counter-plea, to that phrophane and peremptory principle of the Atheiſts of the world, who ſay, It is in vaine to ſerue God [a]. As the Dagon of the Philiſtims fell downe before the Lords Arke [b]; ſo this wretched conceit cannot ſtand in the preſence of this Scripture: the very ſound of it cannot chuſe but make it doe as the Souldiers did which came to attach our Sauiour, euen goe backwards, and fall to the ground [c].

c Iohn 18.6.

The particular ſcope of the Holy Ghoſt, is, to let vs ſee the Husbandry, and the Harueſt of the Righteous: The husbandry in theſe words, He that ſoweth righteouſneſſe, the Harueſt in theſe, Shall receiue a ſure reward. I will bound my whole Sermon within the compaſſe of theſe points: 1. What it is to ſow righteouſneſſe: 2. What is the ſure reward: 3. How true it is, that He which ſoweth righteouſneſſe ſhal receiue a ſure reward. 4. What matter of doctrine may be raiſed out of all.

The ſcope of the place.
The points to be handled.

To ſow righteouſneſſe, is the ſame which the Apoſtle calleth, to ſow to the ſpirit [d]; If that kind of ſpeaking be doubtfull, it is all one with theſe, to Mortifie the deeds of the fleſh by the Spirit [e], to walke in the Spirit [f], to be vpright in ones way [g], to haue reſpect to all Gods commandements [h], to deſire in all things to liue honeſtly [i], to cauſe the conuerſation to be ſuch as becommeth the Goſpell [k], to giue ones ſelfe vnto God [l], to endeauour alway to haue a cleere conſcience toward God and toward man [m]: In a word, to deny vngodlineſſe and worldly luſts, and to liue ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this world [n], ſhining as a light in the midſt of a naughty and crooked Nation [o]. This is to ſow righteouſneſſe. This gracious courſe of conſecrating a mans ſelfe vnto God in the practiſe of godlineſſe, let vs a little enquire why the Spirit of God calles it a ſowing of righteouſneſſe. I may ſay of this, as S. Iames doth in another caſe, Doe ye thinke that the Scripture ſpeaketh thus in vaine [p]? ſurely no: it is becauſe of the likeneſſe which is betwixt the practiſe of godlineſſe, and the ſowing of the ſeed, in ſome things which go before ſowing: in ſome things which doe accompany the act of ſowing: in ſome things which follow after ſowing.

The proportion which is betwixt the practiſe of godlineſſe, and the ſowing of ſeed, in reſpect of the things which do go before ſowing, ſtandeth thus: Before ſowing, two things are chiefly looked to: 1. The preparation and fitting of the ground. 2. The choice of ſeed to be put into the ground. Thus much without any further diſcourſe by mee is knowne ſufficiently. In the ſowing of righteouſneſſe, the like to theſe two are of as great behoofe. 1. The preparation of the heart: 2. The choyce of particulars belonging to a Chriſtian courſe. Touching the preparation of the heart, the Scripture (following the ſimilitude of Husbandrie) ſpeakes thus, Breake vp your fallow ground [q]. It is the ſame with that which Ioel calleth the Renting of the heart [r]. The neceſſity of it is apparant. There is A bundle of folly in euery naturall heart [s], it is wicked aboue all things [t], the whole frame of it is onely euill euery day [u], it is reprobate to euery good worke [x], it is ſtony [y]. The curſe which God for mans ſinne laid vpon the earth, (thornes, and thiſtles ſhall it bring forth [z]) lieth vpon euery vnconuerted heart, out of it comes nothing but euill thoughts [a]: When will any good ſeed grow in this ſoyle, if it bee neuer well manured? To breake vp this flinty and craggie hart, the Lord hath appointed the preaching of the Law. That is as fier to burne out the weedes, and as a hammer [b], to breake the clods in peeces. It will pricke the heart [c], and melt it [d], it will make manifeſt the ſecrets of it [e], it will enter through the diuiding of the ſoule and ſpirit [f]; It will make him that was ſometime as an vntamed Calfe [g], and did ſpurne with the heele [h], and did ſay with Pharaoh, Who is the Lord that I ſhould heare his voice [i], to crie out with meekeneſſe, Lord what wilt thou that I doe [k]? Talke with vs, O thou man of God, and wee will heare thee [l]. Now touching the choiſe of particular good things to bee put in practiſe, expreſſe is the charge of the Apoſtle, Deſire the beſt gifts [m]: Whatſoeuer things are true, whatſoeuer things are honeſt, whatſoeuer things are iuſt, whatſoeuer things are pure, &c. If there be any vertue, &c. thinke on theſe things [n]: As if hee had ſaid, If there be any thing better or more commendable then another, ſeeke to draw that into your practiſe. Men who thinke any thing to be good enough, any manner of ſeruing God, any manner of zeale and holineſſe, and ſo will at aduenture entertaine any courſe commended to him, either by the cuſtome of the times, or by the tradition of their fathers, or by the aduice of carnall friends, ſhall neuer bee truly religious. I ſearch the market for the beſt ſeed, why ſhall I not ſearch, and learne, and enquire which is the beſt courſe of godlineſſe? Proone which is the will of God both acceptable and perfit too [o]. The ſecond reſemblance, is betwixt the act of ſowing, and the practiſe of godlines, and that may be laid open in two particulars alſo. 1. The time of ſowing. 2. The plenty in ſowing. Firſt, wee haue a ſeuerall ſeaſon for euery graine: when this ſeaſon comes in courſe, the husbandman fals to his worke, though (perhaps) it be not ſo ſeaſonable as he could deſire. Men know well enough the truth of that ſaying, Hee that obſerueth the winde, ſhall not ſow [p]. Thus it is in the ſpirituall buſines: the ſeed-time for righteouſnes is this life: the opportunity muſt be taken when it comes: While ye haue time [q], while yee haue light [r], while it is called to day [s]. Put off no now, that in following this opportunity, I meet with many encombrances, the world frownes, euill tongues are ſharpened againſt me, the diuell rageth, the fleſh rebelleth: ſhall I leaue ſowing, and tarry for a calmer ſeaſon? God forbid. Through with it I muſt, in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon [t], through the infirmity of the fleſh [u], in great affliction, and anguiſh of heart, with many teares [x], by honour and diſhonour [y]. If I looke for a better time, vpon a ſudden, there will be no time at all. Secondly, the ſeeds-man caſts not in one ſeed alone, but an handfull at once, one handfull after another. To ſow righteouſneſſe, is to be rich in good workes [z], to bee abundant in the worke of the Lord [a], to doe good once and againe [b], to ioyne with Faith, vertue; with vertue, knowledge; with knowledge, temperance; with temperance, patience; with patience, godlineſſe; with godlineſſe, brotherly kindneſſe; with brotherly kindneſſe, loue [c]. This is right ſowing: Some doe now and then drop out a good worke (in ſhew) ſome little deuotion to God, ſome petty office of mercy to men, but it is to no purpoſe in the world: no plenty in ſowing, no fulneſſe in reaping. The third likeneſſe is in things which follow after ſowing. Great is the care that the ſeede put into the ground may thriue and proſper; the fields be hedged, the cattell be ſhut out, the birds driuen away, the ſtones pickt out, it is euer and anone looked vpon to ſee how it goeth on. In ſpirituall matters, it is in vaine to haue entred into a good courſe, if it be not continued; Continue in the Lord [b], encreaſe more and more [c], grow in grace [d], be led forward vnto perfection [e], let your workes bee more at laſt then at firſt [f]. Ye did run well, who letted you [g]? What can be ſaid to a man more diſgracefull, then to be like the feaſt-maker, who at the beginning ſet forth good wine, and when men haue well drunk, then that which is worſe [h]? He were a mad man, who when he had ſowed his ground, would ſtrait turne in his ſwine to roote it vp, or when it is come to be a handfull high, would let in his beaſts to trample it, and to deuoure it vp, or when it is ripe, would doe with it as Sampſon did with the corne of the Philiſtims, vſe meanes to burne it vp [i]. When thou haſt taken paines in ſome degrees of godlineſſe, if thou then giue ouer and leaue all to the ſpoile, what ſhall I ſay to thee but the words of the Apoſtle, Art thou ſo fooliſh that when thou haſt begun in the ſpirit, thou wilt end in the fleſh [k]? Continue thy care and prouidence vntill the harueſt, elſe thou ſhalt neuer reape. Thus at laſt wee ſee what it is to ſow righteouſneſſe, namely, to frame and ſet ones ſelfe to the practiſe of godlineſſe: of this, theſe be ſignes and companions. 1. The ſubmitting a mans ſelfe to haue his heart broken vp by the power of Gods Word. 2. A diligent inquirie into the beſt way of pleaſing God. 3. A preſſing forward amidſt many encombrances. 4. A ſtriuing and caring to be fruitfull in good workes. 5. A watching ouer a mans courſe with a continued diligence, vntill he receiue the end of his faith the ſaluation of his ſoule [l].

The ſure reward annexed to this ſowing, is either in the life preſent, or in that that is to come [m]. The reward in this life, is either outward, or inward: The outward is often mentioned; Bleſſed is euery one that feareth the Lord, &c. And when thou eateſt the labours of thine hands, thou ſhalt bee bleſſed, and it ſhall bee well with thee [n], Health ſhall be to thy nauill, and marrow to thy bones, thy barnes ſhall be filled with abundance [o]: the good man ſhall giue inheritance vnto childrens children [p]. The Lyons doe lacke and ſuffer hunger, but they which ſeeke the Lord, ſhall want nothing that is good [q]. The Scripture is full of the like promiſes. All which muſt be vnderſtood with this limitation, namely, that theſe outward things are the reward of the righteous, ſo far forth, as the wiſdome of God ſhall ſee it fitting. For many times it falleth out otherwiſe: they lie among the pots [r], they find no city to dwell in [s], their ſoules are filled with the mocking of the wealthy, and with the deceitfulneſſe of the proud [t], the plowers plow vpon their backes [u]. How then (will ſome man ſay) haue they an outward recompence? I anſwere, when God will abaſe them, hee will teach them how to bee abaſed [x]. It is a ſtrange vertue which God can giue to a little; euen to make it better to a iuſt man, then great riches to the mighty wicked [y], How ſhall I ſet this before an hundred men? ſaith the Prophets ſeruant; yet They ſhall eate and there ſhall remaine, ſaith the Lord [z]: Daniel ſhall looke fairer and in better liking, hauing nothing but pulſe to eate and water to drinke, then they which eate the portion of the Kings meate [a]: Ionas ſhall find more contentment vnder his Booth [b], then Aſhaſhuerosh and Haman ſitting drinking in the Pallace [c]: This is the reward of outward things. The inward is peace of conſcience, ariſing out of the comfortable aſſurance of Gods fauour, Being iuſtified by Faith, wee haue peace with God [d]. Theſe things do, and the God of peace ſhall be with you [e]. This is a rich reward, It is a continuall feaſt [f], It brings a ioy vnſpeakeable and glorious [g], a ioy working euen in afflictions [h], a ioy which may be ſometimes ouerclouded with many inward perplexities, but yet ſuch an one as ſhall neuer bee taken away [i]. This peace accompanieth the righteous, euen to the end of their daies: It breedes a departure hence in peace [k]: A departure indeed, not without teſtimony of Satans malice, of mens weakneſs, of Gods pleaſure to try his ſeruants; but yet a departure, in which alwaies firſt or laſt the peace of conſcience gets the victory. The reward in the life to come, cannot be expreſt; for the things which eye hath not ſeene, neither

q 2 Cor.4.17.

2. The certency of the thing auouched by Salomon.

Now touching the certainty of this reward, the Scripture reaſoneth two waies: firſt, by a prouerbiall ſpeech, Whatſoeuer a man ſoweth that hee ſhall reape[r], holineſſe in the ſeed, happineſſe in the harueſt: When the courſe hath been gracious, the end muſt needs bee glorious. Secondly, by the truth of Gods promiſe, and that is this; Know yee whatſoeuer good thing any man doth, the ſame ſhall he receiue of the Lord[s]: The duties of righteouſneſſe are ordained (as the way) to walke in[t]. This courſe cannot be broken: God will not alter the thing that is gone out of his lips[u]. This muſt bee noted to ſtop the mouthes of Papiſts, who vpon this and the like places ſeeke to ground their doctrine of merits. Againſt whom we muſt know. 1. That the ſcope of the Scripture here is to ſhew, who ſhall be rewarded: not the cauſe why the reward is giuen; the way to the kingdome, not the cauſe of raigning*. 2. That the certainty of the reward, depends vpon a free promiſe, not vpon the worth of the thing done. God hath made himſelfe a debter, not by owing, but by promiſing[x]. Yea, but (ſaith the Papiſt) here is a reward ſpoken of, and a reward preſuppoſeth merit. I anſwere, there is a double reward; 1. A reward of fauour, 2. A reward of debt[y]. This is a reward of fauour, giuen as a free recompence, not as a thing deſerued. To put it out of queſtion, it is called a reward of inheritance[z], and where is leſſe deſert then in the caſe of inheritance? And thus I haue ended the three firſt points. Now I come to the fourth: There are three points of Doctrin to be collected hence: firſt, The Labour of Religion: Secondly, the Triall of Religion: thirdly, the Reward of Religion. In the firſt we ſhall ſee Paines, in the ſecond, Patience, in the third, Pleaſure: Of theſe in order.

4. What points of doctrine may be gathered.

The firſt Doctrine is, That the practiſe of godlineſſe is a matter which requireth great induſtry. I prooue it thus: It is a towing. Whoſe life is fuller of labour then the husbandmans? It may be truly ſaid of him, that he doth Riſe early, and lie downe late, and eate the bread of ſorrow[a]: He runneth in a ring, his labour is neuer at an end. Let vs a little conſider the labour of Religion, Saint Peter calleth for all diligence[b], our Sauiour for ſtriuing[c], and for watching[d]: The kingdome of heauen ſuffereth violence[e]. I beate downe my body[f], ſaith the Apoſtle, I follow hard toward the marke, I opened my mouth and panted, ſaith Dauid[h]. Marke theſe places well, and you ſhall ſee that a man hath ſomething to doe, that will be a good Chriſtian. I appeale to your ſelues: how many doctrines doe you heare, the hearing whereof maketh you to go away ſorrowful, like the rich man in the Goſpell[i], and to ſay, as ſome of Chriſts hearers did; This is a hard ſaying: who can heare it[k]? The Scripture ſpeaketh of circumciſing the heart[l], of circumciſing the fleſh[m], of ſhaking off the ſin that hangeth ſo faſt on[n]. Are theſe things of ſlight performance? How hard a matter is it to reforme an euill courſe which a man long continued in? It is like the labour of turning an old, forſaken, barren weedy, vneuen parcell of ground into tillage: ſomewhat adoe there is to bring it into faſhion, it will be ſoone out of order againe, if it be not well looked vnto. He is no right Chriſtian, who thinkes he may haue any ſpare leiſure time from the practiſe of Chriſtianity: While men ſlept, came the enemy, and ſowed tares[o]. A little intermiſſion of our holy care, giueth the diuell a great deale of aduantage.

The Vſe.

This ſerueth to diſcountenance the common conceit of men, who thinke it, of all other matters one of the moſt eaſie, to bee a Chriſtian. Men ſuppoſe they be religious, though they neuer entertained one ſerious thought touching religion. O thou vaine man! learne to see thine owne folly: thou hast taken ground into thy hand, and thy purpose is to get by it. I need not now to tell thee of the diligence that is required: thou thy selfe knowest, that either thou must labour, and toyle, and take paines, and obserue all opportunities, or else thou shalt haue but an easie bargaine, and reape the loyterers reward, which is, to be clothed in rages [p]. All this thou doest acknowledge to bee most certaine; yet when we come to speake of sowing of righteousnesse, and of the labor that doth accompany it, thou art ready to say with the Disciples, what needeth this waste [q]? What needs so much a doe, as though without so much hearing, so much meditating, so much praying, so much watching ouer the heart, so much precisenesse, so much tying ones selfe to these and these courses, a man might not bee saued. Thus men coosen themselues with their owne fancies. I pray you, beguile your soules no longer. As often as you see Sowing, remember this place of Scripture, and then consider seriously, that as there is no thriuing by Husbandry, except it bee followed with industry: so there can bee no riches of Religion, where there is no labour of godlinesse. Spirituall loytering, and spirituall thriuing, neuer yet did meete together in one soule.

[q] Matth. 26. 8.

The second Doctrine followeth, and that is this: That the full reward of Religion is not to bee looked for by and by vpon the practise of Religion. This is manifest by the proportion of the place. Sowing and reaping come not at once: the one is in the winter or toward the Spring, the other in Autumne: hee which hath sowne to day, doth not looke to reape to morrow. Behold (saith the Scripture) the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, vntill he receiue the former and the latter raine [r]. In spirituall things it is not so: it is the pleasure of God to exercise vs with delaies: to giue vs the first fruits [s] only, and the earnest of our inheritance [t] in this life, and to make vs looke long for the fulnesse of happinesse. If any aske, why the Lord so dealeth, seeing the hope that is deferred, is the fainting of the heart [u]. I answer, that the Lord so dealeth, first, for the exercise of those spirituall graces which himselfe hath giuen to his seruants. What vse where there of patience, if there were no delaies? But now yee haue need of patience [*], saith the Apostle: what vse of hope, if there were present possession? For hope which is seene is no hope [x]. There is no proofe of valour in a short encounter: many a coward layeth about him for a bout or two. If a man should sowe this weeke, and reap the next, it were nothing to make shift to liue; but he which can make his stocke to reach, and his store to continue for his vse from the seed time to the haruest, deserues to bee commended for a Husband. Secondly, God thus dealeth for our better humbling, that in the time of delay, we may learne what we deserued, if we had been dealt with in extremity. It is like the course Dauid tooke with Absalom, he forgaue him at Ioabs sute, yet (saith he) Let him turne to his owne house, and not see my face [y]. By this he would haue Absalom learne to know what it was to haue offended his Father. Thus we see Gods course, and the ground of his course.

It is necessary wee should know this, least otherwise we should be wearied and faint in our minds [z]. Many a man entring into a religious course, and not finding so much sensible good in it, as he did expect, turnes aside like a deceitfull bow [a] leaueth his first loue [b], and leaues off like the builder in the Gospell [c], as being either not able, or not willing to goe forward. It is a notable grace, if a man haue learned to tarry the Lords leasure. It is noted as a fruit of faith, he that beleeueth shall not make haste [d]: to encourage vs to this, let vs harken to the next Doctrine.

Bee strong* (saith the Prophet to the people, intending a reformation of religion) let not your hands be weake; for your worke

shall

shall haue a reward [c]. Waite thou on the Lord, and he shall exalt thee [d]; Verily, there is fruit for the righteous [e]: They that sow in teares shall reape in ioy, they shall bring their sheaues [f]. He will fulfill the desires of them that feare him [g]. There shall be an end, and thy hope shall not be cut off [h]. I said I haue laboured in vaine, &c. but my iudgement is with the Lord, and my worke with my God [i]. I know that it shall bee well with them that feare the Lord [k]. Though the time of patience be for a time, and then be doubled and become for times, yet at last it shall come to halfe a time [l]. The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at last it shall speake, and not lye; though it tarry, waite, for it shall surely come, and shall not stay [m]: Your labour is not in vaine in the Lord [n]. In due season we shall reape [o]. Behold, I come shortly, and my reward is with me [p]: what can bee more apparant.

The Vse.

This must prouoke and encourage all those that feare God, To hold fast the confidence of their hope to the end [q]. Though there bee many a storme after our sowing, the harueſt will come, and wee shall be comforted. The Farmers of the world pay their wo. k-men straite after their labour, before the corne be ripe; but the paiments of farre lesse value then the corne. God bestowed vpon his, all that they haue sowne, and the hier shall farre exceed their trauaile: He that followeth after righteousnesse shall finde life, righteousnesse, and glory [r], there are three for one. Let vs haue respect to the Recompence of reward [s], Looke wee to the ioy that is set before vs [t], remember The hope that is laid vp for vs in Heauen [u]. And let the Atheists and godlesse persons scorne while they will, and say (as they doe) what are these the better for all this adoe? Are not we as healthy, as rich, as merry, as well esteemed as they? Certaine it is, that if wee Haue our fruit in holinesse, our end shall bee euerlasting life [v], our hope shall not make vs ashamed [w]. As for them, let them alone, their day is comming [x], their candle shall be put out [y], their hope shall perish [z], the first borne of death shall deuoure their strength [a], and then (though too late) they shall returne, and discerne betweene the righteous and the wicked, betwixt him that serueth God, and him that serueth him not [b].

WHEREIN IS,

The Husbandry and Harueſt of the Wicked.

Prou. 22. 8.

He that ſoweth Iniquity, ſhall reape Affliction.

IN this clauſe the purpoſe of the Spirit of God, is, to let vs ſee the Husbandry and Harueſt of the Wicked. The Husbandry is in theſe words, He that ſoweth Iniquity: The harueſt in theſe, Shall reape affliction: I will open theſe points in order. 1. What it is to ſow Iniquity. 2. What is the Affliction which they ſhall reape which ſow iniquity. 3. How true it is, which is here ſaid, that the ſower of Iniquity ſhall reape affliction. 4. What doctrines we may learne out of all theſe for our inſtruction. The points handled in this Sermon.

To ſow iniquity, is the ſame which S. Paul calleth, to ſow to the fleſh [a]: Againe, To ſow to the fleſh, is to liue after the fleſh [b], to take thought for it, to fulfill it [c], to obey ſin in the luſts thereof [d], to walke in the weyes of a mans owne heart [e], to keepe on in a mans owne race [f], to be hardened through the deceitfulneſſe of ſinne [g], to follow onely ſuch a kinde of life, as a mans owne carnall and corrupt humour leads vnto. This wretched courſe of glutting ones ſelfe with the pleaſures of ſinne [h], is well called ſowing for theſe reſpects. Firſt, before ſowing, goeth the dreſſing, the working, and manuring of the ground, to make it fat, that the ſeed caſt into it, may come to the better perfection; ſo doe euill men make themſelues ready before hand, that when euil commeth to practiſe, they may goe thorow with it, with the greater boldneſſe. This is that which Saint Iames calleth the nouriſhing of the heart [i]: It is tearmed ſome while, a bleſſing themſelues [k], ſome while an encouraging themſelues in a wicked purpoſe [l]: They ſay in their hearts, he hath forgotten, he hideth away his face and will neuer ſee [m], He will doe neither good nor euill [n]. Thus their heart is made as fat as greaſe [o], that the ſeed of Iniquity may come to a more ſpeedy ripeneſſe. Secondly, plowing and ſowing are accompanied with much induſtry. Whoſe life is more full of labour then the Plow-mans? Great is the diligence of the vngodly, in the furtherance of Iniquity. They imagine it vpon their beds [p], they riſe early to follow it, and hold on vntill night [q], they cannot ſleepe except they haue done euill [r]. The High Prieſt will hold a Councell, euen at the dawning to condemne Chriſt [ſ]. Thirdly, ſowing albeit it be laborious, yet it is full of contentment. A faire ſeaſonable ſeed-time, a kindly turning vp of the land, when the clods doe breake eaſily with the harrow; what a ioy are theſe things to the Husband-man? No leſſe is the ioy of the wicked in doing naughtily: It is a paſtime to doe wickedly [t]: It is meate and drinke [u], Glad is the Adulterer of the twilight [*]; Ioy it is to the Malicious to See the deſtruction of him that hated him [x]. Well is the Oppreſſor when hee can draw the poore into his net [y], Iocund is the drunkard when he hath his companions about him to whom he may ſay, Come I will bring wine and wee will fill our ſelues with ſtrong drinke, and to morrow ſhall bee as this day, and much more abundant [z]. The bread of deceit is ſweet to a man [a]. Fourthly, in ſowing there goe many ſeeds together, a whole handfull at a time, one handfull after another: In the liues of the wicked there is plenty of euils, ſinne neuer neuer goeth alone, one maketh way for another. Some will say of some man, It is pitty, hee hath but one fault, hee is something couetous, hee is giuen to drinke, or to lust, &c. This is vnpossible. If a man haue one such grosse sinne, he cannot but haue a great many pettie ones to attend it, to feed it, to helpe it forward; sinnes are linked together; entertaine one, and the rest will follow. Fiftly, after sowing, the ground is harrowed, the seed couered, that it may receiue life and heat, and so come to perfection: after euill is once entertained in the heart, oh what pollicy is there to secret it, what meanes to carry it closely, that it may haue no stoppage in the execution? Cain will not attempt any thing against his brother neere home, in the sight and presence of his father, but when he meets him

[b] Gen.4.8. in the field, he will rise against him and slay him [b]. Gehazi will not make all the towne acquinted with his purpose, but he will runne after Naaman for a bribe,
[c] 2 King.5.20 that none may espie it [c]. What plots doe euill persons lay daily for the accomplishment of their wicked purposes? The husbandman would not haue a seed lost if he might, an euill man would not haue one of his sinfull deuices faile, if it were possible. Sixtly, there is great care to preuent all hindrances to the growth of the seed, birds are fraied away, cattell are not suffered to enter, passengers (as much as may be) are shut out: No lesse opposition is there in euill men a-

[e] Gal.4.16. he is an enemy, that telleth them the truth [e]. Cry out vpon them and proclaime against them, The Word of the Lord shall be made a reproch vnto thee, and in derision daily [f]: What sir? Shall you rule [g]? Who is Lord ouer vs [h]? We will doe whatsoeuer thing
[f] Ier. 20. 8. [g] Gen. 19.9. [h] Psal 12.4. goeth out of our owne mouth [i]. Thus you see what it is to sow Iniquity. Generally it
[i] Ier.44.17. is this, to liue in the continuall seruice and practise of sinne. More particularly, it is discerned by these signes. 1. A cherishing and an encouraging the heart to euill. 2. A taking paines to doe naughtly. 3. A delighting in Wickednesse. 4. A heaping of one sinne in the necke of another. 5. A plotting for the bringing of euill to perfection. 6. A withstanding of all meanes tending to recouery. This is the husbandry of the wicked, and the common husbandry of the world now adaies: euery man hath his plough going in this kinde of tillage, no time of the yeere, no weather for this purpose seemes vnseasonable.

2. What is the Affliction to be reaped.
[k] Gal.6.8. The second point is, what is the Affliction or Trouble which followeth this sowing of Iniquity: Let vs consider the speech of the Apostle: He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reape corruption [k]; He shall haue for his reward Gods iudgement. I will open two points. 1. what the Affliction or Iudgement is. 2. why the comming of it in, is called reaping. The affliction here meant, is either in this life, or hereafter. That which is in this life is either outward or inward. Vnder the outward affliction are comprehended strange diseases, fearefull kindes of death, ouerthrow of estate, and credit in the world, and such like. Thus it sometimes falleth out. The Sodomites burning with vnaturall lust, were consumed
[l] Gen.19. with a supernaturall fier [l]. Agag, as his sword had made women child-lesse, so was his
[m] 1 Sam.15. mother child-lesse by his execution [m]. Gehazi was punished with the Leprosie for
33. his falshood [n]. Ahab shed Naboths blood, and the dogs licked his blood [o]. The Is-[n] 1 Kin.5.27. raelites went a whoring from vnder their God, therefore their daughters were harlots,
[o] 1 Kin.22.38. and their spouses whores [p]: They serued strange Gods in their owne land. Therefore
[p] Hos.4.12,13 they serued strangers in a land which was not theirs [q]. Iudas sold Christ to the crosse, [q] Ier.5.19. and then himselfe to the gallowes [r]. Thus it sometimes falleth out, that the wic-
[r] Math.27.5. ked are recompenced in the earth [s], with outward and visible iudgements: but it is [s] Prou.11.31. not so alwaies; for many times they liue, and waxe old, and grow in wealth [t], and the

[x] Verse 12. followeth them, and that is this; their ease slayeth them, and their prosperi-
[y] Ier.12.1. ty destroyeth them [z]. The inward plague or affliction is vpon the soule and conſcience, and that is two wayes. 1. Either they haue a conſcience full of inward vexation, alwayes frighting and amazing them, and tormenting them with guilty feares; cauſing them to feare ſometimes where no feare is [z], or at the very ſhaking of a leafe [a]: Thus hauing a trembling heart [b], they are continually as one that trauaileth of child [c]; neither is there vnto them any peace [d]. Such a conſcience had Cain, who thought that whoſoeuer did find him, would ſlay him [e]. 2. Or elſe they are puniſhed with a reprobate mind [f], a conſcience paſt feeling [g], burned with an hot yron [h]. This is no moleſtation in ſenſe, but indeed and in the iſſue it is the greateſt affliction. Of a ſtirring conſcience there may be ſome hope, but of a hardned cruſted conſcience there is none.

The trouble and iudgement is in the life to come, ſtands thus: Firſt, at death terrors take them as waters [i], their ſoules are fetched away [k] from them, and kept in euerlaſting chaines vnder darkneſſe, vnto the iudgement of the great day [l]. Next, when that day commeth, He ſhall deliuer them vp to be iudged [m], the Bookes ſhall be opened [n], things hid in darkneſſe ſhall bee manifeſt [o], they ſhall receiue according to that they haue done [p], they ſhall goe into the euerlaſting fier prepared for the Diuell and his Angels [q]; there death ſhall feed vpon them [r], the fier that is not blowen ſhall deuoure them [ſ]: This is called the ſecond death [t], vtter darkneſſe [u], where the worme dieth not, and the fier neuer goeth out [*]. Theſe things are meant by this word Affliction or Moleſtation. Now this is ſaid to bee reaped, becauſe of the fulneſſe of it. One corne ſometimes bringeth ſundry eares, one eare many graines: ſo the Lord will turne vpon the wicked double [x], nay, ſeuenfold [y]. A few pleaſures of ſinne, and that but for a ſeaſon [z], are recompenced with multitude of woes, and that for euer: Hee will make them wring out, and drinke the very dregges of his cuppe [a]. Thus they ſhall haue good meaſure, preſſed downe, ſhaken together, and running ouer [b].

The next point, is the certainty of this ſaying, that he that ſoweth iniquity, ſhall reape trouble. The Scripture proueth it by a prouerbiall ſpeech, Whatſoeuer a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reape [c]. He that ſoweth cockle, cannot expect a crop of wheate: After tares caſt into the ground, it is in vaine to looke for a barley harueſt. They which ſow nothing but the curſed ſeeds of godleſſe life, how can they expect the crop of eternall life? They ſhall eate the fruit of their owne way, ſaith the Scripture [d]. Againe, it is the vnchangeable ordinance of God, he hath tied them together with a chaine of Adamant, and they cannot bee ſundred; miſchiefe in this life, miſery in the life to come; wickedneſſe here, wretchedneſſe there; no repentance here, no ſaluation there; a Diuell in earth, no Saint in Heauen. This is a courſe which cannot be altered.

3. The certenty of that which Salomon here auoucheth.
d Prou. 1. 31.

The Text thus opened, and thus proued to be true, offereth to our conſideration two points of Doctrine. 1. The greatneſſe of Gods patience. 2. The certenty of his iuſtice. The greatneſſe of Gods patience is gathered out of the word (Reape) by which it appeares, that God doth not by and by puniſh ſinne to the vtmoſt vpon the committing it: but as there is a diſtance of time betweene the putting the ſeed into the ground, and the reaping; ſo the Lord defferres the rendring to the wicked their deſert into their boſome, vntill their wickedneſſe be full [e]. Of this patience of God, the Scripture ſpeaketh notably: Firſt, generally, then by degrees. In generall hee is ſaid to be ſlow to anger [f], to ſtriue with man [g], to waite that he may haue mercy [h], to haue his bowels troubled for men [i]. By degrees againe his patience is noted, as that hee looketh all the day long [k], nay forty dayes [l]; nay, the compaſſe of a yeere, from the time of planting, vntill the time of gathering fruit [m], nay, three yeeres [n], forty yeeres [o], an hundred and twenty yeeres [p], nay, for ſome thouſands of yeeres [q]: yea, and when hee doth giue ſome euidence of his wrath, yet he doth not ſtirre vp all his wrath [r], but in it remembreth mercy [ſ]. He is ſo full of forbearance, that the world accounts it ſlackneſſe [t]: yea, and his owne ſeruants are faine to expoſtulate with him touching ching it; Why ſtandeſt thou ſo farre off, O Lord, and hideſt thee in due time[u]? This is Gods patience.

The Vſe. The vſe of it we are taught in the Scripture, namely, that it ſhould lead vs to repentance[*]. The patience of God is euer preaching vnto vs, Turne you, turne you from your euill wayes, for why will ye die[x]? It is all one with God to puniſh now, or hereafter, here, or in hell. It is not for lacke of ableneſſe to puniſh, or for lacke of knowledge what we doe, but in patience wholly that we might returne and be ſaued. Marke then. Haſt thou hitherto been a man of an euill life, a deſpiſer of good things, a neglecter of Gods worſhip, a loather of his word, a blaſphemer, a whore-maſter, a drunkard, an extorter, a ruffian; and hath God forborne thee now theſe ten or twenty yeeres; what ſhalt thou now doe, continue in thy courſe; Draw iniquity with cords of vanity[y], adde drunkenneſſe to thirſt[z], multiply tranſgreſſions, make a mocke of Gods counſell[a], and thinke him to be ſuch an one as thy ſelfe[b]? God forbid. Nay, rather conſider that God all this while, is returned to his place, till thou acknowledge thy fault[c]; and doth euen long for thy conuerſion. Wherefore reſolue thou like the prodigall ſonne, to riſe and goe to thy father[d], while it is called to day, while hee may bee found[e]. Giue no ſleepe to thine eyes, no ſlumber to thine eye-liddes[f]: let teares runne downe like a riuer, take thee no reſt, neither let the apple of thine eye ceaſe[h], vntill thou haſt found reſt to thy ſoule[i]. This is the true vſe of Gods patience, euen to be a ſpurre to repentance. What iuſt occaſion haue we here of complayning? when was euer the ſaying of Salomon more true; Becauſe ſentence againſt an euill worke is not executed ſpeedily, therefore the heart of the children of men is fully ſet in them to doe euill[k]? God is patient, and we grow inſolent; God forbeares, and wee lay on load: hee is ſlow to anger, and wee are ſlacke to repent; he willing to ſhew mercy, and wee will not be ſaued: he cryeth; Behold, I ſtand at the doore and knocke[l], we anſwer, Depart from vs, for wee deſire not the knowledge of thy wayes[m]; This is the common ſickneſſe of the times, to helpe it, if it be poſſible; let vs come to the next Doctrine.

The 2. Doct. And that is touching the certainty of Gods Iuſtice. If there bee no remedy but men will needs goe on to ſow iniquity, the harueſt will come, ſinne will bee ripe, and they ſhall reape deſtruction: Here is a large field, and there is no poine more manifeſt in the Scripture. He doth not make the wicked innocent[n], hee will not forgiue him that will not bee reclaimed. The Lord will not be mercifull vnto him, but the wrath of the Lord and his iealouſie ſhall ſmoake againſt that man[o]: affliction and anguiſh ſhall make him afraide[p], he is kept vnto the day of deſtruction[q], God ſhall wound his hairy pate that walketh in his ſinnes, hee will teare him in peeces[r], euill ſhall hunt him to deſtruction[s]. When men ſay in their hearts, God hath forgotten[t], then is he whetting[u], and furbuſhing his ſword[x], all that while, their damnation ſleepeth not[y]; nay, the further the arme is fetched about, the heauier will the ſtroke be: the neerer the arrow is drawne to the head, the deeper will it wound when it comes. God is called a Iudge[z], a righteous Iudge[a], a iealous God[b], a hater of them that worke iniquity[c], one who accepteth not the perſons of Princes[d]: theſe titles could not agree vnto God, if he ſhould euer ſuffer the abuſers of his mercy and the deſpiſers of his goodneſſe, to eſcape away vnpuniſhed.

The 1. Vſe. This point ſerues firſt to be an aſſurance to vs, of that great and generall Seſſions, wherein we muſt all appeare before the iudgement ſeate of Chriſt[e]; For hence we reaſon thus, that ſeeing the Lord will certainly recompence vnto the ſeedſmen of Iniquity, their full reward into their boſome, and ſeeing here in the world, it falleth out, that they couer their face with fat, and haue collops in their flanke[f], waters of a full cup being wrung out vnto them[g]: therefore certainly there is a time, a day of the declaration of the iuſt iudgement of God[h], in which men ſhall ſay; Doubtleſſe there is a God that iudgeth the earth[i]. This kind of reaſoning wee are taught by the Apoſtle, who aſſureth thoſe to whom hee wrote, that their suffering for the Kingdome of God, was a token of Gods righteous iudgement, in which tribulation should be recompenſed to the troublers, and reſt to the troubled[k]. And this day we may well thinke to be nigh, euen as by the figge-trees bringing forth leaues, we know that Summer is neere[l]; ſinne in all kinds groweth to a ripeneſſe and perfection, the wickedneſſe of the times, is euen come to the full. Certainly ere long the Lord will command his Angell, to thruſt in his ſharpe ſickle, and gather the cluſters of the vineyard of the earth, for her grapes are ripe[m]; and caſt them into the great wine-preſſes of the wrath of God[n]. The Lord grant that we may look for that day, and haſten to it[o], crying daily; Come Lord Ieſus[p], returne my wel-beloued, and bee like to the Roe, or young Hart vpon the Mountaines of Bether[q].

Secondly, this ſheweth the truth of Salomons words; The wicked worketh a deceitfull worke[r]: Men doe altogether deceiue themſelues in their owne fancies; they thinke they may ſow Iniquity, and yet reape happineſſe; they may deſpiſe Gods bounty here, and yet enioy Gods mercy hereafter: they may liue in the ſeruice of ſinne, and yet die in the fauour of God; they may keepe the way to hell, and yet arriue at the gate of heauen. No, it is vnpoſſible; Whatſoeuer a man ſoweth, the ſame ſhall he alſo reape[s]; they that plow iniquity, and ſow wickedneſſe, reape the ſame[t]. This is the courſe, and God will not alter it. I ſay then with the Apoſtle; Let no man deceiue you with vaine words[u]: ſuch as is our courſe, ſuch ſhall be our reward. God may doe much at an inſtant, but to put it to that, is a very bold aduenture. There may come a yeere (and doth ſometime) when late Husbands, which put leaſt worth to their grounds, haue the beſt Corne; but it is no wiſdome thereof to make a rule. Keepe the courſe ſet downe by God, and thou canſt not miſcarry. He that ſoweth to the Spirit, ſhall of the Spirit reape life eternall[x]. It may bee thought I teach men to build vpon Workes: I ſpeake now onely, who they are which ſhall inherit eternall life; and of the order how life eternall is attained, not of the cauſe wherefore it is giuen. Holines is the way (the way ſhall be called Holy[y],) hee that thinkes to come by a freer and a more pleaſant courſe, by that which the Scripture calleth the way of ſinners[z]; that man ſhall bee called the leaſt in the Kingdome of God[a].

RVTH. 4. 11,12.

The Lord make the Wife that commeth into thine house, like Rachel, and like Leah, which twain did build the house of Israel; and that thou mayest do worthily in Ephratah, and be famous in Bethlehem.

And that thine house be like, &c.

The state of the place.

THese words are the Prayer of the Elders, and Inhabitants of Bethlehem Iudah, at the espousals of Boaz and Ruth. They were requested to be witnesses to the betroathing, and to some other dependances thereupon, of some lands and inheritance. Now, as they were forward to giue testimony to so honest a course, so they added these words of my Text, as an euidence of their well-wishing to this holy couple, who were now of two to be made one Flesh [a], by a godly marriage. This is the state of the place.

a Gen. 2. 24.

The order of handling it.

To lay some ground for the profitable handling of this Scripture, I will first speake of the generall substance of it: then I will enter into the examination of particulars. The summe of the whole, is, a prayer for the blessing of God vpon two, who were now ready to be ioyned together by the knot of marriage. From whence, it being the Apostles rule; that whatsoeuer is written afore, is written for our learning [b]; This is commended to vs, namely; The necessary vse of seasoning and sanctifying the first entrance into the married estate, by prayer vnto God. Abrahams seruant being entrusted with a businesse of that nature, to seeke a wife for his masters heire, commended the whole successe vnto God by Prayer [c]: and the woman being sent away by her friends (after her consent giuen) was dismissed with a blessing; They blessed Rebeckah, and said vnto her, thou art our sister, grow into a thousand thousands, and thy seed possesse the gate of his enemies [d]. When Iacob was sent by his parents to seeke a wife in Padan Aram, his aged father parted not away from him without prayer: God all-sufficient blesse thee, &c [e]. Looke to the first marriage that euer was [f], the Lord himselfe knit the knot, and confirmed it with a blessing, that his course might be a patterne to the following times, and to assure vs withall, that when this is left out, we may well say as Christ did in another particular belonging vnto marriage, from the beginning it was not so [g]. The Scripture which speaketh of Dedicating houses when they are first dwelt in [h], of sanctifying meat by prayer [i]; which reports examples of beginning iourneyes with prayer [k], of entring battaile with prayer [l], which chargeth to doe all in the name of God [m], cannot but inioyne the practise of this duty in this particular also. Reason for it is very apparant. First, generally, no good successe can be hoped for, but from the Lord; he is the God of all grace [n], he is the Father of lights, from whom is euery good and perfect gift [o]. Secondly, more especially, the marriage Couenant is called, the Couenant of God [p], because if he be not called to confirme it, it cannot prosper. Thirdly, the domesticall estate, of which wedlocke is the foundation, is without all possibility of thriuing without the Lord: Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vaine that build it [q]. These things may serue to make good this Doctrine.

In

In applying of this point, it will not bee hard to proue the neglect of it amongst men. It is said, that the conscience is a thousand witnesses; which if it be true, I am almost of opinion, that so many consciences as be here, so many thousand witnesses I shall haue to confirme it. It is not the care of parents, first to seeke the Lord, before they seeke matches for their Children: It is not the vse of persons intending marriage, to make prayer to God, to be the Preface to their attempts; It is not the fashion, to account the prayers of Christian friends (whose feruent suites, they being the friends of God[r], are likely to auaile much[s]) a necessary complement to a wedding: It is not the practise of marriage guests, conscionably, and intentiuely, to apply themselues to this taske of deuotion. Sure I beleeue that a challenge made to vs about this, would receiue such an answer as Laban made to Iacob, when he had (contrary to promise) giuen him Leah for Rachel: It is not the manner of this place[t]. It will be little for our credit so to answer, because though wee speake of custome herein, yet we cannot say as Paul did; we haue no such custom; neither the Churches of God[u]: for it hath bin made plain vnto vs, that is was wont to be the vse of Gods people. And indeed from the defect of this duty, as from a poysoned fountain, haue flown all these great euils in mariages at this day: As, 1. The buying & selling of children among parents, they singing nothing but to the tune of Iudas. What will you giue me[x]? 2. The forced marriages, which mostly haue the same issue of extreme lothing, which Amnons defiling of his sister had[y]. 3. The vnequal yokings, as bad as those inhibited in the Law, of an Oxe and an Asse together[z]: 4. The vntimely couplings, before the parties haue passed the time of eating Butter and Hony; that is, haue knowledge to refuse the euill, and to chuse the good[a]: 5. The hunting after portions, & proportions; faces and fashions, without any respect to the hid man of the heart[b]; wherein men shew themselues to haue as little wit as Esops dog, which snapt at the shadow, and lost the substance; and as little grace as Esau, who preferred the pottage before his birth right[c]. 6. The reuels and disorders that are kept at weddings, no whit inferiour to those in Amos his dayes; nothing but musicke and drinking, without any sorrow for the affliction of Ioseph[d]. All these, & diuers others like these, proceed from the neglect of this one duty. It is the rule of the Scripture; If the first fruits be holy, so is the whole lumpe[e]: So on the contrary, where the first beginning are profane; it is very vnlikely the proceedings should bee better. You that haue failed herein, here you may see iust matter of repentance; the not sorrowing for a trespasse, when it is discouered, doubleth the fault. You that are yet in the harbour, and haue not yet launched out into these businesses, here you may learne where to begin, if you desire to make a prosperous voyage. The very Heathen held it right to begin with God[f]: It is expected of Christians by a double bond, according as they haue receiued a double light, one of nature, the other of grace. Remember hereafter that it is a monstrous mariage, a headlesse wedding, where this wanteth: it is ominous to the whole businesse, if it be forgotten. And we that are now here to be beholders of the vniting of these two, let vs not thinke, we haue discharged the duty of friends by our vsuall and formall acclamations; Of God giue you ioy, &c. But let vs seriously thinke (as these here did,) what is meet, in particular to be desired for them: and let our hearty prayers be the messengers of our desires to the throne of grace; that when we shall after these solemnities depart from them, we may truly say to them, in the witnesse of our soules; We haue blessed you out of the house of the Lord[g].

Now, the better to direct vs in this duty, let vs hearken vnto that which followeth, namely, the particular good things requested of God in this prayer, on the behalfe of that worthy paire here storied. The requests are three: 1. On the behalfe of the wife: 2. On the behalfe of the Husband. 3. On the behalfe of the Posterity issuing from them both. The request which is for the Wife, I will speake of thus: 1. Of the Phrase. The Wife that commeth into thine House: 2. Of the matter wiſhed to her. The phraſe, the wife that commeth into thine houſe; that is, ſhee which now becomming thy wife by marriage, is to be receiued into thy houſe to dwell together with thee. Whence wee are taught; That marriage bringeth with it a neceſſity of cohabitation. Thoſe whom Wedlocke hath made one, one houſe and one dwelling muſt receiue. This may be proued by the firſt Inſtitution of Wedlocke. In it for proofe of this point, two things are very obſeruable. Firſt, that the wife was made to be a remedy againſt the loneneſſe and ſolitarineſſe of the man. For that was the Lords inducement to the creating of the Woman: It is not good that man ſhould be himſelf alone[h]: Therfore doubtleſſe, God ordained her to be a perpetuall Companion. Secondly, that the Law was then made, that man ſhould leaue Father and Mother, and cleaue to his wife[i]: which doth neceſſarily imply the ſameneſſe of dwelling. It is lawfull for a ſonne to goe dwell from his Father, as Iacob went from his Father to be Labans ſeruant: but a ſeparation from the wife (till either whoredome[k], or death[l], haue made her no wife) is vnlawfull. Very direct to this purpoſe is that of Salomon: Reioyce with the wife of thy youth, let her breaſts ſatisfie thee at all times, and delight in her loue continually[m]. Many reioyce for a fit, whiles the loue is freſh; therefore the Wiſe-man addes, Let her breaſts, &c. and delight in her loue, &c. Where is there a delight in loue, if there be not a delight in preſence? I remember how for this very end, a Harlot is called a ſtranger[n], and the wife intituled the woman that lyeth in the boſome[o]; which very manner of ſpeaking is a ſufficient proofe, that the wiues proper place is to be neere: It is for ſtrumpets, not for wiues to be ſtrangers. Ye Husbands dwell with them[p]. Cohabitation is the ground of all other offices of loue, which are required in the Husband to the wife-ward; which his abſence and diſcontinuance from her, doth altogether diſable him to performe; as inſtruction, aduice, comfort, cheriſhing, &c. Theſe and the like, muſt needs ceaſe, where there is a needles ſeparation. Beſides, it is a great encreaſer of loue, according as ordinary eſtranging in body, breedeth ſtrangeneſſe in affection: There cannot be much loue, where there is no delight in the ſweetneſſe of mutuall conuerſation. And againe, where this wants, it is a voluntary expoſing each of other vnto Satans temptations, and a meanes by which either one or both are drawn into vncleanneſſe. In theſe neceſſary ſeparations and intermiſſions of matrimoniall duties betwixt man and wife, which are for holy purpoſes, yet the Apoſtle was full of caution, leſt the diuell ſhould take too much aduantage[q].

The Vſe.

This reproueth their vngodly courſe, who wilfully, I know not vnder what pretence rent themſelues from their wiues by almoſt a perpetuall ſeparation. The husband hath his reſidence in one town, nay, ſometime in one ſhire, or part of the land, the wife in the other. What inconueniences of whoredom & beggery, and ſometimes of wicked marriages, vpon ſuppoſition of the death of either party, doe follow hence, is well knowne by wofull experience. Neere of kind vnto which groſſe euil, is the practiſe of thoſe, who, though they may be ſaid to dwell with their wiues vnder the ſame roofe, yet either vpon euery paſſion ſeparate themſelues from bed and board, or elſe take more delight in any fooliſh, riotous, or vnthrifty company, and haue more pleaſure in any lewd or vain exerciſes, then in the fellowſhip of their wiues and their owne houſhold ſociety. Many ſuch there are, who are neuer ſo merry and pleaſant, as when they are abroad, neuer ſo dumpiſh and churliſh, and melancholicke, as at home: ſuch forget the reaſon, why the wife by Gods ordinance is come into the houſe; namely, that in her, and in her ſociety a man ſhould take his chiefe contentment. It hath been obſerued in ſome, that they will allow their wiues for diet, attendance, and apparrell with the largeſt; but to be tied to liue ſetledly at home, is almoſt a hell in their ſeeming. Such a woman hauing a husband ſo humored, may ſay to him, as Delilah to Sampſon; How canſt thou ſay, I loue thee, when thy heart is not with me[r]? What be all pretences of loue and proteſtations of reſpect, when mu-

tuall society is not delighted in? To reforme this in those which are guilty, and to preuent it in them which are free, remember the wiues place is to be in thine house, one dwelling must (ordinarily) containe both.

The Phrase of comming into the house, and the necessity of being conioyned in dwelling with the husband collected thence, may put all wiues in mind of their duty. For wherefore comes the woman into the house? what? to beare rule? No, to be subiect: shee is in his house, and within his gates; which very forme of speaking (as appeareth by the words of the fourth Commandement) betokeneth, the being within the iurisdiction, the liberties, and gouernment of another. A vertuous woman is the crowne of her husband[f]. God hath placed her neer, and so indeed she is the next to husband; but yet still he is the head, and her obedience must be his crowne, the grace, the credit, the ornament of his gouernment: As indeed the well ordring & managing of the wife, is the glory of the husband. Againe, wherefore is she come into the house? what? to destroy it, to be the bane and consumption of it by her improuidence, by her waste, by her prodigality, by her wilfull & violent humors, in exceeding the rate and ability of her husband? No, shee is come to build it, saith Salomon[t]; to order matters with that wisdome, that the heart of her husband may trust in her[u], that shee may be vnto him as the Merchants ship[x], striuing for his profit, and seeking to doe him good, and not euill all her dayes[y]. Thirdly, wherefore is shee come into the house? what? to make his house a hell vnto him by her frowardnesse? for indeed a corner of a house top, nay, a solitary life in the wildernesse, is better then to dwell with a contentious woman in a wide house[z]: No, shee is come that he may reioyce with her all the dayes of his life, it being his portion which God hath giuen him, in the trauels wherein he laboureth vnder the Sun[a]. Lastly, why is shee come into the house? I confesse, not to be cooped vp into it like a bird into a Cage; (for it must still be a house after her entry into it, and not a prison:) but yet so as that her modesty and her delight to ouersee the wayes of her household[b], may cause her to be stiled the wife of the house, and not of the street: remembring that it is the Harlots badge, that her feet cannot abide in the house[c]; and that it is the Apostles charge, that women should be chast, and keepe at home[d]; and that goers from house to house, are (commonly) pratlers, busie bodies, and speakers of things not comely[e]. Thus this manner of speaking vsed here by the Spirit of God, describing the being of a wife, by comming into the house of her husband, minds all Christian women of these foure necessary duties: Obedience, Prouidence, Peaceableneſse, and Modesty. Now to the things wished, and prayed for on the womans behalfe; That she may bee like Rachel and like Leah, &c. I might speake here of the necessity of knowledge, in the course and story of the Scripture, which lieth vpon all those which desire to pray aright, that they may know how to order their requests in making their sutes to God, and may vnderstand what things are meet to be begged at Gods hand: but I will keepe my selfe to such matter as is peculiar to this present businesse. Rachel and Leah, were Labans daughters, and both of them the wiues of Iacob. Good women doubtlesse, but yet in some things faulty, as in being both at once the wiues of one man, and in giuing their maides to their husband. These imperfections of the holy people of those times, are neither to be blazed, as though wee tooke pleasure in the discouery of their shame; nor to be followed, as though their doing this or that, were a sufficient plea. Therefore we must inquire wherin it is to be wished, that a wife may be like Rachel & Leah, that so we may seek to follow them so farre forth as they followed the Lord, and no further. It were absurd to presse euery specialty, for by that reason a man might wish a woman blear eies; for such had Leah[f]: or that shee might die in trauell, for so did Rachel[g]. This were to draw bloud, and not milke out of the breasts of the Scripture. There be three things then in which a wife is to be wished to be like Rahel & Leah. The 1. is fruitfulnes: By Rachel & Leah, Iacob had 8 sons, & one daughter, & by them & theirs

God accomplished his promise made to Abraham, that his seed should be as the starres[k]. Wherein we are taught; That the fruitfulnesse of the wife is to be reckoned as a blessing, and to be craued of God as a fauour. They pray here that Ruth may be as Rachel & Leah, which were two stocks of the Israelitish nation. It is the blessing which God promiseth to the man which feareth him, that his wife shall be as the fruitful vine vpon the wals of his house, and his children like olive plants round about his table[l] Children are the inheritance of the Lord, and the fruit of the wombe is his reward[m]. Blessed is the man that hath his quiuer full of them[n]: Childrens children are the crowne of the Elders[o]: In the former times barrennesse was counted a reproch[p]. When God would punish Abimelech about Abraham and Sarah, he shut vp euery wombe of the house of Abimelech[q]: and when the Lord would blesse Iobs last daies more then the first, he gaue him 7 sons and 3 daughters[r]. In the rehearsall of the liues of the Fathers before the floud, it is said: such, or such an one, liued so many yeers, and begat sons and daughters: It is often in one Chap[s]. What was the blessing vpon the first couple? Bring forth fruit, multiply, &c[t]. And what was the blessing vpon Rebecka by her friends at her departure? grow into thousand thousands[u]: And when the Lord would shew the manner of his blessing to the Iewes after their return from the captiuity, he thus describes it: The streets of the City shal be ful of boyes & girles, &c[x].

The 1. Vse. There is a twofold vse of this doctrine: first, to discouer the wretchednes of their thoughts, who doe grudge and murmure at the encrease of children as a burthen: some would prescribe the Lord how many he should giue them, and set him down a stint which he must not exceed. A notable euidence of a miserable and faithlesse mind. For, whence is this feare of increase, before it commeth this repining at it when it is come, but from a distrustfull opinion of inability to maintaine them? why man? I say to thee of thy children, as Christ did to his Disciples touching themselues, They are of more value then Sparrowes[y]; yet the Lord feedeth them[z], yea, and the young Rauens that cry[a]: how much more creatures stamped with his owne image, O thou of little faith? How should I set this before an hundred men (said the Prophets man, when he cõpared his masters prouision with the company that was present: yet they shall eat, and there shall remain[b]. It is not only a reward and blessing to the rich to be full of Children (though euen amongst such there is a causelesse feare, because they thinke they shall not be able to make them all great) but it is specified as a blessing vpon the poor, that the Lord will make him a family like a flocke of sheepe[c]: and comfortable it is, that they shall be as sheepe, because this may well be intended, that they shall prosper with a little maintenance, as sheepe grow fat, albeit the leas be but short.

Secondly, this doctrine serueth to direct all that desire this blessing of increase, that they may know of whom they must seeke it. The Lord make thee like Rachel, &c. The fruit of the wombe is his reward[d], he maketh the barren woman to dwell with a Family, and to be a ioyfull mother of children[e]. It is well obserued, that there are fiue especiall keyes which the Lord reserueth in his owne power. First, the key of raine; The Lord shall open his good treasure, and the heauen to giue raine vnto the Land, &c[f]. Secondly, the key of food: Thou openest they hand, and they are filled, &c[g]. Thirdly, the key of the graue: He bringeth downe to the graue, and raiseth vp[h]. Fourthly, the key of the heart: The Lord opened the heart of Lydia[i]. Fiftly, the key of the wombe: God remembred Rachel, and opened her wombe[k]. Abraham therefore being childlesse, made his mone to the Lord[l]; Isaac prayed for his wife because shee was barren[m]: Hannah Samuels mother powred out her soule when she had no child[n]: so did Zachary and Elizabeth the Parents of Iohn Baptist[o]. This is the true course, first, to the Lord, then to the meanes. Rachel was in a passion, and cried to her husband; Giue me Children, or else I die[p]: but that preuailed not vntill shee sought the Lord by prayer.

The second thing in which it is to be wished, that a wife may be like Rachel and Leah, is, that out of her fruitfulnesse, may come an increase of Gods people.

theſe twaine did build vp Iſrael: and what were the Iſraelites but Gods peculiar people? A right Chriſtian indeed is called a true Iſraelite[q], and the elect are tearmed the Iſrael of God[r]. So then this is the doctrine; That the deſire of hauing children, muſt aime at the encreaſing and enlargement of Gods Church. This is the bleſſing indeed, when the wife builds vp Iſrael, not Babel, Bethel (Gods houſe) not Bethauen, (the houſe of vanity.) When God promiſed increaſe as a bleſſing, hee ſaid; the wife ſhould be as the Vine, and the children as the Oliue plants[s]; two of the beſt fruits, the one for cheering the heart, the other for cleering the face[t]; the one for ſweetnes, the other for fatnes[u]: which argueth, that God doth not ſimply promiſe a plentiful of-ſpring, as though that barely were a bleſſing, but ſuch an off-ſpring, which by the goodnes thereof, ſhould bring ioy and comfort to the Parents. The Vine and the Oliue are trees which Chriſt himſelfe is ſpecially compared to[x]: and therefore doubtleſſe, the Lord had a meaning of a further matter then bare encreaſe, when he ſaid, the wife ſhould be as the Vine, and the children as the Oliues. This was the deſire of the holy people of old, when they prayed, that their children might be as the corner ſtones[y], which were couched into the wall of the Temple: meaning that they might grow vnto an holy temple in the Lord, to be an habitation of God by the ſpirit[z]: bleſſed (ſaith the Pſalm) is the man that hath his quiuer full of them[a]; that is, of ſuch children, which are as the arrowes of a ſtrong man; whence it followeth, that they muſt haue more in them then nature: for arrowes be not arrowes by growth, but by art; ſo, they muſt be ſuch children, the knottines of whoſe nature, is refined and reformed, and made ſmooth by grace. Iſmael the ſonne of the bond-woman, had twelue ſonnes, and theſe were all twelue Princes of their nations[b]: but what was this when they were without the promiſe? Out of queſtion it was Hannah her drift in deſiring a ſonne, that out of her might come one, by whom Gods glory might bee aduanced amongſt men; and therefore ſhe vowed him to the Lord all the dayes of his life[c]. The Angel told Zachary, that he ſhould haue ioy and gladnes at the birth of his ſon; and why? becauſe he ſhall be great in the ſight of the Lord, and filled with the holy Ghoſt, and turne many to the Lord[d]: he was ordained to be a notable inſtrument in Gods Church. He that begetteth a foole, that is, an vngodly, and irreligious ſon, (for that is Salomons foole,) getteth himſelfe ſorrow, the father of ſuch an one can haue no ioy[e], ſuch a ſon is the calamity of his father[f]. It is the rule of the Scripture, that whatſoeuer is done, ſhould be done to the glory of God[g]: therefore euen our deſires of children, muſt aime at the ſame marke, that out of our loynes may come ſuch, by whom Gods glory may be promoted, and the number of the godly encreaſed in the world. Theſe particulars may ſuffice for the prouing of this point.

This doctrine diſcouereth a duty which is little thought on. Many deſire children out of an affection of nature, that they may haue ſome to poſſeſſe & inherite their eſtates, and to perpetuate their names here vpon earth: wherein I may ſay as Chriſt did in another caſe, Doe not the Publicans and ſinners euen the ſame[h]? But whoſe aime is it in the deſire of poſterity, to further the enlargement of Gods Church, and to encreaſe the number of beleeuers? Let the conſciences of the married ſpeake to this point: wiues and children (I ſay) are wiſhed by many, as Babel was erected by the ſonnes of men, to get them a name[i]; or, as Abſhalom reared a pillar, to preſerue their memory from the iniury of time[k]; but whoſe mind is it to build vp the Iſrael of God? whoſe drift and prayer is it to beget ſons and daughters to the Lord? This is one cauſe (amongſt others) that this age ſo abounds with the children of Belial, and that the earth is now (as in the dayes of Noah,) corrupt before God, and filled with cruelty[l], becauſe the ſatisfying of luſt, and the building vp of our ſelues are made the ends of mariage, & not the building vp of Iſrael. Out of theſe vncleane & wicked purpoſes, what other thing (ordinarily) can flow, but a curſed brood? Remember this then all. The people in captiuity preferred Ieruſalem to their chiefe ioy[m]. Learne you alſo to preferre the building of Iſrael

Israel, the encreasing of Gods Church, before all other (euen) your chiefe desires. Happy is the marriage where this is intended; doubtlesse, God will crowne such a gracious beginning with good successe. And to further this, let me shew you a course, by which we may in our marriages build vp Israel. The first thing n 1 Cor.7.39. helpefull to this, is, to marry in the Lord[n]; to match with those that feare God. I know religion commeth not by descent of nature, and holy children haue issuo Ios.24.2. ed out of godlesse Parents, as Abraham out of the loynes of idolatrous Terah[o]; and wicked children haue branched out of gracious progenitors; as Hophni and p 1 Sam. 2.12. Phinehas out of Eli[p], Amnon and Absalom out of Dauid[q]: so I haue seen a yeer, q 2 Sam 3.1,3 in which the best manurers of their ground haue had the worst encrease, and the meanest husbands haue enioyed the larger crops: but we must follow Gods ordinance, and the course which he hath sanctified, and then we shall haue comfort howsoeuer. This we are sure, that the lustfull marriages of the old world, in which carnall liking was the guide, and not religion, brought forth a tyrannous
r Gen. 6.2,4. generation[r]; and that the children are (at the least in estimation) holy[s], for their s 1 Cor.7.14. godly Parents sake. And therefore he who desireth to beget Israelites, let him not willingly venture to match with a Canaanite. The Iewes which married t Nehe.13.24. wiues of Ashdod spake halfe in the speech of Ashdod[t]. Though God can doe much, and his election is secret, yet it is not safe venturing vpon an vnknowne way:
u Heb.13.4. The second thing is, a sober vse of marriage. Marriage is honourable[u], if it be not dishonoured by the brutishnesse of those which are called to it. God vsually punisheth mens distempered, vnbridled, and disordered lusts, in their posterities. Marriage must be sanctified, and directed as other the blessings of God, by the x 1 Tim.4.5. Word of God and prayer[x]. The third thing is Religious education: Teach a child
y Prou.22.6. in the trade of his way, and when he is old he shall not depart from it[y]. Hee that desireth his children should yeeld him the crop of comfort, must cast into them the seed of instruction. The taste of that will continue vntill age, with which the new vessell of the younger yeeres is first seasoned. Some say in scorne, that young Saints become old diuels: but I haue seldome heard of a Saint in age, that hath been a diuell in his youth. These three things well obserued, will further this building vp of Israel, by our marriages. It is possible, I know (as in part I touched before) that this course may faile; but yet, howsoeuer, the parents shall haue comfort, when they shall be able, in the witnesse of a good conscience, to wash their hands in the innocency & freedome from the guilt of their childrens wickednesse: and they whose neglect of these duties, shall be the occasion of the leudnesse and prophaneneſſe of their posterity; I say of them as Saint Paul did z Galat. 5.10. of some others, in another case: they shall beare their iudgement whosoeuer they be[z].

The 5. Doct. The third thing in which the wife is to be wished to be as Rahel and Leah, is a readinesse to yeeld to the husband in all good things. This duty is very apparant in the practise of these two. When Iacob was warned of God by an Angell, to returne from Laban, into the Land where he was borne, he made his wiues acquainted with the matter, and discouered to them his purpose to depart, they forthwith gaue him this yeelding and respectiue answer; Whatsoeuer God hath said vnto thee, doe a Gen. 31.11, &c. it[a]. They would not hinder him in any thing, which they saw the Lord had required of him. The like is to be seen in Sarah, shee was no hinderance to Abraham in his remouall from his owne Country into Canaan[b], no, nor at such b Gen.12. c Heb.11.8. times, when he knew not whether he went[c], nor in the speedy circumcising of his
d Gen.19. Family[d], nor in his iourney to sacrifice his sonne[e]. Out of all doubt, if shee e Gen.22. had been a clogge vnto him in any of all these, the Spirit of God would not haue concealed it, because the wrestling with her vnwillingnesse and gain-sayings had been a notable euidence of Abrahams faith, which the Scripture is very carefull to set out vnto vs to the full. There be two women storied in Scripture (aboue others,) as examples of Gods iudgement vpon the vntowardnesse of wiues to ioyne with, and to encourage their Husbands in good things. The one is Lots wife: doubtlesse her loue to Sodome was a great delay to Lot in his departure from it, and when shee should haue gone on with her husband, hastening to the place appointed for their refuge, without looking backe, shee drew behind, still lingering after her wonted home. The Lord met with her in her sinne, shee became a pillar of salt [f]. The other woman is Michol, Danids wife when shee looked out, and saw him dancing before the Arke, shee despised him in her heart; and so farre was shee from approuing his zeale, that at his returne to his house, shee entertayned him with a frumpe; Oh how was the King of Israel a foole this day! but shee bare it not away without a scourge, shee had no child vnto the day of her death [g]. I remember a policy of Pauls, in his Epistle to Philemon: Hee wrote to him for the re-entertaining of a runnagate seruant, whom he had begotten vnto God in his bonds. In the inscription hee ioynes in Philemons wife, (And to our deare sister Apphia [h]:) no doubt to warne her of her duty, that when the receiuing againe of Onesimus should bee manifested to her Husband to bee a needfull duty, and a thing pleasing to God, shee should not put in her spoke to withstand the motion, but should rather further her Husband in such an honest businesse. And indeed for that end was the wife created to be a helpe to her Husband [i], in all honest offices to ioyne with him, to encourage him, to prouoke him to them, to assist him in performing them. As the Church is in subiection to Christ, euen so let the Wiues bee to their Husbands in euery thing [k]. This is that meeke and quiet spirit, which is before God a thing much set by [l].

[f] Gen. 19. 26.
[h] Phil. 5. 2. &c.
[i] Gen. 2. 18.
[k] Eph. 5. 24.
[l] 1 Pet. 3. 4.

This is a lesson for euery wife whom God hath blessed with a religious husband. Seeth thee her Husbands purposes for good things, as namely, in the religious gouernment of his family, in the establishment of holy exercises in his house, in liberality and bounty to the poore, in seeking to vphold the worship of God in the place where hee liueth, or in any the like godly practise? Oh, let her not goe about to coole his zeale, or kill his forwardnesse, but let her remember the saying of Rachel and Leah, Whatsoeuer God hath said vnto thee, doe it: Behold here I am, I will follow thee foote by foote, I will endeauour that these thy holy desires may haue a good effect. Blessed is that yoake where there shall be such an equall drawing. It is not the portion of euery wife to be so happy as to bee vrged to this duty. Many a religious Abigail is lincked with a churlish Nabal; yet euen such also must remember this: If they see better then their Husbands what God hath commanded, though they may not vsurpe authority [m], yet they may and must in all humility perswade and intreate, and exhort, and counsell vnto good: and happy is hee (if hee can see his owne happinesse) in whose bosome the Lord hath layed so good a Counseller. Who knoweth but that such a wife may saue her Husband [n]? And thus much for the correspondency which ought to bee betwixt a good wife and Rachel and Leah. Shee is a blessing if shee be fruithfull, more if shee be a stocke bearing plants for the Lords house: most of all, If shee bee a continuall encourager and perswader and counseller vnto good. Surely hee that finds such a Wife, finds a blessing, and receiueth (no little) fauour of the Lord [o]. I say to thee whom the Lord hath so endowed, Giue her of the fruit of her hands, and let her owne workes praise her in the gate [p].

Now followeth that limme of the Prayer which concernes the man: And that thou mayest doe worthily in Ephrathah, and be famous in Bethlehem. The first generall thing which is wished to him, is, that he may doe worthily: The second is more particular, and is a fruit of worthy doing, namely, that by doing worthily, hee may be famous: And then (thirdly) the place is noted to which this worthy doing, and growing famous, is confined, Ephrathah and Bethlehem. Of these in order, and first of Doing worthily.

The

The ground of Doing worthily, is Doing: So that they wish not vnto him being now to be married, a life of idleneſſe and eaſe, and worldly pleaſure, but a life of employment, a life of action, a life of Doing. Whence it followeth, That it is the blessing of him that is married, to haue some certaine course and calling, and condition of life wherein to be doing. And indeed this is the ordinance of God, that in the sweat of his face, euery man ſhould eate his bread [q], that none ſhould walke inordinately [r]. To ratifie this, God appointed Adam what to doe, euen in his innocency [s]: Our Sauiour himſelfe during the dayes of his minority, was Doing, though in a meane profeſſion, the trade of a Carpenter [t]: After when he was by baptiſme inueſted into the office of Redeemer, he was in a continuall action to the end of his daies, yea, with ſuch cheerefulneſſe, that it was Meate vnto him, to doe the will of him that sent him, and to finish his worke [u]. Fitly is the life of man compared vnto a pight battell, in which euery man is marſhalled in his ranke, and aſſigned his place vpon which he muſt attend: ſome commanders of all degrees, ſome ſouldiers of all ſorts; none hath a ſouldiers pay, but he which hath a ſouldiers place: ſo it is in the life of man: God is the grand-commander of all, he hath allotted vnto euery man his calling, hee hath fitted euery man to doe ſomething.

The Vſe. This deſerueth to be commended vnto all, of what degree ſoeuer, but vnto Gentlemen eſpecially, whoſe fault this inordinate and idle liuing chiefly is. It is the thought of the moſt ſuch, that becauſe of their birth, or becauſe they haue ſufficiency otherwayes to maintaine themſelues; therefore they are exempted from theſe ſetled courſes of doing, which others of baſer bloud, and ſmaller meanes are tied vnto: Vpon this opinion, we ſee by wofull experience, how many ſuch liue, like vnprofitable burthens of the earth, paſſing away their time either in doing nothing, or in doing euill, or in doing that which is to no purpoſe. When ſome come to be challenged at the laſt day, for liuing in pleaſure vpon earth, and wantonneſſe [x]; where ſhall ſuch hide their heads, how ſhall they eſcape? The ſharpe account of that day will force them to acknowledge, that it had been better for them to haue taken the flayle and ſpade into their hands, then to haue made gaming, and hunting, and pleaſure, and feaſting, to be their chiefeſt buſineſſe: to you all therefore I heartily wiſh, that you may ſeeme to your ſelues ſtill to heare in your eares the words of Dauid vnto Salomon, touching the building of the Temple; Vp, and bee doing, and (no doubt) the Lord will be with you [y].

y 1 Chro. 22. 16

The 7. Doct. Now this Doing, muſt be a worthy Doing, or a doing worthily. To doe worthily, is the ſame thing (in mine opinion) with that which Paul calleth a walking worthy of the Lord [z], or, worthy of the calling whereunto we are called [a]; that is, to walke ſo as becommeth thoſe whom the Lord hath called to be his, and to whom he hath reuealed his will, by his Word and Spirit. So that to doe worthily, and to doe religiouſly, are all one, to make Religion and the feare of God, to be the rule and guide of a mans actions. This is a worthy courſe. No action is to be tearmed a worthy action, but that which is tempered with wiſdome; neither is there any true wiſdome, ſaue that of which the foundation is layed in the feare of God [b]. This made Dauid to become a man ſo farre exceeding others in worth, becauſe the Teſtimonies of the Lord were his meditation [c]. Many things (notable in their owne nature,) are reported to haue been done by the heathen, but yet wanting the guidance of Religion, they haue loſt their grace, and the beſt name that can be giuen them, is to call them Glorious ſinnes. Hence therefore followeth that he which deſireth to doe worthily, muſt make the Word of God his Counceller [d], muſt ſearch the Scripture [e], muſt let it dwell plentiouſly with him [f]. There hee ſhall find the grounds of true worth, which is euen this, to bee of a moſt valiant courage, to obſerue and doe according to all that the Lord commands [g]: There hee ſhall reade reade the examples of the Lords Worthies, Adam, Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Dauid, and such like; presidents worthy imitation: so then the next with in respect of the man, was, that as he should be in continuall action, so his actions might be worthy, seasoned with Religion, and guided by knowledge.

Marke this (I pray you) chiefly you whom in outward things God hath preferred before others. Desirest thou the title of a man of worth? wouldest thou be reputed a worthy Gentleman? seeke to ground thy worth vpon Religion, vpon the knowledge of God, and of his will reuealed in his Word. The Gentlemen of Berea searched the Scriptures, and that daily [h], this was their worth. Miserable and prophane is the opinion; Is a Gentleman able to discourse of any customary subiect, of the occasions and occurrences of the Times; is he fashionable, hath he the languages, knoweth he how to entertaine his Mistrisse, hath he skill at his weapon, and such like? then he is thought to be compleat, a man of worth, one that hath in him all the parts of a Gentleman. All this while Religion and grace, and ability to speake the language of Canaan [i]; in which things stands true worth indeed: these are vtterly forgotten, and yet without these, all the rest are but (as Salomon speaketh of Beauty in a faire woman without vnderstanding) as a Iewell of gold in a swines snout [k]. Resolue vpon this therefore, thou art not a true accomplisht Gentleman, till thy heart is seasoned with Religion, thou canst not doe worthily, vnlesse thou canst walke religiously.

Next followeth the Connexion: Doe worthily, and be famous. The instruction of the place is this; The foundation of true famousnesse, is well doing. Doing worthily is the alone way to become famous. This is that which the Apostle calleth seeking glory and honour by well doing [l]. This was the constant course of the holy men of the best times. By faith (saith the Scripture) our Elders were well reported of [m]. Of our Sauiour it is said, that there went a fame of him throughout all the region round about; but vpon what was this fame grounded? vpon his diligence in well doing; He taught in their Sinagogues, and was honoured of all men [n]. Saint Paul was famous in all places; but for what? euen for his bands, and suffering for the Gospell [o]; the worth of his actions, and the glory of his name went together: What was it that blazed the name of Salomon, and made all the world desirous to see him? was it not his wisdome which God had put in his heart [p]? what is it which hath ennobled the memories of all those excellent persons which are registred in holy Writ? is it not their godlinesse? they honoured God in their liues, and the Lord hath honoured their names amongst men, according to his promise: Them that honour me, I will honour [q]. Glory and goodnesse, shame and sinne, the Lord hath ioyned together with a chaine of Adamant, and they cannot be sundred; The memoriall of the iust shall be blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot [r]: The wicked shall leaue their names as a curse vnto Gods chosen [s]. It is not fame, but infamy which euill men haue gotten by their wickednesse. Cain by his murther, Ahab by his cruelty, Iezabel by her whoredome, Nebuchadnezzar by his pride, Iudas by his treason, the Pharisee by his hypocrisie: the remembrance of these shall continue so long as the Moone endureth, but yet thrust through with a spit of reproch. Yea, (will some say) doth fame and credit alwayes accompany worthy actions? did not Christ tell his Disciples that they should bee reuiled, and haue their names put out as euill, &c [t]? and did not Paul passe through honour and dishonour, by euill report and good report [u]? I answer: It is true, that enuie is the companion of vertue, and let the Moone shine neuer so brightly, yet some curre or other shall be found which will barke against it. Christ himselfe shall bee called a Samaritane, and said to haue a Diuell [x]: how much more shall this befall those of the household [y]? yet this is no preiudice to the truth of this doctrine: for euen this is the fame and glory of Gods seruants. It is an honourable thing to bee euill spoken of for well doing: there is a spirit of glory resting vpon such [z]: and though there

The Vse. Here is a good aduertisement for all, especially for those who by marriage are entring vpon the Theater of the World, to shew what is in them. Honour and reputation is a thing which nature hath taught men to affect; and true it is, that a good name is to be chosen aboue great riches[c]. If we desire Fame, we see here the way sanded out vnto vs; Doe worthily, and bee famous. If any man serue me, him will my Father honour[d]. A field of sincerity charged with deedes of piety, cannot but bee accomplisht with a crest of glory. All the fame which men haue sought by buildings, by acts of chiualry, and by such other courses which the light of nature offereth and affecteth, for the ennobling of it selfe, time deuoureth it, and within an age or two it is cleane put out: but that glorie which spingeth from the rootes of godlinesse, no tract of time can make to wither, no blast of venemous tongues can ouercome. It shall breake out as the Sunne, in despite of all darkening cloudes, it is watered with the deaw of Heauen, and it shall grow and increase, maugre the malice of all gainesayers.

[d] Ioh. 12. 26.

The last thing is the place, to which this Doing worthily, is limitted, Ephrathah and Bethlehem: Those two names betoken but one place, as appeareth in the story of Iacob[e]. Bethlehem was the place of Booz his dwelling: Here lay his estate and inheritance; out of this place arose his maintenance: here they desire he may doe worthily, and be famous: so that the doctrine is; That a Christian must make conscience there especially to be profitable, and to doe good, where the Lord hath seated him, either by course of inheritance, or by any other honest and lawfull meanes of possession. I remember Saint Pauls rule, and it may bee well applyed to this: If there be any that prouideth not for his owne, &c. he denieth the faith, and is worse then an Infidell[f]: so if there be any that desire not to doe worthily, especially amongst his owne, where he hath been bred, where hee is called, where his estate and possession lyeth; why may it not also be said, He is worse then an Infidell, &c? It is noted of our Sauiour, that his first execution of his ministery was in Nazareth, where hee had been brought vp[g]: hee had a loue to that place, and a great desire to haue done some good there. Moses might haue bin a great man in Egypt: Pharaohs daughter brought him vp as her sonne, yet his heart was still to goe liue, and doe good among his brethren the children of Israel[h]. So Nehemiah, all his mind was to liue at Ierusalem, to be an Instrument of good in his natiue soyle, although hee was vpon good termes in the Emperours Court[i]. Epaphroditus was the Minister of Philippi; in a iourney vndertaken for the Churches businesse vnto Paul, he fell sicke, and could not returne so soone as was intended; yet Paul saith of him, he longed after them all[k], still his mind was vpon his charge, and vpon the people, ouer whom the holy Ghost had made him ouerseer[l].

The Vse. I would (for a conclusion) that this were well thought vpon by all: for this sin of not caring to do worthily in Bethlehem by those which haue their seates and mansions in Bethlehem, hath now spread it selfe farre. Non-residency is not the sinne of the Ministery onely, but of the Layty too. Many are content to receiue rents and reuenewes out of Bethlehem, but to bee tied to liue at Bethlehem, and to doe worthily there, that is a burthen which they cannot endure. If a man come to Bethlehem, there hee shall finde their Agents, to racke and extort, and to suck out the sweet of the Land, and to make the best of euery thing; but themselues there to doe worthily, to gouerne, to direct, to keepe hospitality,&c. he shall not find. Where are they then? Perhaps, they are soiourning vnder other mens roofes, or (as Iob saith) they haue got houses in desolate places[m], where no body can find them, or they be crept into some citie a farre off, there, to liue for no body but themselues. This is not to doe worthily to Bethlehem. This is to receiue profit by Bethlehem, but to doe no good in Bethlehem. It is a great sinne which is crept into our common-wealth, and is not taken notice of; it is euen the bane and decay of the country. These men here prayed against it, and let my tongue cleaue to the roofe of my mouth, if I speake not against it also. God threatned it of old, (as a plague) that many houses great and faire should be desolate without an Inhabitant[n]: why will men bring that iudgement vpon themselues, to run away from the dwellings which God hath called them to, and to leaue Zim and Obim to lodge, Ostriches, and Satyres to daunce therein[o]? Whosoeuer thou bee then whom God shall call to Bethlehem, and to whom he shall giue an estate in Bethlehem; see thou make conscience to do worthily in Bethlehem. And of this portion of Scripture so farre.

The Old-man, and the New-man.

IOHN 3.6.

That which is borne of flesh is flesh, and that which is borne of the spirit is spirit.

The state of the verse.

THis verse is a reason to proue, that the New-birth required to saluation, must be by the Spirit of God, or else it cannot be. Our Sauiours argument may bee reduced into this forme: That New-birth which is required, is such as may further a mans entrance into the Kingdome of heauen. But vnlesse it bee a New-birth effected by the Spirit, it cannot further a mans entrance into the Kingdome of Heauen. Therefore either it must bee a Birth by the Spirit, or else it is in vaine: The first part of the reason is manifest: for our Sauiours first ground, was touching a being borne againe, to the end one might see the kingdome of God. Now the second part, namely, that if it be not a New-birth by the Spirit, a man is thereby neuer a whit the neerer heauen, is here maintained on this wise: That New-birth which can make a man no better then Flesh, cannot further his entrance into the Kingdome of God. But that kind of being borne againe which thou Nicodemus dost imagine, can make a man no better then Flesh: Therefore such a birth can neuer bring a man to Heauen. The first branch of this reason is euident, for Flesh signifying, in the language of the Scripture nothing but corruption, cannot further a man towards heauen, but rather the contrary. The second part (that such a birth as Nicodemus thought on, could make man no better then Flesh, is here auouched: That which is borne of Flesh is Flesh; The thing borne is according to that whereof it is borne; of the flesh is borne nothing but carnal, according as on the other side, of spirit is bred that which is spirituall. Thus may the drift of this verse appeare; It is in a word, thus; to prooue, that as there must be a New-birth before a man can be saued, so, that New-birth must not be such as a mans first was: For by that he shall be onely carnall, and the carnall man is altogether vncapable of the kingdome of God: he must be borne of the Spirit, so shall he become a spirituall man, and then he may haue an easie passage into life. So much touching the scope:

Tale est natum quale est principiũ generationis effectiuũ.

The sense is opened.

That which hath been said, may in part let vs see the sense of the words: yet it is necessary that I open them somewhat more particularly. The words Flesh and Spirit are chifely to be enquired into. By Flesh is meant, the whole sinfull corruption of our naturall estate. You shall find it vsed to that sense, as anciently as the language of God himselfe, before the floud: of man he then said, he is but flesh[a], a very heape, a lumpe, a masse of corruption. The distinction is not amisse: that the word Flesh, is taken two manner of waies in Scripture, either for a matter of substance in nature, as when Adam said of Eue, Shee is Flesh of my Flesh[b], and Paul, All Flesh is not one manner of Flesh[c], &c. or for a matter of quality, as corruption in nature, and so is the word in Pauls Epistles often vsed, as, In my Flesh dwelleth no goodnesse[d], which walke not after the Flesh[e], and elsewhere. Here Flesh is the whole nature of man as it is corrupted. The same is meant by Flesh, which is called, the Body of sinne[f], the Body of death[g], the Old man[h]. It is said by Diuines, that our naturall corruption is called Flesh: 1. Because it is conueied from man to man, from the father to the sonne, by the seed of flesh. 2. Because it is practised and exercised in the members of our flesh, which are naturally weapons of vnrighteousnesse vnto sinne[i]. 3. Because it is nourished and encreased by outward and fleshly obiects: vpon which third reason the conceit is built, that this is a terme of diſtinction betwixt our natiue corruption and that of the Angels, which kept not their firſt eſtate: ours is called Fleſh, theirs ſpirituall wickedneſſe[k]. Thus for the ſenſe of the word Fleſh: Now to be borne of Fleſh, is to be borne as a man of a man; and whatſoeuer is ſo borne, is ſuch as that whereout it is borne: The begetter and the bearer, a lumpe of corruption, and the Birth no whit at all better in it ſelfe. Touching the word Spirit, in the firſt place wee may either vnderſtand thereby a ſpirituall beginning, as, Fleſh was expounded to betoken a corrupt and carnall roote; or elſe wee may conceiue thereby the Spirit of God, whoſe proper and peculiar worke that of Regeneration is. By Spirit in the ſecond place, is not meant a ſpirituall ſubſtance, (for in ſuch a ſenſe there can bee no ſuch thing as one ſpirit to beget another) but thereby is intended a ſpirituall diſpoſition; ſo that the ſenſe of the whole is thus: As of that birth which is from naturall man, there commeth no better thing then meere corruption; ſo of that which is wrought by the reuiuing of the holy Ghoſt, there proceed ſpirituall, diuine, and holy qualities. Corrupted man brings forth a creature corrupted like himſelfe, and no ſuch can inherit the Kingdome of God. The Spirit of God maketh thoſe which are borne of him to become ſpirituall, and ſo they become capable of Eternity. This is the true interpretation of this place: And if this ſenſe had been aright thus generally conceiued, there needed not to haue been ſuch a buſineſſe as wee read to haue been amongſt ſome of the Ancients, about anſwering an obiection, ſuppoſed to bee frameable out of theſe words, againſt the Truth of Chriſts body, becauſe he was conceiued by the holy Ghoſt; and that which is borne of the Spirit, is Spirit, ſaith the Text: Hereto their beſt anſwer was, that Chriſt was alſo borne of fleſh, namely, the fleſh of the Virgin, and ſo erroniouſly they limit Chriſts being of the holy Ghoſt, only to his ſoule: Whereas if it be conſidered, that the words Fleſh and Spirit, doe not here betoken a ſubſtance, but a quality; Fleſh, a corrupt eſtate; Spirit, a ſpirituall condition; the matter were ſoone cleered: for then all that could bee concluded concerning Chriſt, would be this; namely, that Chriſt being conceiued by the holy Ghoſt, was all Spirit, hauing in him the graces of God in Spirit in an vnmeaſurable meaſure, and was neuer a whit Fleſh, as not hauing the ſmalleſt tainture of corruption: If the word Spirit were to be expounded of a ſubſtance, how ſhould this bee verified in a man regenerate? Shall wee thinke ſuch an one to bee become a Spirit, all corporall and fleſhly ſubſtance being cleane abolished in him? what could bee more abſurd. Well ſaith an old Writer; Wee being borne of the Spirit, are made Spirit; not in reſpect of any partaking of the glorious and incomprehenſible ſubſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, but in regard of the fruition of thoſe ſpirituall graces which God beſtoweth through Chriſt. Thus farre for interpretation. In briefe this is all: Of a corrupted beginning, commeth none other but a corrupted birth: From a ſpirituall, iſſueth out a ſpirituall off-ſpring.

Cbryſoſt. Euthymius.

Baſilius hom. Johan. Baptiſmo.

Now to make way to matter of inſtruction, there are here two things principally conſiderable. 1. The true ſtate of a natrall man. 2. The proper condition of a regenerate man.

Concerning the true ſtate of a naturall man, this is the Doctrine: That man by nature of himſelfe hath nothing in him but corruption. It hath been already proued to vs, that by Fleſh, here is meant nothing but corruption; and to be borne of the Fleſh, is to be borne as a man; and whoſoeuer is ſo borne, the beſt which can be made of him (ſaith our Sauiour) is, that he is Fleſh, a very confuſed heape of all corruption. The matter thus manifeſted by the Text, is very proueable by the Scripture. Dauid ſaith of himſelfe, and it is true of euery man, borne after the common courſe; I was borne in iniquity, and in ſinne hath my Mother conceiued me[l]. Sinne and Iniquity, are here taken in the largeſt meaſure, both for guilt guilt deſeruing puniſhment, and for proneneſſe vnto euill; ſo ſoone as euer a man beginneth to be encloſed and warme iu the wombe, he is not tainted onely, but euen (as it were) wholy ouerſpread with theſe two. 1. Liableneſſe to Gods wrath: and 2. Inclination to all kind of vngodlinſſe. The Pſalme ſaith; that when God tooke view of Adams ſonnes, they were all corrupt[m]; there was not one found, who in himſelfe was of a more refined and pure condition: All vnprofitable[n], all; the children of diſobedience, and the ſonnes of wrath[o]. This corruption which is in man by nature, is that which we call originall ſin, or, the ſinne which is in man from the very firſt beginning of his being. It is a depraued-neſſe or a diſorder of the whole Man, in matters which concerne eternall life. I ſay, it is a diſorder of the whole man: His very minde is defiled[p], his wiſdome is death[q]. If there be any thing in his minde, which may ſeeme to be more excellent then the reſt, euen that alſo is tainted: The ſpirit of the minde needs renewing[r]. Among the workes of the Fleſh, are numbred, Idolatry and Hereſie, which are properly corruptions of the mind[s]. It is not as ſome imagine, that onely mans inferiour faculties (as his affections) are corrupted, but euen that which is beſt in him: his cogitations are darkened[t], he is a very foole and a beaſt in himſelfe before God, in regard of the right apprehenſion of heauenly things, as Dauid acknowledgeth touching himſelfe[u]: All the imaginations of the thoughts of his heart are onely euill[x]. When it is ſaid that we are all by nature vnwiſe[y], what is meant but a deprauation of the minde and vnderſtanding, euen the beſt thereof, no better then meere folly in the beſt things? Now this being once proued, that euen the very minde, and vnderſtanding and wiſdome of nature is become Fleſh, what ſhall wee thinke of the remainder? For how muſt not the ſpeech of Chriſt bee true: If the light that is in thee bee darkneſſe, how great is that darkneſſe[z]? If the mind and vnderſtanding which ſhould bee the light and direction and ground of gouerment to the whole man, bee in that caſe ſo blinded, ſo defiled, ſo wholly depriued of all true worth, in what caſe ſhall all the reſt be which depend therenpon? It cannot otherwiſe bee (ſaith our Sauiour.) How ſhould corruption produce other then corruption? Who can bring a cleane thing out of filthineſſe[a]? By one man ſinne entred into the World[b]; Adam the common roote of all man-kind, being depraued, how can it be but all his poſterity muſt bee ſo? Adam begate a childe in his owne likeneſſe[c], that is a ſinner like himſelfe; and ſo euery father ſucceſſiuely from him hath done the ſame. Hereupon now ariſeth a very great queſtion touching the manner of the propagation and deriuing of ſin from the father to the child, by meanes whereof (according to the words here) Fleſh brings forth Fleſh: For inaſmuch as the proper ſeate and ſubiect of ſinne is the ſoule, it is queſtioned whether the ſoule alſo come by naturall generation. It ſhould ſeeme ſo, for elſe how ſhould the ſoule be corrupted with ſinne, preſently vpon the being thereof in the body? If ſin were in the body before, then how is the ſoule the naturall ſeate of ſin, or what kind of thing is ſin, if the ſoule receiueth it from the body? Nay, how can the ſoule being a ſpirituall ſubſtance, receiue a tainture and defilement from the body, which is of a groſſer compoſition? For this indeed is the common opinion of Diuines, that the ſoule being in the due & appointed time made by God, commeth pure and clean into the body, but is inſtantly vpon the coupling thereof with the body defiled, like water which running cleane from the fountaine, is powred into a veſſell that is vncleane. This is the moſt receiued doctrine. Indeed it is true, the ſoule in many things followeth the temperature and conſtitution of the body, as is found true in experience; but yet it ſeemeth ſomewhat too hard to ſay, that the ſoule infected by the body. The ſoule may be hindred by the body in ſome of the actions and operations thereof, but how (it being ſpirituall) ſuch a thing as the body ſhould work vpon it to conuey corruption into it, is ſomewhat hard to apprehend. Now on the other

other ſide, if for the auoiding this difficulty, we ſhall thinke the ſoule commeth by naturall generation, out of the loynes of the father as the body doth, there will be as much hardneſſe againe to conceiue that. For if the ſoule be by generation, then it is either from the ſoule of the Parents, or their body. How can it be from their ſoule, the ſoule being a ſubſtance, not ſubiect to diuiſion? or how can one ſoule beget another, more then one Angell another? much leſſe can it be from the body: For how can a body beget a ſpirituall ſubſtance? Beſides that the Scripture ſeemeth to be againſt it, while it calleth our naturall fathers, the Fathers of our bodies[d], and God the Father of Spirits; aſcribing as may bee thought no more to the Parents, then the generation of the body, and reſeruing the conueyance of the ſoule into the body, to God as his peculiar. Theſe difficulties haue put me in mind of two ſpeeches; the one of Dauids touching the forming of a man in his mothers wombe: I am fearefully and wonderfully made, &c[e]. Out of which place this neceſſarily deriued, that the manner of mans framing and conception in the wombe is a ſecret, rather with feare and reuerence to be wondred at, then buſily and curiouſly to bee ſearched into. It is a part of that knowledge which Dauid ſaith, is ſo high that he cannot attaine vnto it[f]. For mine owne part I hold my ſelfe ſatisfied with this; that God eſtabliſhed an order in nature, that euery creature that hath life, ſhould produce and bring forth the like to it ſelfe according to its proper kind. This order was more particularly eſtabliſhed touching Man. When God ſaid to Adam and Eue; Bring forth fruit, and multiply[g]. Now this order ſet in nature, the God of nature doth continue, and effect, and giue ſtrength vnto: and, that it is ſo wee ſee, but the particularities appertaining to the manner thereof, we cannot comprehend. I am of opinion, that in ſpeaking of the generation of man, it is not ſo fit to diuide him into his parts, and to ſay; Thus it is for the propagation of his body, and thus for the infuſion of his ſoule: For this is to no end but to multiply difficulties; but thus rather: The whole man conſiſting of ſoule and body, begetteth a creature like himſelfe, conſiſting of the ſame parts, and that by vertue of the bleſſing of multiplication and encreaſe which God beſtowed vpon all liuing earthly creatures in their firſt making. The other ſpeech, is of Auguſtine touching originall ſinne, or the ſinne of nature. There is nothing better knowne to be preached of, then that man by nature is wholly ſinfull; but how he commeth to be ſo, nothing more hard to bee vnderſtood. The ſame ſpeaketh of one that was fallen into a pit, one comming by, and ſeeing him there, began to wonder how he ſhould fall in. Thinke you (quoth the party in danger) how thou mayeſt deliuer me hence, and enquire not how I came hither. So in this caſe it is manifeſt, that we are all enwrapped in originall ſinne, the very death which Infants are ſubiect vnto; which yet by age are vnable to commit a ſinne in act, is a teſtimony of their originall guilt. They could not die if they had no ſinne: and we may feel in our ſelues an inclination and proneneſſe vnto euill, if wee will obſerue our ſelues as we ſhould. What ſhould wee bee ſo buſie then to enquire how and which way it crept in vpon vs? rather let vs beſtow labour to learne which way we may remoue it. Euen Bellarmine ſaid well in this, (after much diſcourſe touching the deriuing of originall ſinne:) There is no more (ſaid he) required to the conueyance of originall ſinne, but that a man by true generation doe deſcend from Adam. God at the firſt ſet Adam as a publike perſon, repreſenting the perſon of all man-kinde, with this condition; if he retained his integrity, then that bleſſing of multiplication once giuen, had been ſanctified to him, for the bringing forth of a poſterity righteous and holy like himſelfe; if he fell away from his obedience, then that bleſſing ſhould be turned into a curſe, and ſhould bee the meanes of multiplying a corrupt and ſinfull generation. Gods inflicting this puniſhment vpon Adam falling, that his poſterity ſhould feele the ſmart of his diſobedience, is the very ground hereof, that Fleſh produceth Fleſh, a ſinfull father produceth a corrupted child. This God in iuſtice laid vpon man, and by this meanes ſinne hath ſeized, and doth, and will vpon euery ſonne of Adam in his birth: what ſhould we tire out our ſelues with queſtions about the manner? It is a good ſpeech of reuerend Calvines: The vniuerſall corruption of our nature, proceedeth not ſo much out of generation, as Gods ordination. In one man God adorned vs all, and in the ſame one he ſtripped vs all: ſo that now euery one that commeth from him by ordinary deſcent, is as he was, guilty of the ſame ſinne, and blemiſhed with the ſame corruption. Thus I haue laboured about this neceſſary doctrine, touching mans natiue corruption. Euery man is Fleſh, that is, (in the language of the Scripture) a very heape of corruption. This my Text auoucheth, this the Scripture iuſtifieth (it affirmes this ruſt of corruption to haue eaten and fretted into mans nobleſt parts: his mind, his vnderſtanding, his wiſdome, the beſt which he hath in him, is corrupt: He is ſtreamed out of an infected fountaine: his father Fleſh, and that which is borne thereof, muſt needs be ſutable. This corruption is ſeated in the ſoule. The Father by Gods Law of nature, hauing a ſoule, begets a ſonne indued with a ſoule: The father hauing a corrupted ſoule, by Gods Law of iuſtice begets a ſonne, whoſe ſoule is alſo ſtained with corruption. This is the ſumme.

The Vſe.

I might enlarge my ſelfe into ſundry vſes of this doctrine. Firſt, I might apply it againſt the ancient errour of the Heretique Pelagius, and his followers, who maintained, that ſinne is come from Adam to his poſterity, not by propagation, but by imitation. Adam ſinned (ſay they) and ſo made ouer to his race, a nature guilty of the want of originall righteouſneſſe; but he conueied not any thing which may be truly called ſinne. How is this then true which is here ſaid; that the off-ſpring of Fleſh is Fleſh? Whoſoeuer is borne and begotten by man, is a corrupted creature. All in Adam ſinned. Adams offence in eating the forbidden fruit, is not to be reputed as a perſonall offence, but he being a publike perſon, it was a publike ſinne, euen the ſinne of all man-kinde. Looke therefore in what caſe Adam was, preſently vpon his treſpaſſe, in the ſame is euery one by nature: neither could Adam conuey his nature vnto his poſterity, but hee muſt needs withall conuey the corruption of his nature. It is a true ſaying, that in the firſt man the perſon corrupted nature, but in euery other man, nature corrupts the perſon. Whoſoeuer is a man by the propagation of Adams nature, the ſame is alſo a ſinner by the deriuing ouer of his corruption. Secondly, I might alſo vrge this againſt ſome Papiſts, who are in this point (as they are rightly called) Semi-pelagians, they acknowledging originall corruption, yet doe limit it, and doe make it to haue place onely in the ſenſuall parts, and not properly in the ſoule and mind: It reſteth (ſaith a great Papiſt) in the Fleſh, (vnderſtanding thereby the inferiour faculties,) as in a fort or ſconce of defence, and from thence it maketh an aſſault againſt the minde. But it hath been proued, that euen the minde of man is corrupt. For which cauſe, Paul vrgeth a neceſſity of being renewed in knowledge [h]. It is true, there be things yet in nature, which (ſimply) conſidered as endowments of Gods beſtowing, are good: ſo as is, the acknowledgment of a diuine power; ſome diſtinction of good and euill in the conſcience, ſome ingenuity in the things which concerne this preſent life, &c. Theſe and the like remaine yet in nature; and are in themſelues not euill, yet in naturall man they be ſo corrupted, that they can neuer worke to good. No naturall man was euer able out of theſe to bring forth any ſuch action, as might be called rightly good, and in that reſpect accepted with God. Thoſe praiſe-worthy acts of many famous Heathen, if wee grow to a ſtraite examination of things, were but, (as they are called,) barren vertues, and glorious ſinnes. Thoſe things might be thus iuſtly, and more at large vrged againſt the Papiſts, the grand Patrons of nature, who will not yeeld it to be ſo wholy fleſh, but that there may be found in it ſomewhat free and incorrupt, which may ſomwhat further a mans ſaluation. But I content my ſelfe ſelfe to point at theſe things in paſſage: and will ſet my ſelfe to the preſſing of one ſpeciall vſe; namely, the helping vs on to that, without which it is impoſſible for vs euer to be religious; and that is an humble, a ſubmiſſe and baſe opinion of our ſelues. Without this I ſay, there is no poſſibility for vs euer to be religious. Hee which thinketh well of his owne ſoules eſtate, what will hee care for Chriſt, in what awe will he ſtand of Gods maieſty, what reckoning will he make of Gods mercy, or at what price will he value his word, what reuerence will he giue vnto his Sacraments? Euery mans either zeale or coldnes, either forwardneſſe or ſlacknes in religion, is proportionable to that conceit and feeling which he hath of himſelfe. Hee that hath no apprehenſion of the wretchedneſſe of his owne ſoule, is alwaies drouſie and careleſſe in the duties of godlines. He which truly feeth what an vnworthy creature he is by his owne birth, the exerciſes of piety are precious to him, the name of Chriſt is ſweet, the word of ſaluation is muſicke in his eares, the Sacraments are ſuch ſacred myſteries in his opinion, that he ſeemeth to himſelfe not to know how to reſpect them as he ought. Now as this humble opinion of our ſelues, is (as it were) the firſt forme in Chriſts ſchoole, ſo, nothing (by the bleſſing of God) will ſooner teach vs this leſſon, then this doctrine. For what will humble a man in his owne eyes, if this will not? namely, that whatſoeuer he is to the world, rich, beautifull, houourable; yea, although hee weare an imperiall crowne, and could like Nebuchadnezzar, write letters of command to all people, nations and languages [i], yet in himſelfe if he looke backe vnto the Rocke out of which he was hewen, he is but fleſh; and what is that? a confuſed heape of all corruption, one that of himſelfe cannot for his life doe any thing but ſinne, neither is able ſo much as by a thought to aduance his owne good. If he haue nothing in him but nature, hee can expect nothing but iudgement and violent fier to deuoure [k]. His nature and religion are two things directly contrary. It is nature to be dead in ſinne [l], when Religion requireth to be dead to ſinne [m]. It is nature to be reprobate to euery good worke [n], when Religion calleth to be ready to euery good worke [o]. It is nature to be a louer of ones ſelfe [p], when Religion vrgeth to deny ones ſelfe [q]. It is nature for a man to ſeeke his owne [r], when Religion binds to bee a ſeruant vnto others by loue [s] It is nature to deſpiſe the Word [t], when it is a fruit of Religion to ſtand in awe of the Word [u]. It is nature to account Preaching Fooliſhneſſe [x], when Religion teacheth to eſteeme it as the wiſdome of God, and the power of God [y]. Thus if there bee no more but nature in a man, he can neuer be religious, he can neuer be ſaued; Nature carrieth a man the way of Cain, out from the preſence of God [z]; no way but way of ſinners [a]: the iſſues whereof are the waies of death [b]. Thus is nature, this is the fleſh: of this mettall is man made, worthily called abominable and filthy [c]. Our not knowing this as we ſhould know it, is the true cauſe of our vniuerſal careleſnes, of our little eſteeming the word of life, of our ſlender trembling at Gods iudgments, of our running on in ſuch and hardned courſe without remorſe. It is euen as Chriſt ſaid with weeping eyes vnto Ieruſalem: Oh if thou hadſt knowne [d], &c. If we knew what a ſink of corruption is within vs, and what loathſom creatures we are in our ſelues in the ſight of God, it would make vs let fall our creſt: there is not the ſecureſt perſon, the ſtouteſt gallant, or the moſt proud and ſcorning hearer, but it would make him ſtoope and be aſhamed with Ephraim [e], and crie out with the perplexed Iewes, What ſhall I doe [f]. It is ſaid of the Egyptian Temples, that they were ſtately to be looked on: but being entred into, and the moſt venerable places thereof viewed, there was nothing to be ſeen, but the image of a Cat, or a Crocodile, or ſome ſuch baſe creature vnder the ſhape whereof they worſhipped their ſuppoſed gods. So ſome report, that at this day in the places about Sodome, there groweth a kinde of fruit to the eye very beautifull, but beeing toucheth, it falled all to duſt, and ſends out a very noyſome ſauour. Such are we by nature. We make ſome ſhew to the eye, and wee pride our ſelues in outward things, one in his wealth, another in his blood, a third in the good proportion of his limmes, this foole in her beauty, and the other in the gayneſſe of her attire: but (alas) how if we ſhould be looked into? If it were poſſible for the eye of fleſh to ſee what is in the boſome, oh, what a ſight would offer it ſelfe vnto our view? enough to make a man afraid of himſelf, yea euen to run away from himſelfe, if it were poſſible. Let vs labor in our thoughts about this point, that wee may once come to know our ſelues to be but Fleſh, which one word, is the very abſtract of all ſpirituall filthineſſe. Let vs dwell vpon it in our meditations, and labour to improue and preſſe it, to the abaſing of our ſelues. If we haue thought vpon it once, and that it hath caſt vs downe in our owne apprehenſions, yet let vs to it againe: ſay with Dauid, I will be yet more vile g. No man ſhall euer hurt himſelfe by this courſe: for euery valley ſhall bee filled h; and the more this ſhall abaſe vs, the more ſhall the Lord reach out the hand of his mercy to aduance vs. Caſt downe your ſelues before the Lord, and hee ſhall lift you vp i. We can eaſily looke backe to our progenitors, and from ſomewhat in them, take occaſion to be puffed vp. Thus ancient is our Houſe, and thus many deſcents it hath continued in one place; our Creſt is this, and our coate is that, and theſe matches, and ſuch and ſuch like offices we can talke of: Why doe we not remember amidſt all, that notwithſtanding all, yet here is nothing but Fleſh borne of Fleſh, and that without new-birth in Chriſt, it will be better for vs if we had neuer been borne? It is not euery ſlight and ſuperficiall acknowledgement that wee are all ſinners, &c. that will bring vs to this: It is ore part of our corruption, that it begets an inward hardneſſe, ſo that it is not eaſie to be humbled with the feeling hereof. It is a matter to be weighed and conſidered well: the glaſſe of Gods Law muſt be often looked into, and the Lord muſt againe and again with earneſtneſſe be beſought, that he would mollifie our hearts, and in ſtead of fleſhly hearts, giue vs ſpirituall hearts k, ſuch as may be full of ſenſe, that wee may feele indeed what we are, and whereto we will, if God ſhould leaue vs to our ſelues: Let vs neuer reſt vntill we find ſomewhat in our ſelues more then nature. Fleſh and blood cannot inherit the kingdome of God l. This is the maine vſe I thought to verge from this doctrine. Here might be an vſe alſo to parents. Wee our ſelues of Fleſh are borne Fleſh; that ſhould humble vs: ſo our children are through vs ſuch as we our ſelues are: and be we neuer ſo religious, or well diſpoſed, yet as the ſeed, though neuer ſo well cleanſed before ſowing, brings vp ſtalkes and chaffe together with it; ſo our poſterity commeth out of our bodies with this tincture of corruption. As we haue infected ours therewith, ſo ſhould we make them a kind of recompence, that as they may ſay they are ſinners by our corruption, ſo they may ſay alſo they are brought into the ſtate of grace by our care for their education. This might be followed further, but it ſhall ſuffice thus to haue touched it. And thus farre of the true eſtate of a naturall man. Now followeth the proper condition of a regenerate man. A regenerate man is as much to ſay as a man borne againe: of ſuch an one there are here two things mentioned: First, the author of his new-birth (The Spirit). Secondly, the marke or teſtimony of his new-birth (He is Spirit). Of both ſeuerally. Concerning the former, this is the doctrine: That the Spirit of God is the Author and worker of that New-birth, without which no man can be ſaued. The regenerate man is one borne of the Spirit: the words are plaine; and the matter is eaſily made good by the Scripture. That ſaying is excellent, touching the regenerate, which are borne not of bloud, nor of the will of the Fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God m. The Euangeliſt here ſpeaking of thoſe, which by faith are made the ſonnes of God, aimeth at this mainely, to proue that they be borne of God; which point hee amplifieth by a deniall of the contrary: not of blood, meaning, that they are not bred of any ſuch matter as other ſonnes are ordinarily made of; neither yet haue they man any way for the author of their being, they are not borne according to, or by any deſire of man, which might either procure, or affect, or wiſh that kind of ſon-ſhip. It is no wiſdome, or power of man, by which they do ariſe to that dignity, but meerely and onely by the mighty worke of God himſelfe. So much haue we gotten by this one place, that the new-birth ſpringeth not out of any thing in man, but is the worke of God wholly. Of his owne will he begat vs, euen he from whom euery perfect giuing doth deſcend [n]. To the ſame effect, Peter, Bleſſed bee God, &c. which hath begotten vs againe [o], &c. Thus farre then we are come, that this new-birth is not in any reſpect procured or cauſed, or effectuated by man; but is altogether from the Lord. Now as it is generally proued to be the worke of God, ſo more particularly it is aſcribed to the holy Ghoſt: not to exclude the other perſons in the God-head, the Father and the Sonne, (it being a true rule, that in thoſe workes which are without themſelues, all the three perſons worke in common,) but becauſe it is the ſpeciall office of the holy Ghoſt, to be the immediate and next applyer of the new-birth vnto the conſcience. God the Father begets a man anew, as being the foundation and fountaine of all diuine actions, and good things whatſoeuer; God the Sonne reneweth, as being the Mediator and meriter of this changed eſtate: but yet in the fore-named reſpect, this is more particularly aſcribed to the Spirit of God; according as the worke of election is more eſpecially attributed to the Father, of redemption, to the Son. This is not much vnlike to that limitation of the ſinne, called, The ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt; which is not to be ſo conceiued, as if it were not a ſinne againſt God the Father too, and againſt God the Sonne, (for how is it poſſible that a man ſhould ſo ſin againſt the one, as that therein he ſhould not treſpaſſe againſt the other alſo?) but it is ſo reſtrained to the holy Goſt, becauſe it is a ſin committed againſt the particular office and worke of the holy Ghoſt, and ſo is this new-birth, though it be an act of the whole Trinity in common; yet is it termed the worke of the ſpirit, becauſe he is the more immediate author therein. Hence is it that the waſhing and ſanctifying, which are teſtimonies of the new-birth, are ſaid to be by the Spirit [p]: and our changing into the Image of God, which is the very forme and life of the new-birth, is reputed to be by the Spirit of the Lord [q]: thoſe graces which accompany the renewed eſtate, are called the fruits of the Spirit [r], and that renewing which muſt be in all that ſhall be ſaued, is called the renewing of the holy Ghoſt [s]. I hope wee are ſufficiently ſatisfied touching this point, that the new-birth is no groſſe or carnall matter, and ſo no work of man any way, but the ſole and peculiar worke of God euery way. It is he which createth new hearts [u], and putteth a new ſpirit into the bowels [x]: and then againe, this is alſo I truſt plain, that this worke, albeit common to all the perſons of the bleſſed Trinity, yet is more particularly aſcribed to the holy Goſt, whoſe proper office it is to worke vpon the hearts of Gods elect, and to apply offered grace in ſuch ſort, as that it may be made effectuall. Now it ſhall not be amiſſe to ſhew alſo by what meanes the Spirit worketh in this making a man to be borne again. The manner is ſecret, but the meanes is expreſſe. God doth ſanctifie ſome courſe for the effecting of what good ſoeuer hee intends: and if the new-birth be the worke of Gods Spirit, no doubt God hath ordained a meanes by which it is accompliſhed. And this meanes is two-fold. The firſt is an outward meanes, namely, the miniſtery of the Word and Sacraments. Hence is it that Paul told the Corinthians hee had begotten them through the Goſpell [y]; hee tearmeth Timothy [z], and Titus [a], his ſonnes in the Faith: Hee told the Galathians how hee trauailed in the duties of his miniſtery for their Regeneration [b]. Hence is it againe that the Word diſpenſed in the ordinary miniſtery, is tearmed the Immortall ſeed of the New-birth [c]; ſo againe for this very cauſe the Sacrament of Baptiſme is called, the lauer of regeneration [d], becauſe in it and by it (as a meanes) the holy Ghoſt freely worketh his grace in the veſſels of grace. The other meanes is inward, and that is Faith: This is a worke or fruit of the Spirit [e], and because it is an instrument of the new-birth, it is said to purifie the heart[f]. Thus is this also briefly cleered. New-birth is the worke of Gods Spirit, and Gods Spirit workes by meanes; outwardly by the Word and Sacraments, inwardly by faith. The Word offereth grace; the Sacrament is a pledge of grace: Faith entertaineth, and layeth hold vpon grace: the Word perswades the new-birth, the Sacrament shadoweth out the new-birth, and Faith brings the feeling and vnderstanding of it in ones selfe. The Word affects the eare, the Sacrament representeth to the eye, and Faith maketh that which is heard in the one, and beheld in the other, to become effectuall to the heart.

The Vse. The Vse is manifest to euery mans vnderstanding to bee thus: The new-birth, is the onely way to eternall life: Except a man be borne againe, hee cannot see the kingdome of God[g]. This new-birth is not in the power of man, either the Spirit of God must worke it, or it cannot be. Desire we then to be saued? Is eternall life, and the kingdome of God the scope of our desires, and the marke which we chiefly shoot at? There is no hope of euer comming to it, but by being borne againe: If we would be borne againe, it is not in our selues to doe it. Who can bring such a cleane thing as Regeneration, from out our filthinesse? It is the Spirit of God which is onely able to effect it. Whither then, or to whom shall our eyes be directed, and our desires carried, but to the Father of lights, from whom shall we expect this blessing, but from him? If we say we looke for it onely at his hands, and professe to disclaime all other hope, let it appeare by our reuerent respect to the meanes ordained & sanctified by him, for the working in vs such a good. Shall Noah be thought to looke for deliuerance by the mighty hand of God, from the common deluge, vnlesse being warned of God, he be moued with reuerence to the preparing of the Arke[h]? I remember a speech of Gods to Moses, when the people of Israel were in a great straite before Piphahiroth, the sea was before them, the enemy behind them, on the one side mountaines vnpassable, on the other side a garrison of the Egyptians impregnable. Moses he was earnest with God for helpe (therein simply not amisse) but yet, saith God to him; Why crieſt thou vnto me? speake vnto the children of Israel, that they goe forward[i]. There was a fault: Moses craued helpe, but was not forward in the course, whereby to make way for that helpe which God was pleased to affoord. So must it be said to many vaine pretenders of a kinde of dependance vpon God, for grace and goodnesse, and for new-birth, whereby to fit them for eternall life: It is not euill that you do, to expect these things from God: but if we doe indeed, & from our hearts cry to him, to renew vs in the inner man, and to make vs to become new-creatures; Why doe we not goe forward? Why doe we not reuerently and obediently imbrace the meanes deputed by God for our renuing? The Spirit of God begets none anew without Faith, neither doth he (ordinarily) beget faith, but by the ministery of the Word. If we despise the ministery of the Word, and thinke it to bee nothing but a meere ordinance of man, and so either partake not of it, or else listen to it without this setled opinion engrauen in our hearts, that thus and thus, and by it we must be begotten vnto God, or else we shall perish in our sinnes; I say plainely, there is no hope left vs to be saued: yea, I will adde this more, that he who is not able to giue this testimony to the preaching of the Word, out of his owne personall feeling, and experience, that it is the thing whereby naturall man is changed into the Image of God, and renued in the spirit of his minde, certainly he hath yet in him no more then nature, neither is he yet entred into that beaten path of life, which is laid out to vs in the Scripture. These things God hath ioyned together, and man may not seperate. If I heare a man speake of his hope of being saued, I must vrge him to giue euidence of his new-birth: If he tell me that he is confident touching himselfe, that hee is borne againe, I must pray him to giue me satisfaction touching his Faith: If he be againe resolute concerning his faith, (oh, hee, be it knowne to you you beleeue in Ieſus Chriſt, and hath as good a Faith towards God as any of them all:) Well; I muſt not be put downe with theſe formall brags, but I muſt be bold to vrge him againe to acquaint me, by the meanes of what Miniſtry he came to this faith which he makes boaſt of. Let him ſhew me, how his awaiting vpon Gods ordinance in his Church, hath brought him to beleeue: If hee make light of this, he will not ſeeme to account himſelfe beholding hereto for his faith, neither yet (put caſe he hath got ſome beginnings of faith otherwiſe) will ſubmit himſelfe to this courſe, for the perfiting and forming of that faith which he thinks he hath, certenly he muſt giue me leaue to thinke hee hath neither true faith, nor new-birth. I know the new-birth is effected by faith; I know faith is (ordinarily) begotten by the miniſtery of the Word. Be it that a man, liuing where he could neuer come to the partaking of this meanes, hath yet in the mercy of God ſomewhat wrought in him, which may in good conſtruction, be tearmed Faith; yet out of all queſtion, if it come once to that, that hee may enioy that meanes, his faith (if it be true) will cleaue to it, as to the proper and naturall inſtrument, both of the begetting, and of the nouriſhing of faith. This then is the vſe of the Doctrine: Saluation is in the deſire of euery man, there is no man but he could be content to goe to heauen. But not euery one that ſaith, Lord, Lord[k], ſo not euery wiſher to bee ſaued, ſhall by and by eſcape the wrath which is to come. Except a man be borne againe, there is no poſſibility of not falling into hell: What is this to be borne againe? Is it a ſecond iſſuing from the mothers wombe? No: It is a matter that concernes the ſoule and ſpirit: Why? But is not man able to effect it? Not at all: The Spirit of God is the Author of the buſineſſe. If the Spirit of God doe worke it, no doubt it is by meanes: and whereby ſhall we bee informed touching this meanes, but by the Scripture? And what meanes can any man iuſtifie by the Scripture, but that which hath been named; namely, Faith wrought by the word of faith which is preached[l], and which is attended vpon by the two Sacraments? what other ladder haue we to clime vp to heauen by, then this? At the immortall ſeed diſpenſed by a faithfull Miniſtery, we muſt begin: by it we muſt be aduanced higher vnto faith: by Faith we are intereſſed into that working of the Spirit, which produceth the new-birth: by the new-birth we come to be the Sons of God in Ieſus Chriſt. How can we now miſſe the inheritance, when we haue receiued the adoption of ſons? This is the good way, walke therein, and you ſhall find reſt for your ſoules. And thus of the Author and worker of the new-birth. Look not backe into the wombe of thy mother for a newbirth, but lift vp thine eyes and thoughts to him that dwelleth in the heauens. If you ſay, Who ſhall aſcend into heauen to fetch it thence? It needs not, looke you to the Word, that is neere thee: By thy precepts thou haſt quickened me (ſaith Dauid[m].) Paul hath an excellent ſpeech: You haue obeyed the forme of Doctrine, whereunto ye were deliuered[n]. Hee ſeemeth to compare the Doctrine of the Goſpell to a mould, into which a thing is caſt, that it may receiue a new ſhape: ſo that this is it by which wee muſt bee made new. If we ſhould haue an Angel from Heauen to lead vs, as Peter had to conduct him out of priſon, we could not haue a more plaine, a more direct, or a more certen courſe.

This then is the ſenſe of the doctrine: A man regenerate, is a man reformed: Indeed it muſt needs bee ſo: For who ſo is regenerate, is renewed by the holy Ghoſt, and how can it be, but a reformation muſt follow, where the Spirit of God workes? In one ſenſe the regenerate may be ſaid to be wholly ſanctified, becauſe euery part is purged, the vnderſtanding, will, affections, memory, conſcience, outward man; in euery part and faculty both of ſoule and body, a renuing and a ſanctification is begun, but it is not perfited all at once: That Fleſhlineſſe and carnality which commeth by nature, is not quite remooued at the firſt: There i Galat. 5.17. is Fleſh luſting againſt the Spirit, euen in the beſt i. Theſe two, Fleſh and Spirit, the corruption of nature, and the gift of regeneration, are mixed together in the whole regenerate man, like heat and cold in a veſſell of water luke warme. It cannot be ſaid the water is in one part hot, and in another cold; but the whole water is partly hot, and partly cold throughout: So the man regenerate is not in one part Fleſh, and in another Spirit; but the whole regenerate man is partly Fleſh, and partly Spirit throughout. Thus it is in the gracious pleaſure of Almighty God, for mans better humbling for the increaſing of his thankfulneſſe, becauſe by this meanes he ſhall feele in himſelfe how his regeneration is accompliſhed, and ſo by that experience, which in his owne particular hee hath of the combat betwixt corruption and grace, be the more prouoked to acknowledge Gods mercy, who is pleaſed to deliuer him from the one, and to call him to the partaking of the other. Thus then is the Doctrine: A regenerate man is a ſpirituall man, a man reneued and reformed, yet not perfitly: euery part and faculty is reformed, but not all of euery part: the time of full perfection is not yet come, k 1 Co. 13. 10. in which, that which is in part ſhall be done away k.

The Vſe. The ſpeciall vſe to be made of this Doctrine, is to enable vs to iudge of our ſelues, whether or no we be regenerate: a point without aſſurance wherein all our hopes of being ſaued are in vaine. The matter is plaine, a naturall man is meerely carnall, a regenerate man is changed from carnall into ſpirituall. So much is directly here affirmed. To this then our inquiry into our ſelues muſt ayme, whether it be ſpirituall men, or no? That we may determine aright in this important caſe, let me giue you ſome direction; we cannot haue a ſurer rule then that; They which are after the Fleſh, ſauour the things of the Fleſh; but they which
l Rom.8.5. are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit l. Euery thing naturally followeth it owne proper kind, and doth incline towards ſuch things as are agreeing to the nature thereof. A ſpirituall man is ſpiritually qualified, and hath ſpirituall conditions. Giue me leaue to declare vnto you the ſpirituall qualities of the man regenerate, in his vnderſtanding, in his affections, and in his outward behauior. In his vnderſtanding, whereas by nature he was not able to perceiue the things of a 1 Cor. 2.14. God, they were fooliſhneſſe vnto him a, now they ſauour better, and he beginneth to b 2 Cor. 4.6. ſee into them more comfortably then he did. This is it which is ſaid of the rec Epheſ. 5.8. generate, that God ſhineth into their hearts b, and they are made light in the Lord:
d Ier. 31. 33. God writes his Law in their inward parts d, not that euery regenerate man is by and by vpon ſauing grace receiued, exact in knowledge, and quicke of conceit; but this, the doctrin of Religion beginneth preſently to reliſh better with him, he beginneth to ſee and conceiue ſome more worth in it then he ſometime did, and though he haue much ſhallowneſſe, yet he hath a minde to know [e], and the end of his knowledge is (as Danids,) not ſpeculation, but practiſe: Teach me thy way, and I will walke in thy truth [f]. In his affections hee is inclined to ſpirituall things. Paul ſpeaketh of ſpirituall bleſſings in heauenly things [g], the ſpirituall man loueth theſe aboue all. Many ſay, Who will ſhew vs any good? But Lord lift thou vp the light of thy countenance vpon vs [h]. The Scripture nameth ſome particular ſpirituall matters, as, the Law is ſpirituall [i], the Doctrine which is taught by the preaching of the Goſpell, is a ſpirituall commodity [k], the Sacrament, ſpirituall food [l]; praiſes and prayers vnto God, ſpirituall ſacrifices [m]. Now the heart of a man regenerate is to theſe; He loueth the Law [n], he loueth the doctrine preached, and deſireth it as a new-borne babe doth the mothers milke [o]; hee loueth the Sacrament, as the Eunuch no ſooner brought to know Chriſt, but hee deſired Baptiſme [p]: hee loueth to be praiſing God; My lips will reioyce when I ſing vnto thee, and my ſoule which thou haſt deliuered [q]. In his outward behauiour he will be changed, and become ſpirituall alſo: He mortifieth the deeds of the body by the Spirit [r], and walkes in newneſſe of life [ſ]. The fleſh being crucified, there cannot but follow ſuch behauiour as becommeth holineſſe; the body of ſinne being deſtroyed, there muſt needs be a Giuing the members as weapons of righteouſneſſe vnto God [t]. Let euery man inlarge theſe points in his owne thoughts: Let euery one thus conferre and commune with himſelfe; Would I know whether I ſhall bee ſaued? Why then, what am I? A naturall man or a regenerate man? If I am a regenerate man, the Spirit of God hath wrought in me, and I am ſpirituall: If I thinke I am ſpirituall, where are my ſpirituall conditions? How are my affections towards heauenly things towards grace, towards godlineſſe, to the Word, and exerciſes therof, to the Sacraments, to the duties of Gods worſhip? How am I refined and reformed in the outward man? If we be loth and careleſſe to come to this queſtioning with our ſelues, it is a token we be carnall. If we can be perſwaded thus to commune with our own ſoules, it is a good ſigne that Gods Spirit hath begun to worke within vs. If I could preuaile ſo much with you, as that you would carry hence with you this care to iudge of your regenerate eſtate, by your ſpirituall qualities, it were a good dayes worke. And we haue ſpent our time ill, and loſt all our paines in hearing; yea, and which is worſe, made matter againſt our ſelues, if we ſhall goe away ſecure in this behalfe. It will be a notable teſtimony that we are ſpiritually minded, if we ſhall be carefull to ſearch, and to enquire into our ſelues about ſpirituall things.

THE chiefe Butler did not remember Ioſeph, but forgate him, ſaith the Scripture[a]. It is a ſpeech which remaineth vpon record, as a perpetuall teſtimony of the hatefulneſſe of ingratitude in the ſight of God. That it may appeare how carefull I am, not to bring vpon my ſelfe any iuſt imputation of this foule euill, in reſpect of you, I haue thought good, to commend ſome of my poore labours vnto you, by a more particular entitling them to your name: This is the beſt I haue, wherewith to requite my well deſeruing friends; amongſt whom if I ſhould not number you, whoſe acquaintance and well-wiſhing to me was through Gods prouidence, one of the firſt occaſions of my ſettlement in theſe parts, and whoſe loue to me and mine, I taſted in ſuch kind meaſure, when I firſt came to pitch where I yet remaine, I might well be taxed as vnthankfull. It hath pleaſed the all-diſpoſing God, to remoue you further off, ſo that I cannot as I would performe towards you, theſe offices of reſpect, which it were meet I ſhould. I pray you therefore that this may remaine as a pledge with you, both of my not forgetting former fauours, and of my purpoſe to continue ſtill, IAMES 4.9.

Let your Laughter be turned into mourning, and your Ioy into heauinesse.

IT was a good piece of pollicie which the King of Aram commanded his two and thirty Captaines, when they were to goe out to battell against Israel: Fight (said he) neither with small nor great, saue onely against the King of [a] Israel. Hee knew, that the King being once slaine, the whole army would the sooner bee discomfited. The like pollicy I thought very fitting for me to obserue at this time. Many and great are the sinnes of this generation, and (as it was said of Sodom) The crie of them is come vp before the [b] Lord: But there is one grand-sin, vpon which all the rest haue their dependance, which, if we whose office it is to fight the good fight of [c] Faith, might be so happy as to subdue, doubtlesse we should See Sathan fall downe from heauen like lightning [d], and many come to Amendment of life out of his snare, which are, (now) taken of him at his will [e]. And this is the sinne of Security. Against this I haue thought good to bend my whole force at this time, and for that end I haue out of this Brooke of Saint Iames his Epistle, chosen this clause, as a smooth-stone, by which I may (if the Lord shall please so to blesse my leuelling, smite this Goliah in the forehead, and make it to fall groueling to the earth [f], which euery where, and in euery place doth (like that monster of the Philistims) so intollerably blaspheme the liuing God. This is my generall drift, and this is also (as I may so call it) the Shaft, which I haue chosen out of the Lords quiuer for this purpose.

The words may be diuided into two parts: The first is, A Restraint from something which is euill; Laughter and Ioy. The second is, A perswasion to a good contrary thereunto, Mourning and Heauinesse. Of both these in course.

In handling the first part, it must first bee enquired what Laughter it is, and what Ioy, against which Saint Iames setteth himselfe in this place. Laughter, is one of those endowments with which God furnished the Nature of man at his first creation, and therefore cannot be simply euill. Againe, it is said, that Abraham [g] Laughed, when God promised him a Son; which generally is interpreted to be that Reioycing of his in the Day of Christ, which our Sauiour himselfe reporteth of him [h]: for which cause Izhak had his name giuen him by Gods appointment [i], as a memoriall thereof, it being as much to say in English as Laughter. When the Lord brought againe the captiuity of Zion, (said the thankefull people after the returne from Babylon) then was our mouth filled with Laughter [k]. The same may be also said of Ioy. For among the Fruits of the Spirit, Ioy is numbred [l], and it is a blessing promised, that the Voyce of Ioy shall be in the Tabernacles of the Righteous [m]. Therefore to auoid all ambiguity of tearmes, and to know precisely and distinctly, what it is which Saint Iames here dissuades, we must thus distinguish. There is two-fold Ioy, or Laughter mentioned in Scripture: The one a Holy ioy; The other a Hellish ioy. The Holy ioy hath for the author of it, the Spirit of God; therefore it is called Ioy in the holy Ghost [n]: the matter of it is, the light of Gods countenance [o], the assurance of his grace in Christ, the feeling ones selfe to be clothed with the garment of saluation [p]: the measure of it is such that it is vnspeakeable [q]; the perpetuity such, that no man can take it from those that haue it [r]: None can conceiue it but he which feeleth it, the stranger shall not meddle meddle with it, ſaith Salomon [f]. The fruits of it, are, Ioy in the Word [t]; Ioy in the houſe of God [u]: Ioy in the liberty and free Preaching of the Goſpell [x], Delight in the company of Gods Saints [y], Ioy in Afflictions [z], Ioy in the conuerſion of others [a]; Baſe account of the world [b]. This is a holy Ioy, neither is it the purpoſe of the Apoſtle to reſtaine this Ioy, but to enforce it rather: for indeed the mourning which he perſwades, makes way for this Ioy. Now the other Ioy is a Helliſh Ioy, the other Laughter is diuelliſh. Salomon calleth them all fooles whoſe hearts are inueigled with it [c]. Peter termeth them Bruit Beaſts led with ſenſualitie [d]. This Ioy is either in wicked things, or elſe in things (in their owne nature tolerable) after a wicked manner. Firſt, it is in wicked things. It is a paſtime to fooles to doe wickedly [e]. It is a Ioy to drunkards to be at it early, and to ſit till they be inflamed [f]. The Twilight is welcome to the Adulterer [g]. The griping Nimrods of the World, reioyce in their taking men vpon aduantage, they dance vpon the threſholds of thoſe which are fallen into their hands proudly [h], and they Spoile the poore when they haue drawne him to their net [i]. Ahab is ſoone out of his ſullen humour, when newes is come that Naboth is dead [k]. The enuious and malicious perſon is mooued to Ioy at the deſtruction of him whom hee hates [l]. The prophane ones make themſelues merry with the diſgrace of thoſe which runne not with them to the ſame exceſſe. Iſhmael giereth at Iſaak [m], and the Philiſtims muſt haue Sampſon in to make them paſtime [n]. Holy Iob was as a tabret to the godleſſe ones [o], and the Drunkards made ſongs vpon Dauid [p]. Thus this Ioy is in euill things. Or elſe (ſecondly) it is in allowable things after an vngodly manner, Honor, Wealth, proſperity, Beauty, a Table richly deckt, an ouer-flowing cup, a faire houſe, &c. theſe things in themſelues are not euill, yet there is a Ioy in theſe of which I may ſay as Paul did of the Corinthians, Reioycing, that it is not good [q]; as namely, when men truſt in them, and boaſt of them [r], and ſet their hearts thereon [s]. Thus that vain-glorious Haman, hauing crept into ſome grace at Court, when he comes home, muſt needs ſend and call for his friends to tell of the glory of his Riches, and of all the things wherein the King had promoted him [t]. Thus Nebuchadnezzar walked in his Royal pallace, and looking about him, ſaid, Is not this great Babel which I haue built? [u] Thus the proud Women in the Prophets time, walked with ſtretched out necks [x], priding themſelues in their beauty. Thus the Epicures and belly-gods in Amos his dayes, ate the Lambs of the flocke, and calues out of the ſtall, and dranke wine in bolles [y]. Thus the Merchants of Tyre, which was the Mart of the people for many Iles [z], did lift vp their hearts becauſe of their Riches [a]: Here is a Ioy in things not Euill, but yet after a manner which is not good. Now the fruits and effects of this Ioy are thus regiſtred in Scripture: 1. Deepe ſecurity; They knew nothing (ſaith Chriſt, of the reioycing people in the daies of Noe) till the flood came [b]: 2. Secret ſoothing and flattering of the Heart [c]: 3. Confident expectation of nothing but quietneſſe (I ſhall neuer be mooued [d],) 4. Careleſneſſe to enquire after matters of Religion, (The wicked is ſo proud that he ſeeketh not [e]:) 5. Putting farre off the euill day [f], The viſion is for many dayes to come [g]. 6. Intollerable Pride ioyned with contempt of others, (Pride is as a chaine vnto them [h].) 7. No reſpect to the neceſſities of Gods children, (No man is ſorry for the affliction of Ioſeph [i].) 8. A mocking of Gods Meſſengers [k]: 9. A deſperate reſolution to take pleaſure while it is to be had, and not to feare the day of vengeance, (Let vs eate and drink, to morrow we ſhall die [l].) Thus haue I laboured to let you ſee out of the Scripture, what Laughter and what Ioy it is which Iames intendeth here. In a word thus: It is a fleſhly Ioy, delighting in things ſimply Euill, or elſe in the good bleſſings of God, after a groſſe and ſenſuall ſort, by which the heart it ſo fatted vp, and ſo lulled aſleepe, that it makes men runne on in a kind of ſecure courſe, without any awe of Gods Maieſty, or conſtant care to auoide the wrath which is to come: This is the ſhort of it: and, the Neceſſity of ſeeking to ſuppreſſe this Ioy, is the Doctrine commended vnto vs in this place.

Reaſons

Reasons to shew the equity of this Doctrine, and by which to enforce it vpon euery of our soules, may be these: The substance of the Doctrine of the 1. part, & the Reasons to confirme it.

1. It is directly contrary to that which the Spirit of God perswades all Christians vnto. It is their duty to hate euill[m], therefore not to delight in it; to weepe for it (as we shall see anon,) therefore not to laugh at the committing it. They are commanded to set their affections vpon the things aboue[n], and therefore not to ensnare their hearts with these baser ioyes: they are taught to seeke after Durable riches[o], therefore not to dote vpon fading wealth: after a house not made with hands, but eternall in the heauens[p], and therefore not to be bewitched with the conueniency of earthly dwellings: after Sitting at table in the kingdome of God[q], and therefore not to reioyce in earthly belly-cheare: after the Honour which shall bee to the Saints[r], and therefore not to be puffed vp with worldly pompe: to long for the Congregation of the first borne, and the Spirits of iust and perfit men[s], and therefore not to place contentment in carnall fellowship. This is then one reason: This ioy is directly contrary to the maine streame of Christianity. It is a reason of Pauls in some things. This becommeth Saints[t]: This becommeth the Gospell[u], therefore it must be. The reason is the same in this: This becommeth not Saints: This becommeth not the Gospell, therefore it must not be. 1. Reason. m Psal. 97.10. n Col. 3.2. o Prou. 8 18. p 2 Cor. 5.1. 2. This kinde of reioycing is neuer without the mixture of some secret bitternesse: Euen in Laughter the heart is sorrowfull[x]. And there is a double reason for it. 1. Carnall men seldome haue their desire in euery particular, and the want of that which is desired, breeds a vexation greater by degrees then the contentment in the things enioyed. Take Haman for an example: He went from court with a glad heart, and at home vaunted of his honour; yet (saith he) All this doth not auaile me, as long as I see Mordecai the Iew sitting in the Kings gate[y]. He was so haunted with a spirit of Emulation against Mordecai, that it did distaste all that sweetnesse which he conceiued in his honour. And still, it is (ordinarily) so in the prouidence of God, that worldly men haue in their prosperities something or other comes athwart them, which galleth them as much, as the accomplishment of their desires in other things may seeme to content them. 2. Inward terrours (as furies) do alwaies follow those, who doe willingly cherish in their bosomes, and practise in their liues any knowne corruption. A sound of feare is in their eares[z], and it is their iudgement to haue trembling hearts[a]. Well may they set a face vpon the matter, and feast and drinke away their cares, yet they can haue no true inward quiet: For there is no peace to the wicked, saith God[b]. So then this it the second reason: It is not solide, but a meerly superficiall Ioy, and therefore it is an idle thing to entertaine it. 2. Reason. x Prou. 14.13. y Est. 5.13. z Iob. 15.21. a Deut. 28.65 b Isa. 57.21.

3. It is a reioycing of no continuance. The reioycing of the wicked is short, and the ioy of the Hypocrites is but a moment[c]. Salomon likeneth it to a fier of Thornes vnder a pot[d], which crackleth and blazeth a while, but suddenly dieth. This kind of ioy is truely called short in two respects. 1. Because the things themselues reioyced in, are so subiect to hazard. Honour a blast: Beauty a perishing flower: Wealth hath wings like an Eagle[e], and is suddenly gone: and as the heathen said, Of the wealth of Merchants, that it hangeth vpon Ropes; so it may be said of all the contentments of the world, they doe not hang vpon a Three-fold cord, which (as the saying is) cannot be easily broken[f], but vpon a single twine, which is snapt in sunder with a twitch. And they which look highest and beare the greatest port, and must study the perpetuating of their fortunes, are but in the state of counters, which now stand for pounds, and forthwith goe for a farthing. 2. Because like it selfe, in which all these things are enioyed, is but short; Our daies are more swift then a post, they passe with the most swift Ships, and as the Eagle which flieth to the prey[g]: Now carnall men in their reioycing haue but an estate for terme of life at the vtmost: For, When a wicked man dieth, his hope perisheth[h], and what hope hath An Hypocrite if God take away his soule[i]? So then if 3. Reason. c Iob 20. 5. d Eccl 7.3. e Prou. 23.5. Non amo illam fortunam rudentibus aptam Tusc. Qu. f Eccl. 4. 12. g Iob 9.25, 26 h Prou. 11.7. i Iob. 27.8.

if this Laughter bee but momentanie, if this Ioy bee but for a season[k]; surely the counsell of Iames aduising vs to reiect it, is not vaine: For what wise man will set his heart vpon that, which (like a shadow in the water) He may see and affect and catch after, but can neuer lay hold on?

4. The conclusion of this Ioy is fearefull. The end of it is heauinesse[i], and Woe be to you which now laugh, for you shall waile and weepe[m]; If you aske what Heauinesse: Heare what Abraham said to the rich man in hell: Thou in thy life time receiuedst thy pleasures, now therefore thou art tormented[n]. Thus in the end, it bites like a Serpent[o], and leads downe to the chambers of death[p]: Here is Ioabs Kisse attended vpon with a secret stab[q], and whereas the Pleasures of sinne were but for a season[r], the woe which followeth will be perpetuall. The worme dieth not, the fier neuer goeth out[s]: The breath of the Lord, like a riuer of brimstone doth kindle it[t]. This is the last reason, but not of the least validity. The wise mans Eies are in his head, saith Salomon[u]. Hee looketh not onely vpon the present face of things, but considereth before, what the issue will bee. It is no good purchase, to procure an endlesse woe, for a little sliding shadow of contentment. Thus I haue laboured to fortifie Saint Iames his counsell with foure effectuall reasons, that so we may haue no colour of reason to reiect it. This carnall Ioy, if it be against the generall drift of Christianity, if it haue not that fulnesse of contentment which it promiseth, if it be of no continuance, if it will certenly set in such a cloud, out of which will arise an eternall tempest, neuer to be blowne ouer with any tract of time, how must not the counsell giuen be worthy to be accounted of, which aduiseth vs to turne our Laughter into another tune, and our secure Ioy, into some sadder quality? I haue expounded and prooued the Doctrine, now let me make vse.

The Vse.

This Doctrine well agreeth with the times. Nineueh was called a Reioycing City[x], this may truly bee termed a Reioycing age; and like the people of Laish[y], we dwell careless, quiet and sure in our owne opinion. Euery man sings a Requiem to his owne heart. God hath of his goodnesse blessed vs with peace, and peace (through our corruption) hath brought forth intolerable security. Religion is become nothing but a matter of Title, we haue a name (as was said of Sardis[z],) but all is little other then a very vizard of godlinesse. Are we not all generally without any feare of euill? Doth not euery man applaud himselfe in his course, and make himselfe beleeue that his fashion and carriage is as it ought to be? Doth not euery company carry the very face of carnall quietnesse, men vpholding and bearing vp one another (like the stones in an Arch) in their carelesnesse? Examine our thoughts, consider our speeches, see into our houses, looke abroad vpon the current of the Times, and see whether pleasure and Epicurisme, and that mad mirth (which Salomon speakes of[a]) haue not engrossed the greatest part. I would it had but a weeke (which yet is a very vnreasonable disproportion) for one serious minute about matters of godlinesse. This is made to be the very End of all: And as it was a Law in Ahashuerosh his Court (being giuen to pleasure and iollity,) That no man might enter it, being cloathed with sackcloth[b], which is a mourners weede, so, now adaies men cannot abide that which may minde them any way to intermit their carelesnesse: A discourse or conference of religion dasheth all, and seemeth alwaies as vnseasonable, as is the Snow in Summer[c]. A Sermon of Repentance is the very burden of the Lord: either we be like Felix[d], not at leisure to heare it, or we make iests with our mouthes[e], and old as Lot to his profane sonnes in law, so we seeme to many as though we did mocke[f]: say we what we will, you will say to your selues, We shall haue peace[g], the Euill shall not come[h]. Thus we stop the eare like the Adder[i], and although the Lord ring many alarmes to awake vs from the bed of security, yet we resolue (like the strumpet in Salomon) to take our fill[k], and determine (as those in Ieremies time) To doe whatsoeuer thing goeth out of our owne mouth[l]. is the ſickneſſe of the times, a diſeaſe which hath ſpread it ſelfe into euery place. I ſay as Chriſt did to the accuſers of the Adultreſſe; Let him that is cleere herein, caſt the firſt ſtone [m] at the application of this point. For albeit I know, ſome haue ſome better care then the multitude, yet I am ſure, that the fiue wiſer Virgins ſlumbered and ſlept while the Bridegroome tarried long, as well as the fiue Fooliſh [n]: and therfore we ſhall not need to ſhift off this doctrine from our ſelues to others, and to ſay; This is good for ſuch or ſuch: but we may ſay euery one to his owne ſoule; It is euen I to whom this belongeth. Wherefore ſeeing this is a matter which concernes all, I pray you let it be entertained by all: Let vs rouze vp our ſelues, let vs not crie with the ſluggard, yet a little ſleepe, a little ſlumber [o]; but let vs make haſte [p] with Dauid, and let vs bind our ſelues by a holy vow to caſt away this hardned, brutiſh, preſuming careleſneſſe, as it were a menſtruous cloth, and to ſay vnto it; Get thee hence [q]: Otherwiſe vnleſſe we doe euen ſtriue againſt this bewitching euill out of hand, wee ſhall euen cleane be hardened with the deceitfulneſſe of ſinne [r], we ſhall freeze vpon our dregs [s], and moue the Lord to giue vs ouer with that fearefull doome; He that is filthy, let him be filthy [t]. And ſurely if God might pleaſe ſo to bleſſe my ſpeech, as that you might be moued by it to thinke ſeriouſly with your owne ſoules, how true it is in this, which Abner ſaid to Ioab when the people fought one againſt another, namely, that it will be bitterneſſe in the latter end [u]; you would then ſay to me as Dauid did to Abigal, Bleſſed be thy counſell [x]. And ſo hoping that this firſt obſeruation ſhall not vtterly fall to the ground without fruit; I come to the ſecond, touching the contrary good which is perſwaded.

And this (indeed) is ſtill the remarkable method of the Scripture, firſt to perſwade a deſiſting from euill, and then to ſtirre vp to the practiſe of good. Ceaſe to doe euill, learne to doe well [y]. Abhorre that which is euill, cleaue to that which is good [z]. To beake off an euill courſe, and ſo ſtop, is but the one halfe of a Chriſtian duty: To leaue one bad faſhion, and then to begin another, is but an exchange of ſinne, and no repentance.

Now the good I commended here vnto vs, is ſet downe by two names; Mourning and Heauineſſe. In handling hereof, it ſhall be our firſt enquiry to know what Mourning, and what Heauineſſe it is, here meant. As I ſaid of Ioy, ſo I muſt of Mourning; it muſt neceſſarily be diſtinguiſhed, and that by the Apoſtles direction. There is a Worldly Mourning, and there is a Godly Mourning [a]. The Worldly Mourning, is a griefe and paſſion of the heart for worldly things, or elſe for ſpirituall things in a worldly reſpect. Both the branches of this worldly ſorrow are ordinary and common. Euery naturall man hath theſe affections to be grieued for loſſes of goods, of honour, of friends, &c: with paines and anguiſhes of body: Many are affected with theſe things extraordinarily. Now although theſe touches are not ſimply euill (for it is a wickedneſſe to be without naturall affection [b]) yet the aime of Saint Iames is not vnto them. There is another branch of this Worldly Sorrow, the matter whereof is ſpirituall, but the reſpects carnall: Ahab was humbled [c], Eſau wept [d], Iudas was deepely touched [e]. Here was Heauineſſe, yea, and the cauſes thereof were ſpirituall. Ahab for his oppreſſion, Iudas for his treachery, Eſau for the loſſe of the bleſſing: but the reſpects were not ſutable. It was for the danger of euill, and not for the euill of euill. Thus a man may be greeued, and yet neuer be ſaued. This kind of ſorrow may be as a needle to pricke and to pierce the heart, and to make way for that true grief, but it is not properly that which is meant in this place. For this ſorrow in it ſelfe, and in it owne nature, if there be no more in it then I haue ſaid, cauſeth death [f]. Now the other Mourning is a Godly Mourning, that is, a Mourning for ſinne, becauſe it is ſinne; a breach of Gods will, and an offence to his Maieſty. This is that very thing which Saint Iames perſwades, and it is the Mother of true repentance, euen of that repentance which (as Saint Paul ſpeaketh) is not to be repented of. And of this I will endeauour to speake as effectually as I can.

The matter of the mourning here perswaded.

The ground of it is (as I haue said) the dishonour of God by sinne. Now sinne that it may wound the more deeply, is to be considered of vs three wayes. 1. As it is in our selues. 2. As it is in others. 3. As it discouereth it selfe in the miseries which it brings vpon the Times. Of these three respects I will treat seuerally.

1. Our owne sinnes.

1. That our owne sinnes must be mourned for, I suppose we will not denie. Repentance is of absolute necessity to saluation, (for except ye repent, ye shall perish, g Luke 13.3. saith our Sauiour;) and there can be no repentance without griefe: For, (as we haue heard out of Paul) it is godly sorrow which causeth repentance to saluation. Besides, the Scripture hath registred euen a whole catalogue of mourners in this kind. Looke into it, you shall there see Dauid fainting [h], Hezekiah chattering like a Crane [i], Iob abhorring himselfe in dust and ashes [k], Manasseh humbling himselfe greatly [l], Ezra vpon his knees in heauinesse [m], Daniel sorrowfully confessing his sinne, and seeking the Lord by prayer with fasting [n], Ephraim (the whole body of a state) smiting vpon the thigh [o], Peter weeping bitterly [p], the Father of the possessed childe bewayling his vnbeliefe [q], Mary Magdalen washing Christs feete with teares [r], Paul crying out, Oh wretched man that I am! Who would not wish to be one in this company? If they mourned, and went to Heauen through the vale of teares, what are we that we should expect a calmer passage? And know wee this for a certenty, that the comforts of the Gospell which are treasured vp in Christ, appertaine onely to such: not to them which are at ease in Zion [t], but to them which mourne in Zion [u]. The spirit of heauinesse goeth before the garment of gladnesse; and there is no reaping in ioy, without sorrow in teares [x].

2. The sinne of others.

The next consideration of sinne is, as it is in others: For euen the sinne of others must be a cause of sorrow to a Christian. Samuel mourned for Saul [y], Dauids eyes gushed out with riuers of waters, because men kept not the Law [z]. Ezra rent his cloathes, and pluckt off the haire of his head and beard, when he heard of the peoples sinne, in mixing the holy seede with the people of the Land [a]: The Soule of Ieremy wept in secret for the pride of the times [b]: Lot vexed his righteous soule in seeing and hearing the vnlawfull deeds of the Sodomites [c]: Pauls spirit was stirred to see the City of Athens subiect to Idolatry [d]: Christ mourned for the hardnesse of mens hearts [e], and wept for the security of Ierusalem [f]: Who can perswade himselfe to carry the like Christian heart, who doth not bring forth the like sorrowing fruit? Two reasons there are why the sinnes of others should affect our soules. 1. Piety to God, 2. Pity to them. First, piety to God enforceth it. For what dutifull respect can he carry to God, who can heare and see God to be dishonoured without any touch? It grieues a friend to heare the disgrace of his friend. The godly are called the friends of God [g]: A poore friendship it is, if the heart be not affected with a wrong done to his Maiesty. Secondly, pity to others requireth it. For whose bowels that hath in him any dram of goodnesse, would not yearn within him, whose heart would not melt, to see whole swarmes and millions of people which will needs be damned? surely there can be no religion, where there wants this compassion. I haue read of Marcellus a Roman, that when as after a long siege, he entred by composition into that rich City of Syracusa, the teares trickling downe his cheekes, to see so famous a City, and such a multitude of Inhabitants brought into captiuity. See, what affections haue dwelt euen in the Heathen, begetting sorrow for the miseries euen of their enemies. A shame for a Christian to behold the daily ruine of a world of soules, numberlesse troupes to be led as captiues by the Prince of darkenesse, and not to bemoane it.

3. The calamities of the Times.

The third consideration of sinne, is, as it discouereth it selfe in the miseries, which by the iustice of God it brings vpon the Times: which thing almost must be taken to heart. Thus was Dauid mooued, when he saw multitudes swept away with the pestilence [h]. Ieremy wished his head full of water, and his eyes a foun-

raine of teares, that he might weepe day and night for the slaine of the people i; And let his Booke of Lamentations be a testimony of his griefe for common Miseries. So there was a generall sorrow, when God tooke away that peerelesse King Iosiah; Ieremiah lamented, singing men and singing women mourned k. Nehemiah sate and wept and mourned certaine dayes, when he heard of the great affliction and reproach of his Country-men, the remainder of the great captiuity l. Ester and her maides fasted, because of Hamans conspiracy m. It argueth a desperate case when men are not humbled by Afflictions: Thou hast smitten them, but they haue not sorrowed: thou hast consumed them, but they haue refused to receiue correction, said the Prophet of the forlorne Iewes n. Thence commeth that extraordinary note set vpon Ahaz, not found else-where: In time of his tribulation did he yet trespasse more against the Lord; this is King Ahaz o. This is the man who was not brought to any humiliation, no, not by affliction: And although a man haue no cause of deiection, in regard of any personall grieuance, yet the miseries of others are a sufficient motiue. And therefore it is noted as a sauage and brutish part, that when the City of Shushan was in perplexity, the King and Haman sate drinking in the Palace p, and woe is threatned against them which cherished themselues, but were not sorry for the affliction of Ioseph q. For that cause, Nehemiah, though hee himselfe were well enough, being the Kings Butler, and in speciall grace with him, yet he professed that hee could not but be sad, so long as hee heard of the hard estate of his Countrey-men r: and though Moses liued at ease in Pharaohs Court, yet still his mind was vpon the burdens of the Israelites, and had no rest in himselfe vntill he went to visit his brethren s: and Uriah would not affoord himselfe the ordinary comfort of his bed, so long as the Arke of God was in hazard t. Thus the fruits of sinne, whether they be personall, or such as lie vpon others, or such as (because of the common concernement of a state) wee are interessed in with others, must be taken notice of to further that Holy Heauinesse which is commended to vs in this place. Thus I haue opened the doctrine, touching that Mourning and Heauinesse for sinne, into which Saint Iames would haue vs to turne all our accustomed security. I come now to the vse and application hereof to our selues.

The Vse.

In the making of which vse and application, I will follow this order. 1. I will make it manifest that we haue these causes of mourning, which haue been handled hitherto. 2. I will lay open the generall defect of this duty, notwithstanding the vrgencie of these causes. 3. I will labour the perswading of that, to doe which, we haue so great cause, and yet in the doing whereof we haue been so exceeding negligent. These be (as it were) the lines; vnto each of which I must endeauour to giue his proper filling.

First, I must make it good that we haue this treble cause of heauines. 1. Our owne sinnes. 2. The sinnes of the times. 3. The euidences of Gods displeasure against sinne. Touching our owne sinnes, that in the multitude and grieuousnesse of them, we haue much matter of heauinesse, no man (I suppose) will denie. First for multitude, he that shall heare Dauids acknowledgement, that his sinnes are moe in number then the haires of his head u; and Iobs confession, that he cannot answer God one of a thousand x, how can he thinke his sinnes are few? And if there be any here (as this secure age brings forth many such) who supposeth the tale of his sinnes to be but small, let him doe but this: Let him in the end of some one day, examine his course vpon his bed y, and proceed with himselfe from point to point, from his waking in the morning to that houre, calling all (as neere as hee possibly can) his thoughts, speeches, actions, to a reckoning: and then, when he hath found by a suruey made, the idle, vnprofitable, godlesse thoughts, which haue been as thicke within him, as motes in the aire; the vaine, vitious, blasphemous, graceless speeches, which haue fallen from his mouth, the euils which he hath done, the good duties, to God, to himselfe, to others, which hee

hath left vndone, or, (at least) not so done as he should: when (I say) hee hath found out all these, and hath (as his duty is) added this withall, that besides, z Psal. 19.12. there are many secret faults[z], which he cannot see; then let him (like the workeman, who by the sight of Hercules his foote, gathered the proportion of his whole body) thinke, put case he hath liued thirty, forty, or more yeers, what infinite millions of sinnes hee must needs be guilty of, sith the particulars of one day doe amount to so great a summe. This would euen make the stoutest to hang downe his head like a bul-rush, and to be (as it were) confounded in himselfe, if this were duly thought vpon. It is said of Cæsar, that when he heard that Macrob. Saturnal. lib. 2. cap. 4. a certaine Knight of Rome, being dead, and whose goods were set to sale, was in debt some thousands of pounds, he wished that the Knights bolster might be bought for his vse, thinking, that sure it had some extraordinary vertue in it, vpon which a man could sleepe who was so much in debt: And surely, if we had a So are sins called, Mat. 6.12. but a glimpse of the particular Debts[a], in which we stand bound to God, wee would no lesse wonder at our selues that wee can sleepe so securely as we doe, being lyable to so great a reckoning, especially hauing so slender an assurance of discharge. And (indeed) the not looking into the hinder end of the wallet, is the cause of all our presuming. We are like swaggerers at a Tauerne, who (in their humour) call in for as much as the house can affoord, but when the shot commeth, then they storme, and are ready to sweare, it cannot be so much: so we run on still vpon the lash, and neuer looke on the score; little doe we thinke it to be so great as indeed it is. He amongst vs, who is accustomed to swearing, though it be but now and then, yet if it were possible for him, to see but how many times hee had sworne in the compasse of one yeere, (besides his other sinnes,) I verily thinke, that if he were not vtterly giuen ouer, it would make b Hab. 2.16. his belly to tremble[b], to consider it. Howsoeuer this let vs be sure of, they are all c Psal. 56.8. set downe in God's Register[c], and Iob saith, that God sealeth vp iniquity as in a bag[d], d Iob. 14.17. as rich men doe their money, laying it vp vntill the Audit. Now for the greeuousnesse of our sinnes, (which is another branch) I will note but one circumstance of many to set it out; and that is, the riches of the meanes which we haue long inioyed, for better fruit. Suppose we, that we euen now did heare the e Isa. 1.28. Lord calling to vs, as he did of old to the Iewes; Come, let vs reason together[e], thinke earnestly what excuse we can make. Hath not the Lord been patient
f Isa. 30.28. towards vs? hath he not waited that he might haue mercy vpon vs[f]? hath he not g Ezek. 18.30 sent vnto vs early and late? Cast away your transgressions, why will ye die[g]? Hath not the light of holy direction long stood vpon a Candlesticke in the middest
h Isa. 30.21. of vs? haue we not still heard that voyce, This is the way, walke in it[h]? Now this is a sure thing: by how much the more we know, or may know, by so much the greater is our sinne: If I had not come and spoken vnto them, they had had no
i Iohn 15.22. sinne, but now haue they no cloke for their sinne[i]. Thus the enlargement of Gods mercy in blessing vs with the meanes of holinesse, is the greatest improuement of our sinne: And so (I hope) I haue cleered this, that we haue the first cause of Heauinesse, our owne sinnes: touching which, it is hard to say, which is the greater, the multitude of them, or their quality.

The next cause of sorrow, which must be manifested to be amongst vs, is the sinne of the times. It was truly said, that the Diuell hath great wrath, knowing k Reu. 12.12. that he hath but a short time[k]. As his time is abridged, so is his malice enlarged; and thence it is, that this old age of the world, is so fruitfull in most monstrous impieties. All the euils of the precedent ages, are flowne together into this, as into a common sewer. The filthinesse of the people hath filled the land from corner to l Ezra 9.11. corner[l]. Men were wont heretofore, amid their other euils, yet to haue so much honesty, as to seeke to shroud their sinnes vnder a mantle of secrecy. But now
m Isa. 3.9. they declare them as Sodom[m], Atheisme, Blasphemy, Drunkennesse, Whoredome, Oppression, Contempt of Religion, men neuer blush to be commonly noted noted for such kinds of euils. Indeed nothing (among the multitude) is in more disgrace then this, to be a conscionable and carefull Christian. Me thinkes, considering the full measure of Iniquity, I should heare the Lord cry to his Angell, Thrust in thy sickle, and reape; for the time is come to reape, the Harvest of the Earth is ripe [n]. Woe be to vs, if we crie not with Dauid; It is time for thee Lord to worke for they haue destroyed thy Law [o]. So much briefly for that, which if my tongue were as a pen of a swift writer [p], I were not able to set down at full, and which if we might reforme with the sacrifice of our best blood, we might thinke it well bestowed. Thus wee see the second cause of heauinesse is not wanting. Wee can scarcely put our heads out at doores, or heare one speake, but we shall haue cause to remember it.

n Reu. 14.1,5
p Psal. 45.1.

The third thing deseruing sorrow, to be handled, are the Euidences (in the times) of Gods displeasure against sinne. The Prophet Amos saith, that there is no euill (meaning, no euill of punishment) but the Lord hath done it [q], and Ieremy saith, that euery such Euill is an infliction for sinne; Man suffereth for his sinne [r]: which two places doe euince thus much, that if there haue been amongst vs any common punishments, surely they haue come from the Lord, and that for sinne. Now what common punishments the Lord hath layed vpon our Times, he must needs be blind which seeth not. A raging, and (as I may terme it) a man-eating pestilence in the chiefe parts of the Kingdome, (though we hitherto in these West parts, haue been euen miraculously spared: but let vs not presume, if wee haue been idle lookers on, vpon the visitations of others, the rod will fall the heauier when it comes) vnseasonable seasons, vnheard of inundations, fearefull fiers, the Fowles of Heauen, and the Fishes of the Sea destroyed [s]. These things we heare, these things we discourse of at our Tables, and in our meetings as newes, and as the occurrences of the Times; but we let them die with the report, and neuer put them vpon our hearts. What thinke wee of the horrible oppression which raigneth, one man labouring to eate and deuoure another [t], the encreasing of Papists, who (like the Canaanites to the Israelites) are as a whip on our sides, or as thornes in our eyes [u]? the grosse fatnesse which is growne vpon most hearts, in that (like the Iewes in Christs time) men doe not esteeme, nor know the things which appertaine vnto their peace [x]? What thinke we (I say) of these things? doe they not giue vs cause to say as Moses did to Aaron, when God sent a sudden pestilence among the people; There is wrath gone out from the Lord, the plague is begunne [y]? yes verily. Nay, we may well expect the accomplishment of that which was said of old; namely, that if wee be not reformed by these things, the Lord will smite vs yet seuen times more for our sinnes [z]. Truth is, God hath been, and is very gracious to our dayes (for so is his manner, oft times to call backe his anger, and not to stirre vp all his wrath [a],) he hath set peace in our borders [b], vnder the gouernement of a Christian King, he hath not remoued our Candlestocke, as he iustly might, because of the decay of our first loue [c]; yet euen this is also to be counted a iudgement, that the eyes of the most are so holden, that they doe not see Gods mercy, nor know how to turne these fauours to a spirituall vse; and full is euery place of such Fooles, (as Salomon speakes of) who haue a price in their hands, but haue none heart to get wisdome [d]. And this may serue to let vs see what euidences we haue of the Lords displeasure against sinne, and withall, to make good the first point, that we haue abundant matter of Heauinesse.

Now let me shew our neglect, and what slender sorrow these things haue brought forth amongst vs; I will proceede distinctly and in order: and first what little mourning there is for personall sins: The seat of sorrow is the heart, (rent your hearts, saith Ioel [e],) and that only knoweth the bitternesse of the soule [f]. It is vnpossible that I should be priuy to mens secret bewailings, neither will I iudge any by the smoothnesse of his looke, or the drinesse of his cheekes; for euery cloud doth not drop downe raine, neither is euery myſt of ſorrow diſſolued into teares: Yet there is one thing by which it may be ſhrewdly ſuſpected that (to ſpeake of the generality) men are in very little heauineſſe for their ſinnes; and that is, the little reformation which appeares. The mourning heart cannot but be diſpleaſed in it ſelfe, for the euils which it hath committed [g]: This diſpleaſure will turne the dilight in ſinne, into a hatred of ſinne. This hatred will bring forth that which Paul calleth Care [h]; that is, a penſiue and buſie ſtudy how to amend: And it cannot be but God would ſo bleſſe theſe motions, (being indeed the workings of his owne Spirit) as that ſinne, being quailed in the roote, ſhall alſo wither in the leafe, and the loue of holineſſe being planted in the heart, ſhall ſhoote out ſome fruit in the life. I know it is poſſible for a deare child of God, bitterly to bewaile ſome ſpeciall corruption, confidently to vow againſt it, earneſtly to beg deliuerance from it, to ſtriue to ſubdue it with the vtmoſt might; and yet againe and againe to be enſnared with it: But, that wickedneſſe ſhould be ſweete in a mans mouth [i], that he ſhould obey it in the luſts thereof [k], that he ſhould take thought for it to fulfill it [l], that he ſhould hate to be reformed [m], and yet be ſaid to mourne and be heauy for his ſinne; ſure I am it is vnpoſſible. He mourneth not for drunkenneſſe, who riſeth early to follow it [n]: Hee mourneth not for couetouſneſſe, who is plotting and imagining matters of oppreſſion and vniuſt getting vpon his bed [o]. He mourneth not for ſwearing, who ſaith; With my tongue I will preuaile, what hath any body to doe, who is Lord ouer me [p]? and ſo in other ſpecialties: ſo that this then is a true concluſion. There is but little amendment of ſinne, therefore ſure there is but little ſorrow for ſinne.

Come we now to the next, what ſorrow there is for the ſinnes of others. Our ſcantneſſe in this may well bee collected out of the former. For the ground of my ſorrow for anothers ſin, is the ſting which I feele of mine owne. He therefore which laments not for his owne, can hardly be affected for anothers. But I will inſiſt vpon a more particular euidence, which is this; the little care that is had for the reformation of others. He which mournes for anothers ſinne, will endeauour as much as in him lieth, to reforme that which is the cauſe of his mourning. I remember the ſaying of Saint Iames; If a brother or ſiſter bee naked and deſtitute of daily food; and one of you ſay to them: Depart in peace, warme your ſelues, fill your bellies; notwithſtanding ye giue not thoſe things which are needfull, what helpeth it [q]? So if a man ſay; Oh I am ſorry to ſee how euill men are, and yet ſeeke not to pull them out of the fier [r], and to reclaime them from that eternall euill into which they are falling; to what end is that ſorrow, or how ſhall I thinke that it is vnfained? And this duty of ſeeking to reforme the ſinne of others, lieth vpon all, though vpon ſome more then vpon others. The Magiſtrate by his authority, hee beareth not the ſword for nought [s]; and Nehemiah, when matters were amiſſe, ſpake not ſo much to the offenders, as to the Rulers [t]. The Miniſter by the word, ſtill proning if God at any time will giue repentance, that men may come to amendment [u]: Euery priuate man, by diſcreet admonition (thou ſhalt plainely rebuke thy neighbour [x],) or at leaſt by Prayer [y], that God may open their eies, to the end that they may ſee their miſery. Now if there be a defect in theſe, the ſword of authority being let to ruſt in the ſheath, and the people not being made to ſee their tranſgreſſions [z], and men ſtopping their mouthes, ſo that they neuer giue a word of admonition to their delinquent neighbours; if (I ſay) there be ſuch a defect in theſe things, how doe we mourne, where is our pitty ouer mens ſoules, if wee can ſee men runne on to their owne deſtruction, and not ſtretch out our hands to pull them (as a brand) out of the fier? Looke you to it that it bee not your fault: it is the common ſickneſſe of the times, happy be you, if you be free from the infection. I wil put you ouer to the accuſing or excuſing of your own thoughts [a], and ſo come to the next point.

Gods wrath againſt ſinne. And ſurely the very face of things (as now they ſtand)is ſufficient to bewray the iron deadneſſe of mens hearts in this particular. All things doe euen ſauour of an vniuerſall ſecurity. Many blowes are giuen,but the people turne not vnto him that ſmiteth [b]. The wofull occurrences of the Times,haue the ſame working with men, which a great ſtone hath when it falleth into the Waters: falling in, it maketh a great noiſe, and ſtirreth the Water very much, and one waue begetteth another for a good prety ſpace; at laſt the motion groweth weaker and weaker,and the water returneth againe vnto his former ſmoothneſſe. So in this: We heare of diuers fearefull accidents; at the firſt comming of the newes,we are much moued, and it runneth from man to man with much ſwiftneſſe; but on a ſudden, when this firſt addreſſe is paſt, the matter dieth away,wee are as we were, and the thing it ſelfe leaues no impreſſion: and by this meanes is that verified,which was complained of old; The Lord calleth vnto weeping and mourning, and behold ioy and gladneſſe, ſlaying Oxen, and killing Sheepe, eating fleſh and drinking wine, &c [c]. No humiliation followeth vpon Gods iudgements: But whereas euery iudgement of God ſhould be as a warning peale to repentance, we be like the Smiths dog, who, the harder the Anuile is beaten on, lieth by and ſleeps the ſounder; ſo a deeper kind of drowſineſſe hath ouertaken vs.

Now then that theſe two points are cleared, the one touching the cauſes of Heauineſſe which wee haue, the other touching our ſcantneſſe in framing our ſelues to that meaſure of holy ſorrow which becommeth vs; ſurely, if we ſuppoſe any waight to bee in this which is commended to vs by S. Iames, I doubt not but I ſhall eaſily perſwade you in the generall drift of my whole Sermon; namely, to turne your Laughter into Mourning, and your Ioy into Heauineſſe. For the better furtherance whereof, let mee commend vnto your beſt conſideration theſe particulars.

Firſt, the ſpeciall reſpect which the Lord beareth to thoſe whoſe ſpirits are full of heauineſſe, either in all, or in any one of the regards which I haue mentioned: Thus ſaith the Lord. The Heauen is my Throne, and the Earth is my foot-ſtool, all theſe things hath my hand made, all theſe things haue been, ſaith the Lord, and to him will I looke, euen to him that is poore, and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at my words [d]. Conſider the place: The ſeate of the Lord is full of glory, and from thence hee beholdeth all the Earth, but his more eſpeciall Eye, is to the trembling and bruſed ſoules; the mourning ſpirit is vnto him the moſt pleaſing ſacrifice [e]. Dauid ſaith, that the Lord hath a bottle in which he doth put the Teares [f] of the humbled, not one of them falleth to the ground without his notice. Me thinketh this motiue ſhould not be without effect: for who would not doe that which will draw the eye of the Lords reſpect toward him? God hath a generall prouidence ouer all: Thou Lord ſhalt ſaue both man and beaſt [g]; but the groaning hearts are his chiefeſt treaſure.

Secondly, that in the times of common Miſeries, the Lord maketh ſpeciall prouiſion for the ſafety and comfort of thoſe which mourne. Excellent for this purpoſe is that place of Ezekiel [h], when the ſix Angels (like men) were come forth againſt Ieruſalem, with euery one a weapon in his hand to deſtroy it: Firſt, there was a courſe taken to ſet a marke vpon their fore-heads which did mourne, and crie for all the abominations that were done in the midſt thereof. The ſword of vengeance was not drawne foorth to the ſlaughter, till particular order was taken for their ſafety. Lot was in continuall heauineſſe for the ſinnes of Sodome, and we ſee the deſtroying Angell could doe nothing, vntill he was come vnto the place appointed for his refuge [i]. You haue heard before of Ieremiahs mourning: note I pray you the fruit of it in this particular. When Ieruſalem was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, and (as the manner is in ſuch ſurpriſes) many went to wracke; the Lord ſo wrought, that when as the King himſelfe and his ſonnes were not ſpared [k], yet by Nebuchadnezzars owne mouth, speciall charge was giuen for the preseruation of Ieremy; Take him (said he to the chiefe steward) looke well to him, doe him no harme, doe vnto him euen as he shall say vnto thee [l]. The poore despised Prophet whose soule had wept in secret in the dayes of their iollity, was now specially prouided for, when the Body of the people receiued the due reward of their deepe security. Thus the meeke are hidden in the day of wrath [m]; and if it doe come to passe that they bee swept away with common calamities, yet their death is precious in Gods sight [n], and it shall be their happinesse to be taken away from the Euils to come [o].

3. Motiue. Thirdly, that the Lord hath tied himselfe by a promise to affoord to all such a gracious plenty of inward refreshing. Blessed are they that mourne, for they shall be comforted [p]. This is gone out of the lips of the Lord, and he will not alter it [q]: The Gospell which wee preach is truly said to bee tidings of great ioy [r]; and indeed such a ioy it is, which the heart of man in this mortality is too little to receiue: Now the sweetnesse thereof belongs onely to these that mourne. The Spirit of the Lord (saith Christ) is vpon me, he hath sent me to preach glad tidings; but to whom? To the poore, to bind vp the broken hearted, to comfort those that mourne, &c [s]. Such as these, hee will fill with good things [t], their soules shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatnesse [u]: they shall haue the spirit of consolation, a secret witnesse in their bosomes, that they are the children of God [x]. Woe be to him whom the desire of this blessing cannot moue.

4. Motiue. Fourthly, that albeit the comfort which such haue is but secret, and such as by reason of the hiddennesse thereof, maketh many a man to thinke that it is the dullest and most perplexed life in the world to be a good Christian, yet at the day of iudgement it shall be made more apparant. Now the teares vpon their faces are as a curtaine before their happinesse, that it cannot be seene; but then they shall be wiped away [y], that shall be a day of full refreshing [z], and then shall the Lord say, turning him (as it were) to the secure worldlings [a], which haue liued in pleasures on the earth, and in wantonnesse [b]: Behold, my seruants shall eate, and you shall be hungry; behold, my seruants shall drinke, and you shall be thirsty; behold, my seruants shall reioyce, and ye shall be ashamed. Behold, my seruants shall sing for ioy of heart, and ye shall crie for sorrow of heart; and shall houle for vexation of minde [b].

The Conclusion. To draw then to a conclusion. You see a duty commended to vs by the mouth and Ministery of Saint Iames, to turne our careless Laughter into a holy Mourning, and our presuming ioy into a godly Heauinesse. It is not without cause that we are perswaded to this exchange. Looke we into our selues, our owne sinnes muster together before our eyes in no small troupes, enough to wound the dullest heart. Cast we our faces to others, we see the world lying in wickednesse [c], and hell euen enlarging it selfe [d], to receiue it: Examine we the times, many things tell vs plainly, that surely God is not well pleased. Consider we againe our own course, we must needs yeeld that we haue been too secure, and that these things haue not so affected vs as they should. Think we further of the benefit and worth of that which we are perswaded to, we shall find it attended vpon with a traine of blessings: How shall we then deny our obedience to this holy aduice? I pray you then, Let my counsell be acceptable vnto you [e]. You are here many Merchants, and much of your trading stands vpon exchange [f]. Well is he in his owne opinion who can put away some ill conditioned ware for a more currant commodity. Behold here the best exchange which you euer made; Let your Laughter be turned into Mourning, and your Ioy into heauinesse. Sure I am, a commodity it is, for which (which all desire) you shall receiue a very quicke and plentifull returne. Quicke it will be: For yet a very little while, and he that shall come will come, and he will not tary [g]: and it will be plentifull; for, they which now goe weeping, shall returne with ioy; nay, which is more, they shall bring their sheaues [h].

THE RVINE OF GODS ENEMIES:

IVDGES 5. 31.

So let all thine Enemies perish, O Lord.

THis is the conclusion of that Diuine song which Deborah and Barak sang after that great deliuerance which God gaue the Israelites from Iabin King of Canaan, and after the ouerthrow of Sisera the Generall of the field. Now when as in the latter part of this hymme, Deborah (who I suppose was the compiler of it) had after a most eloquent manner, set out the fashion of Sisera his fall, by the hands of Iael, the wife of Heber the Kenite [a], shee shutteth vp all with this propheticall conclusion; So perish all thine enemies, O Lord. This is the order of the place. The dependance of this verse vpon the rest of the Chapter. [a] Vers. 24, &c.

The clause it selfe is a Prophecy: for albeit it runne in the forme of an Imprecation, yet it being considered, what Deborah was, euen a Prophetesse [b], we must needs thinke that the ground of her speech, was the knowledge shee had, touching the future estate and condition of Gods Church, for which cause shee maketh the desire of her soule sutable to the purpose and determination of God. As therefore shee well knew that Euill should hunt the enemies of God to destruction [c], and that the prouidence of God should attend vpon those which loue him, for their continuall preseruation; so here shee testifieth the fulnesse of her desire, that it may be so: So let all thine, &c. But they that loue thee, &c. The generall nature of it. [b] Chap. 4. 4. [c] Psal. 140. 11.

It being cleere then (as I take it) that this verse came out of the mouth of Deborah as a Propheteesse, it may be diuided into two parts. The first sets down the ruine of Gods enemies; So let all thine enemies perish, &c. The second declareth the prosperity of Gods friends: But they that loue thee, shall be as the Sunne, &c. The Diuision of it.

I haue chosen the first part only to handle at this time, the generall doctrine whereof, is; That the enemies of God shall perish so as Sisera did. For the opening whereof, two things must be done: first, it must be shewed who bee Gods Enemies: secondly, it must be enquired how Sisera perished, and then the ruine of Sisera must be applied to all Gods Enemies. The Doct.

In one word, they be generally called Gods Enemies, which are the Enemies of Gods Church. Thus the Lord sware that hee would haue warre with Amalek, from generation to generation, because Amalek fought with Israel [d], and Ethan in the Psalme, saith that those which reproched the footsteps of Gods annointed, reproached the Lord [e], according as Paul was said to persecute Christ [f], because hee persecuted the Church [g]: In the same sense, Sennacherib, is said to haue rayled against the Holie one of Israel [h]; because hee rayled against the Church and people of God in Israel. Now the enemies of Gods Church are of two sorts. Some Who be Gods enemies. [d] Ex. 17. 8, 16. [e] Psal. 89. 51. [f] Acts 9. 4, 5. [g] 1 Cor. 15, 9. [h] Isa. 37. 23.

are directly and professedly enemies vnto Piety, and to the truth and Religion of God, and seeke by all meanes how to root out and to abolish it. Such were the Philistims, the Amorites, the Amalekites, the Midianites, &c: of old, and after that the Babylonians, and other Monarchs, whom Daniel prophesied of: and such at this day are the Turkes, to whom euen the very name of a Christian is abominable. Another sort shrowd themselues vnder a name of the Church and of true Religion, but yet indeed and in truth are enemies to the sincerity of Religion. And these must also be distinguished: some doe professe a different kind of Religion, and vse another manner of worshipping God then the true Church vseth; such were the Samaritans in ancient times, who after their rent from the Iewes, retained circumcision, boasted of their Fathers, and expected the Messias [i], yet were not Gods people [k], but were deadly enemies to the Iewes [l]. And such now are the Papists, who boast that they onely are the Church, but yet vnder this pretence persecute the Church, and are in a continuall opposition thereunto: for which cause their Church being typed out by the name of the great whore, is said to be drunken with the blood of Saints and Martyrs [m]: whereof these latter times haue had, and still haue very plentifull experience. These Enemies in their malice against Gods Church vse a double course. The one is of open hostility: Therefore the Antichristian Church is said to make warre with the Saints [n]: And what warres the Romish Church with her assistants hath made, and doth still study to make against the Protestant Churches in these parts of the World, there is no man, who knoweth any thing, can bee ignorant. The other course is of secret practising, which is also twofold. First by seditions, factions, conspiracies, poysonings, and all to bring confusion vpon Kingdomes, that so (if it were possible) they might quench the light of the Gospell, and establish their own Idolatry. An euident instance whereof we haue had in the powder-Treason, a deuice, which a man would thinke the diuell himselfe should be ashamed to father; and yet Papists doe not blush that their Religion should be the hatcher of such a hellish enterprise. Secondly, by priuy suggestions of their creeping [o] Iesuites and Seminaries, to corrupt and deceiue the mindes [p] of the vnsetled, and to poyson them with their Popish drugs. They come from the Sea of Rome in amongst vs, like the Sammon and fish of that sort into the fresh Riuers to doe their kind, and to beget a new spawne and frie of Catholikes. These be the Frogges which come out of the mouth of the Dragon [q], the little Foxes which the spouse complaineth of [r], which like their predecessors, compasse Sea and Land to make one of their profession [s].

A second ranke of these Enemies shrowded vnder the name of the Church, are those which professe true religion, but yet are aduersaries to the life and power [t] of Religion. Such our Church is pestered with at this day, and is euen darke with them as Ægypt with the Grashoppers [u]. These are they which cannot endure the yoke of the Gospell, which will not abide to be ruled by the Word and discipline of the Church, but resolue to breake those bands, and to cast those cords from them [x]: Our Sauiour calleth those his Enemies, who will not that he should raigne ouer them [y]. Such are they also who are aduersaries to the Word preached, hindring (as much as in them lieth) the passage of it, and seeking (like Elymas) to turne away [z] others from it: All seeming wise, (for the wisdome of the flesh is enmity against God [a]:) All couetous worldlings, (for, the amity of the world is the enmity of God [b]:) All Epicures and belly-Gods, (for, such are Enemies to the Crosse of Christ [c]:) All continuers in grosse sinnes, (for God surely will wound the head of his Enemies, and the hairy pate of him that walketh in his sinnes [d].) These and such like, liue in the Church, and professe to know God, but yet are the Enemies of God, and come within the compasse of this Prophecy.

How Sisera

The second thing to be laboured in, is an enquiry how Sisera perished, that so wee may know how the Enemies of God shall perish. The ruine of Sisera is made a patterne of the ruine for Gods Enemies. Touching the Conſpirers againſt Gods people, the Pſalmiſt prayeth thus; Doe thou to them as to Siſera, and as to Iabin at the Riuer of Kiſhon [e]: And concerning theſe Kings of the earth, which by the perſwaſion of the ſpirits of deuels (the frogges of Rome) band themſelues againſt Gods Church, it is propheciedthat they ſhall be gathered together to a place called Arma gedon [f], that is, they ſhall receiue a famous foyle, euen ſuch an one as Siſera receiued at the waters of Megiddo [g]: Wherefore to the end we may vnderſtand how Gods Enemies ſhall periſh, it is fit to enquire how Siſera did periſh. In Siſera his ouerthrow there is to be noted three things. Firſt, the time; that it was when Siſera was in his greateſt height, hee was furniſhed with nine hundred charets of yron, and by him (vnderſtand his Maſter) the children of Iſrael had been ſore vexed twenty yeeres [h]. Secondly, the meanes; that he was ſold into the hands of a woman [i]. Thirdly, the manner; that it was an irrecouerable deſtruction: All the hoaſt of Siſera fell vpon the edge of the ſword, there was not a man left [k]: Siſera himſelfe ſanke downe at Iaels feete, and lay there dead; The children of Iſrael prenailed againſt Iabin King of Canaan, vntill they had deſtroyed Iabin King of Canaan [m]. So then the Enemies of God ſhall periſh as Siſera; that is, in their greateſt iollity, by meanes (in mans opinion) moſt vnlikely; and ſo, as after their fall receiued, they ſhall be paſt all recouery. It will be eaſie to ſhew the truth hereof by the Scripture. Firſt, they ſhall periſh in their iollity, and in the height of their ſecurity. I haue ſeene the wicked ſtrong, and ſpreading himſelfe like a greene Bay tree, yet hee paſſed away [n]. When the workers of iniquity doe flouriſh, they ſhall be deſtroyed for euer [o]. God will ſhoote an arrow at them ſuddenly [p]. When they ſhall ſay; Peace, and ſafety, then ſhall come vpon them ſudden deſtruction [q]. Secondly, the meanes but weake in compariſon: Whereupon it is a generall rule, that God hath choſen weake things to confound the mighty things [r]. Euen wormes ſhall eate King Herod [ſ], and graſhoppers and cankers ſhall be the Lords great hoaſt [t]. Thirdly, the ouerthrow ſhall bee irrecouerable, like the breaking of a potters pot, in the breaking whereof is not found a ſheard, to take fier out of the hearth, or water out of a pit [u]: like ſmoake that vaniſheth [x], like ſtubble before the wind [y]: Whereupon the ruine of Antichriſts Kingdome is compared to the caſting of a great milſtone into the Sea, with ſuch violence (ſaith the holy Ghoſt) ſhall the great City Babylon be caſt, and ſhall be found no more [z]: Our times haue had two notorious, and neuer to bee forgotten examples of the truth hereof. The one in the Spaniſh Fleete in eighty eight: the ouerthrow of it we cannot be ignorant of, and we haue great cauſe to remember it. It was like the fall of Siſera: Firſt, it was in the iollity thereof. The Nauy was called Inuincible: They had made themſelues ſure of vs, they had ſhared the pleaſant things of the Land among them, in their owne ſeeming: They which abode at home, ſaid one to another, as Siſeraes Mother did to her Ladies; Haue they not gotten, and diuide the ſpoile [a]? Secondly, the meanes was but weake in compariſon. Our Nauy for number and proportion of ſhips, much ſmaller; our men fewer, our time of preparation much leſſe. We may truly ſay; it was not by our owne ſword, neither did our owne arme ſaue vs [b]. They fought from Heauen, euen the ſtarres in their courſes fought againſt them [c]. Thirdly, it was an vtter ſpoile, ſcarce a ſhip left to doe any further ſeruice. The other example is this of the Powder-Treaſon: touching which, you ſhall ſee that the Enemies of God, and of his Church, engaged in it, periſhed alſo as Siſera: Firſt, in their height of confidence. For (now) among Papiſts, both at home and abroad, there was a very confident expectation of ſome great good to be done for the Catholike cauſe; and the matter being brought euen to the puſh, and that monſter of theirs being come almoſt to the birth, they made full account of their golden day, in which they ſhould bathe their hands in the blood of all good Chriſtians, and eſtabliſh their Idolatrous ſeruice of their Breaden god. Secondly, by meanes vnlikelie: It was not bewrayed, nor defeated by any wit or pollicy of mans but in them was verified that of the Pſalme; Their owne tongues fell vpon them [d], their owne pen diſcouered them, and that which the watchfull eye of gouernement did not eſpie, their owne priuy buzzing brought to light. I report no new thing: you know the letter, how it was endited, to whom it was ſent, and how it was conſtrued. And ſo was that made good which Salomon ſaith; Curſe not the King, &c. that which hath wings ſhall declare the matter [e]: It was a quill, a peece of a wing, that reueled it. Thirdly, it was an vtter fall: their purpoſes were defeated to their owne confuſion: So that we may well take vp that of the Pſalmes, They made a pit, and digged it, and fell into the pit that they made; their miſchiefe is returned vpon their owne head, and their cruelty fallen vpon their owne pate [f]; and prayſed be the Lord, which hath not giuen vs as a prey vnto their teeth [g]. Thus by plaine Teſtimonies of Scripture, and by our owne experience, it is proued vnto vs, that the Enemies of God and of his Church ſhall all periſh ſo as Siſera, in the height of their pride, by meanes (in mans conceit) improbable, by a courſe and ruine irrecouerable.

The 1. Vſe. The firſt vſe of this doctrine, is to ſtirre vs vp to fill our mouthes with the praiſes of God, ſo often as we recount the deliuerances which God hath vouchſafed to his Church, eſpecially thoſe which in our owne times we haue had experience of. This vſe did Deborah make of the victory againſt Siſera [h]: Moſes of the ouerthrow of Pharaoh, and the deliuerance out of Ægypt [i]. Many bee the Pſalmes which were penned vpon ſuch occaſions. It is the chiefe thing which God expecteth of vs; Call vpon me in the day of trouble, ſo will I deliuer thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me [k]. The ſpirit of God notably deſcribeth the ioy of the Church for the ruine of the Kingdome of Antichriſt, Hallelu-iah, ſaluation, and glory, and honour, and power be to the Lord our God, &c. [l]. And the ſeruants of God are incited and encouraged ſo to doe. O Heauen reioyce of her, and ye holy Apoſtles and Prophets, for God hath giuen you iudgement on her [m]. And albeit we may haue cauſe of pity when we thinke vpon their ſoules, yet ſo farre forth as the ruine of the enemies of God, makes for the Churches good, we ought to reioyce in their ouerthrow. The righteous (ſaith Dauid) ſhall reioyce when hee ſeeth the vengeance [n], and bleſſed ſhall he be (ſaid the people touching Babylon, which had held them in long captiuity) that taketh and daſheth thy children againſt the ſtones [o]. No nation hath more cauſe to performe this duty then we: It were long to rehearſe euery particular. Truly may it be ſaid of the Church of England, as Iacob ſaid to Ioſeph in his will; The Archers haue grieued her, and ſhot againſt her, and hated her, but her bow hath abode ſtrong, the hands of her armes haue been ſtrengthened by the hands of the mighty God of Iacob [p]; and ſhee may ſay as the Church of Iſrael, They haue oftentimes afflicted me from my youth vp, but they could not preuaile againſt me [q]. Neither was any deliuerance giuen vs by God, more notorious then was this, from that bloody maſſaker intended againſt the whole State, by an vnheard of kind of execution vpon the Kings Maieſty, his deareſt Queene, their Princely Sonne (our hope for hereafter) the honourable Counſellours, the noble Lords, and Barons, the reuerend Biſhops, the graue Sages and Iudges of the Land, beſides many worthy Gentlemen and Commoners of the Realme: no ſtory, whether barbarous or Chriſtian, maketh mention of any the like brutiſh, helliſh, cruelty. That which (in my opinion) throughout the ſtory of the Scripture commeth neereſt vnto it, is that plot of Haman, for the vtter rooting out of the people of the Iewes. For the better quickning of vs vnto thankfulneſſe, I will a little inſiſt vpon it, and ſhew you firſt, how theſe two conſpiracies, (that of Haman and his adherents, and this of the Papiſts combined in the Powder-Treaſon) doe agree: and then ſecondly, wherein this latter doth in ſauage cruelty farre exceede that, and ſo by conſequence, how our deliuerance is farre more admirable then was that of the Iewes, though that were alſo very famous: Firſt, touching the agreement betwixt the two plots, and the deliuerances from both, mark it thus.

The

The Iewes Enemies, were their Enemies for Gods ſake: Theſe, ours, for Religions ſake. Theſe had ſet downe a certaine day in which (as it were) in an inſtant to doe their villany. Ours had reſolued vpon a day alſo, yea euen vpon a very point of time, in which to accompliſh their diuelliſh enterpriſe. Theſe had diſpoſed the manner of the Iewes deſtruction by a Lot, euery conſpirator was appointed his particular ſeruice. Ours had allotted euery one his taske, ſome to prouide at home, ſome to negotiate abroad in other countries, ſome to make tumults in the city, others to raiſe rebellion in the country. Nay, ſcarſe a Papiſt of any intelligence in the land, (as may eaſily be gathered by their generall confidence at that time) but he was imployed at the leaſt thus farre foorth, to pray for the good ſucceſſe of the Catholiques, there being then ſome ſpeciall ſeruice in hand for their common benefit. Theſe which ſought miſchiefe againſt the Iewes, had the warrant of a King, for that which they did: Ours, the allowance of him, that taketh vpon him to be aboue Kings, the Man of Rome, euen his holineſſe, his vnholy diſpenſation: Indeed a thing deuiſed in Hell, might ſoone paſſe with Seene and allowed, at Rome. Well, in fine, theſe aduerſaries were ſuddenly defeated; Ours, in a moment diſappointed, euen when their monſtrous conception was at the very point of deliuerance. They were ſlaine the ſame day in which they thought to haue murthered: theſe periſhed then when they promiſed to themſelues an eternall victory. Thus farre wee haue ſeen, Enemies alike, danger alike, a deliuerance in ſome circumſtances not vnlike. Now marke, how in ſome other things againe, this of Ours far exceeds. Theſe enemies of the Iewes were of another Nation: Theſe Popiſh conſpiratours were our owne country-men. The Iewes whom they ſought to deſtroy were their vnderlings, captiues, and ſuch as liued in their land but by courteſie: Thoſe whom theſe Romiſh Leaguers ſought to murther, were their lawfull Gouernours: to whom both by Religion and Nature they did owe obedience. Oh inhumanity, oh Popery, be theſe thy fruits! If this be Religion, let hell be made heauen, and let the depth of villany bee the height of piety. The plotters againſt the Iewes were heathen men, Pagans, Infidels, Haman himſelfe an Amalekite, a ſworne enemy to Gods truth: Theſe in name Chriſtian and Catholiques of Rome, members of that Church, out of which (if we will beleiue them) there is no holineſſe. Well might Nero be a Saint, if this were holineſſe. I may well ſay of them, as Iacob did of the fact of Simeon and Leui; Curſed be their wrath, for it was fierce, and their rage, for it was cruell[r]. To proceede yet: Theſe ill-wiſhers to the Iewes, albeit they meant nothing but miſchiefe, yet they carried not their purpoſe ſo cloſely but that it was knowne, and the poore Iewes had warning, if not to eſcape death, yet to auoid the miſery which might happen to their ſoules by a ſudden death: Theſe (whom we ſpeake of) intended ſuch a ſlaughter, which being but a blaſt, might haue brought many to their reckoning before God, before they had thought vpon their account. Neuer any rage ſo great among men called Chriſtians, but although the blood was ſhed, yet there was leaue giuen to the ſoule to prepare it ſelfe for the Lord. But Popery muſt be like it ſelfe, it hath euer been a butchery of ſoules. How true is the ſaying of Salomon: The mercies of the wicked are cruell[s]? This is the Romiſh mercy, to ſay men be Heretiques, and yet to ſend them away quicke without any moment of time to repent them. If this be their mercy, what thinke you may their cruelty be? Hang down your heads you Papiſts, & ſhame; you pretenſed Catholiks, neuer ſeeke for fig-leaues to couer the nakednes of your Italian mother: though ſhe be waſhed with nitre, and much ſope, yet this Iniquity is ſo marked before God[t], and ſo hatefull in the ſight of all indifferent men, that the reproach therof can neuer be done away. There is one yet very effectual circumſtance, to note out the exceeding greatnes of our deliuerance aboue this of the Iewes: God gaue deliuerance to theſe Iewes, in a time when they were humbled by captiuity, & had alſo caſt downe themselues by fasting and prayer, for the auoiding of that which was comming towards them. I confesse here was mercy, but this of ours farre exceeds. For the Lord wrought this for vs in a time, when we were (as we yet are) puffed vp by the continuance of prosperity, and euen lulled asleepe in the depth of security, our great sinnes crying loud in his eares for vengeance, and euen vrging his Iustice to make vs a by-word, and an astonishment to the world, by some extraordinary iudgement. So that in this we haue a greater euidence of Gods mercy, that when so many foule enormities, especially the long contempt of the Gospell, did euen fight against vs, yet he wrought so for vs, as to deliuer vs out of the very iawes of destruction. Now all these things being duly considered, I may truly say of this fift of Nouember, as was said of the night in which the Israelites went out of Egypt; It is a day to bee kept holy to the Lord, it is that day of the Lord, which all the children of England must keepe throughout their generations[u]. And although Papists, for the hiding of their owne shame may wish of this day, as Iob did in his agony of his birth-day, That it may not be ioyned to the daies of the yeere[x]; yet let vs euer make conscience, according to the most religious appointment of the Law, To keepe it in his season from yeer to yeer[y], as an eternall president of Gods care for his Church, and as an neuer dying testimony of the hideous cruelty of blood-thirsty Catholiques. And I would I could speake any thing that might bee effectuall to quicken the common and vniuersall dulnesse of our spirits, whom these great and vnspeakable kindnesses of God to vs, to our State, our Gouernours, our wiues and families doe very meanly affect. I remember what Ioab said to Dauid, when he shewed so little cheerefulnesse, after the victory against Absalom; I perceiue (said Ioab) that if Absalom had liued, and we all had died this day, that then it would haue pleased thee well[z]. It may bee so thought of many, that if all good people had been swallowed vp in that gulfe, and none but Atheists and Papists left aliue, it would haue giuen them more contentment. If wee cannot shew our selues to reioyce in the goodnesse of God vnto his Church; surely we shall neuer see the Felicity of his chosen[a].

The 2. Vse. Secondly, this Doctrine is full of comfort to all true Christians. For here we haue an absolute assurance of the irrecouerable foile which shall be giuen to all the enemies of Gods Church. They shall perish like Sisera: They that hate Sion, shall bee all ashamed and turned backward[b]. God will arise and his enemies shall bee scattered, they that hate him shall flee before him[c]. The Lord hath said this, and he will performe it. Especially this is to be applyed as a comfort to all that feare God, in respect of the continuall working and tempering of the Popish crue; they are continually plotting and deuising treasons, mutinies, murthers: They brag in their talke, and swords are in their lips[d], they imagine deceitfull words against the quiet of the land[e], they incourage themselues in a wicked purpose, and commoune together to lay snares priuily[f]. But the word of God shall be true: They conceiue mischefe, but shall bring forth a lie[g]. Haply the Lord may here and there execute some personall vengeance vpon some by them; Haply they may increase in corners, and draw Disciples after them[h], it being iust with God, so to punish the contempt of the Gospell in this land, and To send them strong deiusions to beleeue lies, who will not receiue the loue of the truth that they might be saued[i]: but certenly their maine purpose for the confusion of Protestant kingdomes which they aime at, and the publike re-establishment of Idolatry which they gape for, I am fully perswaded that they shall neuer accomplish, but still their policies and enterprises shall turne backe vpon them to their owne confusion. For doubtlesse the time now fast approacheth, in which we shall see the verifying of that prophecy, which speaking of the ruine of Antichrists kingdome, as of a thing already done, crieth out, It is fallen, It is fallen Babylon the great City[k], &c. the limmes thereof shall fight with the Lambe, but the Lambe shall consume them[l].

Thirdly

Thirdly, here is matter of aduertiſement to vs all, to beware of ioyning our ſelues with theſe Enemies of God and his Church, either in likeneſſe of opinion, or pliableneſſe of affection, or aptneſſe to pitty them, and to thinke tolerably of them, or in familiarity of conuerſation. We are commanded to Goe out of Babylon, that we be not partaker of her ſinnes, and ſo receiue of her plagues[m]: We ought rather euery man for his part to helpe forward that iudgement which God hath prepared for them: Magiſtrates by puniſhing, Miniſters by confuting their errours, priuate men by diſcouering them: which is the effect of the charge touching Babylon: Reward her as ſhee hath rewarded you, giue her double according to her workes[n], and, Put your ſelues in aray againſt Babel round about, all yee that bend the bow, ſhoote at her, ſpare no arrowes, for ſhee hath ſinned againſt the Lord[o]. Furthermore, this we are alſo to be admoniſhed, not to thinke it enough, if in ſhew and outward profeſſion we cleaue to Gods Church, vnleſſe alſo wee reſpect and follow theſe things, which may aduance Gods glory, and edifie his Church. For this is a ſure thing, that albeit the profeſſed enemies of the Church becauſe of the promiſe of God, ſhall not preuaile in regard of an vniuerſall ruine to the Church and ſtate, yet if we be (as too many are) aduerſaries to the ſincerity of Religion, aduerſaries to the preaching of the Word, contemners of the ordinances of God, worldlings, belly-gods[p], louers of pleaſure, more then louers of God[q], walkers after our owne luſts[r], denying the power of godlineſſe[ſ], in our liues; the force of this courſe touching The ruine of Gods enemies, ſhall light vpon vs, neither ſhall it ſerue our turne, in the day of Chriſt to ſay, we are no Papiſts: For albeit wee haue, Lord, Lord[t], and the Temple of the Lord[u] in our mouthes, yet if wee Hate to be reformed[x], and walke ſtubbornely againſt God[y], the Lord will not bee mercifull vnto vs, but the wrath of the Lord, and his ielouſie ſhall ſmoake againſt vs, and he will put our name from vnder Heauen[z].

To the VVorſhipfull, and my very good Friend, Nicholas Gilbert, of Bowringſleigh in Deuonſh. Eſquire.

SIR, the poſterity of the wicked hath alwaies been, both vnto them a matter of emboldning, and to the children of God an occaſion of ſome ſcruple. The former do thereupon talke preſumptuouſly [a], imagining that either there is no God [b], or elſe if there be, then ſure he is like them [c]; becauſe (as they interpret it) their courſes are by him fauoured ſo exceedingly. The latter are ready to call Gods Iudgements into queſtion, how it can ſtand with right, that thoſe ſhould be in wealth that rebelliouſly tranſgreſſe [d]. The miſtaking of both theſe, is fully diſcouered in the Scripture; and the ſumme of that which the Scripture hath to that end, is the very ſubſtance of the two Sermons that enſue; the very pith and abridgement of them both being that ſpeech of Salomons: Though a ſinner doe euill an hundred times, and God prolongeth his dayes, yet I know it ſhall bee well with them that feare the Lord; but it ſhall not be well to the wicked [e]. Theſe doe I here preſent vnto you, as the pledge my deſire, not to be vnthankefull for your loue; I make no doubt but you will ſo receiue them. I wiſh you comfort by them, and by all other, either your priuate readings, or publike hearings. So remaine I,

PSAL. 49.12.

But man ſhall not continue in honour: he is like the beaſts that die.

I Know not whereto better to compare this Text, then to the Writing vpon the Wall, in the midſt of the King of Babel his royall feaſt. When the King was in the height of his banquet, drinking wine (as the Storie ſpeakes) before a thouſand [a], ſuddenly he ſaw the fingers of a mans hand ouer againſt the Candleſticke vpon the plaiſter of the Wall. It cooled him preſently, his countenance was changed, his thoughts troubled him, the ioynts of his loynes were looſed, and his knees ſmote one againſt the other. Of the ſame nature is this Text. It ſeemeth to me to be (as it were) a counter-buffe, or croſſe-blow, to the plots and endeauours of carnall and worldly-wiſe men, for the ſetling of their outward eſtate here in this life. In the ſixt and eleuenth verſes of this Pſalme, we may ſee them in their prime, beſtirring themſelues exceedingly, truſting in their goods, boaſting themſelues in the multitude of their riches, and (like the rich man in the Goſpell) pulling downe their barnes, and building greater [b], imagining that their habitation ſhall continue euer, and calling their lands by their names, that they may preſerue their memory from obliuion. But now marke the Writing vpon the Wall: Yet man ſhall not continue in honour, he is like the beaſts that die. This is a ſudden qualm ouer the ſtomacke, as the ſentence of death, is an vnexpected gueſt amidſt a great calme, and it doth vtterly diſtaſte all the former ſuppoſed felicity. Thus much (briefly) to giue a generall inſight into this place of Scripture.

The generall nature of this place of ſcripture

[b] Luke 12. 18.

For order in handling it, take it thus: Here is two-fold thwarting or croſſing of the purpoſes of the vngodly worldlings. The firſt is this; He ſhall not be that which he euer wiſhed to be: He ſhall not continue in honour: The other is this; He ſhall be that which he neuer deſired to be: He ſhall be like the beaſts that die. He ſhall miſſe of that which he ſought for, and he ſhall haue that which hee looked not for. Of theſe two ſeuerally.

The diuiſion.

The firſt part is, that Man ſhall not continue in honour. In which clauſe there is no word very ambiguous. It may haply be demanded, whether the word Man is of ſo large extent, as that thereby is meant euery particular man: whereto is anſwered, that the word muſt be reſtrained onely to ſuch a man, as is in this Pſalme deſcribed, who truſts in his goods, and boaſts himſelfe in the multitude of his riches, and ſuppoſeth his habitation ſhall continue euer, &c. The word in the Hebrew Text is, Adam, a name giuen to our firſt Father, but fitting to vs all, in regard that our making is of earth [c]: yet beſt agreeing to him, who as he is earth by creation, ſo is earth alſo in affection, minding onely earthly things, as ſpeaketh Paul [d]. And ſuch an one indeed, is here intended. Touching the word (Honor) it is well knowne what it meaneth. And yet (in the ignorance of ſome) it may happen to be too much reſtrained. Therefore by it we muſt conceiue generally any eminent eſtate, or ſuch condition which either for wealth, office, blood, or any outward part, is of regard and eſteem amongſt men: It is well tranſlated by ſome (ſhining) ſo that it ſignifieth any ſuch condition, which doth (as it were) glitter glitter in mens eyes, which the world approueth of, for worldly respects. Now the word (Continue) implieth a possibility of being in Honour: because no man can be said not to continue in honour, but onely he which hath formerly been in Honour. So that now this first clause occasioneth mee to discourse vpon two points: One, that a carnall man, a man that hath no taste of any goodnesse, may possibly thriue and prosper, and grow great here on earth. The other; That the prosperity of such an one, hath no perpetuity.

The 1. Doct. Touching the first of these, wee haue proofe enough for it out of the Scriptures. Dauid describing a notorious wicked man, yet saith of him, that his wayes
e Psal. 10. 5. alwaies prosper [e], and that (as it is well translated out of the Hebrew,) they are fenced in, as though hee were ordinarily out of the reach of common miseries.
f Psal 73. And the same Dauid records in another Psalme [f], how much it troubled him, and what a temptation it was vnto him, to see the flourishing estate of the vn-
g Vers. 3. godly: I fretted (saith he) at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked [g]. The very same thing also, so perplexed the Prophet Ieremy, that he was bold euen to reason the case with God, how it could stand with his iustice so to suffer it. Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper, and why are they all in wealth that re-
h Ier. 12. 1. belliously transgresse [h]? The point is excellently described by Iob, The wicked liue and waxe old, and grow in wealth: their seede is established in their sight with them, and their generation before their eyes, their houses are peaceable without feare, and the rod of God is not vpon them, their bullocke gendereth, and faileth not, their cow calueth, i Iob 21. 7, 8, 9, 10. and casteth not her calfe [i], &c. The Scripture also giueth more light to this Doctrine by examples, prouing thus much vnto vs, that euen the children of God, such as feare him, and make conscience of their waies, come often far behind the wicked in outward prosperity: Isaac the sonne of promise is carried to the slaughter, when Ismael the sonne of the bond-woman sitteth quietly at home. Iacob the loued, is put forth to keepe sheepe, and Esau the hated, goes k Gen. 39. 20. on hunting. If you looke for Ioseph, you shall finde him in prison [k], for Daniel l Dan. 6. 16. you shall see him in the den [l], for Ieremy, he is making bookes of Lamentations, m Ierem. 9. 1. and wishing his head were full of waters, and his eyes a fountaine of teares [m], to expres his griefe, when the vngodly stretch themselues vpon their beds, and eate the lambes of the flockes, and the calues out of the fold, and sing to the sound of the viole, and drinke
n Amos 6. 3, 4 5, 6. wine in bolles, and put farre away the euill day [n]. Now the reason why the Lord taketh this (as may seeme) a strange course, is this: First, that his children for their sinnes, in this life may not go altogether vnchastised, and by chastisement may be brought to the greater measure of humility: and that the prophane, hauing at least some shew of some good things, may not goe altogether vnrewarded, and so may the sooner fill vp the measure of iniquity. Secondly, that it may appeare to be but a slander, which the diuell imputed to Iob, and in him, to o Iob 1. 9. all that are the Lords, that they serue God for rewards [o]: For when they, euen in the midst of the crosse, shall continue in their innocency, it will then be manifest, that it is conscience and not reward which keepes them in obedience. Thirdly, the Lord taketh this course, as to take away all colour of excuse from the vngodly, so to assure vs that he doth not (as it were) makes his bookes of account cleere in this life, but reserueth the full and finall account, vntill the last day of reckoning, in which euery thing shall be recompensed to the full, whether it be good or euill. Thus we see the truth of this point, and the reasons of it; namely, that a carnall man may haue a full measure of outward prosperity.

The Vse. The vse of this Doctrine is very excellent. It serueth to shew the vanity of a conceit, which is crept into the hearts of a great many, and which so strongly possesseth them, that it maketh them to contemne all religious instruction, and neglect all reformation whatsoeuer: And it is this: There is many an one (and let euery man looke into his own heart, to see whether he be not the man) who being in his conscience guilty of many sins, which by the ministry of the word, are publikely reprooued, as of ignorance, contempt of the Word and Sacraments, ſcorning of Religion, neglect of the worſhip of God, Sabbath-breaking, ſwearing, wantonnes, oppreſſion, and ſuch like, yet bleſſed himſelfe [p], in his heart, and ſets light by the threatnings of Gods vengeance; becauſe for all his hardned courſe of ſinning againſt God, God ſeemeth to bleſſe him, and to proſper him in all things: And therefore he doth often thus commune with his owne ſoule: I doe indeed heare the Preacher ſpeake much againſt mee, and I confeſſe my ſelfe to bee euen ſuch an one as he nameth: hee telleth often of the wrath and diſpleaſure of God againſt ſuch courſes, and how the Lord is an auenger of all ſuch things. But yet ſtill (God I him thanke) here I liue and haue health and quietneſſe: My heart is at peace, my field beareth as good a crop, my cattell bring as great increaſe, my buſineſſe hath as good ſucceſſe, my ſelfe cary as good credit and opinion with the world, as the holieſt of them all. Now if God were ſo offended with my cariage, as the Preacher would inforce, how could it be, that he being the giuer of theſe things, would beſtow them vpon me? Is it likely that I ſhould thus enioy them, if my conuerſation were not pleaſing in his ſight? Would he thus fauour me, vnleſſe he did loue me? Surely no: And therefore here is my reſolution, they ſhall all talke, and preach, and reproue while they will, I will continue one manner of man, ſeeing I ſee the bleſſing of God vpon me ſo apparantly. Theſe bee the very thoughts of carnall men, who ſtrengthen their hands to euill, becauſe of outward proſperity. Now the Doctrine taught is very effectuall to ſhew the idleneſſe of this fancy. Dauid here ſpeaking of a meere worldling, denieth not but he may be in honour. So that a man may outwardly proſper, and yet ſtill be hatefull and abominable before God. Eſau was a man hated [q] of God, yet the fatneſſe of the earth [r] was his portion, as well as holy Iacobs. And when Abraham intreated God on the behalfe of Iſmael, although the Lord would not yeeld in regard of tying the promiſed ſeed to his generation; yet for outward things he promiſed to make him fruitfull, and to multiply him exceedingly [s]. The Scripture ſpeaketh of ſome, which haue their portion in this life [t], and yet haue no part in heauen: ſuch an one was the rich glutton, of whom the Text ſaith, that in his life time he receiued pleaſure [u], and was therefore tormented afterwards. So that it is but a fond courſe for any man to promiſe peace to his owne ſoule, becauſe of outward things. For, (as Salomon ſaith) The ſame condition is to the iuſt and to the wicked to him that ſweareth, and to him that feareth an oath [x]. Let not then any man, being by the powerfull applying of the word conuicted of ſinne, hearten himſelfe to continue in it becauſe of Gods forbearance, imagining, becauſe God holdeth his peace, that he is ſuch an one as himſelfe is; but rather let him feare, leſt the Lord doe but fatte him vp againſt the day of ſlaughter, ſuffering him to run on, till he haue filled vp the full meaſure of iniquity, that hee may then receiue the full meaſure of deſtruction. And ſo much for the firſt doctrine.

The ſecond Doctrine of the firſt clauſe, is, That the proſperity of the wicked is not perpetuall; (But, he ſhall not continue in Honour.) This (But) is that which croſſeth the hopes of all worldlings, and nippeth their expectations in the head. Many the like Buts wee finde in holy Scripture. The bread of deceit is ſweet, (ſaith the Wiſe-man,) But the throate is filled with grauell [y]. Reioyce, O young man in thy youth, and let thy heart cheere thee in the dayes of thy youth, and walke in the wayes of thy heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes: But know, that for all theſe things, God will bring thee to iudgement [z]. Theſe things haſt thou done, and I held my Tongue, therefore thou thoughteſt that I was like thee: But I will reproue thee, and ſet them in order before thee [a]: It is the ſpeech of God to wicked Hypocrites. So Paul ſpeaking of thoſe which are oppoſites to the miniſtry of the word, giues them their But alſo, As Iannes and Iambres withſtood Moſes, ſo doe theſe reſiſt the truth, men of corrupt mindes, Reprobates concerning the Faith: But they ſhall preuaile no longer [b]. So the rich man in the Goſpell was met withall: He promiſed to his ſoule great matters; But God ſaid vnto him, O foole, this night ſhall they fetch thy ſoule from thee [c].

So

So that this word (But) prooueth many times to be as gall and worme-wood: It doth ſo come athwart the purpoſes of the vngodly. He ſhall not continue in honour (ſaith the Text:) the words are properly, He ſhall not tary all night in Honour: and thereupon becauſe it is Adam in the Hebrew, ſome (and the ſame learned) haue vſed this place, to prooue that Adam fell the ſame day in which he was created. How euer it be touching that, the holy Ghoſt his meaning is to note out a very ſhort continuance. We are wont to deſcribe a ſhort aboad, by lodging in an Inne, where a man ſeldome ſtayeth in his trauaile aboue a night. Now the continuance of the carnall man in his honour and poſperity, ſhall be farre leſſe, the time ſhall be (as it were) a degree ſhorter. The truth hereof is fulfilled by two meanes. For firſt, either his proſperity continueth not to him, or elſe (ſecondly) he continueth not to his proſperity. Touching the firſt, Iob ſaith, that the wicked man albeit he haue gotten much, and raked heaps together, yet many times his eyes ſee the deſtruction [d]. And to effect this, the Lord hath ſet euen an hoſt of enemies againſt all worldly things. The rich in money, is in danger of theeues; he which abounds in houſhold-ſtuffe, is in hazzard of fier: The ruſt layeth ſiege to thy gold, and the moth to thy garment. Thy great heards of cattell may be ſwept away with rottenneſſe: At Sea, Pirates may ſpoile thee: In thy husbandry, blaſting may vndoe thee. All theſe, and many moe meanes then theſe, the Lord hath to take proſperity from the vngodly. Adde, that ſometime the plague lighteth vpon him, which Danid prayed for vpon his enemies: the Extortioner (or Vſurer) catcheth all that he hath [e]. The Lord can make him when he Soweth much, to bring in but little, and to put vp his wealth into a broken bagge [f]: So that he ſhall conſume like the fat of lambs [g], and grow poore, and waſte in his outward eſtate, to the vexing of his heart, he knowes not how: yea and all this, many times in leſſe ſpace then the wealth was gathered. The tree which was many yeeres in growing, is burnt to aſhes in a ſhort ſpace: And the famous Temple at Ieruſalem, which was forty and ſix yeeres a building [h], was ſcarſe ſo many houres in burning. The wealth of many yeeres getting, is many times brought to nothing in an inſtant. It is like vnto the chaffe, which though it be a while laid vp together vpon an heape, yet on a ſudden commeth a blaſt of winde, and ſcattereth it to and fro, from the face of the earth, ſo that it is euen a thing vnpoſſible to bring it backe againe to the former condition: And by this meanes is that verified vpon the man of earth, which the Scripture ſaith: He hath deuoured ſubſtance, and he ſhall vomit it; for God ſhall drawe it out of his belly: The increaſe of his houſe ſhall goe away, it ſhall flow away in the day of Gods wrath, then ſhall none of his meate be left, therefore ſhall none hope for his goods [i]. As the Lord doth often thus deale with the wicked worldlings in his own perſon, ſo though he ſuffer haply the owner himſelfe to enioy that he hath during his time, yet he curſeth it to his poſterity. God layeth vp the ſorrow of the father for his children [k]: And, If his children be great in number, the ſword ſhall deſtroy them, and his poſterity ſhall not bee ſatisfied with bread [l]: He getteth a ſonne (ſaith Salomon,) and in his hand is nothing [m]: one that comes to beggery, notwithſtanding the great wealth of his predeceſſor. This is an euill which the Preacher ſaw vnder the Sunne, A man to whom God hath giuen riches, and treaſures, and honour, and he wanteth nothing for his ſoule of all that it deſireth, but God giueth him no power to eate thereof, but a ſtrange man ſhall eate it vp [n]. It is that which in this Pſalme [o] is called, Leaning riches for others: and wherewith the Lord twitteth the rich man; Whoſe ſhall theſe things be, which thou haſt prouided? [p] Thus the Lord when he is ſo pleaſed, can, and doth take away proſperity from the wicked. Now put caſe it continue in full meaſure with him ſo long as he continueth, yet at laſt the Lord taketh him from it. So he tooke the rich man from his wealth [q], Haman from his honour [r], Belthazzar from his Empire [s], Nabal from his abundance [t], Herod from his ſtate [u], the Glutton from his belly-cheere [x]. Indeed (ſaith Dauid) I haue ſeen the wicked

The vſe of this doctrine is twofold. The firſt is taught by Dauid, thus, Bee not vaine, if riches encreaſe, ſet not your heart thereon [b]. It is further vrged by Salomon: Wilt thou caſt thine eies vpon that which is nothing? For riches taketh her to her wings as an Egle, and flieth into the Heauen [c]. The Apoſtle Paul alſo preſſeth the ſame point: Charge them that are rich in this world, that they truſt not in vncertaine riches [d]; It is but folly for a man to truſt to that of which there is no aſſurance. All is but like to Ionas his Gourd, which came vp in a night, and withered in a night [e]. Rather we ſhould labour for that one needfull thing [f], whereof being once poſſeſſed, we can neuer after be depriued.

The ſecond vſe is taught in this Pſalme: Bee not afraid, let it neuer diſquiet thee, when one is made rich, and when the glory of his houſe is increaſed, for he ſhall take nothing away when hee dieth [g]: More at large in another Pſalme: Fret not thy ſelfe becauſe of the wicked man, neither bee enuious for the euill doers, for they ſhall ſoone be cut downe as the graſſe, and ſhall wither like the greene herb. And afterwards; Yet a little while, and the wicked ſhall not appeare, and thou ſhalt looke after his place, and hee ſhall not bee found, his day is comming [h], &c. So that the vſe is, to teach vs to poſſeſſe our ſoules with patience, notwithſtanding the gallantnes and iollity of the vngodly: for he hath but his time, like a great thiſtle which ſtartes vp in the Summer, and at the comming of Winter, is hidden in the earth; or, a counter, which now by the Merchant is put for an hundred pounds, and anon is throwne into the bag, and is no better then thoſe which ſtood but for an half-peny. Thus much for the firſt croſſe: the earthly man ſhall not be that which he wiſhed to be.

The 2. Vſe.

[g] Verſe 16.17.

Now followeth the ſecond: He ſhall be that he neuer looked to be. He is like the beaſts that die. This clauſe is to be applyed, chiefly to the end and death of the earthly man, in which, hee ſhall be like the beaſts that die: or, as it is more properly, He ſhall be like the beaſts dying of the moraine [i], and ſo become carion, and are good for nothing. Now for the opening hereof, we are to vnderſtand that the earthly minded man, is in his death like vnto beaſts ſo dying, in foure things eſpecially. The firſt is, that he dieth vnwillingly. So it is with the beaſts. It is in the nature of euery thing to deſire the preſeruation of it ſelfe, and to abhorre the contrary. Hereupon in the vnreaſonable creature there is a kind of ſtrugling and reluctation, and wraſtling with death, ſo that it doth not but by violence yeeld thereunto. Euen ſo it is with the vngodly, which mindeth only earthly things. His death (I know) may be peaceable in ſhew (the naturall ſtrength being waſted and abated by ſome long ſickneſſe,) and in ſpeech, he may pretend a willingneſſe to depart: but it is vnpoſſible that it ſhould be with fulneſſe of inward conſent. For what hope hath the Hypocrite, when he hath heaped vp riches, if God take away his ſoule? ſaith the Scripture [k]; And, when a wicked man dieth, his hope periſheth, ſaith Salomon [l]. So that becauſe he cannot with any comfort, aſſure himſelfe of entrance into reſt, therefore he cannot but be moſt vnwilling to depart. For who will be willing to part from a preſent ſetlednes, for a matter of vncertenty: who would not rather ſtay here to enioy that which he is well acquainted with, then to loſe his life for the hazard of he knows not what? True it is, Gods children long to be diſſolued [m], and I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand, ſaith Paul, in a comfortable and reioycing manner [n]. But

p Iob 18.14. with the wicked it is not ſo; death, to them is called The king of feare p, and the ſlymy valley is a place of terrour to their conceit. Therefore, they will fetch thy ſoule from thee q, ſaith God to the rich man. As who ſhould ſay, Thou art I know loth to depart, but they ſhall fetch it away from thee, they ſhall take it by violence. The ſecond particular wherein this earthly man is like to the dying Beaſts, is this: The carkeis of the beaſt ſo dying, cannot chuſe but be noyſome and vnſauory: the ſmell is offenſiue vnto euery one that paſſeth by, and the ſight vnpleaſing. So is the dying worldling in Gods ſight. Precious in the ſight of the Lord, is the death of his Saints, ſaith Dauid r. And no marualle; Their bodies are the Temples of the holy Ghoſt s: their ſoules are holy and vnblameable and without fault, (by the blood of Chriſt) in Gods ſight t. Their death therefore muſt needs be a ſacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſauour vnto God. As for the vngodly, it is not ſo with them. Their bodies are cages of vncleanneſſe, their throtes open ſepulchers u, their members weapons of vnrighteouſneſſe x: In their ſoules dwelleth the Prince that ruleth in the ayre, euen the ſpirit who worketh in the children of diſobedience y. How can they be but noyſome in the eyes of God, yea, moſt lothſome and abominable? Surely he will ſay vnto them, Depart from me, I know you not z. The third degree of likenes betwixt the dying beaſt, and the dying worldling is this: The body of a beaſt whom ſuch a diſeaſe hath quelled, becommeth a prey to the fowles of the aire, and is torne in peeces by other beaſts. Where the carkeis is, thither the Egles reſort, ſaith our Sauiour a. It fareth ſo with the worldling: for as his goods ill gotten come many times, through the iuſt iudgement of God, to be a prey to others, and to be the ſpoyle of ſtrangers, ſo his ſoule is ſeized vpon by the damned ſpirits, and is preſently arraigned before the Iudgement ſeate of God b, and is diſmiſſed thence into it owne place c, where it is kept in chaines vnder darkeneſſe, vnto the Iudgement of the great day d. The fourth and laſt point of likenes, is this: There is no regard had of the death of a bruit beaſt, the remembrance is ſoone gone. The owner may haply bewaile that loſſe, it being ſome diminution of his ſubſtance: but otherwiſe, it is a matter which the world paſſeth by and taketh no notice of. So is the death of the carnall worldling. There may be (perhaps) ſome ſorrow among his owne people, who receiued ſome outward benefit by his meanes, and with them his memory may continue. But elſe there is no miſſe. The Church of God hath no occaſion to lament his loſſe, in regard that it is depriued of a comfortable member. No man will open his mouth to ſay of him, Alas he is now gone, whoſe he had ſtill liued, ſuch was his zeale, his godly wiſdome, and good cariage, that he might much haue furthered Gods glory. But men let him goe, with ſome ſuch phraſe, What is ſuch an one gone? and there is an end; ſome other worldlings (perhaps) of the ſame humour, and of the like fleſhly diſpoſition, who hath been fellow with him in the ſame carnall courſes, may chance to ſay as the old Prophet did ouer the Prophet of God when he buried him, Alas my brother e, my old friend, ſuch an one is gone, with whom I haue ioyfully conuerſed many times, whom I haue been acquainted with ſo many yeeres, &c. Here is all. But Gods Church findes not it ſelfe maimed in regard of the holy communion of Saints. And thus by degrees his memory ſoone dieth, according to the ſaying of Salomon. The memoriall of the iuſt ſhall be bleſſed, but the name of the wicked ſhall rot f. His remembrance ſhall periſh from the earth, and he ſhal haue no name in the ſtreets g. And ſo much for the opening of this doctrine.

The Vſe.

Now to preuent all ſuſpitious miſconſtruings, I muſt (before I mention the vſe) ſay thus much h, If any man ſhall ſpider-like turne the ſweet taſte of a well meant ſpeech into poyſon, and imagine it to be an inuectiue againſt ſome particular, he ſhall therein wrong both me and himſelfe: Me, in vncharitable miſtaking me: himſelfe, becauſe he ſhall by that meanes be hindred from making that good vſe of the doctrine taught, which is required. If you demand of me therefore, whom I meane by this man of whom I haue diſcourſed hitherto, I ſay

vnto thee (whosoeuer thou art which makest the question,) Thou art the man if so be thou be such an one as is in this Psalme described, which trustest in thy goods, and boastest in the multitude of thy riches [i]. My Sermon hitherto hath been as a parable: in which though one singular man hath been named, yet one in speciall hath not been meant. I will make the morrall and meaning to be the same that our Sauiour Christ made to that speech of his, touching the rich man: In the end to shew his true intent, he addeth this saying, [k] So is he that gathereth riches to himselfe, and is not rich in God. The same is the man intended in this doctrine. But as for ayming at any one in particular, my conscience is free in the sight of God. And therefore let vs all apprehend and entertaine it as a matter which concernes our selues, and make this vse of it, to beware how in our liues and conuersations, we be like brute beasts led with sensualty [l], or like horse and mule which vnderstandeth not [m], or as the sow, whose greatest felicity is to wallow in mire [n], or in vnbridled lusts, like fed horses [o], or otherwise like the baser creatures groueling still on the earth, and alwaies looking downward: For this is certen, if we liue like beasts, we shall perish like the beasts, and our last end shall be like theirs, yea, and worse then theirs; becausse death which is to them an end of woe, shall be to vs the beginning of sorrowes, and as it were a prologue to the most wofull Tragedy of a neuer ending misery.

The Wiſe Mans Verdict:

PRO. 14.32.

The wicked ſhall be caſt away for his malice, but the Righteous hath hope in his Death.

WEe haue a rule giuen vs in the Scripture, not to iudge of any man by his preſent outward eſtate: becauſe (as the Preacher ſaith) All things come alike to all [a]: Nay for the moſt part, the wicked of the world are not plagued with other men [b]: So that hee which ſhall paſſe his Verdict, according to the outward accidents, ſhall iuſtifie the wicked [c], and cauſeleſly condemne the Generation of Gods children [d]. Dauid therefore hath giuen vs another rule, namely, to paſſe by the preſent outward condition of ſuch, as an inſufficient witneſſe, and to marke the end [e] of both, becauſe by the iſſue of both a man ſhall truly vnderſtand the eſtate of both. Now if our care be to follow this direction, and to learn to know by the examination of the ends, whether of the two is the better, to be Wicked, or to be Righteous, we cannot haue a truer glaſſe, wherein to behold both, then this ſpeech of the wiſeſt Salomon; The wicked ſhall be caſt away for his malice: there is the end of the wicked: but the Righteous hath hope in his death, there is the concluſion of the Righteous. Of theſe two parts I will ſpeake in order.

The diuiſion.

Of the 1 part, in which alſo the 1. doctrin of the Text is opened at large.

The ſubſtance of the firſt part is, concerning a puniſhment to bee inflicted vpon a certaine man; for the cleering whereof, we are to examine three things: 1. The name of the offender, Wicked. 2. The nature of his offence, Malice. 3. The equality of his puniſhment, Shall be caſt away.

The name by which the offender is here deſigned, is Wicked: a name very fitly agreeing to euery man by nature. For, when the Lord looked downe from heauen vpon the children of men, to ſee if there were any that would vnderſtand and ſeeke after God, they were all corrupt, there was not one that did good, no not one [f]. So that ſo long as a man continueth a meere naturall man, that is, one who was as he firſt borne in iniquity [g], ſo goeth on to drinke iniquity like water [h]: He is very deſeruedly entitled with this name, A wicked man. And therefore by wicked, here wee muſt vnderſtand, the Naturall man [i] without Chriſt [k], not being yet renued in the ſpirit of his mind [l], nor begotten againe vnto a liuely hope [m], by the word of truth [n].

Now the offence which maketh him liable to the enſuing puniſhment, is malice: which word is not here to be reſtrained according to the common vſe of it in our language, to the ſinne of vncharitablenes alone, though euen that ſin alſo may be well brought within this compaſſe: but it is here of a larger extent, it is the very ſame which Moſes calleth a roote that bringeth forth gall and worme-wood: that is, (as it is alſo there expounded,) A walking according to the ſtubborneſſe of a mans owne heart, making light of the words of the Curſe [o] againſt ſinne.

It

It is that which Salomon ſpeaketh of elſewhere [p], when the heart is fully ſet to doe euill. It is that which Eſay mentioned, when men draw iniquity with cords of vanity: and ſinne as with cart-ropes [q]: ſtudying how to commit more vngodlineſſe. It is that which Paul tearmeth a deſpiſing the Riches of Gods bounty, not knowing that it ſhould lead to repentance [r].

In one word, it is that ſinne which Dauid toucheth in the Pſalme [s], a hating to be reformed, together with a ſcornefull caſting the Word of God behind one: a man ſeeming to ſay to God as the wicked ſpeake in Iob [t]: Depart from me, for I deſire not the knowledge of thy waies. This is the ſin of malice in this place; namely, a hardned, wretchleſſe, ſecure, peruerſe, obſtinate continuing and going on in ſin, without repentance. This is the offence.

The puniſhment followeth, ſhall be caſt away: the very name whereof (mee thinkes) ſhould make our entrailes to tremble, our lips to ſhake, and rottennеſſe to enter into our bones [u]. For ſurely, of that man, againſt whom it ſhall be awarded, it may be truly ſaid, as was ſaid of Iudas, It had been good for him if he had neuer been borne [x]. And the ſame may well ſay, as did Iob in his perplexity [y], Let the day periſh wherein I was borne, and the night when it was ſaid; there is a man child conceiued, Why died I not in the birth, or why died I not when I came out of the wombe? And for me, although I had the Tongue of the learned [z]; nay, albeit I could ſpeake with the tongues of Angels [a], yet I were not able to deſcribe it vnto you as it is: for that which cannot enter into any mans heart to conceiue, paſſeth the skill of any man to expreſſe. Notwithſtanding, I will endeauour it, that ſo by the conſideration of the puniſhment, we may learne to beware of that offence, that is able to lay vs open thereunto.

This puniſhment then, to be caſt away, or to be forſaken of God (for ſo do I account it all one) hath three degrees: Firſt, it is begun in this life. Secondly, it is increaſed at the time of death. Thirdly, it is perfited at the day of Iudgement.

Of theſe three degrees I will treat in ſeuerall.

Firſt of all, The wicked is caſt away for his malice in this life, when as the Lord bringeth vpon him that euill, which in one place the Scripture calleth the Spirit of Slumber [b]: in another, a reprobate minde [c]: in the third, a heart that cannot repent [d]: in a fourth, a being paſt feeling [e]. It is the ſame which we commonly call, hardneſſe of heart, when a man is ſo benummed, that he cannot bee mooued either with the promiſes of Gods mercies, or with the feare of his iudgements: he is not affected with the one, nor affrighted with the other. Of all the Iudgements which the Lord can inflict in this life, this is the moſt terrible, and ſuch, as that thoſe which know any thing, haue learned to feare it more, then either the plagues of Egypt, or the botches of Iob, or all other outward miſeries whatſoeuer. God laid many puniſhments vpon Pharaoh, but this exceeded all, when hee ſaid, that he would harden Pharaohs heart [f]. If Pharaoh had had a yeelding and a relenting heart, thoſe other outward afflictions might haue been profitable vnto him: but becauſe his heart was hardned, thoſe puniſhments were vnto him but as the fore-runners, and preparatiues of eternall deſtruction. In Deuteronomy [g], the Lord threatneth many iudgements vpon diſobedience, but that is the moſt grieuous, I will ſmite thee with blindnes, and with aſtoniſhment of heart [h]. Dauid knew and conſidered this right well, and therefore, after the committing of his great ſinne, he begged earneſtly of God: O caſt me not away from thy preſence, and take not thine holy Spirit from me [i]. He cared not what became of him, ſo that the Spirit of the Lord might abide ſtill with him, to mollifie and to ſoften his heart, and to diſpoſe and frame him to obedience. So in another place he prayeth, Keepe thy ſeruant from preſumptuous ſinnes, let them not raigne ouer me [k]. As if he had ſaid, Lord, neuer ſuffer me to come to that extremity, to ſinne with an high hand againſt thee, ſo that all feare of thy Iuſtice ſhould bee taken from me. Theſe were Dauids ſutes, trembling within himſelfe at the very thought and conceit of this punishment. As it is a fearefull punishment, so it is that which the Lord most inflicteth vpon the obstinacy and malice of godlesse people; according as is shadowed out vnto vs in the parable of the Vineyard, vsed by the Prophet [k]. There the Lord compareth the house of Israel vnto a vineyard planted in a very fruitfull Hill; which notwithstanding very great cost bestowed, remained altogether fruitles: the Lord looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wilde grapes: he expected Iudgement, but behold oppression; for Righteousnesse, but behold a crying. Now (saith he) I will tell you what I will doe to my Vineyard; I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten vp; I will breake the wall thereof, and it shall be troden downe, and I will lay it waste, &c. All which sheweth, that when men haue long abused the Lords long suffering, and haue still hated to be reformed, he will leaue them (as it were) to the spoile, he will with-hold from them the graces and blessings of his Spirit, and will keep away all good meanes that might better them, and will giue them ouer to those vile courses, from which, his mercy, and patience, and louing kindnesse could not reclaime them. Thus it is iust with God, to make one sinne the punishment of another, to reuenge the malice of the wicked with a hardned heart, to lay iniquity vpon his iniquity [l], and to let him that will needs be filthy, to be filthy still [m]. And for this cause the Lord so dealeth with the malicious wicked man, that either he is neuer reproued by the Ministery of the Word [n], or else if he be reproued and taught, his heart is made fat, and his eares heauy, lest he should vnderstand with his heart, and so conuert and bee healed [o]. This is the first degree of Reiection.

The second is at the time of death, and that hath three branches: for at death one of these three things alwaies befalleth the wicked person. First, either he dieth suddenly; secondly, or he dieth sullenly; thirdly, or he dyeth desperately. And first, of dying suddenly. It is the common opinion of many, and they doe thereby vtterly beguile their owne soules, that howsoeuer they doe demeane themselues in their course of life, yet they shall haue a time for preparation to another world, some lingring sicknes, giuing them a sufficient warning of their end. In this time, their meaning is to dispose of their conscience, and by the best aduice they can get, to make prouision for their soules. But now it fals out many times, that the Lord frustrates and disappoints this idle hope, and they which imagine by a lingring sicknes, to haue time enough to be prepared, goe downe suddenly to the graue [p]. Thus the rich man in the Gospell, when he was in his best hopes of a long and contented life, imagining that he should haue time enough to spend that quietly, which he had gotten greedily, was suddenly arrested with that killing message, O foole, this night will they fetch away thy soule from thee [q]. So Belshazzar the King of the Chaldeans, when he was in his greatest iollity, in his royal feast, and (as it is most likely) had not so much as a thought of death, saw the writing vpon the wall, that his Kingdome was numbred, and the same night he was slaine [r]. Thus was Korah and his faction suddenly swallowed vp in the midst of their rebellion [s]. Thus was Ishbosheth smitten in the dead of his sleepe [t]. Thus the house fell on Iobs children, while they were in the height of their banquet [u]. Thus Ananias and Saphira sunke downe at Peters feet, in the midst of their lying hypocrisie [*]. So we haue seen, and heard, and knowne, many taken away at the very instant, and put out like a candle, and cut off as the top of an eare of corne [x], when, of all thoughts, the thought of death hath been furthest from the. Not that I take vpon me to determine peremptorily, that euery one who so dieth, is damned; for Gods Iudgements are vnsearchable, and his waies past finding out [y]; neither can death after what fashion soeuer it commeth, come sudden to him that is prepared: but this is that which I stand vpon, and which I haue (I thinke) sufficiently prooued, that the Lord both can and doth many times by a sudden iudgement, make voide their hopes, who trusting to a preparation in their last sicknesse, doe neglect the best time, and the fittest opportunity for Repentance.

Well,

Well, put case the malicious wicked man escape this first euill, and be visited after the most ordinary visitation of all men[z], yet behold, the wrath of the Lord is not so turned away, but his hand is stretched out still[a] his storehouse[b] of Iudgements can affoord another plague; and that is fullenesse and blockishnesse, such a sicknesse seazing vpon a man, which together with weakenesse of body, brings dulnesse of heart, and drowsinesse of spirit. The Lord hath the hearts of all men in his hand, the opening and vnlocking them is a thing onely in his power: and as he is mercifull to offer grace, so he is iust to punish the contempt of grace: and for that cause he doth often inflict this iudgement, that those men should in their sicknesses and at their deaths forget themselues, which in their life-times forgat God. This is that fatnesse of heart, which Dauid noteth in the wicked: Their heart (saith he) is as fat as grease[c]. Paul calleth it, a vaile laid ouer the heart[d]. We haue a pregnant example hereof in Nabal[e], the very true patterne of a right worldling, He made a feast like the feast of a King at his sheep-shearing; his belly was his God[f], and his good cheare was his glory: the next morning his heart died within him, and he was like a stone; there was no more sense or taste of goodnesse in him, then in a stone; within some ten daies after he died. He had (as we say) in these ten daies, a faire time to repent: but how could he? his senses were locked vp, and his soule within him was benummed, so that if euen Samuel himselfe (which was then but newly dead[g]) had been liuing, and present with him, or some such other, and had vsed his best skill and gift to perswade him, all had bin but lost labour, God had forsaken him, and in his iustice euen sealed him vp in his owne dulnesse. The Lord knowes, that our times are euen full of many such men and women, euen possessed in their sicknesse with the spirit of slumber, making themselues beleeue, that all with them is well, when they neuer yet knew what it was to be in danger of Gods wrath, presuming to haue a part with God, and yet perceiue not how they haue displeased God. Talke with them of their knowledge, what vnderstanding they haue in the mystery of Christ, inquire touching their feeling, what apprehension they haue of sinne, what true longing they haue after the righteousnesse of Christ; these things are riddles vnto them; you shall finde in them no sauour of sound knowledge, no token of true repentance, no fruit of liuely faith, no testimony of a well-grounded hope, no signe of ioy, as looking for a better life: you shall heare no bewailing of former slips, no bemoning or lamenting themselues, no laboring for assurance of Gods loue; nothing but wofull deadnesse and dulnesse of spirit, breaking out (perhaps) now and then into some generall termes of acknowledgement, or of desire of mercy, but nothing which may argue a through-touch, or a comfortable expectation of Gods fauour. The ignorance of this point deceiueth many, and bewitcheth a number of soules. For mens ordinary opinion is, that if a man can perfectly say his prayers (as we call it) if he can say (I crie God mercy and all the world) or testifie that he beleeues in Iesus Christ (which is yet more then many can make shew of) and protest a willingnesse to die; and so depart as meekely as a Lambe, or goe away as quietly as a Bird in a shell; that then he is certainly saued, and there is no doubt but he is with God. But (alas) I pray be not deceiued. Dauid speaking of the wicked of his time, saith, there were no bands in their death, they liued merrily, and died quietly: yet he saith after, that God doth cast them downe into desolation, and that they are horribly consumed[h]. And it is most sure that a man may (to the eye of the beholders) die peaceably, and haue many ordinary good words in his mouth, and yet goe to hell. Our Sauiour hath spoken it, and it must be true, That many shall say to him, Lord, Lord, which for all that shall bee put off with this; Depart from mee, I neuer knew you[i]. And therefore, howsoeuer I would not perswade any to be rash in his iudgement touching others, but to leaue Gods courses to himselfe, yet it is wisdome for euery man to feare this for his own particular, and not to flatter himselfe in his owne dulnes, but to beg earnestly of God, that howsoeuer otherwise hee shall thinke good to deale with him, yet he would not leaue him to a dead heart, but would quicken his desire to the mercy of Christ, by the liuely sense of his own vnworthinesse.

The third branch of this casting away in the time of death, is by leauing him to die desperately, that is, with some feeling of sin, but without any taste of comfort. And this commeth to passe two waies. Sometimes the wicked man hauing in his sickenesse some apprehension of sin, and some kind of desire to heare comfort, and (it may be) to others seeming, some fitnesse to receiue it, yet it so commeth to passe in Gods most iust dispensation, that at the instant there is not a man to be found, that is able to apply spirituall comfort vnto him, that knoweth how to dip the tip of his finger in water, wherewith to refresh his wearied and fainting soule. For, whatsoeuer we thinke of it, it is a matter of more skill then we are aware of, to know how to speake to the heart of a sicke man. Esay saith, that he had the tongue of the learned giuen him, for this one piece of seruice, to know to minister a word in time to him that is weary[k]. And although when one is sick, many will come to testifie their kindnes, and will speak (according to their skill) to comfort the patient, yet it may be said of the most, as Iob said of his friends, Miserable comforters they are[l]: For these generall speeches, Call vpon God, be of good cheare, you shall doe well I doubt not: Feare ye nothing, and the like; they be to no purpose, they are like playsters too little for a sore, and are many times as vnfit, and as vnseasonable, as is snow in Summer, or, as the raine in Harueſt[m]. Now (I say) the Lord oftentimes so dealeth with the wicked, that though he wisheth comfort, yet (as it is said of the hungry prodigall) there is no man that can giue vnto him[n]. For as God oftentimes, for the sinne of a Nation, sendeth such a famine of the Word, that men running too and fro to seeke it, shall not find it[o]: so it also falleth out diuers times in the cases of particular men, that they may send and seeke for one to instruct their ignorant soules, and to relieue their languishing spirits, and yet shall not light vpon any that is fit for such a seruice. Another way of furthering the desperate end of a wicked man (if this do faile) is the leauing of him to that horror of conscience, that albeit there be one with him, able to discouer vnto him the infinit and vnspeakeable mercy of God in Christ, yet hee shall bee so swallowed vp of dismaiednesse, that he shall not know which way to entertain the comfort that is offered. Then he which in this life and health and iollity thought no sinne to be dangerous, shall not be able to be otherwise perswaded, but that euery smal default is damnable; the diuell shall so lay open all his sins, the sinnes of his youth, the sinnes of his age, his vanity, his swearing, his riot, his contempt of Gods word, his vncleannes, his oppression, and such like, and so set them (as it were) in troupes before him, that all the comfortable speeches in the world shall not affect him, but he shall conclude with Cain, My sinne is greater then can be pardoned[p]: and so as he liued without conscience, his death shall be without comfort: as in his life time hee made a mocke of the counsell of the Lord, and cast his words behind him, so now the Lord will laugh at his destruction, and mocke when his feare is come[q]. Thus, as it is truly said, that the hand of the Lord is not shortened, when he is purposed to saue, so neither is his arme weakned, when he is minded to destroy: he is euery where round about vs, we are as it were in a circle, the further we are from one part, the neerer are we to another. If the wicked man escape sudden death, he is in danger of a dulling sickenesse: if he be free from that, he is like to fall into horrour of conscience, and to be ouerwhelmed with despaire. Now to make the matter more apparant, the forsaking and casting away which is at the very point of death, and at the parting of the soule from the body, is meet to be considered. The course which God taketh with his children is this: When the soule is set at liberty from the prison of the body, it is instantly conueyed by the Angels into Abrahams bosome[r], it returnes to

Now let vs conſider how this puniſhment begun in this life, and encreaſed at death, is made perfit at the day of Iudgement: & that is, when as the body formerly rotten in the duſt, ſhall by the mighty worke of God be reunited to the ſoule, and both together puniſhed with euerlaſting perdition from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power [d]. This is the vpſhot of all, this is the laſt forſaking, this is an vtter and an endleſſe forſaking; the miſery whereof it paſſeth my skill to expreſſe: Only thus much we may conceiue. Dauid ſaith, That in the preſence of God there is fulneſſe of ioy, and at his right hand pleaſures for euermore [e]: therefore we may be ſure, that on the contrary part, out of Gods preſence, there is fulneſſe of miſery, and at his left hand [f] woes for euermore: there is nothing to be found, but that which Ezekiel ſaw written in the Roll of the Booke which was giuen him, Lamentations and mourning, and Woe [g].

Thus I haue vnfolded the firſt clauſe of my Text, & the doctrine therein contained: the extract (as it were) and briefe ſum of all is this. The ſinner that hates to be reformed, ſhal be in his life time giuen ouer to hardnes of heart; in the end of his daies he ſhall be either ſuddenly arreſted, or elſe ſtrucken in ſicknes with deadnes of heart; or if he be capable of comfort, he ſhal want meanes to receiue it; at the inſtant of death he ſhall be committed to the cuſtody of the damned ſpirits, and at the day of Iudgement, both body and ſoule ſhall haue their ſhare in the Lake that burneth with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death [h].

I pray you let vs endeauour to make ſome good vſe of this point, and let vs with patience heare it applyed to our ſelues. I know that for the generall wee will all bee ready to acknowledge, that the Wicked ſhall be caſt off for his Malice, and we will confeſſe, that it is iuſt with God to deale ſo with him; but in particular to lay this to our owne hearts, as though we were chargeable with the ſin which is here called Malice, therein (perhaps) we will not be ſo forward, and therfore without applying this Doctrine will not be ſo profitable. To come to the point then, that the firſt title of Wicked is well agreeing to euery one of vs, if we be taken as we be by Nature, is a cleer caſe, & I will preſume vpon all your iudgements, that you do willingly and freely confeſſe ſo much: all the queſtion will be touching the latter, whether this ſin of Malice be our ſin, yea or no? and therefore that point is eſpecially to be ſtood vpon. I expounded Malice in the beginning to be a peruerſe careleſſe going on in Euill, without repentance. So that he, whom the Lord hath diuerſly dealt with, ſomtimes by the outward voice of the word, ſometimes by inward checks of conſcience, ſometimes by croſſes vpon himſelfe, ſometimes by iudgements vpon others, and yet remaineth vnreformed, the ſame man he was wont to be, he, in the language of the Scripture, is rightly called a Malicious wicked Man. Now what thinke wee? Is there need for the finding of a man thus diſpoſed, to make ſome priuy ſearch, or as the prophet ſpeakes [i], to Search Ieruſalem with lights, as though it were ſome rare or difficult matter to light vpon a man thus conditioned? Surely no.

And that this that I ſay, may the more affect vs, I will name you fiue ſignes of heardneſſe of heart, which you ſhall ſee to be common amongſt vs in theſe times.

The firſt is: The not fearing of it; ſo much ariſeth out of that which hath bin ſpoken formerly: for ſeeing this puniſhment of hardneſſe is of that nature that it deadeth the heart, it muſt needs bring with it a feareleſneſſe in regard of it ſelf. As he which hath it, ſcarſely knoweth he hath it, (for he who complaineth of hardneſſe of heart, his heart is not hardned,) ſo when he heareth it threatned, he is no whit affected or touched therewithall. And therefore it is certen, that as no man is further from this puniſhment then he which moſt feareth it, ſo no man is deeper in it, then he which leaſt regardeth it. A ſecond ſigne, is Greedineſſe in the committing of Sin. Paul coupleth theſe two together, to be paſt feeling, y Ephes. 4. 19. and to worke all vncleannes with greedines [y]. A man therefore who is egerly ſet to the practiſe of euill, and is ready to catch all occaſions to commit it, we may ſafely conclude of him, that this ſecret vengeance hath ouertaken him. A third ſigne is ſhameleſneſſe and boldneſſe in Iniquity. Eſay, deſcribing the hardened people of the Iewes, ſaith thus of them: The triall of their countenance teſtifieth against them, yea, they declare their sins, as Sodome, they hide them not [z]: and Ieremy of the same people speaketh thus: Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not ashamed, neither could they haue any shame [a]. And in another place, he saith, they had a Whores forehead [b], that could not blush. Therefore when men are not abashed to haue sinnes euen noted in them, and seen to be ordinarily practised by them, it betokeneth that this hard disease hath seized vpon their hearts. A fourth signe is, hating to be reproued: There is euer some good hope of that man who can meekely suffer the words of aduice, when admonition is receiued with calmnes of spirit, it is a good testimony: so on the other side it is a signe of a forsaken heart, to spurne at reproofe, to snuffe at it, to account him an Enemie, who telleth the truth [c]. A scorner loueth not him that rebuketh him, saith Salomon [d], and Christ calleth them Swine which turne againe, and all to rent them which cast pearles before them [e]. The last signe is, the making light of the threats of Gods vengeance. Thus the hardened people of old were wont to say, that Prophets were but as wind [f], and to thinke in their hearts, The Lord will doe neither good nor euill [g], and to come in mocking manner to the Prophets, saying, What is the burden of the Lord [h]? iesting at that which was threatned and scoffing at it, as at an idle tale. These signes of hardnes of hart will soone appeare to be amongst vs. Touching the first signe, aske your selues: you haue heard this matter now treated of vnto you, how hath it affected you, what terror thereof hath it struck into you, how hath it moued you secretly out of trembling hearts to beg of God to keepe it from you? Must not many say, that it hath been but an idle sound vnto them, and that their spirits and consciences within them haue not been wrought vpon thereby? yes questionlesse. Againe (for the next signe) are not men eger and greedy to commit sinne, are not our worldlings greedy of gaine, our vsurers greedy of encrease, are not men giuen to vanity, greedy of delight, are not the malicious greedy of reuenge? Thirdly, doth not shamelesnesse sit in the foreheads and faces of many, as though it were a glory and ioy to do wickedly? Are men ashamed to be known to be ignorant? Are they sorry for it, that they vnderstand so little in matters that concernes the good of their soules? Are Swearers ashamed, that any should heare them blaspheme? Are mispenders of the Sabbath ashamed to bee seen in their course, doe they hide themselues in corners, and doe it closely, that they may not be espied? Doe vicious persons hang downe their heads, becanse men take notice of their naughtines? Doe rioters blush at it, that their excesse is looked on, or doe they not rather make the streets ring of their vnrulinesse? Are proud people touched with it, that they are pointed at for their folly? Do those which speake euill of the truth which is taught, and scoffe at good things, whisper it in secret, for feare lest they should be ouer-heard? Doth not euery kind of euill hold vp the head, as though it had rather deserued commendation, then were any way to be reproued? Fourthly, be not the guilty in these and the like kinds impatient of reproofe? Doth it not vexe and enrage them, that the word of God findes them out? Should not Christ himselfe if he were in body present as he was once, haue cause to say as he then did; The World hateth me, because I testifie of it, that the workes of it are euill [i]? There be many exceptions made against preaching, but the ground of all is this, men cannot indure to be reproued. Lastly for the last signe, whatsoeuer iudgement is denounced in the name of the Lord, whatsoeuer is vrged touching the neerenes and strictnesse of his iustice, it is generally iested at; men thinke they haue heard such threatning oft, but yet haue escaped, and therefore their resolution is, that it shall all be turned into vanity: so that the terror of the Lord [k], be it neuer so grauely and effectually discouered, doth rather waken then weaken their outragious extremity. This then is the issue of all this speech, touching the signes of hardnesse of heart, which are amongst vs: namely, that there need no doubt to be made of the truth of this which which Salomon ſaith, touching the caſting off of the wicked, ſith we already may ſee the firſt degree thereof, in the flintines of mens harts, which is an aſſurance, that whithout ſpeedy preuention, all the other certenly ſhall enſue: and therfore this putteth men in mind of the ſpeech of Moſes to Aaron, not long after the rebellion of Corah: when as God brought in a ſudden Peſtilence among the people for their murmuring; Take the Cenſor (ſaith he) and put fire therein of the Altar, and put therein incenſe, and goe quickly to the Congregation, and make an attonement for them: for there is wrath gone out from the Lord, the plague is begun[l]: ſo it is fit that we ſhould al prepare to meet our God[m], and that with ſpeed: for ſurely the plague is begun: hardnes of heart hath ſpread it ſelfe far, and this firſt Woe is a preſaging of the reſt, that the Lord will caſt vs off in ſicknes, in our death, and in the day of Iudgement. O let our eies caſt out riuers of waters, let them drop without ſtay[n], let vs ply the Lord with importunate and ſtriuing[o] prayers, and giue him no reſt[p], vntill he take the ſtony heart out of our bodies, and giue vs hearts of fleſh[q], yeelding and melting hearts[r], that Gods puniſhment may be feareſull vnto vs[s]; wee may bee afraid of his iudgements[t], and ſtand in awe of his words[u]: So ſhall the Lord take pleaſure in vs; for to him (ſaith he) I will looke, euen to him that is poore and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at my words[x]. And thus much for the firſt part of this Scripture.

We are now come to the ſecond part. But the righteous hath hope in his Death. In handling whereof, I am to open vnto you two things: 1. What is a Righteous man. 2. What it is to haue hope in death.

One is ſaid to be Iuſt or Righteous ſundry wayes: 1. Iuſt by nature[x], and ſo no meere man euer was ſince Adams fall. Surely there is no man iuſt on Earth, that doth good and ſinneth not[y]. 2. Iuſt in opinion and conceit[z], ſuch Chriſt meant in that ſpeech, I am not come to call the righteous[a]. 3. Iuſt by imputation[b], ſo was Abraham: he beleeued God, and it was counted to him for righteouſnes[c]. 4. Iuſt in reſpect of purpoſe and true endeauour[d]: So was Paul, I forget that which is behind, and endeauour my ſelfe vnto that which is before, &c: and he would all that are perfect to be ſo minded. The Righteouſneſſe by imputation, begets this latter: and this latter is an vndeceiuing ſigne of that.

This Iuſtice by imputation diſcouering it ſelf in the purſute of Righteouſnes, by Papiſts is ſcoffed at as a meere colluſion, and by diuers profeſſors of Religion, is not ſo well conceiued of; & therfore to ſtop the mouths of gain-ſayers, and to helpe the weak vnderſtanding of thoſe which mean wel, I wil a little open it.

And firſt touching Imputation, that is, God his accounting vs Righteous, in and for the Righteouſnes of Chriſt, it is made plaine three waies. 1. By conſidering the proportion betwixt Chriſt his dying as a ſinner for vs, & our liuing as righteous for him. It is an excellent place in the Apoſtle[f]: He made him to be ſinne for vs, which knew no ſinne: that we ſhould be made the righteouſnes of God in him. Out of which place, this is expreſly concluded, that we are ſo made righteous before God for Chriſt, as he was made a ſinner for vs. Now how was Chriſt made a ſinner for vs? Surely by Imputation: The Lord layed vpon him the Iniquity of vs all[g]. God accounted our ſin, his, and ſo he was puniſhed as a ſinner: and ſo he accounts his Righteouſneſſe, ours, and ſo are we rewarded as Righteous.

f 2 Cor. 5. 21.
g Iſa. 53. 6.

This is that Royall exchange made betwixt Ieſus Chriſt, and the true beleeuer: he becomes a Curſe[h] for the beleeuer: that the beleeuer may be an heire of bleſſing[i] through him. 2. This point is cleered by examining the Analogy betwixt Adam and Chriſt. The beleeuers are ſaid to be ſo made Righteous by the Obedience of Chriſt, as they were made Sinners by the diſobedience of Adam[k]. Now how commeth that perſonall ſinne of Adams, in eating of the fordidden Tree, to be our ſinne alſo, making vs euen in it ſelfe liable to eternall death, but onely by Imputation? Adam was a publike perſon, and his Act was reputed the Act of his whole poſterity.

h Gal. 3. 13.
i 1 Pet. 3. 9.
k Rom. 5. 19.

After the ſame manner, the obedience of Chriſt how commeth it to be for our

Righteouſ-

Righteousnesse, but by imputation onely? he stould before God, in the person of the whole body of his elect, and therefore is his obedience reputed the obedience of all the elect. Thirdly it wil appeare by scanning the nature of suretiship, when one man vndertakes and engageth himselfe for another. Let the case be betwixt Paul and Onesimus. Onesimus ran away from Philemon his master, and at his departure (by all likelihood) tooke with him some part of his masters goods; Paul becomes a mediatour for him, and for the better furtherance of his request, he offereth to see the wrong and dammage which is done, to be discharged: If he hath hurt thee, or oweth thee ought, that put on mine account, I Paul haue written this with my owne hand, I will recompence it[l]. By this meanes Onesimus is discharged, and Paul is become debtor to Philemon; but how? Neither hath Onesimus repaied ought, neither hath Paul stolne or borrowed ought: It is by Imputation. By vertue of the vndertaken suretiship, Onesimus his debt lies vpon Paul, and Pauls freedome from debt, turnes to the acquaintance of Onesimus. So is it in this case of iustification. Wee stood bound to God to performe so many duties of righteousnes, and to sustaine so much damage, euen the eternall weight of Gods displeasure, for so many holy seruices vnperformed. Christ commeth betweene, and giueth himselfe to God the Father for a full discharge.

l Phil. v. 18, 19

Thus is he now reputed the Debtor, and must pay the mulct, we adiudged righteous, and must receiue the reward: and yet neither is he a Debtor by his owne priuate transgression, nor we freed by our own personal iustice, but both by Imputation. This similitude is very fitting, because, as our sinnes are called debts[m], so Christ is said to haue giuen himselfe, as a full price, proportionable euery way to our debt[n], and so by his stripes to haue healed vs[o].

m Mat. 6. 12.
o Isa. 53. 5.

I maruell Papists should gibe at Imputation, as at an absurdity, when as they themselues maintaine Supererogation; whereby the holinesse of one man is disposed of, to the spirituall benefit of another.

Now nex, for that Righteousnes which is so called in respect of the endeauour, it hath in it no inconuenience, seeing both Paul (as hath been said) calleth euen those Christians perfit, who accounting themselues not already perfit, doe notwithstanding with their best intention follow hard toward the marke, for the price of the high calling of God in Christ Iesus[p], and our Sauiour pronounceth those Blessed, who doe hunger after righteousnes[q]. He then here in this Text, is a iust or a righteous man, who is iustified before God by the imputed righteousnes of Christ, and hath giuen vp[r] himselfe to Gods seruice, in holinesse and righteousnesse, before him all his dates[s].

q Matth. 5. 6.
r Rom. 12. 1.
s Luk. 1. 74, 75

The next point in opening the sense, is, what it is to haue hope in death. By hope here we must not conceiue that which is commonly so called, and which is almost in euery godlesse wretch, namely, a groundlesse conceit, that all is well, and that God will be good vnto vs: for in that sense, the most carnall men haue a kind of hope in death: They thinke they shall doe well enough, and no doubt the Lord will take them to his mercy, &c. when as indeed, being sifted and looked into, they haue no shew of good reason, why they should so hope. But the Hope here spoken of, is of another nature, it is built vpon a farre surer foundation; and therefore it is termed a hope not making ashamed[t], because he which hath it, is neuer disappointed, but alwaies enioyeth the end of his Hope. Elsewhere it is called the Helmet of Saluation[u], because it is (as it were) the safegard to all other parts of Christian holines. So that this Hope ariseth not out of imagination or supposition, but out of the assurance of the fauour of God in Christ Iesus. Hope is nothing else but an expectation of the accomplishment of that whereof we receiue assurance by faith. Faith ascertaineth the soule, that for Christs sake God hath forgiuen it, and hath acquited it from the condemnation which it had deserued, and that heauen is now reserued for it, a place being there prepared by Christ, who is for that purpose gone before[x]. Hope is the quieting of the soule, begetting in it both an earnestnes of desire, and yet withall, a contentednes to awaite Gods

x Iohn. 14. 23.

leasure for the enioying of that happines, whereof faith formerly hath assured it. So then, the righteous hath hope in his death: that is, the man iustified before God by Christ, and studying to walke in the waies of righteousnes in his life, when death commeth, and his soule is now ready to depart from his body, quietly awaiteth the Lords good leasure, contenting himself with an assured expectation of entring into a place of rest [x], by the merit and death of Christ Iesus.

Now what a blessing this is, to haue hope in death, is more easie to be felt in hart, then to be vttered by mouth. There is nothing more miserable then a man at the point to die, who hath no hope, no comfortable assurance of entring into rest: Hell it selfe cannot be more hellish, then the torment of a conscience in suspence, hauing many reasons to feare the worst, and little ground for which to looke for fauour. A wounded spirit (saith Salomon) who can beare [y]? And I pray you, thinke what can comfort a dying man, if he haue not this hope? Many things there are of force to discourage him, but nothing that can relieue him. If hee looke into his body, he feeles nothing but weaknes, himself panting for life, and euen now (as it were) drawing his last breath: if he behold his friends, he seeth them weeping, lamenting, and wringing their hands, which breeds a suspition in him, that sure in all mens opinion his time is neer, and his case miserable: if he aske his Physitian, he tels him he hath small hope of his recouery: if he returne into his owne conscience, there he finds a catalogue of sins, ready to become euen a cloud of witnesses against him, when he must anon appeare before God: If he thinke vpon hell, he seems to see it (as is were) gaping, ready to deuour him: If he thinke vpon God and vpon heauen, he beholds Gods frowning countenance, and heauen gates euen shut against him. Alas (poore soule) what can comfort him? What shall be found out able to refresh him? not all the cordials and restoratiues of Phisitians, not the attendance of seruants, nor the sugred words of friends, not all his wealth, if he be the richest man aliue: for he feeles hell already in his soule, the worme of conscience begins to gnaw him, which shall euer eate him, but neuer consume him. Oh wretched man that thou art, who shall deliuer thee? This is the misery of a hopelesse dying man. But oh the comfort, the reioycing of a righteous soule, euen when the snares of death haue compassed him, and the griefe of the graue haue caught him [z]: For what though he haue receiued the sentence of death in himselfe? it is for no other end but to teach him, not to trust in himselfe, but in God, which raiseth the dead [a]. What though he seeth plainly, that his end is come? yet he reioyceth, that this departing is so neere at hand, because the remembrance of this, that he hath fought the good Fight, and kept the Faith, doth embolden him to expect the Crowne of righteousnesse [b]. What though the eies of his body are now redy to be closed vp by death? yet by the eie of his faith he seeth the Heauen open, ready to receiue him, and his Sauiour standing at the right hand of God [c], ready to entertaine him. In a word, what though the violence of some tormenting sicknes doth euen (as it were) thrust his soule out of the habitation of his body? yet he dare be bold to say with Dauid, Into thine hand I commend my spirit, for thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth [d]. O thrice happy man that thou art, what diuell, what hell, what sinne can endanger thee?

Now as the misery of being a cast-away, should make vs beware of the sinne of obstinacy and maliciousnesse, and stiffe-necked going on in euill, so the happines of the estate of righteousnes should stirre vs to spend our best endeauors, in labouring by true humility, by vse of the good meanes of inuocation, of hearing the Word, of profiting by the Sacraments, to be found in Christ [e], and to be accepted righteous before God for his sake, and to shew forth the fruits of righteousnes in our liues, euen fruits worthy amendment of life [f]: that so whensoeuer death shall come (as surely it will come ere long) our flesh may rest in hope [g], and our departing hence may be as the sayling ouer the sea, as the comming out of a narrow wombe, into a more large and lightsome place, as a return from exile, and as an enlargement out of prison.

THE BRIDEGROOME

Isa. 62.5.

As the Bride-Groome is glad of the Bride, so shall thy God reioyce ouer thee.

By Samuel Hieron.

AT LONDON
Printed by John Beale, for Joyce Macham widow. 1624.

To the right VVorſhipfull,

and vertuous Lady, the Lady Bright Halſewell, of Halſewell in Sommerſet.

MAdam, I pray, pardon my boldnes, in that being vnknowne, I dare thus preſſe vpon you with theſe papers. My excuſe is; he who firſt mooued me to preach, and ſince perſwaded me to publiſh this enſuing Sermon, would needs I ſhould inſcribe it to your Name. It was deliuered at the Nuptials of your hopefull Heire: in that reſpect, I know it ſhall find acceptance. But yet the maine inducement to mee, to commend it by this particular direction to your Ladiſhip, is the conſtant report I haue receiued of your good affection to the beſt things. In aſſurance of this, I was the more emboldened to preſent you with this Mite, which if it ſhall affoard any comfort either to your ſelfe, or to any other truely fearing God, I haue all I aimed at, in imparting it to the common view. For which end, I will follow it with my prayers, and to your Ladiſhip in particular, I remaine.

MATTH. 9. 15.

Can the Children of the Marriage-Chamber mourne, as long as the Bridegroome is with them? But the daies ſhall come when the Bridegroome ſhall be taken from them, and then ſhall they faſt.

BEeing entreated to this ſeruice, my deſire was to handle ſome ſuch Scripture, as might occaſion me both to deliuer ſomething agreeable to the cauſe of our preſent meeting, and withall to ſpeake that which might concerne vs all, as we bee Chriſtians. Should I ſpeake nothing of Mariage duties, haply when I had done, it might be ſaid of ſome, What was this Sermon to the preſent buſineſſe? Should I treate thereof onely, many (perhaps) might goe away with a conceit, that they had heard nothing which did much concerne them. This Text, I truſt, ſhall fit both turnes; of which I will not doubt to ſay, as Iacob did of his pretended veniſon: The Lord hath brought it to my hands [a]. I entreate you to ſit vp and eate thereof, that your ſoules may bleſſe me, when that you ſhall finde that I haue preſented you with ſuch ſauory meate, as either you do loue, or elſe ought (if your ſtomackes be well affected) to deſire.

Touching this Text, I pray you in a word to conceiue thus much. Ceremonies haue been in all ages of the Church, becauſe of the diuerſity of mens affections, the very fuell of contention. They which haue agreed well together in the maine, yet haue been exceedingly hated, and (as it is ſaid of Paul and Barnabas [b]) ſtirred one againſt the other in the Bye, and hereby the chiefe buſineſſe hath been much letted, and the common enemy much aduantaged. Sathan (the enginer of all miſchiefe) practiſed this ſtratagem in the daies of our ſauiour. When he perceiued how the truth grew, and preuailed by the vniforme proceedings of Iohn Baptiſt and Chriſt, hee endeauoured to make a Rent (if it were poſſible) betwixt them, by promoting a queſtion about Faſting. Iohn trained vp his diſciples in much outward ſtrictneſſe; the followers of our Sauiour liued (as might ſeeme) after a more eaſie faſhion. Here now grew a queſtion, How could the freedome of Chriſts Diſciples bee iuſtified without condemning the auſterity of Iohn? and if Iohns ſtrictneſſe was good, ſurely then the liberty of Chriſt could not be approued. This mooued the wicked Phariſees to taxe them both, and to ſay (as they did) that the one had a diuell, and the other was a glutton [c]. This matter was ſet a foot by ſome of Iohns approuers, (euen good men are a little too apt ſometimes in theſe caſes to bee quicke,) and the Phariſees cunningly ioyning with them: indeed to them it would haue been a ioy to haue ſeene Chriſt and Iohn by the eares. The challenge is made ſomething peremptorily in the former verſe, Why doe not thy Diſciples faſt? Now my Text is Chriſts plea for cleering of himſelf, and for the deciding of the difference: Can the children of the mariage-chamber mourne, &c. Wherein he compares himſelfe to a Bridegroome, and his diſciples to be ſpeciall gueſts, choſen to accompany the Bridegroome: Now a wedding (ſaith he) you all know, is a time of mirth, not of mourning, of feaſting, not of faſting; will you that I ſhould now ſtint

my Disciples, as Iohn doth his? Should I during the time of this my comfortable presence with them, apply them to this sadder course of fasting? It fitteth not with that plenty of reioycing, which my being among them doth afford. Indeed there is a time approching, in which I shall be taken from them, that will be a time of humiliation, then shall they fast. Thus haue you the state of this Scripture.

For order in handling it, I will follow this course: sith it is a similitude fetched from such a busines as hath giuen being to this dayes meeting, I will first speake of such things, as out of the Text may concern the present occasion, and then of such things as were principally intended of our Sauiour, and doe concerne vs all. Respectiuely to the occasion, I will treat of two particulars. 1. The title of a Bridegroome applyed to Christ. 2. The lawfulnesse of reioycing together, when we are called to the Company of a Bridegroome.

It is manifest to all who conceiue ought, that by the title of a Bridegroome, our Sauiour meant himselfe. In Matth. Chap. 25. he which in the first verse is called the Bridegroome, in the thirteenth is termed the Son of Man. The Church is his beloued [d]. This life is the time of wooing and betrothing. The Ministers of the Gospell are the Bridegroom's friends [e], and doe beseech, as in Christs stead [f]; they are busied in preparing the Church for one husband, and to present her as a pure virgin vnto Christ [g]. The assurances are here drawne vp, and he hath giuen his word in his Word, vnto her, that he will marry her vnto him for euer, in iudgement, in mercy, and in compassion [h]. Earnest is giuen [i]: A ioynture is made, shee shall be an Heire annexed with Christ [k]. Hee sendeth her euer and anon tokens of loue, spirituall blessings in heauenly things [l], shee shall not be destitute of any gift [m]. He is but gone before to prepare a place for her, and her traine in the many mantions of his Fathers house [n]. Hee will returne, and the last day of the World, shall be the first day of her full enioying him. Now he cryeth as the Mother of Sisera, Why is his chariot so long, why tarry the wheeles of his chariot [o]? and still beggeth with him by sighes vnexpressable, Returne my welbeloued [p]; but then the marriage shall be consummate, and she shall be euer with the Lord [q].

The 1. Doct.

Thus you see how wel the title of a Bridegroom agreeth with Christ: I wil not worke so much as I could out of this title, respectiuely, to the matter of marriage; onely this: This Name giuen to Christ, doth teach euery one that carryeth the same title, two things. 1. How to chuse his Loue. 2. How to loue his Choice. Touching the former of these, I set downe this doctrine: That in chusing a spouse there ought more respect to bee had to inward goodnesse, then to outward goods. Such hath been the course of this our Bridegroome: In seeking of a Church and people to himselfe, what eye hath he carried to nobility of birth, to betterneesse of bloud, to propernes of person, to exactnes of beauty, to abundance of wealth, to any manner of outward thing? He seeth not as man seeth [r]. He craueth no bullocke out of the house, nor goate from the fold [s]. He delighteth not in the legs of any man [t]: He regardeth not the rich more then the poore [u], but in euery nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousnesse is accepted with him [x]. All that he requireth is to feare him, to walke in his waies, and to loue him [y]. His maine expectation is, that his beloued be all glorious within [z], that she be decked inwardly with lowlinesse of minde [a], the hid man of the heart is before him a thing much set by [b]. Now I demand, shall his example who is the Author and finisher of our Faith [c], be of no value? Should not the same minde be in vs, which was euen in him [d]? Should we not shew forth the vertues of him that hath called vs [e]? Indeed in true iudgement, that which is to bee desired of a man is his goodnes [f], What is beauty without vnderstanding, but as a Iewell of gold in a swines snout [g]? What benefit to haue a contentious woman with a wide house [h]? Better to dwell in a corner where one may sit dry, then to be vexed with such a continuall dropping [i]. Was Iezabel the better for her paint [k], or had Ahab any whit the better bargaine in her because she was the daughter of a King [l]? Better with Booz to take Ruth from among the gleners, and with Iacob, to serue seuen ſeuen yeeres for a wench that keepeth ſheepe, then to haue an idolatrous Maacah[m], or a trecherous Athaliah[n]. The rule of ſeeking the kingdome of God firſt[o], ought to take place in all our vndertakings, eſpecially in Marriage, of which the purpoſe in Gods ordaining it, is a godly ſeed[p]: It is the foundation of a family, and a family ought to be a modell of a Church; and therefore in it, that ſhould chefly be intended, by which religion may be furthered. It is not denied but outward things in matters of wedlock may be looked too, It is fit, that as for yeeres, ſo for eſtate and meanes there ſhould be a proportion, for God is not the author of confuſion[q]. Dauid was not apt by and by to entertaine the motion of marrying ſo much aboue his reach, as with the daughter of a King, himſelfe but the ſonne of Iſhai, the Yeoman[r]. It is poſſible for a man to bee either too baſe, or too preſumptuous in his choiſe. Beſides the rule of the Scripture (Parents lay vp for the children[s]) bindeth to a care to diſpoſe of them, that as much as may be, they may enioy the more bleſſed thing, to giue rather then to receiue[t]. But the queſtion is now touching the ſcope in the matter of choice; not whether Hagar and Sarah may dwell together, but which of the two muſt bee Miſtris. The ſpeciall thing which muſt be ſought for, muſt be this, to haue an euen yoke fellow, which ſhall be fit in bearing that yoake, which Chriſt calleth to[u]. Our Bridegroome propounded this as a maine article in his wooing: Bee holy as I am holy[x]: All the world ſhall not win him to the contract where this wants. He will haue no concord with Belial[y]. This is the rule of choiſe. What ſaid Iehu to Ionadab, when he was following his courſe againſt the poſterity of Ahab and againſt Baal. Is thine heart vpright as mine is? then giue me thy hand[z]: ſuch a queſtion were not amiſſe, for a man to aske the woman; Is thy heart as mine for matters of Religion? thus and thus am I, art thou ſo alſo? then giue me thy hand: otherwiſe as Dauid ſaid to Mephiboſketh, why ſpeakeſt thou any more of thy matters[a], what ſhould we treat of portions and ioyntures, when he be not like to agree together in the principall?

I demand now of yow, haue the men of this generation no need to be taught this leſſon? I would I could perſwade as many to learne it, as I know haue need to be taught it. The truth is, generally in matters of choiſe, religion beareth the ſmalleſt ſtroke. Me thinkes, the choiſe of many about wiues, is like that in vſe about bargaines and farmes. The queſtions are (moſtly) What is it worth beſides the rent? what houſe vpon it, how neere the market, the mill, the ſand? When heare you this, how neere the Church, or, what Miniſter in the Pariſh, or, what good Preacher dwelleth by? Thus is it in this matter alſo; thus it runneth, what portion, what ioynture, how much money in hand, what ſecurity for the reſt? Not a word, how for religion, what knowledge of God, how diſpoſed in things that concerne the kingdome of God? Nay, the truth is, men are ſo violent this way, that ſcarcely ordinary naturall contentments are looked vnto as they ſhould: where there may be a good lading of that thicke clay, which the Prophet ſpeaketh of[b], or that which Achſah Calebs daughter craued at her marriage, ſprings aboue and ſprings beneath[c], men will loue, they haue their affections at command. Wanton Dinah, ſubtill Dalilah, ſcorning Michol, gain-ſaying Zipporah, who were not like to be entertained vpon theſe tearmes? Were ſhe as obedient as Sarah, as wiſe as Deborah, as religious as the Shunamite, as deuout as Hannah, as well affected to the world as Lydia, yet ſhall ſhe be thruſt out with as much contempt as Thamar was by Ammon, if ſhe want theſe[d]. Now fie vpon this miſiudging age, nothing doth more declare the ſcarſity of religion among men. The Athenians deſiring to finde out their childrens inclination, that ſo they might direct them to ſuch callings as they were fit for, would bring them into a roome full of all manner of inſtruments: looke therefore what kinds of inſtrument any one did chuſe, and ſeemed to take delight in, to that calling whereto that inſtrument belongeth, their concluſion was, he was diſpoſed. So in this, the manner of mens choiſe doth proproclaime their hearts. It is a signe they haue no great loue to religion, sith they make so small inquiry for religion. Their maine call is for wealth, this sheweth that their principall affection is to the world. I pray God that that which is so powerfull to discouer this sinne, may be as effectuall to reforme it, that the guilty may lament it, and they which are yet come to the occasion of shewing their disposition in it, may auoid it. And thus farre of learning to chuse. The next is of louing where we haue chosen.

It is well knowne that Christs loue to his Church is the patterne of that loue which the husband oweth to his wife[f]. Now in Christs loue to his Church two things especially deserue note. 1. Bounty (hee witholds nothing which may be for his Churches good.) 2. Perpetuity (he neuer leaueth where hee once loueth) I haue loued thee with an euerlasting loue, saith he to his Church[g]. Hence we are taught, first, That the Bridegroomes loue to his beloued, ought to extend and reach as farre, as any necessity in her shall require a supply. Paul saith, loue is bountifull[h]: And indeed this is Bounty, to carry that heart to a wife, as to leaue (if it be possible) no necessity vnsupplied. Is not the loue of Christ to his Church such? Wherein may it be truly said that he hath been sparing, or that he hath carried the matter with a pinching hand? Hauing nothing dearer to himselfe then himselfe, yet in this loue, He gaue himselfe as an offering vnto God[i]. He hath bound himselfe by promise to his elect, not to leaue them comfortlesse[k]: Hee is touched with a feeling of euery infirmity[l], and through his riches hee will fulfill all their necessities[m]. Here is the proportion and scantling of the husbands loue. What other thing is required when he is called the head of the wife[n], but that he should looke out euery way, to protect, to supply, to furnish, to remooue inconueniences, to procure comforts. What else is intended in that iniunction, so ought men to loue their wiues as themselues[o]? Who vnlesse it be some hatefull miser, is pinching to himselfe? Now, the necessities of a wife which be to be supplyed are of 2. sorts; either inward or outward. The inward (which respect the soule) are chiefly to be looked vnto, the soule being the more worthy part. The husband ought to be vnto the wife a kinde of domesticall instructer. Wherefore else is shee to aske him at home[p]? And how otherwise shall he be the guide of her youth[q], if he be not able and willing to guide her feet in the way of peace[r]? Outward wants must be regarded too. This is that which the Spirit of God calleth spreading of the wing[s], nourishing and cherishing[t]. Indeed I may say as Lot did in another case, Wherefore else is she come vnder the Husbands roofe[u]? There must be maintenance according to her ranke, and that with cheerfulnesse. (Christ ladeth his Church with benefits and that vnsought to; And there must be due imployment; her husbands Heart must trust in her[x]. There is no loue where there is niggardlinesse in the one, and causeles suspition in the other. Here is the bounty of loue: a tender and a kind respect had to euery need.

The 1. Vse. This reproueth the common neglect. Husbands seeke little to further the saluation of their wiues: some cannot doe it, so great is their ignorance, and some care not to doe it, so little is their conscience. But if thy wife die in her sinne, through thy default, thy not teaching, thy not admonishing, thy not praying, with her and for her, God will require her bloud at thy hands. Thou art liable to account for the soule of thy seruant, euen his which is behind the ewes[y], or at the mill[z], much more for hers which lyeth in thy bosome[a], and is ordained to be an heire with thee of the grace of life[b].

Secondly, this taxeth the straightnes of many husbands in matters of outward conuenience: there is scarsely ought to be gotten from them except it be euen wrung out by importunity, or wrought out by some indirect and vniustifiable meanes: There is I know an extremity of too much vxoriousnesse, such as is in some who are forward to further euery vaine and idle humour of the wife. But there must be a meane betwixt a sparing and a dissolute hand. A good man doth meaſure his affaires by iudgement [c]; and Loue as it is bountifull [d], ſo it is diſcreet, for it reioyceth not in iniquity [e]. To another mans wife all loue is diſhoneſt: ſo is too much to a mans owne. There may be dotage at home, as well as adultery abroad. Remember the patterne. Chriſt leaueth the Church neither in want, nor in wantonneſſe, he will ſupply her in the one, and cut her ſhort in the other. Thus farre of the Bounty of Loue.

The ſecond thing imitable in Chriſts loue is perpetuity. The Doctrine is, That the husbands loue to his wife muſt be continued with ſtedfaſtneſſe to the end. This is the glory of our Bridegroome, where he loueth, he loueth to the end [f]: His gifts and callings are without repentance [g]: Nothing is able to ſeperate from his Loue [h]. If there be a ſmall fault, he hides it, he remits it, he may chaſten it, but he will not caſt off for it. When is a man weary of loue to himſelfe? When is the head become an enemy to a limme, if it haue a deformity? Nay, it doth both tend and tender it ſo much the more. There is nothing hath right to the aboliſhment of a mans loue to his wife, but that which maketh her no wife, and that is, adultery or death: and yet euen after death there ought to be a reſpect to her memory, and after her ſeparation for adultery, a loue of pity, though not of delight. Reioyce with the wife of thy youth, let her breaſts ſatisfie thee at all times [i]. Conſtancy is the crowne of euery good action; Indeed good is not good, if it be not perpetuall; and it is one of the qualities of Loue, not to fall away [k].

This condemneth the inconſtancy of many mens affections. Seneca ſpeaketh of one, who was ſo fond, that he tied his wife to him with his garter: forſooth he could not endure her out of his ſight. Such violent loue is in ſome in the dayes of their firſt acquaintance, that they ſcarce can tell what belongs to comlines, which yet in time loath as much, as they were ouer abundantly kind in the beginning. It is the glory of marriage when there is both a continuance and a growth of loue, ſo that the laſt parting affecteth with greater griefe, then the firſt meeting ſatisfied with content. Hee that would further this, had need of good diſcretion. It muſt be his glory to paſſe by many offences [l]; and to temper himſelfe from the ouer quicke apprehenſion of euery occaſion of diſtaſt. His loue muſt couer [m], yea, and labour to recouer a multitude of defects. Bitterneſſe and violence muſt be no gueſts in his houſe, and of all other Wraths, it were pity the Sun ſhould goe downe vpon [n] his owne wife. The more tender the loue, the more hard to be ſodered, when it hath receiued a cracke. I may ſay of ſuch breaches as Salomon doth of thoſe betwixt Brethren, they are as the barres of a Pallace [o]; it is not eaſie to diſſolue them. Theſe things muſt be watched againſt, that loue may bee perpetuall. Thus much how euery Bridegroome may learne of this grand Bridegroome, how to chuſe his loue, and how to loue his choice. In chuſing let religion bee the main enquiry. In louing let there be bounty to ſupply euery want, and conſtancy to keepe the affection ſtrong vnto the end.

The Vſe.

[l] Prou. 19.11. [m] 1 Pet. 4.8. [n] Eph. 4.26. [o] Prou. 18.19.

Now leſt I ſhould be thought to giue inſtructions but by halues, a word let me adde touching her to whom the Bridegroomes loue muſt be thus bountifull, thus perpetuall. Out of his duty ſhe may iudge of hers. Is he bound to loue, and ſhall it be free for her, to anſwer his good affection with neglect? If he muſt be bountifull, ſurely ſhe muſt be dutifull; If he muſt not ſpare to ſupply her, ſhee muſt not faile to obey him; If his loue muſt bee to her without change, her faſhion muſt bee ſuch to him as may occaſion no diſtaſte. Hee muſt inſtruct, ſhee muſt learne; hee muſt guide, ſhee muſt follow; he muſt admoniſh, ſhee muſt hearken; hee muſt allow her cheerefully out of his eſtate, ſhe muſt conforme her ſelfe contentedly to his eſtate. Hee muſt not ſtraiten her, and ſhee muſt not vndoe him: hee muſt truſt her, and ſhe muſt not deceiue him: he muſt not be bitter, and ſhe muſt not be ſtout. In a word, he muſt euer account her for his Loue, and ſhe muſt euer eſteeme him as her Feare. Here is a ſweet proportion. I wiſh it to you that are eſpouſed this day, it ſhall be better vnto you

then both your eſtates. So much of that which is to be noted out of the ſimilitude, agreeably to the preſent occaſion.

The next generall thing, is the Lawfulnes of reioycing, when we are called to the company of the Bridegroome. Our Sauiour ſecretly inſinuateth this to be lawfull: for out of the freedome to be more chearefull then vſuall at a Marriage, he iuſtifieth his courſe of not binding his diſciples to the ſeuerity of faſting, whileſt he was preſent. The doctrine is thus. The 4. Doct. That there is a lawfulneſſe of mutuall Reioycing at Mariage Solemnities. I haue already made it to appeare, how this Doctrin ſpringeth hence. Chriſt buildeth vpon this generall ground, that a marriage is rather a time of gladnes then of mourning. It is well knowne, that our Sauiour himſelfe, being thereunto inuited, affoorded his preſence at a marriage-feaſt in Cana of Galile; yea, and by his firſt miracle ſupplied there the lacke of wine [p], a ſufficient teſtimony of the lawfulneſſe of the liberall vſe of the creatures of God vpon ſuch an occaſion. I remember, how in the Prophet [q], the Lord deſcribeth the contentment he taketh in his choſen, by that ioy which is vpon the marriage day: As a Bridegroome is glad of the Bride, ſo ſhall thy God reioyce ouer thee. With this ſorts the parable, in which the inuiting and calling of men by the Goſpell to the grace of God, is ſhadowed out by a mariage feaſt, celebrated by a King at the nuptials of his ſon, to which many are intreated [r]. Such courſes we read in Scriptures vpon like occaſions, as Abrahams feaſt at Iſaacks weaning [ſ], Ioſephs feaſt at the entertainment of his brethren [t], the peoples feaſt after the returne from captiuity, when the Law had been expounded to them [u], the Iewes feaſt, vpon their deliuerance from Hamans conſpiracy [x]: In the primitiue Church they had Loue-feaſts [y]. In a word, our Sauiours direction how a man ſhould demeane himſelfe being inuited to a Marriage feaſt [z], is a ſufficient iuſtification of this point: for had the courſe been vnlawfull, he would rather haue vtterly inhibited it, then haue deliuered rules of behauiour at it.

The Vſe. The vſe is not to perſwade to this courſe, or to vrge it (for although we may doe it, yet we are not bound to doe it) but to informe vs herein out of Gods Word, that we may behaue our ſelues in things of this nature as Men of knowledge, which is the true ſeaſoning vnto euery courſe. S. Paul ſaith that the creatures of God are ſanctified by the Word [a]. Euery man eates, and eating in it owne nature is not vnlawfull, but yet euery mans eating is not lawfull: So there is a generall vſe of Mariage-feaſts, and a Mariage-feaſt in it owne nature is lawfull, but yet euery mans vſing of it is not good: & why? becauſe it is not ſanctified vnto him by the Word, he goeth to it at aduenture, his conſcience not hauing any direction and guidance from the Word, and ſo that which is lawful in it ſelfe becommeth a ſinne vnto him. It is a good courſe for a Chriſtian to be ſure of his warrant for his actions whatſoeuer is not of faith is ſinne [b] Againe, the lawfulneſſe of the thing, bindes to a care to take heed of vngodlineſſe in the vſe. There be no greater ſinnes committed then in the abuſe of lawfull things. The name of (lawfull) carieth vs headlong into euil before we be aware. It is not lawful to be merry, lawful to drinke wine, lawfull to feaſt, lawful to make good cheere, lawfull to weare good clothes? yes verily: but vnder theſe pretexts come in riot, luxury, intemperance, pride, and a floud of euils. A Chriſtian hath neuer more need to feare himſelfe, then when he is to haue to doe in ſuch things, which in themſelues may be vſed. He is neuer in any thing ſo ſubiect to a fall, eſpecially in ſuch meetings to ſolemne feaſts, leſt the table plenty ſhould become a ſnare [c] vnto him. Iob was very iealous of his children, that they blaſphemed God in their hearts [d], when they were at their feaſts. What great euils doe we finde in Scripture, to haue accompanied ſome great feaſtings, where the feare of God hath not been? As Nabals drunkenneſſe [e]; at Abſhaloms, murder [f]; at Ahaſhueroſh his, a wofull breach betwixt him and his wife [g]; at Belſhazzars, terrible blaſpemy againſt God [h]: at Herods, killing of Iohn Baptiſt [i]. What iudgeiudgements read we, to haue ouertaken men in their ſecure eatings: Elah, ſmotten and killed while he was drinking [k]: the Iſraelites, whileſt the fleſh was yet betwixt their teeth, before it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled againſt them [l], Iobs children, the houſe fell vpon them at their banquet [m]; I ſay with the Apoſtle, Theſe things came vnto them for enſamples, and were written to admoniſh vs [n]. To the end therefore our reioycings and feaſting at this or the like occaſions, may not be vnlawfull, two things are chiefly to be cared for: Firſt, that there be a carefull watching to preuent exceſſe, Gluttony and drunkenneſſe are workes of Darkeneſſe [o], and Take heed leſt at any time your hearts be oppreſſed with them, ſaith our Sauiour [p]. There is a woe to thoſe that continue till they be inflamed [q]. It was one of the ſinnes of the old world, eating and drinking like beaſts [r], as long as the ſtomacke would craue, a mans eating ſhould be for ſtrength, not for drunkenneſs [s]. The ſecond thing to be cared for, is that God be not baniſhed out of our thoughts, but that ſtill his preſence may be remembred, and his iudgements conſidered. The neglect hereof is called Feeding without feare [t]. It is one of the common miſeries of feaſting now adaies; Men (as they think) muſt lay aſide all thoughts and ſpeeches of God and godlineſſe, or elſe they ſuppoſe they cannot be ſo merry as they would. Truth is, by ſuch meanes they ſhould be reſtrained from that which is called mad mirth [u], otherwiſe hereby they ſhould be much quickned to an holy reioycing. And thus farre of thoſe two things out of this Text, which concerne the occaſion; Now it remaineth to ſpeake of the things eſpecially intended by our Sauiour, which may concerne vs all. Can the children of the Marriage chamber, &c?

Here I will teach two doctrines. The one is this: That the true ground of the ioy and reioycing of Gods people, is and ought to be the preſence of Chriſt Ieſus. This is that which our Sauiour here maintaines, that the children of God haue a kind of immunitie from mourning, and from thoſe ſtraiter exerciſes of humiliation, when the Spouſe of the Church the Lord Ieſus is among them. To cleare this point, the manner of Chriſts preſence muſt be enquired into. He is either preſent in body, as he was at the time of ſpeaking theſe words with his diſciples, or after a ſpirituall manner, concerning which is that promiſe, Loe I am with you alway, vntill the end of the world [x]. He is ſpiritually preſent, either by outward meanes, or by inward feeling. The outward means by which he is preſent, are the publike Miniſtry and preaching of the word, and the free vſe of the Sacraments. Hence is it, that Chriſt is ſaid to be in the midſt of ſuch aſſemblings [y]: Iohn behelde him in the midſt of the ſeuen golden candleſticks [z]: The Miniſters of the Goſpell are ſaid to be in his ſtead [a]: in their teaching, the Wiſedome of God powreth out his mind [b], vnto the ſonnes of men. As for inward feeling, when the Lord vouchſafeth it, he is ſaid to be neere [c], according as when he withdraweth it, he is ſaid to abſent himſelfe [d]. So that now the meaning of the doctrine is, that the maine matter of all ſound reioycing vnto Gods children, is the liberty of the meanes of grace, and the euidence which they feele in their ſoules of Gods fauours. Touching reioycing in the outward meanes, we haue for example the ioy of the men of Bethſhemeſh at the reſtoring of the Arke [e], the ioy which was in Ieruſalem at the reforming of religion by Hezekiah [f]: the ſhouting when the foundation of the Temple was laid after the captiuity [g], the extraordinary gladneſſe, when the publike teaching of the Law, which had a long time bin diſcontinued, was againe eſtabliſhed [h]. In the new Teſtament Samaria had great ioy, for Philips miniſtry [i]: Paul while he lay by the heeles, yet triumphed, becauſe Chriſt was preached [k]. By theſe, we ſee how the Children of the marriage-chamber, take a kind of holy contentment, when the Bridegroome is among them by the outward meanes. Now for reioycing in the inward euidences of his preſence to the ſoule and ſpirit, looke we vpon Dauid, boaſting in that ioy of the heart, which was giuen him by the Lords lifting vp of his countenance vpon him [l], vpon the Eunuch, going on his way reioycing, becauſe he felt how faith in Chriſt was wrought in his ſoule [m].

The Vſe. This ſerueth very effectually to ſhew, that they are none of the Bridegroomes friends, which in theſe euidences of his preſence find ſo little ſweetneſſe. Men reioyce in their wealth, in their gettings, in their health, in their beauty, in their honour, in their belly-cheare, in their gay apparell, in the pleaſures of ſinne, in the ſatisfying of their wretched luſts, in the ouerthrow and fall of their enemies. Such things as theſe giue a kind of contentment vnto many: but how ſcarſe are they, which vnfainedly reioyce in the liberty of the Goſpell, in the freedome of true religion, in the great mercy and goodneſſe of God vouchſafing to reueale vnto vs the knowledge of himſelfe in Chriſt Ieſus? Whoſe ſpirits are inliued, whoſe heart leapeth, like the Babe in the wombe of Elizabeth [s], for ioy of this ineſtimable bleſſing? Chriſt is a continuall ſuter to vs, by the Miniſtry of his word, he doth in it make loue to our ſoules, he wooeth vs, he beſeecheth and entreateth vs to entertaine him; he offereth vnto vs many tokens of heauenly kindneſſe, many rich graces to which all the iewels in the earth are not worthy to be compared. But (alas) how be theſe things regarded? who generally) doth not take more pleaſure in an idle tale, or in a ſcurrilous ieſt, then in theſe particulars? Well, wee ſee here, Chriſt accounts his preſence in his Church, whether in body or in ſpirit, whether viſibly, or by meanes, to be as the preſence of a Bridegroome to his beſt beloued. If we feele our ſelues to find no comfort in thoſe things which are reported to be ſo full of comfort; it is a ſigne we are none of the children of the Wedding, but of thoſe rather, which ſhall be ſhut out, and diſmiſſed with that heauy voyce, when yet they ſhall beg and deſire to come in, Depart from me I doe not know you [t].

The 6. Doct. The next Doctrine hence to be obſerued is, That it is the wiſdome and duty of Gods Children in the dayes of their reioycing, and then when they haue moſt comfort by the Bridegrooms preſence, yet to thinke vpon and to make proniſion for a change. Our Sauiour here ſaith, that albeit he now vſeth his Diſciples ſomewhat tenderly, theſe being (as it were) the daies of his firſt acquaintance, yet they muſt not thinke to liue ſo alwaies, but know rather, that there be times of more ſtraightneſſe, and of greater ſadneſſe to be looked for. So that it is plaine, that it is the wiſdome of Gods children, in the daies of their greateſt ioy to be in continuall expectation of a time of mourning: As the Bridegroome is with them, ſo they muſt remember that the Bridegroome may be taken from them. For this cauſe Chriſt often told his diſciples of hauing affliction in the world [u], of weeping and lamenting, when the world was iocund [x], of drinking of his cup [y], of being hated of all men [z]. The poore Iewes were in perplexity, while the King and Haman ſate drinking in the pallace [a]. We muſt reſolue to paſſe through many ſtormes, before we attaine the End of our Faith, the ſaluation of our ſoules [b]. It is worth the noting, how God in all ages, hath kept a kind of continuall entercourſe in his Church, betwixt peace and perſecution, betwixt quietneſſe and trouble. It hath neither been alwaies vnder the croſſe, nor alwaies flouriſhing in an outward ſetlednes: Sometimes in Kingdomes and ſtates, the Goſpell hath been freely preached, the Sacraments ordinarily adminiſtred, publike aſſemblies vſually frequented, without danger: Sometimes againe it hath been intermitted, nay it hath bin baniſhed and perſecuted, & it hath bin as much as a mans life hath bin worth, to be known to profeſſe it. And as is the ſtate of the Church in generall, ſo it is of Chriſtians in particular. Sometimes they heare the Bridegroomes voyce ſecretly and ſweetly ſpeaking peace to their ſoules by his ſpitit, & this cauſeth much comfort; ſometimes they be much perplexed with doubtings and ſad paſſions, and this occaſioneth a great deale of ſorrow: Sometimes they haue the voice of ioy and deliuerance in their their tabernacles [c], and sometimes againe, bitter griefe in stead of Felicity [d]. How then can it but be wisdome to expect affliction and tribulation? The expectation of it cannot hasten it, nay, it may preuent it, at the least it shall cause it to be the more easie when it commeth.

Here is a necessary aduertisement for vs. We now through Gods goodnes, do enioy the Bridegroomes presence, his voyce soundeth amongst vs in daily Ministery. Happy were we if we reioyced in it, as we should. If we do, yet let vs not forget that the Bridegroome may be taken from vs, and that there may come daies of greater desolation. Who can tell, nay (considering our sins) who hath not reason to feare, that God will take away from vs the meanes of grace, and depriue vs of the comfortablenes of his blessed word in the commonnes thereof? when we shall see a dimming of such lights, by whose bright-shining many haue been comforted; when we shall behold Pulpits taken vp, with such Prophets as looke out vaine and foolish things for the people, not labouring (as they should) to discouer their iniquity [e], when we shall find in the multitude such a grossenesse of heart, as was sometimes in those of Ierusalem, that they did not know the things which belonged to their peace [f], when we shall behold sin in all estates to be grown to an height, and the word of God to become a reproach, then let vs feare the Bridegroomes going. The present conditions of the times should worke somewhat with vs: we see or may see, what working, and what plotting there is among Papists, by treachery and bloody designes, to put out the light of the Gospell, and to cause the voyce of the Bridegroome vtterly to cease. And yet alas we sit still, as if neither Church nor state, neither religion nor peace were in danger. Nay rather it is now verified, which was said of old, The Lord did call vnto weeping and mourning, but behold, ioy and gladnes, eating fleh and drinking wine [g]. Thus we goe on in a kind of besotted course, till a dart strike through our liuer, as an oxe that goeth to the slaughter, or as a foole to the stockes for correction [h]: Oh that there might be a generall humbling of our selues before the Lord, teares running downe as a riuer, and, our heart crying to the Lord [i], that mischiefe may returne vpon the heads of the contriuers; and that for his names sake, for his truths sake, for his Sonne Christs sake, the glorious Gospell of his Sonne, the gracious voyce of the Bridegroome may be continued with vs to the end of the world. If this be not in the generall, yet let it be in the particular, euery family apart, as the Scripture speaketh [k]. We haue iust cause to feare the beginnings of Gods iudgements, and yet withall too, euen admire his loathnesse to depart: like that of old, when the glory of the Lord departed by degrees, first from the Cherub, to the doore of the house [l], then to the entry of the gate of the Lords house [m], then from the midst of the city to the mountaine towards the East-side of the city [n]. The Lord would as it were haue vs to entreat him, he looketh to be importuned. Let vs therefore euen this day vow vnto the mighty God of Iacob [o], that we will preferre Ierusalem to our chiefe ioy [p], and that we wil euen wrastle with the Bridegroom as Iacob did with the Angel [q]. Oh if any thing may keepe him yet with vs, either praying or fasting, or weeping, or hearing, or repenting, sure he shall not depart: It were better to fast before to keepe him with vs, then to fast when he is gone, to restore him to vs: Better to weepe in Sion to preuent Babel, then when we sit by the riuers of Babel, to weepe for Sion [r]: This is the maine vse. Albeit the aduertisement may be further stretched, to euery priuate Christian. Dost thou now feele in thy selfe, euidences and pledges of the fauour of God in Christ Iesus, it is good to reioyce in them, it is good also to know that it is possible for them to be ouerclouded for a time, and that the Lord may call thee to some inward conflicts: Make ready therefore for the combat: The Bridegroome goeth and commeth not only by giuing and remooping the outward meanes, but by giuing and remooning inward feeling.

To the Honeſt and wel-diſpoſed Reader.

IT is the vſuall manner of the moſt which publiſh bookes, to dedicate the ſame to ſome Honourable perſonage, or to ſome one of ſpeciall place, partly to ſhew thankefulneſſe for ſome receiued fauours, partly to procure credit and countenance to their writings, that vnder ſo good protection, they may the more boldly paſſe forth to the common view of all men. If I now vary from this generall receiued courſe, thinke not I pray thee (good Reader) that I doe it in ſome humour, as if I either affected ſingularity, or miſliked the common cuſtome: but know for a truth, that there are theſe two cauſes of my ſo doing; The firſt is, the obſcurity of mine owne condition, who liuing here in a remote part, haue wanted either will, or opportunity, or both, to ſhrowd my ſelfe vnder the patronage of ſome great perſon: The ſecond is, the nature of this preſent Treatiſe: For howſoeuer there bee (and that not farre from the place of mine abode) ſome of good quality, vpon whoſe acceptance I thinke I might haue preſumed; yet conſidering that which I haue framed, is but a homely and courſe diſcourſe, meant chiefly for men of the plaineſt faſhion, I thought I ſhould breake the rules of comelineſſe and correſpondence, if I ſhould aduance the inſcription of my labour, to a perſon of higher degree, then of that meane and middle ranke, to the vſe whereof all that theſe following leaues containe, principally was intended. Therefore (friendly Reader) whoſoeuer thou be, if thou be a true Nathaniel [a], a man of an honeſt and good heart, be thy outward condition as it may be [b], though thou lye among the pots [c], or art behind the ewes with young [d], or howſoeuer elſe, euen as it were bound in outward miſery [e], and of baſe eſteeme in the eyes of men, yet thou art he whoſe patronage I affect, and in the hope of whoſe good allowance, I take comfort, I know well, that he which offereth any thing to the ſight of the World, muſt make ready his backe for the long furrowes [f] of euery biting cenſurer. It was truly ſaid of him (though but a Heathen; that amongſt men, nothing can ſcape without a nippe. But what then? If thy conſcience ſhall giue this teſtimony of mine endeauours, that thy heart is comforted thereby, in regard that thy iudgement is ſtrengthened in ſo neceſſary a point, then let the moſt profeſſed and ſharp-toothed carper ſay what he pleaſe: Nay though (as Iob ſpeaketh) hee ſhould write a booke againſt mee, yet I would take it vpon my ſhoulder, and binde it as a crowne vnto me [g]. And as Dauid reckoned not of Michols taunts, in regard of the honour done vnto him by thoſe religious Maidens [h]: ſo will I alſo ſet at nought the malicious taxings of all gain-ſayers, if I ſhall approue my ſelfe to thy conſcience in the ſight of God [i].

If thou demand againe, what hath mooued me to attempt this? I anſwer in as few words. There are two queſtions common in the mouthes of many, either ignorant or ill-diſpoſed perſons, by which the beauty of Preaching is and hath been much defaced in the eyes of many, not ſo well ſetled: the one is, What needs all this Preaching? The other is, Who knoweth who to beleeue among theſe Preachers? Theſe two demands were firſt hatched in hell, but ſince being cheriſhed by Anabaptiſticall and Popiſh ſpirits, and by them buzzed into the heads of vnlearned, vnſtable [n], *and irreligious people, they are brought vnto a diuelliſh perfection. red without any preiudice to the wel-being of Gods Church. The giuing answer to these hellish interrogatories, as it hath many times exercised me in the execution of my publike Ministery, so it hath at this time drawne me to the compiling of this present Treatise: both that those of these parts, who to my knowledge haue need, and doe desire it also, may haue something by them, whereupon aduisedly to deliberate for the setling of their iudgements, and that others likewise elswhere, who (it may be) haue experience of the like Satanicall encounters, may (in stead of a better helpe) enioy the benefit of this that I haue laboured in. This is the maine occasion, this is my chiefe intent in this tractate wherein, as I haue freely vttered that which I am perswaded is the truth, so will I be ready also either to alter or better my iudgement, if any man out of Gods Word shall offer to instruct me: hauing learned this lesson, To teach what I know without grudging, and to learn that wherein I am ignorant, without blushing. And though perhaps many know in this matter, as much as I or any man can teli them, yet I am sure many are ignorant, and therefore I may maintaine my course with that saying of Augustin; It is better to giue him that hath, then to turne him away that hath not. It is meeter that they which know, should be wearied with many repetitions, then those which are vnskilfull sent away empty for want of instruction. As for Writers in our times, directly of this subiect I know none. If there be none, I wish there may be; for as the saying is, One man is no man: and by the more this truth is auouched, the better it is confirmed. If there be that haue laboured in this very kind wherein I now do, yet it can be no preiudice to my endeauour. The ancient prouerbe is, that one barke cannot beare all passengers: so neither can one author serue all men. Augustin held it as profitable, that of the same questions many bookes should be made by sundry men in a differing stile, though not with a differing faith. All stomacks we see are not alike: One kind of dressing pleaseth one, which hath no relish with another: and yet the same meate ordered after another fashion, may fit his appetite also. As there is a difference of stomackes, so of humours and dispositions in men. The same matter diuersly handled, may finde entertainment with diuers men: which yet digested after one onely fashion, would haue acceptance but with few.

Nemo vir, qui non diuersa fide: Augustus. de Trinit. lib. 1. cap. 3.

Touching the manner of writing, I wil promise thee nothing more then ordinary: It is not for me either to praise or discommend mine own workes: the one were vanity, the other folly. I submit all to thy iudgement. Only this I say, somwhat to helpe my selfe: Hierome saith there are two things requisite for Diuinity-Studies, Silence, and Leasure. Of the lacke of both these I may well complaine. Household affaires, and the stirs occasioned by those businesses, cannot but breed distraction: and he which is exercised with the care of a Congregation, shall meet with very seldome intermission. I intreate thee therefore, when thou shalt find me to faile in any thing (from which I account not my selfe priuiledged) impute it to this fore-named want: and hope thus of me, that if I had more freedome and more time, all things should haue been brought to better perfection.

I haue troden in an old beaten path, both by old and new Writers, by Diuines and Heathen, namely, to frame my matter to the forme of a Dialogue, a very good way (in my seeming) to helpe the vnderstanding of common men: I confesse it to haue eased me much in writing, I doubt not but it shall turne to thy benefit in reading also. Well, whatsoeuer it is (good Reader) thine it is: and being thine, I am commanded by him that may command vs all, not to withhold it from thee°. Receiue it therefore with the same hand, with which it is deliuered to thee: Vse it to thy comfort: and whatsoeuer good thou receiuest by it, let the glory be the Lords. All that I desire of thee by way of recompence, is that thou be a suter to God on my behalfe, That with his preuenting and following mercy in all needfull things which I know not, he would instruct me; in all truth which I do know he would vphold me; and in those things, wherein, as a man I haue failed, he would reform me. And the same God sanctifie vs both throghout, that our whole spirit, and soule, and body, may be kept blamelesse vnto the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ P. Farewell (Modbury in Deuon. 1. Thine in the Lord,

SAM. HIERON.

The Preachers Plea: Or, a Treatise in forme of a plaine Dialogue, making knowne the worth and necessity of that which we call Preaching, shewing also how a man may profit by it, both for the informing of his iudgement, and the reforming of his life.

Nymphas.

SIr, vnlesse I do very much mistake, I haue often heard you in your publike Sermons vrge the sufficiency that ought to be in a Minister, and especially for the clearing of doubts and cases of conscience among those, of whom the holy Ghost hath made him ouer-seer.

Epaphras. It is not vnlike, that among other points deliuered, in the ordinary Ministery, you haue receiued this also: for I am well a liuised that of old it was the appointment of God, that the Priests lips should preserue knowledge, and men should seeke it at his mouth [a]. So that we all, as many as tender the good of the Church of Christ, haue cause to bewaile our countries estate, in which are so many Wels without water, as S. Peter termeth them [b], and that not vnfitly: for as a Well placed by the way side, in regard of the outward seeming thereof, putteth the poore thirsty traueller in hope of some refreshing: who repairing to it, and finding nothing but emptines, goes on his way with the greater discouragement: so these kind of men standing in the Church of God, doe by reason of their outward habit and semblance of grauity, make the wearied, distressed, and perplexed Christian conceiue, that if he haue recourse to them, he shall certainly be relieued: but yet when he makes triall, he findeth them to his greater griefe, not vnlike to the images of the Heathen, Which haue mouthes and speake not [c], not hauing the tongue of the learned, that they should know how to minister a word in time to him that is weary [d]. But tell me neighbour, I pray you, this being granted, what you would inferre hereupon?

[b] 2 Pet.2.17.

Nymp. Surely, that which I would inferre hereupon, is this; that you being by your calling a Minister, are therefore able, and being also by the prouidence of God that Minister, vpon whose labours I must especially depend [e], are willing also to enter discourse with me, and to afford me your best helpe for my better vnderstanding in some points, wherein I haue of late daies been very much perplexed.

Epaph. For mine ability in this behalfe, what it ought to be I know, and what I wish it to be, I know also; yet whatsoeuer it is, I shall be most willing (as my duty is) to spend my time, to bestow my labour, and to employ my best endeauours in so holy a businesse, as is your building vp in knowledge, and your furtherance in the waies of godlinesse. And I doe heartily wish, that both you, and others of our neighbours, would more often giue me the like occasion, I should then the better know your doubts, and so fit my self to speake in preaching to euery mans conscience, and you also should by that meanes be resolued in many things, which for lacke of conference must needs breed scruple, especially in those which haue not yet, through long custome, exercised wits to discerne both good and euill [f]. This was the practise of the disciples: After that Christ had spoken in publike, when they had him alone, they asked him [g]; yea, our Sauiour vrged them hereto himselfe, enquiring of them after the end of his Sermons, whether they vnderstood all [h] they had heard, to the end, that if any doubt remained, it might be cleered to them. It is the probable opinion of some Diuines: that it was the ancient vse in the Synagogues of the Iewes, that when he which taught, had ended so much as he had to say, any man might stand vp, and moone a question for his further satisfying, in the things deliuered. Hence (as it is supposed) came that fact of Christs in the Gospell, of asking questions of the Doctors in the Temple: and it is likely the Apostle had reference to that, permitting that liberty to all, sauing vnto women, whose asking was appointed to be more priuate.

[g] Mar.4.10.

Nymp.

Nymph. I am not a little glad to heare this from you: for to tell you the truth plainly without any flattery, I haue heard some complaine of a certaine strangenesse in you, and others of your coat, which they say hath discouraged them from aduentring to conferre with you.

Epaph. That may be but a pretence, and yet I will not altogether excuse either others, or my selfe herein; haply we be not so tender ouer the wants of our people, as we ought to be. Howsoeuer to preuent any such feare in you for this time, I pray you be bold to speake your mind freely, and you shall find me farre from seeming weary of you, or from giuing you any occasion to think, that I am vnwilling to seek to resolue you (as I may) in any thing that may trouble you. And I pray God, the God of all grace, euen for Christs sake, so to blesse this our conference, by giuing to vs both a right iudgement in all things, that it may be both to his glory, and to our further comfort.

Nymph. Amen. Well then, because I doe euen long to acquaint you with that which hath (when I haue been by my selfe) much disquieted me, you shall vnderstand, that the occasion moouing me at this time to craue your aduice, is this: Since it pleased God to let the light of the glorious Gospell of his Sonne, by preaching, to shine in these parts more cleerely then in former yeeres, it hath happened that I haue fallen into the company, sometime of common men, sometime of men of better fashion and, which in the world we call wise men; sometime also of men of learning, and by profession, Ministers: some of whom to my griefe I haue heard speake very disgracefully, some very scornefully, all of them much to the lessening of that reuerent estimation which we ought to haue of the preaching of the Word, and of the ordinary course thereof, which is amongst vs.

Epaph. It is not vnlike, neither yet indeed it is to be maruelled at, as though some strange thing were come vnto vs. The diuell knowes by long experience that the preaching of the word is the ruine of his kingdome, and that thereby he is made like lightning to fall downe from heauen [l]. And therefore it hath euer been his practise, at the very first entrance of sincere preaching, to raise vp some men of corrupt mindes, to resist the truth [m], and to stop the happy proceedings of the Gospell. The first Preacher mentioned in the Scripture, is Enoh the seuenth from Adam, together with the relation of whose doctrine, the text mentioneth also the cruell speakings, and violent courses of wicked sinners against him [n]. The next after him was Noah, which was a Preacher of righteousnesse [o]: and howsoeuer the story mentioneth expresly no tumults raised vp against him, yet it may easily be gathered, in that he preaching so many yeeres before the comming of the floud, yet all that while we doe not finde any one to haue been reclaimed, but they all continued in their accustomed security, and knew nothing till the floud came and tooke them all away [p]. Passe from him to Moses, of whose resistance the story relateth many particulars: at his first vndertaking any authority among the people, in seeking to end a strife betwixt them, hee was taken vp short with the common speech, Who made thee a man of authority, and a Iudge ouer vs [q]? After, when he was sent backe into Egypt to deliuer the people from the bondage of Pharaoh, the story is a witnesse how often and openly he was gaine-said, sometimes by the people, they murmuring at him [r]; sometimes by Iannes and Iambres, two Egiptians [s], sometimes by Korah and his complicies [t]: so that though the Lord wrought mightily by Moses, yet he had daily experience of the malice of the wicked against the truth. Now for the times of the Prophets, one Ieremy may be a sufficient witnes: hee saith he heard the railing of many, and the word of the Lord which he preached, was a reproach vnto him, and in derision dayly [u]. If you examine the times after Christ, at the first spreading of the Gospell, this will be more apparant. Run through the booke of the Acts: the preaching of Peter and Iohn was entertained first with mocking [x]: afterwards more open violence was vsed, and the men in authority tooke it grieuously that they taught the people [y], and by common consent put them to silence [z]. Steuen was i Rom. 1. 16.

Epa. You will ceaſe to wonder, when you ſhal truly vnderſtand the cauſes moouing worldly & vnregenerate men to malice and maligne that, which indeed as you ſay, if the worth thereof were knowne, they ought rather with all reuerence to imbrace: and if you thinke that it may be helpefull vnto you in that, wherein you deſire to be reſolued, I wil open the ſame vnto you ſomthing more at large.

Nymph. You cannot content me better, then if you ſhal vndertake to diſcourſe therof: for (as I ſuppoſe) when I haue once learned the true cauſe why preaching is ſo much miſliked, I ſhall the leſſe feare the pretenced reaſons, which I daily heare to be alledged againſt it.

Epaph. The true cauſes why the courſe of preaching, when it is performed ſo as it ought, is ſo much repined at, are theſe three eſpecially. The firſt is this: As men loue nothing more then their ſinnes, ſo they loath nothing more then the diſcouery thereof: they can by no meanes endure to haue their ſecret corruptions ript vp: it is a death vnto them to be thorowly and directly dealt withall: Wicked Ahab hated the ſincere Prophet of the Lord Michaiah, becauſe he neuer propheſied good vnto him but euill [k]; that is, he neuer ſpared him, but deliuered the truth of God vnto him plainly without flattery. Now the preaching of the word, it is as the prouerb is, The finger in the bill; it is euer rubbing vpon the gall: and being light, it maketh all things manifeſt [l], and diſcloſeth euery mans cloſe and ſecret vngodlineſſe. In the daies of blindneſſe (that is, in times and places where there is not a ſetled courſe of preaching) many a man ſeemeth to himſelfe, and to others alſo to be vnreproueable, who when the light of the word by powerfull application breaketh out, is diſcouered both to others, and eſpecially to his owne conſcience, to be nothing leſſe then that which he was ſuppoſed to be. Here is then one cauſe of diſlike: the word thus handled, openeth that which men of all other things deſire moſt to be concealed: ſo that it is true of the word of Chriſt, which he witneſſeth of himſelfe, The world hateth me, becauſe I teſtifie thereof that the workes of it are euill [m]. Tell me now I pray you, what thinke you of this?

emptory, and a great deale more plaine then needed: yea, I had much adoe at times, not to perſwade my ſelfe that I was chiefly aimed at in ſome things, and that the Preacher had receiued ſome ſecret informations touching me and my demeanour, which he there opened in the pulpit. So hard a thing is it for fleſh and bloud to beare the words of reproofe, yea, though in the witnes of a mans owne conſcience he hath euery way deſerued the ſame. But I heartily beſeech God on the behalfe of you, and others of your ſort, that he would enlarge your ſpirits, and giue vtterance vnto you, that you may open your mouthes bold-

Epaph. You haue ſaid the very truth. We can be content to heare the word vntill it riſe vs: But as a purging potion, ſo long as it is in drinking, is but as other drink vntill it work, and then we could be content to caſt it vp again: ſo we can quietly heare the word vntill it work vpon vs, but then it ſeemeth a burden vnto vs. But to come to the opening of the ſecond reaſon of the diſlike of preaching: I haue by obſeruation found it to be this; becauſe preaching is (as men ſuppoſe) an enemy vnto liberty, a thing which by nature euery man deſires to enioy. In the ſecond Pſalme we read what is the opinion that men haue of Chriſtian obedience, they call it bands and cords [r], that is to ſay, meere ſeruility and ſlauery, a baſe and ignominious thing to be conformable. This is the very conceit which worldlings haue of yeelding themſelues vnto the doctrine of Chriſt Ieſus. When Lot admoniſhed the Sodomites, and began to perſwade with them to deſiſt from violence againſt the ſtrangers that were with him in his houſe:

ſ Gen. 19. 9. they cried ſtrait, Shall he iudge and rule [ſ]? Forthwith they began to repine againſt his godly aduice, as againſt a matter of too much tyranny in Lot, and of too great ſubiection in themſelues. It was the imputation of Korah & his adherents

t Num. 16. 3. to Moſes and Aaron; You take too much vpon you [t]: they deemed the gouernement of Moſes too peremptory, as an enemy to their liberty, and therefore not to be endured. When the Prophet Amos preached, it was ſaid, that the Land was not u Amos 7. 10. able to beare his words [u]: as who ſhould ſay, his Sermons were too cenſorious: men that were of a liberall and free diſpoſition, were not able to digeſt them. One reaſon which the Iewes had againſt Chriſt, to ſtirre vp themſelues to find a meanes to ſuppreſſe him, was, becauſe they ſuppoſed that if they let him alone, x Iohn 11. 48. The Romanes would come and take away both their place and nation [x]. They thought bondage would follow vpon his doctrine. This might eaſily be enlarged with the addition of many examples: but our owne experience may be a ſufficient confirmation: For euen at this day the world maintaineth the ſame opinion of obedience and conformity in Chriſtian duties, that it is an abridgement to liberty, that it ſauoreth of ſlauiſhneſſe and baſeneſſe for a man at the words of a Preacher to be reſtrained.

Nymph. Truly Sir it is euen ſo: for out of my poore experience, I am able to witneſſe thus much, that many men imagine, that for them to liue without controlement, following the ſway of their owne affections, if they may ſweare and blaſpheme, and be vicious and riotous, and drunke with the drunkard, and prophane the Sabboth, and ſcoffe at zeale and ſincerity in Religion, and runne into all manner of exceſſe, this is liberty. On the other ſide, they repute the reſtraint from any of theſe things, to be the greateſt thraldome; a miſery it is to be kept within compaſſe, that a man may not ſweare, may not ſpend the Lords day in ſports, or in worldly buſineſſes, or in trauelling vpon his owne occaſions, that he muſt ſet ſuch a narrow watch before his mouth, as that there ſhould be no filthineſſe, nor fooliſh talking, nor ieſting; that hee ſhould bee tied to the continuall hearing of the word, to often receiuing the Sacraments, and the like, this is a misery of all miseries, a thing not to be endured: they cry when you tell them these things. This is a hard saying, who can abide it [y]? and determine as those of whom you spake, Let vs breake their bands, and cast their cords from vs. But reselue me herein I pray ye Sir, is this liberty? Are not men herein altogether mistaken?

[y] Iohn 6. 16.

Epaph. Yes verily: for howsoeuer men think themselues iolly fellowes, because they can seeme to contemne all gouernment, yet indeed of all conditions it is the baseſt, and of all thraldoms the most slauish for a man to be subiect vnto sin, to be giuen ouer to his owne lusts, to be led wholly by the corrupt affections of his owne heart: and to say the truth, euen in reason it must needs be so: for as to be a slaue and a vassall, is in it selfe very opprobrious, and such a thing as euen the nature of man doth abhorre; so, the more vile he is to whom a man is in bondage, the more base and odious is it in the eyes of others, and the more tedious to himselfe, if he be of any ingenuous disposition. Now what more vile thing can there be imagined then sin is? What more abominable before God, what more dangerous to the soule of him that committeth it? So that sin being a thing so vile, in how seruile an estate is he, that is a slaue and a vassall thereunto? Doe you conceiue me in this?

Nymph. I conceiue you well. But yet this breeds a further doubt: we may all complaine with the Apostle, that we are euen captiue vnto the law of sinne [z]: who then is he that may be called a slaue of sinne?

Epaph. Our Sauiour shall make you answer: He that committeth sin, is the seruant of sin [a]: to which to make it more plaine, you may adde the saying of the Apostle, Know you not, that to whomsoeuer you giue your selues as Seruants to obey, his Seruants you are to whom you obey [b]? The latter place is an exposition to the other. He (saith Christ) that committeth sin, is the seruant of sin: he committeth sinne (saith Paul) that obeyeth sinne: now he said to obey sin, who finding his corrupt heart to prouoke him to any thing, sets himself presently to performe the same, or as the holy Ghost speaketh, taketh thought for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof [c]; His eye waiteth for the twilight [d], and he seeketh opportunities for his filthinesse. So the Adulterer is a slaue to his sinne, because he is wholy at the command thereof, studying how to compasse the same, and to satisfie his vncleane desires to the vttermost. The Drunkard is a vassall to his sin, because it is as it were his businesse, to set himselfe to the committing of it, to get money to bestow vpon it, to gather company that he may haue fellowes in it, to rise early to follow it [e], to make his body able to beare it [f]. The couetous person is a drudge to his money: for, for it he will doe any thing, he will defeat one, and defraud another, and oppresse a third, and grind [g] the fourth, and take vsury of the fifth, and rake and wring, and extort, and lie, and forsweare, and whatsoeuer else for his mony. He is such a Seruant to it, as the Centurions Seruants were to him [h]: If money say to him Go, he trudgeth by and by: if it say come, it hath him at a beck: If it bid him do this, be it neuer so vile, vniust, or vnlawfull, eftsoones he doth it. In like manner the continuall Gamster, is as it were in the state of villenage to his humor, he will neglect all other occasions, either of rest for his body, or of profit for his outward estate, or of religion for his soules good, to fulfill it: for his life (if company be for him) he is not able to forbeare it. In like sort, the ignorant man is in bondage to his blindnesse, for bring all the perswasions you can against it out of the word of God, yet ignorance shall still haue the vpper hand, either he will not conceiue you, or he will not beleiue you, or he will not be directed by you. So againe, the superstitious is in thraldome to his owne peeuishnesse; for let God command what hee will, or prescribe what forme of worship he thinketh good, yet, thus and thus it hath been so long, and so it shall be and so will I doe for euer. The word that thou hast spoken vnto vs in the name of the Lord, we will not heare of thee; said the superstitious vnto Ieremy, But we will do whatsoeuer thing goeth out of our owne mouth, as we haue done, both we and

In a word, whosoeuer suffereth himselfe to be led by the corruption of his owne heart in any thing, without making resistance, without desiring the assistance of Gods Spirit to withstand it, whether it be pride, malice, reuenge, or whatsoeuer else, the same is a Slaue to his sin, a drudge to his owne humour, and the baseſt Creature vnder Heauen. Nay hee is more slauish by degrees, then those slaues, whom they vsed in old times (and as they doe still in some Countries) to buy with money, and to vse at their pleasure. For there is no such slaue, but he keepeth a free mind in a seruile estate: but men generally, being in this most filthy and wretched thraldome, thinke themselues to be in the most happy estate that may bee, and haue no will or disposition to bee freed, but are enemies to the meanes of their deliuery. Thus haue I shewed you, that though men thinke themselues at liberty when they may liue licentiously, yet they are much deceiued: it may be said of them as Noah said of k Gen.9.25. Canaan: Seruants of Seruants they bee k, doing the businesse of the Diuell, not grudgingly or vnwillingly as bond-slaues vsually doe, but readily, greedily, and ioyfully.

The Liberty of Christianity.

Epaph. Certenly the state and calling of a true Christian, is a louely calling, a calling that calleth men vnto it, such a calling as that the beames thereof are able to rauish the eye. True it is, that euer since Adam did eate the forbidden fruit, all the mouthes of the posterity are so out of taste, that we can neither heare nor see, nor taste any thing that good is; so that if we looke vpon the estate of a Christian liuing in obedience, with an eye of flesh, it looketh euen like Christ for all the world, euen as a withered branch, and like a roote in the drie

l Esay.53.1. ground: when we see it, there is no forme that we should desire it l. The eye of a naturall man can see no good in it, vnlesse it be good to cleaue vnto the Lord, or

m Psal.119.71 it is good to bee afflicted m, or it is good to runne the way of Gods Commandements n, n Verse 32. and such like, which are like pils, and to die for it, will not down with a carnall man; yet if it be duly considered, it is the onely estate of liberty. It is not a fleshly liberty, a liberty for men to doe and speake, and liue as they themselues please, euery man after his owne fashion, as though the raines should bee laid on euery mans necke, and he left to his owne disposition. It is no such liberty: for then the more Libertine the better Christian; and then all the world would soone be religious, for all the World are well-neere Libertines. But this liberty which Christians haue, is a spirituall liberty, a heauenly liberty, a liberty of the soule; not which giueth the body liberty from obedience, but which setteth the Soule at liberty from destruction: not which maketh vs free to sinne, but which setteth vs free to serue God: not which giueth a man leaue to liue

o Gal.5.13. as caring for none, but which maketh him by loue a Seruant vnto all o: a freedome it is from the bondage of Sathan, from the thraldome of sinne, from the curse of Gods Law, giuing an interest into Gods fauour, into the merits of Christ, into the felicity of the chosen, and into the eternall inheritance of Gods Kingdome. This is the liberty of Christians, of which howsoeuer worldly men (which sauour onely of earthly things) may iudge, yet such it is and so great, and hath so many priuiledges annexed thereunto, as that all the enfranchisements and freedomes of this world, are not worthy therewith to be compared: For as the new Ierusalem, which is from abone, is of all other Cities and Incorporations, the most glorious, so it is the greatest priuiledge that any man can attain, to be, of a stranger and a forreiner, admitted to be a Cittizen, and free-

Nymph.

Nymph. Doubtleſſe this is a moſt excellent point, and to the ſoule of a Chriſtian exceeding comfortable: how much therefore are we bound to giue thankes to our heauenly Father, who hath deliuered vs from the power of darkneſſe, and hath tranſlated vs into the kingdome of his deare Sonne? And I beſeech God to giue vs the grace, that being thus made free from ſin, we may become the ſeruants of righteouſneſſe [r]: that ſo hauing our fruit in holineſſe, the end may be euerlaſting life [s]. But now if it pleaſe you, I long to heare the third cauſe of the ſmall regard of Preaching.

q Col. 1. 13, 14
s Verſe 22.

Epaph. The third cauſe of contemptuous reſiſtance, is the iudging of that which is taught by the outward ſemblance of the Teacher: as for example: Some great man in the World, that haply is a Magiſtrate, or a man of note and ſpeciall reckoning in the place where he liueth, comming to the Church, and hearing his ſinne reproued, and ſuch and ſuch duties perſwaded, ſtraite hee caſteth his eye vpon the perſon of the ſpeaker, and him he ſeeth to be but ſome ordinary man, one that if he ſhould come in place where he is, ſhould be ſerued as the poore man in the torne coat, of whom Saint Iames ſpeaketh [t], that ſhould be bidden to ſtand there aloofe off, or ſit here at my foot-ſtoole; ettſoone, he beginneth to thinke with himſelfe, that it would be ſhame for him, to ſuffer the words of ſuch a one ſo farre below him in the world, to carry ſo great authority with him, as that he ſhould by and by conforme himſelfe to his perſwaſions. Another perhaps, that hath had ſome good education, and thereby hath gotten ſome taſte of learning, or is otherwiſe by obſeruation and experience, growne to be a man of ſome reach and capacity: he, when he compareth himſelfe with the Teacher, ſeemeth to ſee as much (if not more) learning, iudgement, reading and vnderſtanding in himſelfe as in him: and therefore he ſaith with himſelfe, Why ſhould I yeeld to his inſtruction? Why ſhould his opinion ſway ſo farre with mee, as to draw me from mine owne courſes? Why ſhould not I be as well able to iudge what is meet, as he? A third, that is (it may be) ſome Gallant, a man of ſpirit, that thinketh it a part of his courage to be without feare, euen of God himſelfe; he hearing at a Sermon threatnings denounced againſt ſinne, and againſt thoſe very ſinnes whereof his life is a continuall practiſe, in the greatneſſe of his ſtomacke, and in the profaneneſſe of his heart, beginneth to ſet all at nought, imagining that it cannot ſtand with that hardineſſe and vndaunted reſolution which he profeſſeth, to be ſtricken with the words of a ſilly man, or to haue his heart terrified with a few idle ſpeeches. In a word, the people generally doe not conſider how well a thing is ſpoken, how ſufficiently prooued, how ſoundly ſeconded, and made good by the word, this neuer entreth into their thought: but they ſee, that hee which preacheth, what is he but a man of their owne ſort, one neither armed with authority to puniſh them, nor endued with power to conſtraine them, neither yet furniſhed with wealth to contend with them: and that all his force lyeth in his tongue, the exerciſe whereof when it is once ouer-paſt, there is all that hee can doe, and therefore they make a Tuſh at his doctrine, and ſay of the Preacher, as they did of old, Hee is but wind [u], and what is he that he ſhould command vs? Thus, this alſo is one cauſe of reſiſtance to the holy doctrine taught, men looke no higher then the man, and they value all that is ſaid, by the quality of the ſpeaker.

u Ier. 5. 13.

Nymph. This diſcourſe of yours, ſo fully diſcouering the proud conceits of an vnreformed heart, calleth to my mind the commendation which Paul giueth of the Theſſalonians [x], When yee receiued of vs (ſaith he) the word of the preaching of God, yee receiued it not as the word of men, but as it is indeed the word of God: for ſo long as men haue no higher a conceit of that which they heare, then that it is but a mans doctrine, there ſpect vnto it cannot chooſe but be very ſmall; ſo that I muſt needs yeeld vnto you in this, that this alſo may well goe among the number of the cauſes, why Preaching is of ſo ſlender eſtimation here amongſt vs. Yet Sir, men that are enemies in this case, doe pretend other reasons, and will not be knowne of any of these to be the occasion or cause of their dislike.

Epaph. That is most true; for sinne doth euer seeke shades, and it is a tricke which we haue learne I of our Grandfather Adam, to sew figge-leaues together to couer our nakednesse [y]. For shame men will not say that they are herby mooued to dislik: yet notwithstanding these be the true grounds, and men in their consciences know it to be so. If a man had asked of Pashur why he smote Ieremie the Prophet, and put him in the stockes [z], no doubt but hee would tell you a very formall tale, as that, He Prophesied against the City [a]: he hath not sought the wealth of the people, but the hurt: and that hee discouraged the hands of the men of warre, in speaking such words vnto them [b]. This would be Pashurs pretence, thus he would plead for his strait courses against the poore Prophet, yet this is but a colour: for the very matter is, Ieremy was a litle too bold, he spake too plain, his Sermons were like a fier, and like a hammer that breaketh the stone [c], he kept not a word backe of all that the Lord commanded him.

Nymphus. Indeed I haue heard much spoken by many, and diuers exceptions made against preaching, but I neuer heard any man acknowledge his dislike to proceede from any of these causes which you haue named: I wish therefore that you would instruct mee how to stop the mouthes of Gaine sayers, when I light in the company of such. They will not perhaps say much to your faces that are Preachers, but such as I am shall often heare them talke at liberty, and vtter the very bottome of their stomacke, and spend all their powder and shot to the beating downe of that, which I hope they shall neuer be able to ouerthrow.

Epaph. Assure your selfe of that: for we may be bold to say in the comfort of a good conscience, They that be with vs, are moe then they that be with them [d]. And when we come on the same errand with Ieremy, why may we not kept vpon the same promise, They shall fight against thee, but they shall not preuaile against thee, for I am with thee to deliuer thee, saith the Lord [e]? yet notwithstanding, least their conceits should be any hinderance to those that are well affected, or it should be an encouragement to them in their euill, when they find those that for the contrary minded vnable to answere them, therefore I do both commend your care herein, and will be as helpefull to you as I am able, in opening the vanity of their seuerall exceptions, that are enemies vnto preaching.

I will be bold therefore, as farre as I can call to mind, to make knowne vnto you euery thing that I haue heard obiected in this case.*

f Luke 22.32.

Epaph. Doe so, I pray you, and faile not till you be fully satisfied, to vrge euery thing to the vttermost.

The seuerall excepters against preaching.

Nymph. You know Sir, that wee haue in our Country, men of diuers humours, and sundry fashions, some grossely ignorant, and meere sottish, chiefly in matter of Religion; some prophane, such as Esau was [g], who care more for a portion of meate, esteeme more of a worldly commodity, then of a heauenly treasure; some wise and sensible, as the world calleth wisdome; some learned also, and Schollers by profession: now it hath been my hap at some one time or other, to fall into conference with euery of these sorts, and as communication draweth in one thing after another, so to finde out their seuerall opinions: and though some of them be very simple, and to be called idle surmises rather then grounded reasons, yet because you haue made me so kind an offer, you shall therefore haue all.

g Heb. 12.16.

Epaph. Be it so, I am well contented: and because Ignorance is a mother of sin, therefore let vs first heare I pray you the ignorant mans exceptions.

Nym. One thing that I haue heard some ignorant men with vs alleage, is, that they can see no reason why there should be more vse of preaching now, then there hath hath been in former times. They haue liued (they say) some thirty, some forty, some more yeeres, without a setled Ministery, hauing onely (vnlesse it were now or then at times) the ordinary Seruice read among them; and all this while they felt no want of that which is now called teaching; and therefore they are minded not to esteeme that much, for the remainder of their life, without which they haue liued and done well enough hitherto. How like you this Sir? Is not this a profound reason? Is not here good Diuinity?

Epaph. Indeed you may well call this the ignorant mans reason, it is so grosse, hauing in it but three errours, which you know is nothing to speake of in so short an allegation. First of all, they will neglect preaching now, because they haue liued without it hitherto: as though it were wisdome for a man in his old or middle age, to refuse a kindnesse offered, because in his youth or childhood he had no meanes to enioy it. Had it been a good reason for Paul, when Christ called him from heauen, to haue said, O Sir, it is now too late, I am a man that haue spent the best part of my time, without the knowledge of thee and of thy Religion, and therefore I pray thee trouble me not now, I hope to shift out as well for so much of my life as is behind, as I haue done to this day. No man will be so without common sense, as to say, that Paul might iustly haue iustly refused vpon such a pretence: and yet it had been as good a reason as theirs. Secondly, they erre in this, in that they account the time of their ignorance to haue been without danger, because they neuer saw the danger. Alas little doe they consider the extreame misery of those times. Christ saith, that he that walketh in the dark, namely, without the bright-shining light of Gods holy word, knowes not whether he goeth [h]: he is euen in the valley of the shadow of death, a stranger from the life of God, walking after the course of this world [i], and after the Prince that ruleth in the ayre, euen the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience [k]. A man that been in a sound, and is awaked out of it by the paines of his friends, hee will tell you how pleasing the slumber thereof seemed to his senses, and at the first beginning to be awaked, he will say perhaps; You should haue let me alone, why did you trouble me? But when he is better aduised, he will thanke them that brought him againe, because he knoweth, that if he had been let alone, it might cost him his life. So in this case a man liuing in blindnesse and grosse ignorance, seemeth to himselfe for the present, to be in a maruellous good estate, and his soule in as good case as any mans: and when the Preacher shall cry vnto him, Awake thou that sleepest, and stand vp from the dead [l]: Oh thou ignorant person, Why wilt thou dye [m]? saue thy selfe from this frowward generation [n]. Like enough he will say; O Master Preacher, trouble me not I pray you, spare your sides, I am well enough, my soule is in no such danger: but if the Lord once open his eyes, and make him a new heart, and a new spirit [o], then he will blesse God for him that called him, because he will then perceiue, that otherwise he had euen runne on to his owne destruction. He that trauelleth by night vpon the edge and hanging of a steepe hill, from which if he should fall he must needs breake his neck; goeth on without feare, because in the darke he seeth not the danger: but let him be brought back at light of day, it will make him euen quake to thinke vpon the perill he was in, and wonder that euer hee should escape it. In like sort, he that is in the blindnes of ignorance without the word, the same is hourely ready to fall into the pit of hell: yet he feareth it not, because he seeth it not: but if euer he haue any remorce by the light of the Gospell shining in his heart, it will terrifie him to remember his former misery, and make his belly to tremble [p] to consider it: so that here is the second error in this ignorant obiection. Men conclude there was no danger in the daies of blindnes, because they saw no danger, whereas indeed the danger was so much the greater. A third error there is yet in this exception, and that is, that they consider not how that the refusall of Gods mercy which is freely offered in the preaching

Thus I hope I haue shewed the vnreasonablenesse of this first reason.

Nymph. This that you haue spoken, as it maketh me see plainly the idlenesse of this ignorant exception, so it calleth to my remembrance a notable place of Scripture, which I once heard you alleage in one of your Sermons, to this or the like purpose: it is a part of Paul his speech at Athens, The time of this ignorance (saith he) God lightly pas- ſ Acts 17.30. ὑπεριδὼν. sing ouer, now he admonisheth all men euery where to repent ſ. It seemeth to me that this place may be applied fitly to this matter.

Epaph. It is well remembred: for indeed that speech fitteth well with this point. Paul there disputing with the Heathen that worshipped dumb Idols, and thought the God-head to be like Gold, or Siluer, or Stone, grauen by the art and inuention of man; lest they should obiect nouelty vnto him, and should say as the Papists doe at this day, how was it possible that all the World should for so many yeeres bee deceiued? he telleth thm, that it seemed good vnto God for causes best knowne vnto himselfe, to permit the ignorance of so many thousand of yeers; yet so, as that time of blindnesse being now determined, men should not plead prescription, reckoning more of an old error, then of newly reuealed truth: but should open their eares and hearts to this his generall summons to repentance. I thanke you for minding me of this place: it sheweth notably what a fond thing it is, not to take notice of the truth reuealed, but to preferre a long continued ignorance before it. Haue you any more exceptions of this nature, forged in the shop of ignorance? Like enough you haue: for it is an old and a true saying, that error is infinite, though truth be but one. If this that you haue named haue any moe fellowes, bring them forth; I doubt not, but by the grace of Christ to discountenance them.

Nymph. Yes sure: when the multitude heare it taught, that the preaching of the word is a thing of that nature and necessary vse, that without it men ordinarily cannot be saued, they crie out by and by: And what is then become of our fore-fathers? they had no preaching, yet they were in their times good people, honest, and well-esteemed in the places where they liued. If we should then yeeld to this, that this preaching is with so reuerent a regard to be depended vpon, we must needs condemne our progenitors, out of whose loynes we are come, which to doe were more then inhumanity. I can tell you Sir, this is an argument that hath a generall approbation, and therefore I pray you looke well to it that you can answere it.

Epaph. Well, as hard as it is, yet it is not so intricate as was Sampsons riddle, t Iudg. 14.12. t that in seuen dayes could not be interpreted, for indeed it is of no value. It is true, we are both by Nature and by Religion to honour the memories of our Ancestors, and in all good things to be imitators of them: but in matters of Religion we are not to haue an eye to them or to their times, but we must consider what it is which the Lord requireth at our hands. Whether they were saued or no, it is not for vs to enquire: if the Lord haue dealt more mercifully with vs then he did with them, we haue cause to magnifie his holy Name, to looke to our selues, that we despise not the riches of his bounty, and to leaue them to the Lord to whom they stand or fall. It is a good saying of an ancient Father to this purpose: If my Predecessors (saith he) either by ignorance or by simplicity, haue not kept and holden that which our Lord hath taught them by his example and Cyp. lib. 2. ep. 3. autho- authority, the mercy of our Lord might pardon them. But as the good Doctor saith, We can not hope for the like, hauing better meanes of instruction. When the outward ordinary meanes failed, Gods hand was not shortned, but he was able euen in the midst of blindnesse, to saue those which belonged to the election of grace. As for vs, it shall not be safe for vs to neglect this so great saluation[u], or to receiue the grace of God in vaine[x], foolishly aduenturing our selues vpon the vnknown condition of our fore-fathers. And this I hope may suffice to take away the edge of this fancy. It is humanity to thinke the best of our fore-fathers, but it is diuinity to looke carefully to our selues.

Nymph. I am glad you haue furnished me with so sufficient an answere to this exception, which I haue been often assaulted with; and indeed, because of the common instinct of nature, it striketh the deeper impression, and is the more hardly remooued. But I thinke this that you haue said may preuaile there, where obstinate wilfulnesse hath not gotten the mastery: and therefore I will lay this vp as safely, as euer Goliah his sword was laid vp[y], that I may euer haue it in readinesse for such a purpose. But Sir, there are yet more obiections of the same stampe, which I must entreate you also to cleer, that so you may make me a perfect scholler in this point.

Epaph. Who would thinke it possible that men so dull and vncapable in matters which concerne their greatest good, should be abounding with arguments, wherewith to pleade euen against their owne soules? But the diuel is a cunning instructer, and laboureth to strengthen men in ignorance, (because it is the scepter of his kingdome) as much as it is possible. Let vs heare therefore what the ignorant, with whom it hath been your hap to conuerse, haue yet further to alleage.

Nymph. They say, that the most learned of you all, who art called Preachers, when you haue shewed the vttermost of your cunning, can say no more then they know already, namely, that they must loue God aboue all, and their neighbours as themselues: and seeing they know this well enough already, what needeth (say they) any more instruction?

Epaph. This is a conceit scarce worthy the confuting: yet lest my silence should breed an opinion in you, that there is more in it then indeed there is, oh but consider of it by the like: If a man speaking of husbandry, and hearing another to discourse of the great skil, and long experience that is requisite to make a man a good husband, should say by and by, Tush, what talke you so much of skill and knowledge herein? Why? It is nothing but this, to plow, to sow, and to reape: should not such a one deseruedly be laughed at, and be a scorne to those which heare him? Yes, and not without cause; for euery man knoweth, that though this be the summe of Husbandry, yet there are diuers particulars belonging to these, which are neither soone learned, nor easily practised: so that he who desireth to be a good husband, and to profit by his labours, and to make the best of euery thing, must not satisfie himselfe to know this, that there is nothing in husbandry but to eare the land, and to reape the fruit; but he must learne also what belongeth to the right performance of these, otherwise he may erre in sowing, play the foole in plowing, and come short in reaping. And euen so it is in this case: true it is, that the sum of all religion consisteth in this, in louing God aboue all, and a mans neighbour as himselfe: but what then? If a man shall thinke by and by that he is a good Christian, and knowes enough, because he apprehendeth these generals, the same is exceedingly deceiued, for there are many other branches belonging to each of these, which vnlesse a man do know, he can neuer loue God as he ought, nor his neighbour as he should: so that to my seeming, euen common reason is sufficient to conuince mens ignorance herein. There is not the meanest profession, the courrest trade, the plainest occupation, but it hath (as we say) a certaine mystery in it, there are many rules belonging to it, which must be knowne, not in grosse onely, but euen very precisely, before a man can in any mediocrity practise the duties of the same.

Nymph. It is true that you say, for mine owne part I confesse it: but yet ignorance will reply and say; Will you then vrge vpon euery common man the knowledge of euery point which in preaching you deliuer? that seemeth very vnreasonable: neither can men that want the helpes of learning attaine vnto it, and will not a good meaning make a supply for all this?

Epaphras. How vnreasonable it may seeme in mens eies, to be vrged to such exact knowledge, I cannot tell: this I am sure of, that we that are Ministers, are charged to shew the people the whole counsell of God[z], and not to keepe a word backe[a]. If we cannot be dispensed with to keepe secret any thing, how shall it be tolerable in the people to neglect the knowledge of that, which we are bound by vertue of our commission to deliuer? It was but an idle prayer of the Apostle, on the behalfe of the Colossians, to beg of God that they might be fulfilled with knowledge of Gods will, in all wisdome and spirituall vnderstanding[b]: or for the Philippians, that they might abound in all iudgement, and discerne things that differ[c], I say these were but idle wishes, if so be, that full measure of knowledge is not required of euery Christian. And if some certaine rudiments, and as it were shreds of knowledge were sufficient, the Hebrews might well haue complained of wrong, in that they were so sharpely censured for their being dull of hearing, and for that they still after so much teaching needed the first principles of the word of God[d]. And sure, if it be vnreasonable to vrge men to know so much, we must (which were blasphemy) challenge the wise God as an vnnecessary burdener of mankind, who hath reuealed so much. As is is curiosity to enquire into that which God hath concealed, so it is vnthankfulnes not to take notice of whatsoeuer he hath left written for our learning[e]. The secret things belong to the Lord our God, but the things reuealed belong to vs and to our children for euer, saith the Scripture[f]. I confesse, that if a man might attaine to the age of Methuselah, who liued nine hundred sixty and nine yeeres[g], and should in that space equall his diligence in searching the Scripture vnto Dauid, who made it his meditation continually[h], yet many things would escape him, and he should when he had done all, be faine to confesse, that the greatest part of that which he knoweth, is not the least part of that which he knoweth not: But what then? because a man when he hath done his best cannot know all, shall he therefore not labour to know any thing? God forbid. Ignorance by a kinde of necessity may seeme to haue some excuse, but a voluntary neglect of that which a man may know, cannot haue so much as a colour of allowance.

Nymph. I know what some will say, namely that by this, you will bind common men to be as cunning as your selues.

Epaph. As for that, I can easily answer it: I may lawfully wish as Moses did, that all the Lords people were Prophets[i], &c. yet I know too, that that exact and distinct knowledge is not required of all men, which is necessary in a Diuine. But what then? Although there be a larger measure of knowledge requisite in a Preacher, then in a priuate man, yet the matters to be known (I speake of points necessary to saluation) are the same both for a Pastor and for a priuate Christian. For (as the Apostle saith[k]) there is but one Faith, which is therefore called One, because it is but one and the same thing, which is to be belieued of all the faithfull: so that whatsoeuer a Diuine ought to know, for the saluation of his soule, the same is euery other man to know for the saluation of his soule also: That Faithfull word[l], which the one is to hold fast[m], the other is to hold fast likewise: As the Minister must improue the gain-sayer[n], so must the common beleeuer contend earnestly for the maintenance of the Faith[o], euen as the Generall and the common Souldier fight in one quarrell, though more military skill be expected of the one then of the other: you that are hearers ought to comprehend[p] and conceiue the mystery of godlinesse[q] as truly, though (perhaps) not so cleerely as we that are Ministers.

Nymph. Yet me thinkes it is hard for the common people (the greatest part whereof cannot so much as reade) to attaine to so much knowledge as you seem to require, especially if withal they be such as liue by their labour, and haue charge of children: how shall they spare time for such occasions?

Epaphras. Verily it is a wofull thing to consider the dulnesse that is amongst men: and they doe not know what they want that cannot reade (a thing which notwithstanding of all other, the parts of learning is the most easie, and as soone learned, as to be able to play at the Cardes, if men were as desirous of the one as of the other:) yet howsoeuer, in this case of knowledge in Religion, men doe cast many needlesse perils then they need, and are like the slothfull man of whom Salomon speaketh, who saith, A Lion is without, I shall be slaine in the streets [a]. For knowledge is easie to him that will vnderstand [b]: and the yoake of Christ, it is easie, and his burden light [c]: Whereto serueth the Scripture, but to giue vnto the simple sharpenesse of wit, and to the Child knowledge and discretion [d]? The entrance into thy words (saith Dauid) sheweth light [e]: as soone as a man in humility and in a true desire to know God, doth but begin to apply himselfe to the meanes of knowledge, hee shall secretly feele such a sudden light cast in vpon his vnderstanding, that hee shall bee able to apprehend euen the very secrets of the Lord [f], and so shall goe from strength to strength [g], vntill he be filled with all the fulnesse of God [h]. And we see by comfortable experience, with what gifts of iudgement and good vnderstanding of speech; yea, and of prayer also, the Lord furnisheth many, who notwithstanding haue wanted the helps of good education: whereto the Lord maketh good that ancient prophesie touching the Kingdome of Christ, that hee would in it poure out his Spirit euen vpon Seruants and Maids [i], so that the eyes of the blind should bee lightned, and the eares of the deafe opened, and the dumbe mans tongue bee able to sing [k]. And thankes bee vnto God for this vnspeakable gift [l]. So that it is a causelesse feare which men haue, who imagine the knowledge of the doctrine of saluation, to bee a matter of that exceeding difficulty. Now for the multitude of worldly businesses, the necessary following whereof, men pleade partly as a matter priuiledging them; partly as a thing hindring them from intending these better occasions; if they had learned what this is, Seeke yee first the Kingdome of God, and his righteousnesse, and all these things shall be ministred vnto you [m]: or this; What shall it profit a man though hee should winne the whole world, if he lose his owne Soule [n]? Then they would bee ashamed either to thinke Religion a hinderance to their worldly thriuing (it being a furtherance rather: because it is the blessing of the Lord which maketh rich [o]) or else to minde onely earthly things [p], spending all their time about that which is on the earth [q], and neglecting that durable riches [r], euen the vnsearchable riches of Christ [s]. I know the businesse of the world must bee followed: He that laboureth not, let him not eate, saith Paul [t]: and if there be any that prouideth not for his one, and namely for them of his Household, he denieth the Faith, and is worse then an Infidell [u]. Yet I know too, that hee who will walke circumspectly, not as a Foole, but as a wise Christian, must redeeme the time [x], and in the midst of his worldly employments, remember that one needfull thing [y], which (when all other commodities become that which they are, euen nothing [z]) will tarry by him, and shall neuer be taken from him. Moreouer, put case a man bee either so tyed by the nature and quality of his calling, that hee can spare no time (so as among others, day-labourers and other poorer Trades men seeme to bee) or else is destitute of meanes to further his knowledge when he is priuate and at home; yet if he would bee conscionably carefull of profitable spending the Sabbath day, learning euery such day, though but one point, and caring to keepe it, and to hide it in the heart [a], and ponder it [b] in the weeke following, that he may by that meanes make it his owne, it is incredible to one that tryeth it not, to what store of spirituall knowledge euen a com-

Nymph. I haue very carefully attended to this which you haue ſpoken, and I praiſe God I find much comfort in it; yet there is one thing behind, which I haue ſtill looked for, which I am bold to put you in mind of, leſt you ſhould forget it, and that is touching the good meaning which the common ſort ſo much truſt vnto: they ſay their heart is good though their skill be ſmall, and they hope that God will accept it. I pray you ſatisfie me in this alſo, and then I ſhall be reaſonably furniſhed againſt the plea of the ignorant.

Epaph. You doe well to mind me of it, howſoeuer I was euen now of my ſelfe comming to it: An honeſt and good heart [u] is a thing in the eyes of God much eſteemed; and it is the ſpeciall thing he craueth of vs, to giue him our heart [x]: yet generally, that which men call a good heart to God-ward, is nothing leſſe then that which it is called: for, ſo long as a mans heart is a dull, ignorant, vnregenerate, and vnreformed heart, it is wicked aboue all things [y]. There can be no goodneſſe in that heart where there dwelleth groſſe and blockiſh ignorance of God and of his truth: It is no good heart which loueth fooliſhnes, and hates knowledge [z], and caſteth the word of God behind it [a]. It is no good heart which maketh not the mouth to ſpeake out of the abundance of it [b], and to be able to giue a reaſon of the hope that is in it [c]. There may bee a zeale of God [d], where there is no knowledge of God; but it is but a blind zeale, and God eſteemeth it not. They which kill and perſecute Gods ſeruants, may haue a kind of good meaning, and may thinke that in ſo doing, they doe God ſeruice [e], yet this cannot helpe them; ſo that men are deceiued in their good meaning: for no meaning is good, but that which is guided by knowledge; yea, though the thing meant be in it owne nature good, yet if the meaner be not aſſured of the goodneſſe of it from Gods word, his meaning is naught, and that by the rule of Scripture, which telleth vs, that Whatſoeuer is not of faith, is ſinne [f].

Epaph. I doe approue of the Author you alleadge, as of a worthy Inſtrument in Gods Church: I agree alſo to that which you haue cited out of his writings: for (as hee alſo ſaith) all men haue not that ſharpeneſſe of conceit, and faſtneſſe of memory, to bee able to wade into the depth of euery point, and to remember euery particular. And indeed an exact knowledge of the myſteries of Religion, ſo as to be able to diſpute ſchollerlike of them, is not required of euery common man: to which end is the ſpeech of Saint Auguſtine; It is not (ſaith hee) the quickneſſe of vnderſtanding, but the ſimplicity of beleeuing which is ſafeſt for the people: all this is true, but yet it maketh nothing for the defence of that brutiſh ignorance which men ſeeke to colour with the pretence of a good meaning: for this rule, that good affection ſupplyeth the want of knowledge, holdeth onely in thoſe, who hauing in ſome ſmall meaſure felt the ſweetneſſe of knowledge, doe labour to encreaſe in it. In ſuch it is true, that the ſincerity of the heart maketh a kind of recompence for the defect of knowledge: but, where there is a ſetling of a mans ſelfe vpon the dregs of ignorance, without grieuing and ſorrowing for his own dulneſſe, without caring and endeauouring to thriue in knowledge, there this rule hath no place, there the pretended good meaning is but ſottiſhneſſe, and that kind of ignorance maketh a man a ſtranger from the life of God [g]. And therefore it is well ſaid of a learned man, That whereas God forgiueth manifold ignorances in his children, yet he requireth that we be teachable, and not hardened in our owne dulneſſe and ſluggiſhneſſe. And ſurely they which want that which the Scripture termeth an Endeauour [h], and a mind to know [i], cannot ſafely aſſure themſelues that they are the Lords.

Nymph. You haue fully ſatisfied me touching this doubt: there is only one thing more behind, which ignorance pretendeth, and it is common in many mens mouthes: Let them (ſay they) preach and we will pray; they hope their deuotion in praying will doe them more good then all your preaching.

Epaph. It is a world to ſee the cunning of the Diuell, who goeth about, to ouerthrow one holy duty by another, and to oppoſe thoſe things which ought to goe as it were hand in hand together. But what thing is there ſo ſenſeleſſe, whereto ignorance in the Scripture may not be perſwaded? It is our Engliſh Prouerbe, The blinde eateth many a flie: and ſo indeed the ignorant in the Booke of God embrace many groſſe and ridiculous abſurdities: for if men knew what the Scripture ſaith in this caſe, they would neuer caſt out ſuch an idle ſpeech: Salomon ſaith, He that turneth away his eare from hearing the Law, euen his prayer ſhall bee abhominable [k]. What thinke you ſhall become of their prayers then who reſolue not to affoord the vſe of their eares vnto Gods word? Doe they not make a faire hand, when by their contempt of preaching they bring a curſe vpon their praying? Ad hitherto, that Paul ſaith expreſly, that As men cannot call on him in whom they haue not beleeued, ſo neither can they beleeue without hearing, nor heare without a Preacher [l]. Can men credit Paul in this, and yet thinke to pray well without the helpe of Preaching? Surely no. How can men pray aright, without knowledge of their owne wants, without the apprehenſion of the promiſes of God, vpon which to build their aſſurance to bee heard? And how can they attaine to either of theſe (ordinarily) but by the preaching, expounding, opening and applying of Gods word? That which men commonly call praying, is but a lip labour, conſiſting in the recitall of a few words, the ſenſe and meaning whereof is not vnderſtood, and it is meere babling in the eares of God: it may well be called the ſacrifice of Fooles [m]: and it may truly be ſaid of ſuch blind deuotions and tong-prayers, which the heart doth not conceiue, as it was ſaid of the hypocriticall ceremonioufneſſe of the Iewes; The ſoule of the Lord hateth them, they that are a burden vnto him, he is weary to beare them [n]. I thinke I haue ſufficiently diſcouered the weakeneſſe of this ſilly obiection.

Well Sir, now that you haue armed me againſt the common pretences of the ignorant ſort, whereby they make themſelues beleeue, or rather are made beleeue by the diuell, that it is no danger to contemne preaching, I muſt challenge your promiſe, and craue your helpe alſo touching another ſort of men, who as they are ignorant in the matters of God, ſo are they come to a higher degree of hardneſſe, and haue euen almoſt taken vp their ſeate* in the chaire of ſcorners [o], and doe not onely regard preaching, (which is the fault of thoſe of whom I haue ſpoken hitherto) but ſcoffe at it, and endeauour by lading it with ſundry approaches altogether to diſgrace it.

Epaph. I am as willing to performe my promiſe as I was to make it; and yet I know, that in regard of theſe prophane ones themſelues, this will bee but a thankeleſſe peece of ſeruice: for a ſcorner loueth not him that rebuketh him, neither will he goe vnto the wiſe [p]. Firſt, touching you that are the Preachers, it is common in their mouthes*: Who be worſe then they? If there be any couetouſneſſe, or pride, or ambition, and the like, where ſhall you finde it but in the Clergy?
